FILIPINOS ATTACK MINDANAO IN TWO SPECTACULAR RAIDS

Jap Warehouses Burned, Second City Attacked

WASHINGTON, April 1—(AP) Filipino raiders, striking savagely on the island of Mindanao, have demolished Japanese military installations in the center of the occupied city of Zamboanga and leveled 22 war-stocked warehouses near another enemy stronghold, the War department reported tonight.

On the Bataan peninsula, a slashing Japanese attack last night forced the American-Filipino veterans out of some advanced positions but the invaders were thrown back in fierce hand-to-hand combat short of the main lines. Enemy losses were heavy, while Lieutenant General Jonathan M. Wainwright's forces suffered only slight casualties, a communique said.

Military Supplies Burned

One of the Mindanao raiding forays, launched from the hills near Digos on the western shore of Davao gulf, cost the Japanese heavily in gasoline, ammunition and military supplies, it was announced. Vehicles and other heavy equipment were destroyed also when the intrepid raiders, catching the Japanese completely off guard, burned the warehouses. The supply base is located only 20 miles below the vital Japanese stronghold of Davao.

In the other spectacular raid a unit of native Sulu troops penetrated to the heart of Zamboanga, destroying enemy machine gun nests and inflicting heavy casualties on the Japanese. The raiders in both cases escaped without the loss of a man.

New Raids on Corregidor

Harassing air raids against Corregidor and the dive-bombing of Bataan front lines continued, but caused only slight damage. Artillery fire from naval units and shore batteries accompanied the air attacks.

Early today, land fighting on Bataan died away to occasional sharp patrol clashes after waves of Japnese assault troops, supported by heavy mortar fire, had been hurled at the right center of the defense lines in the jungles north and west of Abucay. The line there forms the eastern anchor of the defense positions on the shore of Manila bay.

Defending their outposts with fierce bayonet fighting, the troops of General Wainwright's command were pushed slowly back until reinforcements were brought up and the enemy drive was stalled after several hours of fierce hand-to-hand fighting.

Test of U. S. Strength

Although described as a heavy attack, the enemy assault, following a week of almost incessant bombing attacks of varying intensity on the Bataan positions and the Manila bay forts, was regarded in military circles here as a test of the strength of Wainwright's lines rather than as the start of the long-expected decisive battle for the Philippines.

When that drive comes, observers believe, it will be marked by frontal assaults along the entire Bataan line, accompanied by attempts to land large forces on the flanking shore lines with the support of naval units and all the air strength the Japanese command in the Philippines can assemble. The aerial bombardment and last night's Bataan attack, however, are regarded as indications that Lieutenant General Tomoyuki Yamashita, the Japanese commander, is preparing for a large-scale offensive before the start of the rainy season, due in about a month.

Two Bombers Downed

The enemy continued aerial bombardment of Corregidor yesterday, Wainwright reported, but the raids were described as "minor," most of them made by flights of only two planes, and they were confined to daylight hours. The last ended abruptly when the two heavy bombers engaged in the attack were brought down by the anti-aircraft batteries of the fort about 5 p. m., three hours before the night attack started on Bataan.

Wainwright reported to the department also that the bombing of a base hospital in Bataan, announced yesterday, brought a formal apology from the Japanese Imperial high command in the Philippines. A Japanese army spokesman said in a radio broadcast that the bombing, which resulted in a number of casualties, was not intentional.

Sikhs Reject British Plan Of Post-War India Freedom

APR 1 1942

Warriors Of Punjab And Extremists Of Mahasabha Group Of Hindus Turn Down Cripps' Proposals; Congress Committee Drafts Reply

New Delhi, India, Apr. 1 (AP)—The Sikhs, warriors of the Punjab, and the extremist Mahasabha group of Hindus tonight rejected the British plan for Indian post-war independence, and all India awaited tensely the decision of the majority all-India Congress.

In the light of expectations that the working committee of the Congress would turn down the plan because of British insistence on controlling India's war time defense, there was an increasing awareness of the consequences of failure of Sir Stafford Cripps' mission to this sub-continent.

The deepest impression was made by strong comment of the British and United States press, pointing out that if Indian leaders, by bargaining, cause the plan to collapse, Indians will forfeit the good opinion of the United Nations.

Yet it was doubtful whether such warnings would be enough to change the Congress committee's attitude.

The average Indian Nationalist seems bewildered by what he regards as failure of Britain and the United States to understand his point of view on the need for an Indian defense councillor.

He argues that only an Indian can rally the country and he asks what objection there can be to placing the defense portfolio in the hands of an Indian like Capt. Sir Sikander Hyat Khan, Premier of the Punjab, which provides the present bulk of Indian troops.

The prevalent attitude in both the Congress and the Moslem League is that Hyat Khan is intelligent enough to take advice and guidance from Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, Britain's Commander in Chief for India. Even the Moderates led by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, one of Britain's best friends in India, feel this way.

Refusals Come As Bad News

Today's first definite minority refusals, auguring ill for the success of Cripps' effort to align India firmly behind the Allied war effort, were received glumly by Britons, and the press sounded solemn warnings that if the plan were scrapped, nothing could be done until the war ends.

The Sikhs, numbering about 4,500,000, turned down the program through their All-Parties committee for fear they would be placed at the mercy of the Moslem majority of 13,500,000 in the Punjab.

The Hindu Mahasabha group rejected the British proposals and made common cause with the Sikhs because of opposition to the provision permitting formation of separate Moslem states if a single dominion is found impractical. The group's memorandum said some features of the plan were more or less satisfactory but since Cripps "unfortunately" had demanded the scheme be accepted or rejected in toto, the Hindu Mahasabha was obliged to reject all of it.

The Moslem League, which represents more than 77,000,000 Moslems, is expected to reply Friday. The all-India Congress committee adjourned late tonight after a long meeting devoted to drafting a reply.

Meanwhile the Nationalist party in the Central Legislature issued a statement saying the only course open to Indian Nationalists was rejection of the British prosposals.

Sir Stafford already has declared that negotiation on the defense item is impossible, so it appeared that only a compromise by the British War Cabinet itself could save the mission from failure.

It is noted, however, that the British Cabinet has avoided closing the door definitely to further overtures. The proposals made public Sunday bore the notation that they were not to be considered at present as an official declaration but as a program which would be offered formally if India generally were disposed to accept.

Two Indian Minority Parties Say 'No' to Britain's Offer

Extremist Hindu Group Joins the Sikhs in Rejecting Formula for Dominion Status After End of War.

APR 2 1942

New Delhi, April 1 (A. P.).—Two of India's most important minority groups rejected the British proposals for post-war Dominion status for India today, the extremist Hindu organization Mahasabha joining the Sikhs in registering a negative response.

The working committee of the Mahasabha announced a decision that the proposals were inacceptable a few hours after the Sikh All-Parties Committee had turned thumbs down.

The Sikhs, a Hindu warrior caste, rejected the plan as submitted by Britain's special envoy, Sir Stafford Cripps, on the ground that it would leave them at the mercy of the Moslem majority in Punjab Province. The chief stumbling block to acceptance was the requirement that India's wartime defenses be left in British hands.

It appeared likely that Sir Stafford would not have the final decisions of all the major Indian groups before Friday. The Congress Party working committee, whose stand is the most important, was drafting its reply, but it was not known when it would be handed to Sir Stafford.

The Mahasabha and the Moslem League adjourned their executive sessions until Friday, when both are due to announce their verdicts.

[The Sikhs, who at the last census numbered 4,335,000, are a warrior race who seceded from the main body of Hinduism and were taught to worship one God, observe morality and practice the use of arms. Their principal seat is the Punjab, in northwestern India, where they fought two wars against the British until their subjection in 1849. Since then they have won fame as some of the Empire's fiercest fighters. More than 3,000,000 Sikhs live in the Punjab alone, where they are outnumbered more than four to one by the Moslems and more than two to one by the Hindus.]

Expect Decision Today

The decision of the All-India Congress party probably will be issued today and the opinion was widely held that the potent, ardently nationalist movement would spurn the British terms.

A last-minute glimmer of hope was seen, however, in a joint statement of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Dr. Mukund Ramrao Jayakar, spokesmen of India's non-party leaders, who said "it would be a tragedy if the Cripps mission failed, for it would produce a keen sense of disappointment and frustration and provoke antagonism which in our opinion would be disastrous in this hour of crisis."

Although urging that British compromise somewhat on the defense issue, these leaders said Britain's proposals "make it clear that after the war India will not have to struggle for recognition of its constitutional and international status."

Cripps Congratulated

Aurobindo Ghose, Indian spiritual leader whose sanctuary at Pondicherry is well known to American visitors, also sent a message to Cripps congratulating him upon his Monday broadcast explaining the proposals.

The answer of the Congress party's working committee, it was understood, was being drafted by Mohandas K. Gandhi and Pandit

Jawaharlal Nehru, both former Congress presidents, for final consideration by the committee today.

Discussions yesterday again revilved chiefly around the issue of control of defenses for this great sub-continent and its 390,000,000 inhabitants—already under the menace of Japanese forces in Burma and on islands in the Bay of Bengal.

Looms as Obstacle

This part of the British plan has met such opposition that, failing a substantial change, it was believed it might prove a stumbling block for the whole scheme.

(A dispatch to the Daily Herald, London Laborite newspaper, said Gandhi had advised rejection of the plan as "unworthy" and a report from New Delhi to the London News Chronicle said that the sikhs already had turned it down because it would place them in a minority in the punjab.)

N. C. Chatterjee, working president of the All-India Hindu Mahasabha, telegraphed that organization's Bengal branch that "we will reject pakistan in any shape or form."

Provides Separate Govts.

Pakistan—autonomous Moslem states—has been demanded consistently by the Moslem League and the proposal submitted to India by Sir Stafford Cripps, Britain's freedom emissary, envisaged separate governments, if the Indians chose, to satisfy the country's 240,000,000 majority Hindus and 77,000,000 minority Moslems.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Ramrao Jayakar, Indian Liberal leaders, issued a joint statement urging that the Indian government be given a share in India's defense in order to make Cripps' mission a success.

"Indian opinion," it said, "cannot look upon any transfer of power as real unless the government of India is so constituted as to give an effective share to the country in the management of its defense."

The sikhs' all-party committee—representing a faction which has supplied thousands of bearded fighting men for British Empire armies—advised Cripps that his proposals were unacceptable because of the threat to the sikh in the Punjab.

"Instead of maintaining and strengthening the inegrity of India," the committee said, "Special provision has been made for separation of the provinces and the establishment of pakistan."

WAVELL TO MEET LEADER OF HINDUS

Defense Talks May Influence India's Decision on Dominion Offer.

LONDON, April 1.—(AP) Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and General Sir Archibald Wavell, British commander for India, have arranged to meet for a talk on control of Indian defense, said a dispatch late tonight from New Delhi to The Daily Herald.

Wavell's forthcoming meeting with the dominant Hindu leader in the All-India Congress party was looked upon as a new tack in the effort of Sir Stafford Cripps to settle the Indian problem with the offer of dominion status after the war.

Various factions have balked over the British insistence on maintaining control over the military affairs of India until the war is over.

The New Delhi dispatch said the exact time of the meeting was kept secret but that "it is hoped the corner then will be turned."

London, Thursday, Apr. 2 (AP)—The Cripps mission to India "is on the brink of failure," the New Delhi correspondent of the Laborite Daily Herald said today, adding:

"It is now fairly clear that the situation can be saved only if the British government makes further concessions about Indian control of defense and immediate administration of the country pending a grant of dominion status."

The correspondent said that the powerful all-India Congress had told Sir Stafford Cripps unofficially that it "regrets the plan is not acceptable," and "throws responsibility for the failure onto the British Cabinet."

The daily mail's correspondent said Sir Stafford had telephoned London "and made it clear that all parties are demanding a bigger say in defense. There are indications that Cripps realizes that transfer of the defense portfolio to Indian hands is the least that could insure acceptance."

Neither Bose Dead, Both Woo India, Nazis Say

[By the Associated Press]

New York, April 1—The German radio was busy today with accounts of the "Indian-independence" activities of the two Axis-protected Boses in further denial of Vichy-broadcast reports that one of them, Subhas Chandra Bose, exiled radical nationalist Indian leader, had been killed in an airplane accident in Japan.

The radio said Subhas Chandra Bose is speaking "to his compatriots in India in the Indian language" today from "an unidentified station." It described him as enjoying the best of health, despite a flood of condolence telegrams sent to his mother in India, including one by Mohandas K. Gandhi and another by Maulana Abdul Kalan Azad, president of the Congress party.

Wooing India For Japan

Another German broadcast of a Tokyo dispatch said Rash Behari Bose, who went to Japan twenty-seven years ago with a price on his head and who became a Japanese citizen under the protection of the Black Dragon Society, had presided over the East Asiatic League for Independence at a meeting in Tokyo which lasted from Saturday to Monday.

The broadcast said he had issued a manifesto declaring that, "in view of the decrease of British influence, the moment has now come for establishment of friendly cooperation with Japan with the aim of complete liberation of India."

Death In Plane Denied

The Tokyo radio announced last Thursday that a conference of Indian representatives from Hongkong, Malaya, Thailand and Shanghai would be held in Tokyo, beginning Saturday. The following day it disclosed that a Japanese Army plane, with eleven persons aboard, including four of the delegates, had been missing three days and was presumed lost.

Tokyo did not list either Bose as among the passengers, but on Saturday the Vichy radio said it was reported from Tokyo that "Bose died in an air crash." Later a Vichy broadcast, as heard by CBS in New York, identified the dead Indian leader as Subhas Chandra Bose.

British Break Trap Below Prome

NEW DELHI, India, April 1 (AP).—British forward units previously cut off ten miles below Prome, the right anchor of the Allied line in Burma, have broken through a Japanese road block and cut their way back to rejoin the main bodies, a British communique announced today; but it admitted that heavy enemy forces were increasing their pressure up the Irrawaddy River basin and that the invader was in full command of the air.

The enemy's trap was broken at Shwedaung, ten miles south of Prome, after a two-day fight by regular English and Scottish troops—Glouces-ters, West Yorkshires, Cameronians and Duke of Wellingtons—aided by two Indian battalions which struck from the north.

But although these forces, by their gallant attacks against greatly superior numbers and in the face of intense air action, had beaten off the disaster that had appeared to envelop them, the British position in defense of the Yenang Yaung oil fields 100 miles north of Prome remained grave.

The British communique said enemy troops in force still held Shwedaung itself, on the east bank of the Irrawaddy, while just to the east and some twenty miles farther south other invading columns were astride the railway above the town of Paungde, "still having complete control of the air."

Enemy losses were severe before the English and Scottish battalions at Shwedaung; British casualties were described as moderate.

On the British right, meanwhile, Imperial river patrols were said to have fought "extremely successful actions" in withdrawing to the north to protect that flank from infiltration.

Yesterday the enemy bombed a landing ground in central Burma and another in northern Burma, the communique said, adding that damage was negligible.

British Break Trap

Rejoin Main Force in Burma

New Delhi, Apr. 1 (AP)—British and Indian detachments cut off from Prome by a Japanese wedge across the road at Shwedaung have battled their way back to the main British line in a two-day fight which left the invaders' forward forces badly mauled, a communique declared today.

Nevertheless, the report said, the Japanese still were massed in strength at Shwedaung, 19 miles south of Prome, and astride the Rangoon-Prone rail line north of Paungde.

The British still barred the way into Prome, gateway to the West Burma oilfields, with their patrols along the Irrawaddy pulled back to guard their right flank while they waited for the full shock of the Japanese attack from the south.

From the eastern flank of the Allied defense line came word that outnumbered Chinese forces which had held out through five days of terrific attack and air bombardment at Toungoo had broken through Japanese lines and fallen back to the north on the bitterly contested road to Mandalay.

The British communique said Japanese warplanes had complete control of the air.

CHINESE GARRISON SLASHES ITS WAY OUT OF JAP TRAP

Lack of Aerial Support Forces Gen. Stilwell to Withdraw from Toungoo.

By DANIEL DE LUCE

WITH THE CHINESE ARMY ON THE TOUNGOO FRONT Burma, April 1—(AP) Under the incessant week-long blasting of Japanese dive-bombers and artillery, a Chinese garrison has slashed its way out of encircled Toungoo, forded the Sittang river and rejoined the main Chinese armies in a bloody withdrawal action personally directed by Lieut. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell with all the shrewd serenity of a chess-master.

This is the story of the fiercest battle yet fought in Burma:

Japs Encircled Town

The Japanese aiming north toward Mandalay encircled Toungoo a week ago. The Chinese garrison (reported by Chungking to have numbered 8,000 men, against 40,000 or more Japanese) was cut off from all aid but stuck to shallow trenches and pits with machine guns and rifles, staving off repeated assaults.

General Stilwell, the lean, gray American commander of all Chinese forces in Burma, brought his armies from the north in an attempt to raise the siege.

One Convoy Arrives

For five days the counter-attack continued, but only a single convoy of ammunition got through to the Toungoo garrison. Heartened by this help, the men fought on.

By Sunday, however, it became evident that Toungoo could not be relieved. Lack of air support was a vital factor.

In shirt-sleeves, calmly smoking a cigarette in a black holder, General Stilwell went into a huddle with his Chinese aides, his fluent Chinese audible above the clatter of nearby machine guns.

He then flashed orders by radio to the Toungoo garrison to be ready to crash through the Japanese lines at a specified point on the northeast.

Moves Troops in Feint

He moved his relief forces in a southwesterly direction, drawing off considerable Japanese strength to meet his feint. The British Imperials in the Irrawaddy valley farther west also began an attack to divert as much Japanese pressure as possble.

Yesterday, the scene was set and the Chinese in Toungoo dashed from their tree-screened positions out into the open.

The Japanese artillery laid down a blanketing fire, but the Chinese scattered and pressed on, splashed and swam across the Sittang under point-blank shelling, and reached the sanctuary of the farther hills through fields littered with Japanese dead.

Now the Chinese lines stand 12 miles north of Toungoo, around the smouldering ruins of the Nangyun railway station, which is a half-mile west of the Burma Road and five miles south of Yedashe.

(In a somewhat similar situation on the Irrawaddy Front, the British announced they had accomplished a withdrawal, mauling the Japanese at Shwedaung, ten miles south of Prome, and rejoining their main defense line to the north. As in the Chinese case, a British communique said Japanese air superiority was a telling factor).

As the first big-scale test of the Japanese and Chinese Armies in Burma, the final fall of Toungoo speaks for itself, but the issue might have been different if the Chinese forces now available had been able to reach the scene at the start of the Japanese encirclement maneuver.

General Stilwell, who brought up every man he could as quickly as possible, came to the front in an American armored scout car with First Lieut. Carl Arnold, one-time Los Angeles music instructor, and Sergt. Francis Astolfi, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Both carried sub-machine guns, but they had no occasion to use them, because the Chinese surrounded Stilwell with a strong escort of their own.

Here at the front, when Japanese planes interrupt conferences or inspections, Stilwell takes cover without missing a beat of his rhythmic gum-chewing.

U.S. General Leads Relief Force To Front Lines

APR 2 1942

By Daniel De Luce
Associated Press Correspondent

With the Chinese Army on the Toungoo Front, March 31 (Delayed)—Toungoo was abandoned today by the fierce-fighting remnant of the Chinese garrison which held out there through five days of terrific air and ground assault and then battered a way over fields of Japanese dead to rejoin troops which their American commander, Lieut. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, personally led to their relief.

Not until ordered by radio to retreat after Stilwell's forces proved unable to crack the Japanese line twelve miles north of the town did the garrison fighters budge from their shallow machine-gun holes and rifle pits in the eastern outskirts of Toungoo.

Cut Bloody Swath

The Chinese crossed the Sittang under almost point-blank fire, cutting a bloody swath through the invaders' lines and scattered in the wooded hills northeast of the town, whence they made their way north to the main Chines lines.

Despite the battering they withstood as they forced the Japanese to pay in blood for every inch of the town, the garrison showed no sign of surrendering.

The fight they put up made the battle of Toungoo the fiercest of the Burma campaign so far.

Cut Off For Week

The Chinese garrison had been cut off for a week from all supplies except one ammunition convoy which slipped through the Japanese lines.

Since Sunday it had been apparent that the Chinese relief column's drive down the road from the north could not reach the hemmed troops, and it became a question of how many of the trapped troops could be saved.

To accomplish this, units of the Chinese relief forces pushed southwest from Yedashe to draw the Japanese strength away from the east and weaken the invaders' lines there for the garrison's breakthrough.

Lack Of Planes Hurts

Observers said that had the Chinese reinforcements now in line twelve miles north of Toungoo been available there a week ago, the issue might well have been different.

The Chinese counter-drive, however, could not be started until last Friday. Lack of air support for the Chinese was regarded as a large factor in the outcome.

Stilwell Goes To Front

General Stilwell, lean-jawed American commander of the Chinese in Burma, came up to the very front lines to direct the fight to save the Toungoo garrison.

At his command, boyish riflemen and machine-gunners from China, spread in thin khaki lines through the brown jungle flanking the road to Mandalay, counter-attacked repeatedly against the reinforced Japanese positions twelve miles north of Toungoo.

Four times captured and four times lost by the Chinese in the bitter fighting, the smoking ruins of the Nangyun railroad station, a half mile west of the Burma road, twelve miles north of Toungoo and five miles south of Yedashe, was still the center of the battle.

Orders Every Man In

General Stilwell, who reached an advanced post near Nangyun Sunday, ordered every Chinese soldier available into the fight to open a way for the Toungoo garrison to withdraw.

Armed with tommyguns, First Lieutenant Carl Arnold, former music teacher at Los Angeles, and Sergt. Francis Astolfi, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., convoyed Stilwell in a United States armored scout car.

Lieutenant Arnold, who wrote the music for Stilwell's verses of an army marching song, "Let's Go," had no chance to test his proficiency at gunnery, for the Chinese command also sent along a strong escort.

Take Cover In Brush

Stilwell and Maj. Gen. Teng Hsi-kuei, 1925 graduate of the Virginia Military Institute and now a member of the Chinese national military council in liaison with the American mission, calmly interrupted their inspection of the front to take cover in the high brush at times when Japanese planes circled overhead.

Stilwell, in shirt sleeves, chewed gum and puffed on a cigarette in a black holder as he chatted in fluent Chinese with his unit commanders only a few hundred yards from sputtering machine guns.

Once when nine enemy bombers passed overhead, flying north, a buck-toothed Chinese sentry whose German-made helmet was camouflaged with leafy branches pointed them out to his general with a grin.

"Take a picture of the Chinese; don't take me," Stilwell told a newspaperman. "The Chinese are the big story of this war."

Chinese Plead For Planes

APR 2 1942

(By the Associated Press)

Chungking, China, April 1—With Chinese troops fiercely battling Japanese forces in the Toungoo area, the Chungking press appealed to the Allies today to send air reinforcements to Burma immediately to support Chiang Kai-shek's armies.

The newspapers said the lack of adequate plane strength had caused numerous Allied reverses since the Pacific war began.

CHUNGKING, April 1 (AP)—A number of civilians were killed and wounded and many homes were damaged yesterday afternoon when twenty-nine Japanese bombers attacked Lashio, Burma, a Chinese Central News dispatch said tonight.

Meanwhile, a communique from the Yunnan headquarters of the A.V.G. said that the American "Flying Tigers" had destroyed a total of 36 Japanese planes from March 15 to March 31.

Hopkins Graduate Saving Chinese At Toungoo

By Daniel De Luce
Associated Press Correspondent

On the Toungoo Front in Burma, March 30 (Delayed)—Dr. Gordon Seagrave, a lone American medical missionary, who set up an emergency hospital in the center of a bomb-wrecked and deserted Burmese town, is working with superhuman energy to save the lives of Chinese soldiers wounded in the desperate fighting on the Toungoo front.

(The New York office of the Baptist Foreign Missions identified Dr. Seagrave as a graduate of Denison University in Ohio and the Johns Hopkins Medical School, and said his wife and their two youngest children returned to the United States a few days ago and went to Granville, Ohio, where they joined the two older Seagrave children.)

Seminary Nurses Help

Dr. Seagrave set up his operating table three nights ago, and since then has been caring for the wounded almost without rest.

American and English volunteer ambulance drivers trucked the victims from crude dressing stations at the front. Ten nurses from Karen Theological Seminary, who had been trained by Dr. Seagrave during his years at the Baptist-built Harper Memorial Hospital at Namkham in the Burmese Shan states, assisted him.

Seagrave officially heads what is called the Harper Memorial Hospital mobile surgical unit, and ranks as a lieutenant colonel in the field.

Sent To Shan States

He formed this unit after the outbreak of the Pacific war by going into bombed Rangoon and offering to serve air-raid victims or troops in action. Within forty-eight hours he had been put under orders by the British army, had been given six trucks loaded with blankets and medical supplies and, with volunteer drivers, was sent back to the Shan states, where medical facilities for the Chinese allies were extremely limited.

Among his drivers were William H. Cummings, of Newton Center, Mass., an agricultural missionary from Namkham; the Rev. D. W. Graham, of Pennsylvania, stationed at Karen Theological Seminary; Dr. P. Geren, of Eldorado, Ark., and Dr. H. B. Whittington, an Englishman, and his Connecticut-born wife.

All Were Lecturers

All were lecturers at Judson College, in Rangoon, which was closed because of the war.

On a pine-forested hill in eastern Burma, Dr. Seagrave established his base in crude bamboo huts. From there his medical unit—four missionary surgeons and thirty-five nurses—maintained contact with Chinese field commanders as much as 200 miles distant and organized small hospitals and dispensaries in these out-of-the-way places.

Burden Still Heavy

From there the doctors, riding jeep trucks of United States manufacture, traveled the narrow, twisting roads, up the sides of mountains and down deep ravines, to reach the troops. But many of those forces were stationed miles away from any roads, so that medical service and supplies had to go in with the help of coolies and mules.

Even the fact that Chinese Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek recently has sent some of his own medical staff into Burma has lifted little of the burden from the shoulders of the American volunteers, who for a considerable period were the only surgeons attached to the Chinese expeditionary force.

COOLIE-ANIMAL SUPPLY ROUTE

Men, Mules and Elephants Will Be Used by China.

Chunking, April 1 (A. P.).—Three 100-man Chinese survey corps, each including engineers, doctors, road experts, map makers and armed guards, will leave Kunming shortly to map a temporary coolie and animal transport route to India over which gasoline and other vital materials can be rushed to China while the new India Road is being completed.

This emergency scheme, necessitated by the Japanese drive into Burma which closed the Burma Road, calls for the use of pack trains, human caravans, mule and man-drawn carts and even elephants over a route following a general line from western Yunnan province through upper Burma to India.

It is admitted the surveyors are tackling a tough job, for they must work through one of the wildest regions in the world. Various diseases, notably malignant malaria, prevail the year round, while the terrain to be crossed also abounds in hostile tribes, wild animals and poisonous insects.

Alternate Tibet Route

Another route being considered would lead northwest from Kumming into Sikiang province and then through Tibet.

Besides its surveying equipment and road-building material, each corps must carry enough food for one or two months, as through many mountain and jungle stretches there are no human habitations. On the homeward trip the corps will bring back war supplies.

This will be China's first foreign extension of its primitive pack-train transport system in modern times. China possesses forty main and branch lines of this kind covering 18,000 miles in fifteen provinces. Plans already are under way to open a passenger cart service over some of these lines from Chunking northwest to Chengtu, then northeast to Kwangyuan, just below the border of Szechwan and Shensi provinces. From there it will be possible to make connections into the northwest.

AUSTRALIA CALLS ALL FIGHTING MEN

Army Brought Up to Full War Strength, Intensive Training Ordered.

By Clifton McArthur

MELBOURNE, Thursday, April 2.—(AP) All Australia's land forces were brought up to full war strength today and ordered into immediate battle training of the most intensive type so they may resist with maximum endurance the Japanese invasion which daily threatens this continent.

Single men between 18 and 45 and all married men between 18 and 35 were directed to report immediately for military service in an order issued on recommendation of General Sir Thomas Blamey, chief of all Allied ground forces under the supreme commander, Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Planes Fly Through Storms

The order, a product of Australia's newly regrouped command, came after a day of U. S. and Australian air attack in which the Allied planes, flying through tropical storms and stiff enemy resistance, blasted the Timor-New Guinea airdromes which menace Australia from two sides, and brought to 33 their three-day toll of enemy aircraft put out of action.

War Minister Francis E. Forde said the total mobilization ordered shortly after midnight applied to men already earmarked for military duty but who, under previous plans, would not have been called up for some time.

Intensive Training Planned

General Blamey said every Australian officer and enlisted men in all units now would be required to take part in the new period of intensive, supplementary training.

Blamey and all other senior officers now back to defend their homeland after the hard battle in which they have taken part in the Middle East and elsewhere have been insistent upon the need for hardening and training almost to the limit of the troops' endurance.

On the air front, revised official figures gave this tabulation of Allied successes since Monday: Four enemy planes certainly destroyed, 18 probably destroyed and 11 known to have been damaged.

Wednesday morning, Royal Australian Air force bombers blasted the landing ground at Koepang, Dutch Timor, northwest of the continent, causing many fires and explosions. Returning pilots said six enemy airplanes were believed destroyed on the ground and six others damaged.

In the same hours Allied aircraft were throbbing through a tropical gale to New Guinea, the Japanese invasion springboard on the north, to drop their bombs directly on runways at the Salamaua airdrome and then to get home safely through the storm.

No Allied Planes Lost

No Allied aircraft was lost in either of the raids.

From Port Moresby, Allied New Guinea outpost, came word that a lone Australian bomber probably had accounted for two Japanese fighters over the Gulf of Huon, off northeast New Guinea, during a reconnaissance flight Tuesday.

Three "zero" fighters pounced on the bomber. The turret gunner sent one down in flames and the pilot reported he believed he had got another in twelve minutes of action. The bomber was slightly damaged.

Over Port Moresby itself, a Japanese heavy bomber being used for reconnaissance was destroyed Tuesday and the crew killed.

These victories filled out the three-day total, adding 15 planes to the 18 destroyed, probably destroyed or damaged which Prime Minister John Curtin announced earlier as the preliminary Monday-Tuesday score.

Optimism Up, but Cautious

The almost endless attacks by Allied planes gave Australian and American military authorities alike a growing if still cautious optimism over the chances of holding off the Japanese, particularly in New Guinea, where the enemy has been pinned to a relatively impotent coastal strip on the northeast shore.

The latest raid on Australia by the Japanese, an attack on Port Darwin Tuesday evening, was described officially today as a weak one made by a small force, which caused no damage to service installations and no casualties.

Enemy withdrawals from the Markham Valley, caused by heavy aerial blows and by the oncoming of the three months' wet season, means the Japanese are confined to an area, where, under mounting Allied pressure, their position might become a highly precarious one.

With reorganization of the Australian Army command virtually completed by further appointments to posts in a military machine geared to the necessity of meeting threatened invasion, General MacArthur conferred today with Curtin and Forde.

Forde said General MacArthur expressed entire approval of the army reorganization and said he and General Blamey would work together "like twin brothers."

The Army Minister also announced the appointment of Lieut. Gen. E.K. Smart to represent Australia on the Allied Chiefs of Staff Committee in Washington, and said Smart would leave at once for the U.S.

Under the army regrouping, older officers will give way in the field to younger men physically and temperamentally fitted to modern warfare, and training will be under actual war conditions.

Sydney Calls Up More Men

[By the Associated Press]

Sydney, Thursday, April 2—The Australian Government ordered today that all Commonwealth land forces be brought up to full war strength by calling up additional personnel.

The order requires all unmarried men between the ages of 18 and 45, as well as married men from 18 to 35, to report immediately for military service.

Army Minister Francis Forde said the step was taken on recommendation of Gen. Sir Thomas Blamey, commander of Allied land forces in Australia, and applied to men who were already listed for service, but who would not have been called for some time.

Intensive battle training for all units was ordered by General Blamey, Forde said.

SALAMAUA SUBJECTED TO LASHING

United Nations Regarded as Having Wrested Initiative From Nipponese On Australian Front

By YATES McDANIEL

Melbourne, Australia, April 1 (AP) — United States and Australian bombers, operating in the face of heavy tropical storms, struck destructive new blows at two Japanese bases north of the continent today.

OFFENSIVE CONTINUED

A communique said it was believed six enemy planes were destroyed on the ground, six others were damaged and many fires and explosions were touched off by Australian bombers which attacked Koepang, on Timor, while an Allied force scored numerous hits with heavy bombs on an airdrome runway at Salamaua, New Guinea.

This continuation of the aerial offensive by Australia's defenders came on the heels of an official recapitulation listing 33 enemy planes as put out of action in three days. Four were reported destroyed, 18 probably destroyed and 11—including four flying boats machine-gunned in a previous raid on Koepang—as damaged.

All these attacks were made without loss to the United Nations' air forces.

Optimism Increasing

There was growing optimism among Australian observers that the Japanese now can be held off in New Guinea although they were cautious not to over-emphasize the enemy's recent withdrawal from the inundated Markham Valley.

Nevertheless, they said, the withdrawal means that Japan's hold now is confined to the narrow coastal strip where her position may be made precarious. The vital point, in these informants' view, is that the Japanese now cannot disperse their planes—which was seen as a prime goal of the march into the valley.

The arrival of the wet season, which lasts three months, was accepted as the chief cause for the withdrawal, but it was believed also that heavy air blows struck at the invaders' shipping and planes were another factor.

The New Guinea correspondent of the Sydney Sun, citing the Japanese failure to raid Port Moresby for the last six days, declared that the invaders had been forced on the defensive in that area.

While he also stressed the enemy's heavy plane losses, he pointed out it would not be wise to accept the present lull in offensive action as any indication of a collapse of Japanese striking power.

General MacArthur spent half an hour with Prime Minister Curtin discussing strategic problems.

Meanwhile, Army Minister Francis M. Forde said General Douglas MacArthur, supreme commander of the United Nations forces in the Southwest Pacific, had called on him and expressed complete approval of the reorganization of the Australian army.

Forde said General MacArthur had made certain suggestions regarding the army and Australian defenses which were receiving immediate attention. He quoted the United States general as saying he had been impressed with the leading Australian officers he had met and was certain he and General Sir Thomas Blamey, commander of ground troops in Australia, would work together "like twin brothers."

Curtin's communique indicated that the greatest destruction in the two-day raiding was inflicted at Koepang, where the Japanese have a base 500 miles northwest of Darwin.

He reported that six grounded enemy aircraft probably were destroyed at Koepang, that four flying boats were damaged by machinegun fire, and that near misses were noted on a ship in the harbor.

One Japanese zero fighter was shot down and one enemy bomber possibly destroyed in that attack.

An earlier communique said that Allied planes scored direct hits on hangars and runways Monday at Lae, capital of New Guinea 420 miles northeast of Cape York, Australia's northernmost tip.

Curtin's summary said it was known now that the buildings at Lae received at least five direct hits with heavy bombs and two grounded aircraft probably were destroyed. Fires were started among the buildings.

Darwin Attacked Twice

Defensively, Allied planes fought against attackers of Darwin and Port Moresby, New Guinea base 350 miles east of Cape York.

Darwin was raided twice yesterday. In one raid, Curtin reported, one escorting zero fighter was shot down and one bomber probably was damaged. In the second raid, he said, neither casualties nor damage were reported.

Reporting on the action at Port Moresby yesterday, Curtin said a Japanese bomber's wing was shot off and the plane crashed a few miles from the town.

During an attack by Japanese zero fighters on an Allied bomber near Port Moresby Monday, he said, one zero fighter probably was shot down. It last was seen trailing black smoke from the motor.

Promotions Announced

Mr. Forde announced that Brigadier Clive E. Steel had been promoted to major-general and appointed Engineer-in-Chief of the Australian Army. It was stated authoritatively that Major-Gen. John Northcott, commander of an armored division had been appointed to an important position.

Other changes announced included the appointment of Major Gen. H. R. H. Robertson, one of the leaders of the Libyan campaign, to succeed Gen. Northcott.

Under the army's regrouping scheme, older Australian militia officers will give way in the field to younger men with a modern outlook and physically and temperamentally fitted to modern warfare. Theid training will be under actual war conditions. All senior officers who returned from fighting overseas insisted upon the need for hardening almost to the limit of endurance.

Concentrations of troops in Australia are on war footing as regards training, leave and food, and officers have been told to impart to the men a front-line outlook.

The introduction of field censorship by the military is another indication that actual battle conditions have been set up. The fact that in the United States the land based air force is part of the army organization will profoundly influence the conduct of operations in Australia, observers said. Army and air co-operation now has assumed front-rank importance in tactical operations.

MacArthur Gets Union Pledges Of Support

[By the Associated Press]

United States Army Headquarters, Australia, April 1—American labo organizations have given Gen. Douglas MacArthur, United Nations supreme commander in the south west Pacific, strong assurances of support and the general has been quick to express his appreciation, it was disclosed today.

Messages from President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and James Carey, of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, were read at a press conference.

Second Demonstration

An army spokesman pointed out that they marked the second demonstration of labor backing for General MacArthur.

The first was in the Philippines, immediately after he was appointed commander of the United States forces, when a committee representing all Philippine labor organizations called upon him.

That was said to be the first instance of complete and voluntary labor support ever accorded an army commander since the Americans occupied the Philippines.

Weapons Promised

Green's message to MacArthur said: "We're behind you, general, five million strong. Your fearlessness and skill in the face of overwhelming odds makes every last one of us proud to be an American. We solemnly pledge to invest $1,000,000,000 of our earnings to help maintain you and our fighting men everywhere. We further pledge we will build for our armed forces the finest and best war weapons the world has ever produced."

MacArthur replied: "Labor never has failed the army or the nation. May God bless you all for your splendid patriotism."

"Thrust In Mighty Effort"

From Carey came this message: "The executive board of the CIO has unanimously directed me to convey to your valiant men our support in this great struggle for the freedom of humanity. Millions of members of our organization working in mines, mills and factories comprise our arsenal of democracy and are proud to be associated in this great fight. We, with you, are confident of ultimate victory over the forces of the Fascist Axis."

MacArthur replied: "I appreciate deeply your message, which has just reached me. Labor has played its magnificent part in every war our great republic has fought and that it will do so again and will prove the industrial backbone that will determine the present vital struggle is my firm conviction. I have complete trust in the mighty effort that I feel sure you will put forth."

TOKIO (from Japanese broadcasts), April 1 (AP).—An imperial headquarters communique reported today the destruction of twenty-two United Nations planes during Japanese air attacks on Darwin, Australia, and Port Moresby, New Guinea.

Fighters which escorted bombers for a heavy raid on Darwin two days ago were asserted to have shot down nine out of ten defense planes which flew up to intercept them. A unit which raided Darwin on Saturday, it was said, shot down four out of seven American aircraft. In addition, it was reported that three concealed planes were set ablaze.

Six opposing aircraft were reported shot down in a series of raids between March 24 and March 28 on Port Moresby. In all the Japanese raids, imperial headquarters said, military establishments and airdromes were heavily damaged.

Quezon Pays Call on Curtin

MELBOURNE, April 1 (AP).—President Manuel L. Quezon of the Philippines, accompanied by General Douglas MacArthur, paid his first call on Prime Minister John Curtin today, and after an informal chat met the membtrs of the Advisory War Council. Authoritative sources said Curtin assured Quezon that every assistance would be given him during his stay in this country.

The service is surprisingly fast—but the average time is a secret lest it tip off the enemy.

Free French Units Under M'Arthur

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 1—Gen. Charles de Gaulle has placed Free French forces in the Pacific under Gen. Douglas MacArthur's supreme command, Free French officials announced today.

De Gaullist headquarters announced last month that the United States had given partial recognition to Free French control of French Pacific islands, notably Tahiti and New Caledonia, and would cooperate in their defense.

In reply to De Gaulle's message announcing the decision, MacArthur said:

"Deeply appreciate your message. Am happy once more to be closely associated with French soldiers as my comrades in arms."

De Gaulle and MacArthur knew each other in 1923-24, when both attended a special course at the Ecole de Guerre in Paris.

DE GAULLE PLEADS FOR FULL ALLIANCE WITH FREE FRENCH

APR 2 1942

Falls to Understand Stand of U. S., Britain Toward His Faction.

LONDON, April 1 — (AP) General Charles de Gaulle, showing his resentment at the lack of recognition accorded his Free French movement by the United Nations, declared today that his followers would march "shoulder to shoulder with her Allies on the express condition that her Allies go forward with her."

In their attitude toward fighting (Forty-five words of this dispatch were deleted by censor).

The Free French leader, addressing a luncheon audience, called the men of Vichy "infamous champions of capitulation," and then asked:

"How could anyone suppose, that France (the Free French), the democracies would indulge in an absurd kind of snobbery and let themselves be influenced by their regret at not finding in her ranks a great many erstwhile famous names?"

First Expression of Bewilderment

This was the first time that General de Gaulle so openly and emphatically expressed the evident bewilderment of his faction and that of many Britons over the relations of the Allied governments to the Vichy regime, on the one hand, and to the fighting Free French on the other.

De Gaulle asked his audience another question:

"What could be said to French citizens who are being asked to resist in the midst of untold sufferings, if it had to be understood that Frenchmen who have been fighting — and in what conditions — since Sept. 3, 1939, would not be treated, either as Allies or even as belligerents?"

APR 2 1942

British Silent

Authoritative British sources declined to comment on the speech, but other quarters cited what they called the contradictory policies toward rival French groups.

Some of these are:

The British, who do not have diplomatic relations with Vichy, nevertheless acquiesce to the United States' policy of shipping materials to Vichy-ruled French North Africa even though British spokesmen charge that these supplies or their equivalent leak through to the Germans.

The United States, while maintaining normal diplomatic relations with Vichy, opened the way for Free French adherence to the 26-nation anti-Axis pact.

General de Gaulle also has placed Free French forces in the Pacific under Gen. Douglas MacArthur's supreme command. It was announced today. And the aid of these forces, based notably at Tahiti and New Caledonia on the supply routes to Australia, has been accepted by the United States government.

There are other paradoxes in the French situation. The United States has given Lend-Lease aid to the Free French, but at the same time has never recognized De Gaulle's movement formally. The maintenance of an ambassador in Vichy is an effort by the United States to keep that regime from going over completely to the Axis side.

State Department officials recently said that United States relations with Vichy were on a "day-to-day" basis. This announcement followed disclosure that the Vichy-ruled administration on the Caribbean Island of Martinique had permitted an Axis submarine raider to land an injured crewman there for hospital attention, and a British charge that French officials in Tunisia had shipped gasoline and other supplies across the border into Italian Tripoli to be used against the British in the Libyan warfare.

London, April 1 (A. P.).—Gen. Charles de Gaulle indicated today a feeling that his Free French movement is being pushed aside and in a warning note declared, "Fighting France means to go forward shoulder to shoulder with her Allies on the express condition that her Allies go forward with her." In a luncheon speech, he hinted that the United Nations should conduct negotiations relating to French matters with Free French headquarters in London, not with Vichy.

"How would it be possible," he asked, "to persuade this nation (France) that her future lies in victory, dishonor in capitulation and duty in freedom if by any unfortunate chance her Allies themselves come to accept the neutralization of France as dictated to Vichy by Hitler, and only discuss matters concerning the interest of my country with the traitors who are oppressing her and taking their orders from the enemy?"

France is going through "the greatest revolution in all her history," he added, and after the war will be a new country "guided by new men" and far different politically, socially and morally from the country the Allies once knew.

23 Evacuees Reach Safety in Australia

Sydney, Australia, April 1—(AP)—Twenty - three evacuees from an island north of Australia arrived in this country today after a perilous trip on which they lived on native food and roots, hacked their way through jungles, and crossed rivers in primitive canoes.

Members of the party, which included planters and European policemen, were sworn to temporary secrecy on the details of their journey in order not to endanger the lives of friends who were left behind. However, they said they believed some of these also may have escaped.

LONDON, April 1 (AP).—The British Empire flying boat Circe, carrying a crew of four and sixteen passengers escaping from Java, was lost somewhere in Dutch East Indies waters late in February, the Dutch news agency Aneta reported today on the basis of information from Australia. There has been no word of any survivors, Aneta said. The plane's last radio message gave its position as 200 miles from Tjilatjap on Java's south coast.

FDR Stresses MacArthur In Command of All Forces

Washington, April 1 (AP)—President Roosevelt reiterated at a press conference yesterday that General Douglas MacArthur was the supreme commander of United Nations forces in the Southwest Pacific. He assumed, he said, that that meant MacArthur was commander of Army, Navy and Air forces.

Turning to his naval aide, Captain John L. McCrea, he asked whether that was correct, and McCrea nodded assent.

The president's remarks were prompted by an inquiry about a new story that there was some question whether MacArthur had jurisdiction over naval forces.

Pacific Council Meets To Draft War Strategy

APR 2 1942

Representatives of 7 Nations Hail 'Very Satisfactory Beginning.'

WASHINGTON, April 1 — (AP) Seven men charged with devising a win-the-war strategy for the vast Pacific assembled for the first time today around the cabinet table at the White House and made a "very satisfactory beginning."

President Roosevelt reviewed the grave problems confronting this new Pacific council, various points were considered and discussed and Dr. T. V. Soong, Chinese foreign minister, declared afterward:

"We will be getting to grips with the whole situation more and more."

No Major Decisions

Apparently no major decisions were reached today. They are expected to evolve from future conferences to be held with reasonable regularity starting next Tuesday.

The council was created Monday as the vehicle for coordinating the war efforts of the United States, China, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, the Netherlands and Great Britain—the nations actively battling Japan.

This body, one authority asserted, probably will take over direction of the conflict in the Pacific theater, while a Pacific council in London gradually may disband or confine its attention to the European and Middle Eastern phases of the war as they affect Pacific operations.

Military Matters Discussed

The direction of the Pacific war from Washington appeared likely to apply more to political and economic aspects than to actual combatant operations. Yet military matters were discussed to some extent today among this council of civilians.

Attending the initial meeting as council members, in addition to the President and Soong, were Lord Halifax, the British ambassador; Dr. Herbert V. Evatt, Australian minister of external affairs, now on a mission to the United States; Walter Nash, New Zealand minister; Dr. Alexander Loudon, Netherlands minister; and Hume Wrong, counsellor of the Canadian legation. Mr. Roosevelt also brought Harry L. Hopkins, lease-lend supervisor and members of the War Production board, into the deliberations.

It was Evatt who reported a "very satisfactory beginning." Nash said it was a "tremendously interesting and valuable meeting." Halifax called it "most helpful."

And Evatt and Nash agreed that full opportunity had been provided for an expresion of the views of Australia and New Zealand. Their countries in particular had insisted on establishment of the council so they might have a louder voice in determining how the conflict should be waged in the southwest Pacific.

Pacific Council Talks On War Situation

APR 2 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 1 — The new Pacific War Council, representing seven United Nations actively fighting in the Pacific theater, met for the first time today in what members said afterward was a tremendously valuable conference.

Seated around a White House cabinet table with President Roosevelt were officials of Australia, New Zealand, China, the Netherlands, Canada and Great Britain.

Over-All Effort Studied

Dr. T. V. Soong, Chinese Foreign Minister, told reporters:

"We will be getting to grips with the whole situation more and more."

To a question whether he received any encouragement regarding his own country's problems, he replied that the emphasis was on the over-all war effort rather than on the interests of any single nation.

The participants indicated that Mr Roosevelt acted as presiding officer and did a large portion of the talking.

Situation Reviewed

Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, representing Great Britain, said there was a "general review" of the war situation by the President and "various points were considered and discussed." He said the meeting was "most helpful" and that meetings would be held with reasonable regularity. The next was scheduled for Tuesday.

Walter Nash, New Zealand's Minister to the United States and also her representative on the Pacific Council, asserted that it was a "tremendously interesting and valuable meeting."

Australians Satisfied

Both Nash and Dr. Herbert V. Evatt, Australian Minister of External Affairs, agreed that their countries had had a full opportunity to express their views and had not been subordinated in any way. Evatt said the conference provided a "very satisfactory beginning."

The discussions, Nash said, were not devoted to military matters alone.

Harry L. Hopkins, lend-lease supervisor and member of the War Production Board, was a second American representative at the parley. Others attending were Dr. Alexander Loudon, Netherlands Minister to the United States, and Hume Wrong, counselor of the Canadian legation.

Talks Termed Imperative

To a question whether he would represent Australia permanently on the council, Evatt responded that he would do so for "the time being." He said he expected to leave for Canada after Tuesday's conference but that he planned to return to Washington.

Observers expected the efforts of the members of the War Council to produce the first complete unity of war planning since Japan cracked the ring of Allied defenses in the Southwestern Pacific by overwhelming Singapore and the Dutch East Indies.

President Roosevelt had said it was imperative that the United Nations in the Western Pacific "consider together" high policy for successful prosecution of the war.

Their efforts were expected to produce the first complete unity of war planning since Japan cracked the ring of Allied defenses in the Southwestern Pacific by over-Dutch East Indies.

President Roosevelt, who announced formation of the council Monday, called the other members to meet with him at the White House today in their initial session and while official word was lacking as to the first work to be undertaken Mr. Roosevelt himself has described it as imperative that the United Nations in the Western Pacific "consider together" high policy for the war's successful prosecution.

Seven Invited to Attend

Summoned to the meeting were Viscount Halifax, the British ambassador; Dr. Herbert V. Evatt, Australian minister of external affairs; Walter Nash, New Zealand minister to the United States; T. V. Soong, Chinese foreign minister; Alexander Loudon, minister from the Netherlands, and Hume Wrong, Canadian legation counselor, representing Canada in the absence of Canadian Minister Leighton McCarthy.

It was authoritatively predicted that the council here would virtually assume supreme direction of the Pacific war policy, whereas a somewhat kindred body in London, with only British commonwealth representatives, would gradually cease to function.

President Roosevelt at his press conference yesterday offered no details on the council's immediate agenda, except to say that it had been formed to permit consultations on the general progress of defending ourselves against the powers of darkness.

Reads Excerpt from Letter

Amplifying his reference to the powers of darkness, Mr. Roosevelt noted that this was Holy Week and read an excerpt from a personal letter he had received.

"No matter what may be the religious faith of individuals," the letter said, "most Americans see in Calvary's cross the eternal symbol that light will conquer darkness, truth prove stronger than error, and life greater than death. It is the only sign by which we can conquer the power of black paganism that now threatens every thing which we hold dear."

The Washington council makes its appearance on the world scene at a critical period in the Pacific conflict when Japan's next major move is still uncertain and preparations for an eventual Allied offensive are only beginning to take shape. Military and naval experts see in the present situation, however, various definable factors certain to enter into all considerations of high strategy.

Supplies First Consideration

Paramount among these is the necessity of keeping communication lines open through the Pacific to New Zealand and Australia and through the Atlantic and Indian Oceans to India and China. This means holding in check an enemy already in a position to menace those supply routes.

Another important factor is the necessity of preventing further Japanese territorial conquests to add to their gains rrom the China sea campaign, especially conquests of areas useful for future Allied offensive operations. These areas include Hawaii, the great Pacific fleet base; New Zealand and Australia, which already have been turned into Allied bases; India, with its vast wealth, great manpower resources and supply routes to China; and China itself, where it is hoped to develop air bases from which to bomb the industrial heart of Japan.

Ponder Next Jap Move

Greatest uncertainty of the war at present is whether Japan is likely to strike in full force against one or more of these areas now that her China Sea campaign is completed or whether she will devote her main powers in the near future to recovering from the losse suffered in that campaign, regrouping her military and naval forces and working desperately to make use of the raw material supplies already captured such as rubber in Malaya and oil in the Dutch Indies.

In dealing with this many-sided situation, the great problem of the United Nations is the old, old problem of this war—getting men and equipment to the scene of operations in quantities sufficient to meet the foe on equal terms.

Australia Sends General To D. C.

APR 2 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Melbourne, April 1—Lieut. Gen. E. K. Smart is going to Washington to represent Australia in war councils of the United Nations, Army Minister Francis M. Forde announced today.

General Smart, who has been in charge of the Australian army's southern command, will represent Australia on the United Nations chiefs of staff committee.

Canada Names General Pope

OTTAWA, April 1 (AP).—The appointment of Major General Maurice Pope as the representative in Washington of the war committee of the Canadian Cabinet was announced today by the office of Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King, which said General Pope would maintain contact with the combined Chiefs of Staff Committee.

The appointment was expected to give Canada a direct voice in the discussions of high Allied strategy which will take place in Washington, where a Pacific War Council has been set up.

General Pope, former vice-chief of the Canadian General Staff, will not be a member of the combined Chiefs of Staff Committee, the announcement said, but will attend its meetings whenever matters affecting Canada are under consideration, and will be available for consultation.

SON OF ADMIRAL WINS NAVY CROS

Joseph K. Taussig, Jr., Cited for Heroism During Pearl Harbor Attack.

MARE ISLAND NAVY YARD, Calif., April 1.—(AP) Two 21-year-old heroes of Uncle Sam who clung to their posts although seriously hurt by Japanese fire on Dec. 7, received the coveted Navy Cross today and the thanks of their President and country.

The two, both wounded in the action, were Ensign Joseph K. Taussig, Jr., of Jamestown, R. I. and Corp. Harold R. Hazelwood, Stark City, Mo., of the Marine corps.

Taussig, the son of Vice Admiral Joseph K. Taussig, retired, former commandant of the Fifth Naval district, received his award—the second highest the Navy has to offer—lying flat in bed with his left leg in a cast.

He beamed as Rear Admiral John W. Greenslade, commandant of the 12th Naval district, pinned the cross on his nightshirt in behalf of Secretary Knox and President Roosevelt.

Taussig was just out of Annapolis with the class of '41. He was senior officer present in the anti-aircraft battery of the U. S. S. Nevada and, although seriously wounded, refused to leave his battle station and insisted on continuing the control of his battery until he was forcefully taken from his station.

His citation termed it "distinguished service in the line of his profession, extraordinary courage and disregard of his own physical condition."

COMPLACENCY AMAZES MEN FROM CORREGIDOR

SAN FRANCISCO, April 1.—(AP) Staff members of the U. S. high commissioner to the Philippines, returning from the southwest Pacific war zone, reported today they were "shocked at the complacency in the states."

Ranking members of Commissioner Francis B. Sayre's staff, his wife and son, arrived on a transport after a circuitous journey from the Philippines, accomplished without incident.

Staff members who underwent frequent bombing and shelling in the islands reported "the absence of a consciousness of war here is shocking.

"The shock of discovering that people here have little conception that a vast war is being fought on an intense scale far overshadows our tremendous relief and exhilaration of returning safely," said a ranking member of Sayre's staff.

Mrs. Sayre Tells Of Women's Lot On Corregidor

High Commissioner's Wife, in U. S., Says Men Thought Only of Fighting Japanese

SAN FRANCISCO, April 1 (AP).—Mrs. Francis B. Sayre, first woman to return to the United States from Corregidor since the Japanese struck, described that island fortress today as a man's land where women soon learn to shift for themselves.

It is a land where fighting men, their spirit "simply magnificient," think only of getting the Japanese planes that harass them; where women feel keenly that they are extraneous. It is a land where men have eyes on the sky and sea for help they "know is coming."

Mrs. Sayre, a tall, brown-haired woman with a ready smile, is the wife of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines. She, her son and staff members of the commission arrived in the United States by transport after an uneventful but circuitous voyage.

How they made their way from the Philippines is a Navy secret.

Mrs. MacArthur Was There

Aside from nurses on the island, Mrs. Sayre was one of less than a dozen women who fled Manila to Corregidor. Another was Mrs. Douglas MacArthur, whom she knew well.

Their party left Manila on Dec. 24, the day the Japanese first bombed the port area. They traveled the short distance on a small interisland steamer between bombings, not only of the port area but of Corregidor itself. With them were President Manuel Quezon of the Philippines and his family.

From the first day on the fort they were subjected to incessant bombings and then to shellings. Business was conducted much of the time from a bomb shelter. Everything was simplicity itself.

The treatment of the women on the fort was "very thoughtful," Mrs. Sayre said, but "we felt keenly that it was entirely a military fort and women were extraneous."

"We learned to adapt ourselves to that kind of life. We learned to look after ourselves."

When a reporter commented that she appeared to have withstood the incessant bombings well, she replied: "There is some sort of inner strength that comes to people you don't realize you have."

Her fifteen-year-old son, William Graves, has become more nervous as a result of his experiences, she said.

Proud of Defenders

She obviously was proud of the defense the Americans and Filipinos have put up on Corregidor and Bataan. Her eyes sparkled as she told of the expert anti-aircraft fire of the mc how they live to man their guns, how "all they think about is getting those planes."

From the woman's point of view, a shelling is worse than a bombing from the air, because in a bombing you can hear the anti-aircraft guns as they spot the approaching planes and you can dive for shelter. But in a shelling, you're not sure when it will begin or when it will end.

The Army nurses on the island, she said, are "doing a grand job." And "so are the Filipino nurses."

"It was inspiring to see the way the Filipinos rose to demands made on them."

One ranking member of the Sayre party, who asked that his name be omitted, said the relief and exhilaration felt on the safe arrival home was shocked from them by the complacency they found in the states.

The landing party included Woodbury Willoughby, financial adviser to the High Commissioner, and Mrs. Willoughby; E. D. Hester, economic adviser to the High Commissioner; Cabot Coville, State Department foreign service officer attached to the staff of the High Commissioner; James J. Saxon, Treasury Department; Miss Anna Belle Newcomb, the High Commissioner's private secretary; Mrs. Janet White, sta secretary.

Private MacArthur's Goal

Grandnephew, Seeking Flying Cadetship, Wants to Serve Under General

ST. LOUIS, April 1 (AP).—There's one thing Private Ernest B. MacArthur would like above all else right now and that would be to serve under his granduncle, General Douglas MacArthur. The six-foot five-inch soldier hopes to see action under his illustrious relative as a pilot. He has qualified for the aircraft workers' sheet metal school at Jefferson Barracks until his application as a flying cadet is acted upon.

MacArthur, twent,-six years old, a native of Frisco City, Ala., is a grandson of the late Charles Arthur MacArthur, brother of the general. He was working in a Mobile, Ala., shipyard as a sheet-metal worker when he was drafted on March 13. He tried to enlist in the Navy several times in the last three years, but was turned down because of defective teeth.

500 Japs Off To Owens Valley

[By the Associated Press]

Los Angeles, April 1—Five hundred Japanese — from doll-like babies to elderly shopkeepers—boarded a special train today for the Government's new internment center at Manzanar.

The greatest mass movement in the nation's history was officially under way. By the time the evacuation is over, six weeks or so hence, the Government estimates that 139,000 Pacific Coast Nipponese will be relocated in inland areas, there to pick up the threads of their lives, interrupted when bombs fell on peaceful Hawaii.

Evacuees Seem Happy

Without exception, the evacuees seemed philosophically happy. Several said that reports from Manzanar, where advance contingents of Japanese tradesmen went last month to prepare the site, have described the pleasant conditions there.

Evidence of wealth were seen in today's group. Luggage for the most part was modern. Six members of the Hori family, which owned a large department store, were first aboard the train. Mike Hori, son of the store's founder, and his bride were turning the trip into a honeymoon.

Some Bent Under Bundles

Rouged girls of high-school and college age mingled with patient grandmothers, some of them bent under bundles of possessions.

Brother Theophane, of the Catholic Maryknoll School, said good-by to members of his Boy Scout troops and told them the troops would be reorganized under his leadership at Manzanar.

"It is amazing the difference in these people when they reach the Owens Valley," the cleric declared. "The old people particularly like it, because there is no more pressure and fear, and they have work to do."

Bombers Show Their Worth

APR 2 1942

By Devon Francis

Wide World Aviation Editor

New York, April 1—Out of the confusion of the war in the Southwest Pacific has come a report justifying America's construction of large armadas of heavy, long-range bombers for offensive action in the air.

Melbourne news dispatches state that this country's four-engine bombers, the kind which can fly several thousand miles non-stop, not only have been dealing effective blows at the Japanese with explosives but are shooting down attacking aircraft as well.

First on the list of musts in building up United States air power for World War II is the construction of large numbers of such heavy bombers. In seven States factories already are turning them out or will be in the next few months.

Cutting Down Pursuers

Most surprising to the layman is the degree of self-protection built into the planes.

They abound with machine-gun positions, from which gunners can pour streams of fire at enemy interceptor planes bent on shooting them down. General MacArthur's command was especially happy over the ruinous fire which the bombers' tail gunners have been able to turn on Japanese pursuit pilots.

A favorite trick of an interceptor pilot is to attack a bomber at what rdinarily is its least protected spot, the tail. Stern attacks have become highly dangerous, usually fatal, for Japanese pilots in the Southwestern Pacific.

Melbourne also attributes to the high-altitude performance of the bombers their ability to attack Japanese objectives without running the risk of assaults by defending Japanese interceptor pilots. The Japanese aren't flying that high.

Clouds of poor visibility conditions occasionally make it necessary for American bombers to descend to altitudes where they encounter Japanese pursuits.

Military-wise, the American four-engine bomber is a peculiarly native institution. It was born of the theory that big airplanes could be used in the event of war to attack, far at sea, an enemy flotilla trying to invade the country.

Japan Also Using Giants

Italy, France, England and Germany missed the boat on the heavy bomber type when they began building up their air forces. But the Japanese didn't. Tokyo's air assault weapons apparently include a considerable number of big bombers, as shown by the types thrown against Corregidor.

England and Germany started late to mend their error, but today they, too, are constructing fleets of big planes. Russia has experimented intensively in the large bomber field, but little has been heard from the Soviet's four-engine type.

Presently new American heavy bombers, which can climb faster and fly more swiftly with their two-ton loads than their forebears, will be thrown into the fray. The War Department is, of course, keeping details on the new planes secret.

SOVIETS REBUILD SIBERIAN FORCES

Million Men Again Watch Japs in Manchoukuo.

APR 2 1942

London, April 1 (A. P.).—A responsible foreign informant said today that the Russians, while mobilizing the bulk of their military man power against the Germans, had restored their Siberian Army to nearly 1,000,000 men, who were fairly well equipped.

"They are watching the Japanese carefully," he said.

The Japanese, he reported, have suggested to Russia that, as a show of good will toward Japan, the Soviet's Far Eastern troops should be withdrawn to a line of demarcation agreed upon by both nations and that certain air ports should be abandoned. He expressed doubt that the Russians would agree.

This informant said that Japan had outlined to the Germans the following disposition of Japan's troops, numbering seventy-six divisions: Fourteen divisions in Manchoukuo, thirteen in China, three in Burma, six in Java, three in the New Guinea area, six in the rest of the Netherlands East Indies, five in the Philippines, three on Japanese islands, five in Formosa and eighteen in reserve.

Reds And Nazis Clash In Donets

Basin Wartront

Moscow Radio Says Hour Of Liberation Is Near

APR 2 1942

By WILLIAM L. HUMPHREYS

London, Apr. 1 (AP)—Bitter fighting now underway in the Donets Basin on Russia's Southern Front was reported tonight to be gradually developing into a titanic clash which ultimately may determine the outcome of 1942's warm weather operations on the entire Russian-German battlefront.

Dispatches from both Moscow and Berlin indicated that the entire front from Leningrad to the Black sea now is locked in a see-saw struggle, with both the Russian and German high commands moving masses of reserves into the central and southern zones.

See, No Lightning Attack

In view of this, London observers find it difficult to predict that either side could develop any lightning spring offensive.

Rather, they preferred to view the curent action in the Donets basin, where the roads are now drying steadily, as pivotal fighting holding the key to the entire warm weather situation for the remainder of the year. The side winning the advantage here is expected to prevail.

Incessant German counterattacks to recover lost ground and relieve the encircled Nazi Sixteenth army in the Staraya Russa sector on the northwestern front are stressed in reports from Stockholm.

Army Cut in Half

These reports state that the beleaguered German force, which originally numbered 100,000 men, has been cut in half by methodical Russian bombing and artillery fire.

Moscow Reports Successes

Tonight's Moscow communique reported a number of successful operations on the Leningrad front, in which about 3,000 German officers and soldiers were annihilated during the last two days.

A Russian drive to close a pincers movement on the strategic town of Vyazma from the north is believed to have advanced further with a Soviet announcement that 12 villages on this northwestern front had been recaptured within 24 hours.

Liberation of Vitebsk Near

Meanwhile the Moscow radio broadcast to the people of Vitebsk, only 7 miles from the Polish border that their hour of liberation is "not far off."

London observers interpreted the northwestern front advance and the radio announcement as an indication that the Russian high command was strengthening and widening the arm of their western-most advance on the north of Vyazma.

This line extends back to Rzhev, which the Germans still are holding doggedly. Any extension of it without a substantially guaranteed challenge to the Germans north and south of this spearhead will place the Russians in a precarious position, London observers believe.

These observers watched the southern front action, however, as a more trustworthy forecaster of what warm weather, dry land fighting is to bring everywhere in Russia this summer.

The fronts farther north still are presenting what amounts to continuation of the Russians' winter successes. The south, however, with the earlier disappearance of spring mud, is looked to for the first clues to what the all-important summer months of this all-important year will bring.

Nazis Reported Losing Heavily in Attacks

Moscow, April 1 (AP)—German counter-attacks which cost the Nazis 2,400 men in a desperate attempt to regain lost ground were reported today by the Russians, who said one crossroads village changed hands several times in a battle into which both sides hurled medium and heavy tanks, artillery and planes.

The Germans finally were forced back there, Tass reported, and the Soviet Information Bureau declared that altogether the Red army won back three towns in the latest tests of strength.

In the fight for the crossroads town the Germans were said to have lost 250 men. Tass said 1,800 German dead were left on another battle front in the central sector after a four-day battle.

On the Kalinin front, northwest of Moscow, one unit successfully repelled a German counter-attack and inflicted losses on the Germans in a pursuit. The report said more than 350 dead Germans remained on the battlefield.

Heavy losses have been inflicted on the Germans in stiff fighting over a central front sector, a Pravda dispatch reported.

Germans Claim Gains at Orel

BERLIN, April 1 (From German broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press)—Strong Soviet forces have been repelled in attacks in the Donets area and also in the central and northern sectors of the Russian front, the German High Command communiqué said today.

German forces, attacking northeast of Orel, about 200 miles south of Moscow, drove the Russians from their positions, the bulletin said. In this action, it added, the Germans seized hundreds of prisoners and captured seven tanks, sixty-five mine-throwers and machine guns.

Italian airmen were cited for an air battle in the south in which, it was said, they shot down four, and possibly six, Russian fighters from a twelve-plane formation, even though they were outnumbered, suffering no losses.

Without specifying where the fighting occurred, it said the Bavarian Ninety-seventh Light Infantry and the Brandenburg 257th Infantry Division had repelled stronger tank-led Russian forces, inflicting heavy losses of men and matériel "in weeks of most strenuous defensive fighting."

NAZIS GROOM MILLIONS FOR SPRING PUSH

APR 2 1942

London Sources Estimate 11,500,000 Troops Will Participate in Great Campaigns in Russia

London, April 1 (AP)—Red army men of Sevastopol, veterans of a 150-day siege, were reported counter-attacking today in a Crimean preliminary to vast spring engagements which London observers expect to involve about 4,500,000 Germans and 7,000,000 Russians.

Moreover, there were Axis accounts of new Russian thrusts against Kharkov, Donets Basin industrial center.

Bucharest advices relayed by the Vichy radio said Soviet armored forces, following artillery preparation lasting until Monday midnight, had launched an offensive at the German defenses of Kharkov from three sides, north, east and south.

45,000 Men Sacrificed

The German radio asserted today "all these thrusts collapsed" and that mopping up operations yielded several hundred prisoners.

Tass declared the Germans had sacrificed 45,000 men, including "units reserved for their much-advertised spring offensive," in vain efforts to capture Sevastopol, Soviet Black Sea naval base, and that action to break their ring was under way.

Qualified informants in London said Adolf Hitler was moving 100 fresh divisions into Russia to bolster about 180 struggling in snow and mud to hold key salients against Russian pressure generated throughout the winter.

Nazis Fail in Crimea.

Renewed German efforts to take over all the Crimea and crack Russian defense lines before the oil-rich Caucasus on the 400-mile southern mainland front between Orel and Taganrog were forecast.

Listening post advices suggested to one responsible foreign source that the Germans were preparing for a series of southern drive "to clear the railroads and bases they need if they are ever to shake hands with the Japanese in Persia Iran) or the Indian Ocean."

"Hitler has been forced to use prematurely 40 of the 140 divisions he had been resting and conditioning in the Warsaw area especially for the spring attack," he said.

Exhaustion of the Finns "and their subjection to so many seditious influences" were declared to have forced Germany to take over all Karelian Isthmus operations against Russia.

Losses Termed Horrible

Russian losses, however, were pictured as "horrible and unique in history" in a dispatch broadcast from Berlin.

Baron von Wangenheim, Frankfurter Zeitang correspondent, asserted that now and then in the winter campaign German troops "had to blow up heaps of bodies lying in a field to free the field for our arms." He estimated that the preceding summer campaign had cost Russia from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 killed and wounded.

Troop Movements Reported.

Stockholm dispatches reported 13,000 German troop trains had moved eastward in the last three months.

Closely following upon reported pledges of fresh Balkan manpower for Hitler's war effort, Russians said prisoners captured in the Crimea included many conscripts of non-German origin who complained of their treatment in the German Army.

Tass said these were taken in a rout of the twenty-second tank division, which the Russian News Agency identified as a unit hastily transferred from France after Soviet forces had destroyed the eighteenth tank division. It asserted that more than fifty tanks of the twenty-second division were knocked out of action in a day's fighting.

Russian submarines in the Black Sea were reported by an authoritative source today to be effectively attacking German sea communications between Constanta, Rumania and the German-held Russian port of Odessa.

Declaring that the Russian Black Sea fleet was making a "very powerful contribution toward a final Russian victory," he said that while the fleet remained in being there was little chance of a successful German attempt to land forces on the east or southeast shores of the Black Sea.

BULGARIAN ARMY PURGE HINTS MOVE ON RUSSIA

APR 2 1942

BERN, April 1.—(AP) The Bulgarian government is carrying out an extensive purge in the army in preparation for sending troops to the eastern front, it was reported tonight.

Sources with close Bulgarian connections said that hundreds of officers with Russian sympathies were either being transferred to unimportant posts or arrested.

Rumania to Stay in War, To 'Destroy Bolshevism'

Antonescu Denies Desire to Keep Troops at Home

BERNE, Switzerland, April 1 (AP).—Rumanian Foreign Minister Mihail Antonescu declared today that his country intends to fight Soviet Russia to the finish because "we are fighting for a new state and a new human being."

He described his statement as an answer to foreign reports that his country wanted to withdraw from the war in the East and keep her troops at home.

The tone of his speech was entirely different from his declaration on March 19, in which he attacked Hungary, and his comments today also made no reference to the controversy over Transylvania. Diplomatic circles interpreted this change as a result of recent German-Italian talks.

Some people, Antonescu complained, had misunderstood the fact that Rumania was keeping silent about the Russian war.

"We are fighting from a European feeling of responsibility," he declared. "The European mission is not a mission of words. We must destroy Bolshevism."

NORTHERN CONVOY GUARD INCREASED

British Use More Warships on Route to Murmansk.

London, April 1 (A. P.).—British officials announced today that northern sea patrols and escorts for Russia-bound convoys have been re-enforced and that all of the convoy attacked earlier this week in the opening phase of Germany's Arctic Ocean offensive to cut the Soviet supply lines had "arrived safely at a Russian port."

London circles which confirmed the safe arrival of the ships laden with war material for the Red armies did not identify the port, but reports from Stockholm said the ships had reached Murmansk, nearest of the two chief Russian Arctic harbors. The other is Archangel.

Strengthening of the British sea patrols was interpreted as meaning a marked increase in the flow of United States and British equipment to Russia due to improved weather conditions and a consequent betterment of port facilities.

Hunger Riots at Essen Reported by Moscow

Red Radio Quotes a German Slogan: 'Down With Hitler'

LONDON, April 1 (AP).—The Moscow radio reported today that "hunger revolts" took place a few days ago among workers of Essen, the German munitions center in the Ruhr, and declared police guards and armed Storm Troop formations were being increased at German war factories.

The Essen disturbances occurred when cutting of the bread ration was announced a few days ago, the radio said, and such slogans as "We want more bread," "Stop the war" and "Down with Hitler" appeared on factory walls.

Police carry out exercises which involve the erection of barricades and the posting of machine guns on roofs of neighboring buildings when the shifts are changing at Neukoeln and other factory districts of Berlin, the broadcast added, and special police committees have been formed to deal with sabotage.

Two important centers in Poland for the illicit sale of German army gasoline have been discovered and nigh German officers of the army, air force and Gestapo have been arrested, it was said.

YUGOSLAV MISSION SEEKS AERIAL AID FOR LOYAL TROOPS

Planes Could Fly Supplies to Guerilla Fighters, Keep Nazis Diverted.

Washington, Apr. 1 (AP)—Eleven husky Yugoslav airmen filled with a burning desire to avenge the Nazi invasion of their country have just arrived here to seek American aid for the Serbian Chetniks still harassing Axis forces by periodic raids from mountain hideaways in Yugoslavia.

Col. Dragutin Savich, acting commanding officer of the Yugoslav Air Forces and head of the newly-arrived mission, told reporters today that the guerilla warriors and loyal regulars under Gen. Draja Mahailovic in South Serbia and Bosnia were in an "anemic state" and needed a "blood transfusion."

Colonel Savich said supplies could be flown to Yugoslav resisters, whom he placed at 100,000 men, by long-range planes taking off from Syria and dropping food and war equipment by parachutes.

He added that it was not only "extremely necessary" to get supplies to Mahailovic, whose year-long stand against invasion he likened to Gen. Douglas MacArthur's resistance on Bataan, but the United Nations should "proceed on a fixed plan of development of the war in all theaters."

This should include, he said, a general operation to ameliorate the situation in the Mediterranean war area."

Colonel Savich received reporters in the Yugoslav Legation where boxed Red Cross supplies were awaiting shipment to Yugoslav prisoners of war. He and his associates were dressed in light blue uniforms adorned with the aviation Insignia of Gold under the Yugoslav Crown.

He said the mission came here from the Middle East via London and would explore with United Nations military experts all the possibilities for keeping Germany diverted in the Balkans as she plans her spring offensive.

"The Yugoslav position for this spring," he declared in response to questions, "is to keep disturbing German communications on the right flank and oblige the Nazis to keep strong forces in Yugoslavia which they could use to better advantage elsewhere."

740 Dutch Jews Reported Dead in German Mines

Sent Unprotected Into Sulphur Works' 'Poisonous Vapors'

LONDON, April 1 (AP).—The Netherlands government-in-exile reported tonight that 740 of 1,200 Dutch Jews, sent by the Germans to forced labor in the salt and sulphur mines at Mauthausen, Austria, have died, and that the Germans deliberately sent them without protection into the "poisonous vapors."

"The protests of the civilized world, when informed by the Netherlands government, were unavailing," the announcement, made on Radio Orange, said.

"Urgent requests by the Red Cross to be admitted to the victims were bluntly refused because the matter was called by the Germans 'our private affair'," said the announcement as carried by Aneta, Dutch news agency.

The statement recalled the arrest of 800 Jews in Amsterdam in February, 1941, in a roundup in the streets, and the seizure of 400 in other Netherlands towns a few weeks later, and added: "Terrible rumors about their fate have been going around since. It has now been established that 740 of the 1,200 have died."

TEACHERS IN JAIL

BERN, Switzerland, April 1—(AP) Seventy per cent of all Norwegian school teachers are in jail and "the situation is getting worse," a Stockholm dispatch to the National Zeitung of Basel said today.

So many teachers have been arrested that it is considered impossible to open schools for the spring term, the dispatch continued.

10 Norwegian Cargo Ships Make Break for Freedom

APR 2 1942

Two Sunk Soon After Leaving Goteborg, Five Head for North Sea.

STOCKHOLM, Thursday, April 2.—(AP) Ten Norwegian ships berthed in Sweden since the German invasion of Norway made a dash for England early yesterday, and two were torpedoed and sunk just outside the three-mile limit.

A third ship was damaged, and two others turned back into Goteborg, the Swedish west coast port where they had been tied up.

5 May Have Escaped

Presumably the five others reached the open sea.

The sunken ships were identified as the 12,358-ton Skytteren, and the 6,222-ton Buccaneer. The former, a floating whale oil factory built in 1901 was registered at Oslo, as was the Buccaneer, a tanker.

Survivors were believed to have been taken aboard the attacking vessels, and presumably these were Nazi ships since the waters at the entrance to the Kattegat are under German control.

The ships were struck about six miles off Kaeringoen, which is slightly north of Goteborg. The area is opposite the northern tip of Nazi-occupied Denmark.

In London, an informed source said there was no confirmation of the reported attempt to break through the German blockade, but "naturally we would be glad to add to our services any good Norwegian ships.

MORE U. S. PLANES NEEDED BY BRITAIN

America Has Supplied a Fourth of Aircraft in Middle East.

By DREW MIDDLETON

LONDON, April 1.—(AP) Disclosing that more than a fourth of Britain's airplanes in the Middle East come from the United States, one of Britain's highest air chiefs said tonight that Hitler "must try an advance" there this spring and that more American bombers and fighters are urgently needed to stop it.

The British have had to "reshuffle" their air forces somewhat as a result of war in Malaya and Burma, he said.

The axis air assault against Malta is the prelude to Hitler's Middle East attack, the authority asserted.

This assault he described as "terrific," with Field Marshal General Albert Kesselring, German director of the 1940 air battle of Britain, supervising operations of a large force in Sicily, Sardinia and Crete from his headquarters outside Rome.

Malta has been able to stand up to it only because of a "truly heroic and successful defense" by one of the heaviest concentrations of anti-aircraft guns in the British empire, a fine fighter force steadily reinforced, an excellent warning system, extensive dugouts, and well organized repair facilities, he went on.

United States aircraft plants have built 10 per cent of the planes now defending the British isles, it was disclosed, in addition to the 25 per cent in the Middle East.

In the west, the R.A.F. has shifted its policy as a result of difficulty in bombing single factories at night unless they are very large, and now devotes its "very heavy" efforts to utilities in industrial centers and "the dormitory areas where workers sleep," the authority said.

The British thereby hope to force the German workmen to spend their nights in shelters.

R.A.F. KEEPS WATCH ON GERMAN WARSHIPS

LONDON, April 1 — (AP) The German naval squadron headed by the 35,000-ton battleship Tirpitz at Trondheim "has not been neglected" by the R. A. F. an authoritative British source said today.

He said photographs showed the Nazis were trying to camouflage the Tirpitz and the 10,000-ton cruiser Prinz Eugen. The Prinz Eugen—which ran Dover straits with the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau—was said to be down at the stern, apparently as the result of British bombing and torpedoing.

RAF Resumes Attacks In Europe

APR 2 1942

(By the Associated Press)

A Southeast Coast English Town, April 1—The RAF resumed its attacks on Nazi bases in northern France today for the first time since Sunday, after being forced into inaction by bad weather over the Continent.

A formation of bombers under fighter escort was seen returning from the direction of Calais this afternoon.

BERLIN RADIO SILENT

LONDON, April 1.—(AP) The Berlin radio went off the air late tonight. The Paris radio had gone off earlier.

BOULOGNE BOMBED

LONDON, April 1.—(AP) A force of British planes with fighting escort attacked the Boulogne docks this afternoon, the Air ministry announced. One bomber was lost in heavy anti-aircraft fire.

Nazis Tell of British Raids

BERLIN (From German broadcasts), April 1 (AP).—British bombs dropped by planes on "nuisance flights" into western Germany yesterday and last night caused slight material damage and casualties, the German high command reported today. The Germans said Nazi bombers damaged a large merchant ship by several bomb hits off the southeast English coast.

"Continuing attacks on the British Mediterranean base of Malta, Nazi planes bombed state wharves and submarine bases at Valletta as well as British airdromes in day and night raids. German fighters were reported to have shot down two enemy planes.

"Successful air attacks were directed against air fields in Libya, the coastal area of Egypt and the desert railway there."

St. Nazaire Leaders Missing

LONDON, April 1 (AP)—There is a slender chance that a few more survivors of the British raid on the Nazi submarine base at St. Nazaire, France, last Saturday morning may elude the Germans and reach England, two Exchange Telegraph correspondents who accompanied the raiding force reported today. Lieut.-Col. A. C. Newman, Commando chief, was reported last seen dashing past one group of blazing buildings to the drydock where there was a job of wrecking to be done. Lieut. Comdr. S. H. Beattie, who took the destroyer Cambletown up to the drydock gates, was last seen still aboard preparing the charges that were to smash the drydock gates.

Quiet In Libya

Cairo, April 1 (AP)—British army headquarters reported in its briefest communique today that there was "nothing to report" on the Libyan battle situation.

Rome (From Italian Broadcasts), April 1 (AP).—An Italian submarine has torpedoed an enemy cruiser, the Italian High Command announced today. A communique said that the submarine, returning to its base, had confirmed that it had torpedoed and damaged an enemy cruiser in the eastern Mediterranean, as mentioned in an earlier Italian communique.

The Italians also said that their torpedo-carrying planes successfully attacked a convoy in the eastern Mediterranean and sank a large merchantman.

SIX GERMAN RAIDERS DOWNED AT MALTA

Italians Report Torpedoing of Enemy Cruiser and Freighter

VALLETTA, Malta, April 1 (AP)—Six German planes were shot down, at least three damaged and several others probably damaged during heavy sustained attacks on this British Mediterranean island base today. Some civilian casualties and property damage were acknowledged.

The Royal Air Force, without loss, shot down three planes. Anti-aircraft batteries bagged the others.

A communiqué tonight said: "There had been eight alerts in twenty-four hours, some of several hours' duration."

With improvement in the weather, the Germans resumed mass attacks with bomber formations strongly protected by fighters.

Gibraltar Guns Drive Off Axis Bombers

Gibraltar, April 1 (A. P.).—Enemy raiders flying at high altitude approached the Gibraltar fortress from a northern direction early this morning during bright moonlight. British defense guns promptly raised intense barrages which drove the raiders out of range. An official announcement said that bombs were dropped but that there were neither casualties nor damage.

R.A.F., 24 Years Old, Equals Nazi Air Total

APR 2 1942

LONDON, April 1 (AP).—Great Britain's prized Royal Air Force, born of the union of the old Royal Flying Corps and the Naval Air Service, celebrated its twenty-fourth birthday today with the nation proudly asserting that it had achieved numerical parity with the German Air Force.

Since the start of the war the R. A. F., with dominion and Allied squadrons and anti-aircraft guns, has accounted for nearly 9,000 Axis planes, British figures show.

BOMBER FLIES ATLANTIC IN 6 HOURS, 40 MINUTES

LONDON, Thursday, April 2—(AP) An American-built four-engined Liberator (Consolidated) bomber has flown 2,200 miles from Newfoundland to Britain in the records time of six hours and 40 minutes, the ferry command announced today.

The new time of 400 minutes eclipsed by exactly one hour the trans-Atlantic flight record set three months ago by a young English pilot. The Liberator pilot averaged 330 miles per hour.

The bomber command said that the record was due "to a combination of the qualities of the airplanes, an exceptional tail wind, and magnificent navigation."

FRENCH ADMIRAL QUITS COMMITTEE TO RETURN TO SEA

APR 2 1942

Resignation Seen as Repercussion of Seizure of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP) Vice Admiral Emile Muselier, naval commander of Gen. Charles de Gaulle's Free French forces, has resigned from the French national committee in London, it was disclosed today.

This development, announced through Free French headquarters at Montreal, was widely interpreted in diplomatic circles here as a delayed repercussion of the Christmas Eve seizure of St. Pierre and Miquelon, a coup which caused considerable embarassment to the United States State department.

Seized French Islands

It was a Free French naval force under the orders of Admiral Muselier which captured the islands off the Newfoundland coast, shortly after the United States had reached an agreement with Vichy French authorities safeguarding the status quo of French possessions in the western hemisphere.

News of the seizure was followed quickly by a statement from Secretary of State Hull emphasizing that Muselier's exploit had been performed without the prior knowledge of the United States and adding that the Canadian government had been asked what it was prepared to do to restore the status quo on these islands.

Upset Vichy Relations

For some time thereafter the St. Pierre-Miquelon incident figured prominently among the differences troubling United States relations with Vichy, but the affair gradually dropped out of public discussion. When, however, it was authoritatively disclosed a week ago that Vichy and Washington had reached an accord on "practically all" questions which had been troubling relations it was forecast in some quarters that a clarification of the St. Pierre-Miquelon case might also be just around the corner.

Concession to U. S.

In these quarters, therefore, replacement of Admiral Muselier as commissioner for naval affairs in the de Gaullist French national committee was regarded as a concession to facilitate United States negotiations with Vichy on other questions.

Whether Muselier's departure would be followed by other developments affecting the status of St. Pierre and Miquelon was a matter of conjecture. State department officials would not comment, and a French embassy spokesman confined himself to the observation that the London development was not surprising under the circumstances.

Free French headquarters here, on the other hand, disclaimed any connection between the St. Pierre-Miquelon incident and Admiral Muselier's resignation. It was explained that the admiral simply had asked for transfer to an active command at sea, and that he was being succeeded on the committee by Admiral Auboineau. Reports that Muselier had been discharged and placed under house arrest in London were branded as false.

Blames Blum Regime For Delay In Rearmament Of Old France

APR 2 1942

Colonel Perre Says Troubles Which Accompanied Advent Of Popular Front In 1936 Retarded Manufacture Of Tanks

By MEL MOST

Riom, Unoccupied France, Apr. 1 (AP)—Attempts to blame his Popular Front regime for delays in the rearmament of France were attacked sharply by former Premier Leon Blum today in the first session of the Riom trial at which witnesses were permitted to mention the Popular Front by name.

Col. Jean Perre, who commanded an armored unit and who once collaborated with Gen. Charles De Gaulle, now head of the Free French forces, said it was planned in 1935 that there would be 2,000 tanks in the French Army by the end of 1938, and that this total was not reached until the middle of 1939.

"I therefore conclude," he said, "that the troubles which accompanied the advent of the Popular Front (labor troubles of 1936) caused the six months' delay in the manufacture of tanks."

Blum repeated these words and asked: "Will the witness explain just what plan he was referring to, and if it was ever published or heard before?"

The witness replied that it was not a published plan, but one which he himself had in mind. Blum immediately shot back with: "Will the witness say what was the number of tanks being manufactured in July, 1936?"

Colonel Perre refused to answer saying "I don't see any use in the question."

Blum then said:

"The delays which the witness attributed to the Popular Front could only have affected tanks which were on order in July, 1936. The comptroller general estimated the delay in these at from two to three months, but the order was so small that we caught up by simply breaking the Renault monopoly and placing additional orders with Hotchkiss."

To this Colonel Perre merely answered: "I said the Popular Front caused the delay, and I maintain what I said."

Blum returned to the attack against the next witness, Gen. Jean Langlois, who said that "certain leaders of our country did not have French thoughts." Blum asked whether he had been referred to in this remark.

"I didn't mean to bring up personalities," General Langlois answered, "but the general atmosphere — well, the League of Nations-poisoned atmosphere."

"If it was just the League of Nations," Blum observed, "I'm afraid I can't take the responsibility."

Colonel Perre's testimony on the whole appeared favorable to the defense. He said the French tanks were of good quality and that a German officer "whom we took prisoner told us: 'Our men know very well that our 37 millimeter guns are no use against your tanks.'"

The main French weakness was tank strategy, Colonel Perre said. Since tanks were attached to either infantry or cavalry, "there was nobody to occupy himself with tank doctrine as such." Tank doctrine, he said, "was split up between the infantry and the cavalry."

After tomorrow the court will be adjourned for Easter. The Paris newspapers — (German controlled) — have said that it will not meet thereafter.

Blum Defends Popular Front On Tank Output

Tells Riom Court Delays Were Overcome Simply by Breaking Monopoly

APR 2 1942

RIOM, Unoccupied France, April 1 (AP).—Former Premier Leon Blum today attacked attempts to blame French labor troubles in 1936 for rearmament delays.

Defending himself in the war preparedness trials, the Socialist leader engaged in a verbal duel with Colonel Jean Perre, who commanded an armored unit in the war and who once was a collaborator with General Charles de Gaulle.

Colonel Perre had declared that it was planned in 1935 that there would be 2,000 tanks in the French army by the end of 1938, and that this total was not reached until the middle of 1939. "I therefore conclude," he said, "that the troubles which accompanied the advent of the Popular Front caused the six months delay in the manufacture of tanks."

Blum, who was head of the Popular Front government, waited until the end of Colonel Perre's testimony, then rose and asked the witness to explain "just what plan he was referring to, and if it was ever published or heard of before."

Colonel Perre replied that it was not a published plan, but one which he himself had had in mind.

After further exchanges Blum said angrily: "The delays which the witness attributed to the Popular Front could only have affected tanks which were on order in July, 1936. The Comptroller General estimated the delay in these at two to three months, but the order was so small that we caught up by simply breaking the Renault monopoly and placing additional orders with Hotchkiss."

Colonel Perre answered: "I said the Popular Front caused the delay, and I maintain what I said." Throughout the debate he answered all Blum's questions sarcastically, referring to himself in the third person as "the witness."

With only one more day to go before adjournment of the court, which Paris newspapers have said will not meet thereafter, Blum was not daunted by this and returned to the attack against the next witness, General Jean Langlois, for a statement he made that "certain leaders of our country did not have French thoughts."

"Perhaps General Langlois will tell the court whether he was referring to me," Blum rose to say.

"I didn't mean to bring up personalities," General Langlois answered, "but the general atmosphere—well, the League of Nations poisoned the atmosphere."

"If it was just the League of Nations," Blum replied, "I'm afraid I can't take the responsibility."

INFLATION STALKS ITALIAN FINANCE, AS DEBT MOUNTS

APR 2 1942

Measures Adopted in Rome to Restore Nation's Faith in Its Currency.

BERN, Switzerland, April 1.—(AP) Anti-inflationary measures calculated to restore the Italian's faith in the lira have been quickly adopted at Rome following Premier Mussolini's declaration last week that the government would halt depreciation of money "with force if necessary" and that no more steps would be permitted along the road "leading to the abyss."

The Italian people, who since 1935 have not been told the amount of the nation's public debt, have now been asked to subscribe to their third big loan since Italy entered the war.

Praises Those Who Save

Mussolini, in a statement March 26 to administrators of popular banks, extolled holders of savings accounts and condemned buyers of "antique vases," and said the true interests of farmers were served by defense savings rather than by "illusory price increases."

This statement was followed on March 30, according to Rome dispatches, by a decree lowering and fixing prices of flour, rice, potatoes, oils and fats.

This decree was followed on March 31 by a statement of the governor of the Banca d'Italia Azzolini to the shareholders that the government was considering a further reduction in consumption, more price fixing and a ban on real estate sales in the fight to maintain the buying power of Italian money.

Stock prices on the Milan exchange have fallen sharply in the past week as the result of a law requiring exchange of bearer shares into other shares upon which tax evasion is impossible.

Italy's debt stood at 108,638,000,000 lire (the lira formerly was worth about five cents) when last published in 1935, but is estimated in the League of Nations yearbook at 170,000,000,000 lire on June 30, 1940.

The Italian newspaper Il Popolo d'Italia says the interest on the debt is now about 11,000,000,000 lire annually.

The circulation of Italian bank notes has not been published since 1940 when it increased sharply, and national bank advances to the government have not been announced since 1939 when they tripled.

British Restrict Clothing Manufacture

London, April 1 (A. P.).—The Board of Trade ordered additional economies today in the manufacture of men's and boys' suits and overcoats, effective on May 18. Fewer buttons will be used and leather and metal buttons may not be used at all. Cuffs, tabs, belts, fancy backs and raglan sleeves will be limited severely and ulsters no longer may be manufactured.

MEXICO STRIKES HARD AT AXIS OPERATIVES

Nets 13 Japanese at Secret Radio and 30 Germans and Italians

MEXICO CITY, April 1 (AP)—Cracking down on Axis undercover agents, the Federal police have arrested thirteen Japanese found operating a secret radio station near the United States border at Chihuahua City, tracked down three others who fled to the near-by mountains and rounded up thirty Germans and Italians here, including the alleged Gestapo head for Mexico.

In disclosing the operations tonight, the authorities insisted that they were stepping-up "precautionary" measures to suppress fifth-columning and increase the Mexican counter-espionage.

In addition to the thirteen Japanese now en route here in custody and the three trapped at the mining town of Namiquipa after their escape, three Japanese were arested here and more Axis operatives were sought.

Roosevelt Gets Mexican Pledge

Washington, April 1 (AP)—Dr. Ezequiel Padilla, Mexican Foreign Minister, personally assured President Roosevelt today that his country would do "all possible for the common cause of democracy in the present war effort."

The Foreign Minister carried this message to Mr. Roosevelt from the President of Mexico in a call at the White House today.

Dr. Padilla, who arrived here earlier this week for conferences on Mexican-United States problems, was accompanied to the White House by Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, Mexican Ambassador; Ramon Beteta, Under Secretary of Finance, and Luciano Wiechers.

Colombia Hunts Tokyo Admiral

BOGOTA, Colombia, April 1 (AP)—The newspaper Espectador said today that Japanese Admiral Daikoku was believed hiding in Colombia after having escaped from Panama's Pearl Island last Dec. 7. Colombian authorities have been instructed to search for him, the newspaper said.

ARGENTINA DENIED LEASE-LEND ARMS

Washington Refuses Help While Buenos Aires Is Friendly With Axis

APR 2 1942

By JACK BEARDWOOD

Washington, April 1. (AP)—The United States has shut Argentina off from the special economic, military and naval aid granted Latin American countries, until such time as she takes her place in the hemisphere front against the Axis.

The decision, an authoritative source disclosed yesterday, was in line with a new policy of giving preferential treatment to American republics which have gone to war or severed relations with the Axis.

Nine Nations in Line

The nine nations that have declared war and the nine nations that have cut relations have exposed themselves to Axis attack, the authority explained, hence, he added, they must have all the economic aid, and military and naval material the United States can safely provide them. Because of the situation, nothing remains for the other Latin American countries.

At the present time, the official said, Argentina still maintains relations with the Axis and is failing to contribute in any effective way to the defense or security of the Western Hemisphere. Until and unless Argentina pulls her share of the hemisphere defense load it will be impossible to send military or naval supplies to the Buenos Aires government.

Consideration for Chile

Chile, the only other Latin American nation that has not yet broken with the Axis, will get modified treatment in regard to military and naval supplies, it was stated. This is because of Chile's long coastline and because her navy is smaller than that of Argentina.

After January conference of American foreign ministers in Rio de Janiero, the United States took the position that those Latin American nations that had declared war or ruptured relations were in increased peril, the expert said. This made it urgent that those countries exposing themselves to danger would receive what material this country could supply.

Foreign Policy Logical

The United States, he declared, is delineating a foreign policy that anyone would agree is legitimate and logical from any standpoint.

This country's policy on military and naval supplies must be extended also to economic and commercial matters, the informant said. However, the United States is making every effort to provide the normal supply of essential goods necessary to the economic stability of Argentina.

The authority's disclosure of the new foreign policy followed the return to Argentina of a military-naval purchasing mission. Its return resulted in speculation concerning relations between the United States and Argentina.

Outspoken Arms Policy Impresses Latins

APR 2 1942

By John Lear

Wide World News Writer

Washington, April 1—The new United States policy toward Latin America—arming only those neighbors who will fight shoulder to shoulder with us—is the kind of honest plain talk the Latins like.

Over and over during thirteen months I spent in eight South American countries in 1940 and 1941, the Latins told me:

"You North Americans treat us like children. You pat us on the head and say "There, there, you are a nice child' when you do not think we are nice children at all. You think you are fooling us that way. But you are not fooling us. You are fooling only yourselves. You are the children. In diplomacy, especially, you are amateurs. You should stop trying to be polite. A Latin diplomat can outbow and outtalk you any time. You should speak out plainly, saying what you expect of us. When you do, your expectations will be met."

Threats Avoided

The new policy, as enunciated by a high Government official yesterday, is outspoken. It says clearly and firmly that we will supply arms and other defense aids only to those who actually join our side in the war: either by breaking relations with the Axis, declaring war, or participating in armed-defense activity on land or sea.

Arms are precious, and we cannot afford to give away any which will not be used against the common enemy or which might conceivably be used by "fifth columnists" to stab us in the back.

Argentines Aware

Even the people of Argentina, aware that Nazis chased out of other Latin countries have thronged to Buenos Aires to carry on their underground work, cannot fail to see the logic of the argument.

It is to the people of Argentina that the new policy means most, because the Argentine will be the only country cut off from United States arms.

It is true that Chile shares with Argentina the failure to break with the Axis or declare war, but Chile is convoying her own ships supplying this country with vital war materials. Besides, Chile has said she will be on our side if we help defend her coastline, and informed sources expect she soon will be in position to take her stand.

Will the new policy make Argentina change her mind about being "neutral toward all"?

There are two reasons why it may:

1. Argentine reluctance to tie too closely to the United States in the past has been partly pride, partly the belief that she could gain more by staying in the middle of the road and selling grain and beef to whoever could buy and partly to Nazi propagandists who preach that the United States cannot be trusted to be loyal.

The new policy shows we can be loyal. Our arms are going to those nations, no matter how small or weak, who had the courage to stand up against the Axis powers. We are being loyal to those little nations even though our Government realizes big Argentina may choose to line up on the other side. That loyalty is bound to impress the Argentine people, and make them more confident that we would protect them if they joined us and were attacked as a result.

2. Argentina needs to import many necessities of life in order to survive. Europe is cut off by sea blockade. Only the United States is left. Under the new United States policy, every effort will be made to provide the things Argentina needs to prevent economic breakdown. But in this field, as in arms, the preference in United States exports must go to those nations which are in the fight on our side.

USE OF GULF PORTS MAY AID SHIPPING

Commerce Official Cites Shorter, Safer Route from Latin Americas.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP) Wayne C. Taylor, under-secretary of Commerce, today urged that gulf shipping ports be used for a large part of the Latin American trade now handled by Atlantic ports.

To facilitate this, Taylor suggested the creation of a "foreign trade zone," at some gulf port. The only "foreign trade zone" is now at Stapelton, Staten Island, N. Y. Under present law, the zone can be created only on application of local interests at a port, but Taylor said that unless some gulf port initiated such a project soon, the Commerce department will ask Congress for authority to create such a zone without an invitation.

Taylor said that ocean shipping from Latin America to gulf ports would be both shorter and safer than the present routes to the north Atlantic ports.

The savings in mileage, he added, was sufficient to enable the same ships to handle 25 per cent more traffic if they use the gulf instead of the north Atlantic.

"Not only is the length of the sea route shortened," Taylor said in an article in The Foreign Commerce Weekly, an official publication, "but the area of routes convergence—the gulf and Caribbean area—is precisely the area already under our Navy's most constant vigilance because of its importance to the Panama canal."

He said many of the essential materials needed by the United States in its war production are available in Latin America, but the problem of using these materials will depend to a great extent on the efficiency with which available shipping is used to bring the materials to this country.

NEW SUCCESSES AGAINST RAIDERS SETS TOLL AT 28

Navy Pilot Repeats Earlier Feat, Is Promoted to Ensign.

2 SUBS SUNK IN ATLANTIC

Third Is Destroyed by Plane in Hawaiian Area.

TWO SHIPS TORPEDOED

U-Boat Attacks on East Coast Shipping Continue, 38 Sailors Missing.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP) Donald Francis Mason, the naval enlisted pilot who recently "sighted sub, sank same," has done it again, the Navy announced today, and for his unprecedented double success has been awarded the equivalent of a second Distinguished Flying Cross and given an officer's commission.

Mason's second successful attack was one of three submarine sinkings reported by the Navy today.

The three, two in the Atlantic and one in the Pacific, raised to a grand total of 28 the number of Axis undersea craft announced as "sunk or presumed sunk" by U. S. military and naval forces thus far in the war. Of this total, 21 were blasted in the Atlantic and seven in the Pacific.

In addition to these, the Navy asserted that "there is evidence of additional sinkings of Axis undersea craft" in its campaign against merchant shipping raiders. But it said no claims would be made to these until they are absolutely certain and until the news will be of "no possible use to the enemy."

Two Ships Sunk

Meantime, ship sinkings by Axis subs continued off the Atlantic coast. The Navy announced the torpedoing of a medium-sized Panamanian merchant vessel, disclosing that 13 of its crewmen were landed at Norfolk, Va., Saturday night and the loss of a medium sized U. S. merchant vessel.

A rescue vessel picked up the first crew after they had drifted for 45 hours in one lifeboat and two rafts. Two others of the crew were known dead and 38 presumed lost.

At New York, the captain of a Norwegian freighter, the 2,362-ton Gunny, told how he and 11 other survivors drifted for seven days on a raft after his ship was torpedoed in the south Atlantic March 2. The survivors ate all their rations and were reduced to chewing bits of wood before being rescued. The torpedoing resulted in the death of 14 other crewmen.

Flier Promoted

Mason, 28-year-old Rochester, Minn., man, who sank two submarines in the Atlantic area, was promoted to ensign, the starting commission rank, and was awarded a Silver Star to add to his Distinguished Flying Cross, previously given for his first sinking.

Both the other sinkings disclosed today were also due primarily to air action. One of these was accomplished chiefly by Ensign William Tepuni, 26, naval reserve pilot of San Francisco, Calif., and was in the Atlantic area. Vice Admiral Royal E. Ingersoll, commander of the Atlantic fleet, awarded Tepuni the Distinguished Flying Cross for his exploit.

The other, in the Pacific, was effected by First Lieutenant James Valentine Edmundson, 26, of Santa Monica, Calif., an Army flier. Navy Secretary Knox commended Edmundson for the "keen observation, flying skill and successful attack with bombs" involved in his feat.

Mason's first success had been announced Feb. 26. This he tersely reported to his base in the message, "Sighted sub, sank same."

Saw U-boat During Patrol

Giving more details of this incident today, the Navy said that Mason was on a routine patrol flight when he spotted a submarine cruising at periscope depth. He dived and dropped two bombs at a low altitude, straddling the periscope. The sub was blown partially out of the water and then sank and soon afterward a large patch of oil covered the area.

It was also a patrol flight that led to the second attack. Again Mason swooped down and released dept charges. All charges hit and the U-boat blew up, scattering wreckage over a large area.

Forced U-Boat to Surface

The same day—date unannounced—that Mason scored again, Tepuni sighted another submarine, whether it was the same general sector of Atlantic war or in some other the Navy did not say. Tepuni bombed the U-boat until it lay helpless on the surface.

The next day, the Navy said, destroyers "moved in for the kill." Edmundson's citation merely credited him with "distinguished service in the line of his profession by sinking an enemy submarine in the Hawaiian area" and no other details were given.

The Navy first said that the Mason and Tepuni attacks "bring to 21 the number of enemy submarine sinking formally announced by the Navy," adding that "this figure does not include four credited to the army." Later the navy total was officially changed to 24 "sunk and presumed sunk."

Locations of the submarines successfully attacked in the Atlantic have not been divulged, but in the Pacific, the Japanese according to various official announcements, have lost one off the west coast, two at Pearl Harbor, two in the Marshall islands, one at Wake island and one in the Hawaiian area.

Axis' Atlantic Sub Losses Heavy, Says Admiral

APR 2 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Elizabeth City, N. C., April 1—Rear Admiral M. H. Simons, commandant of the Fifth Naval district, said today that the activity of Axis submarines on the Atlantic seaboard was hitting "in a very vital spot," but declared that the Axis had "paid a terrific price in both submarines and men."

Speaking at the commissioning of the navy's new lighter-than-air base from which will operate anti-submarine craft, Simons asserted the new base would mean more in the Fifth district than "the average citizen can possibly appreciate."

"Our Worst Menace"

He called the submarine activity "our worst menace" on the Atlantic seaboard at present and said it was "perfectly easy" for critics to sit in their homes and offices and "call our armed forces inefficient because they permit these submarines to sink so many tankers." Such criticism requires no technical knowledge, he added.

"The same citizens who criticize our navy for not sinking more of these submarines glory in the fact that our American submarines, apparently with complete immunity, operate for weeks at a time in Japanese waters and sink dozens of Japanese ships and then return to their bases unscathed," Simons declared.

"Terrible Price" Paid

"These same citizens can, if they wish, criticize the Japanese inefficiency in permitting such a thing to happen."

Admiral Simons said that, "without undue exaggeration or boastfulness, I personally know more about sinking submarines than most of those who have seen fit to criticize the country's efforts in this line.

"With perfect truth and without violating any of my orders," he continued, "I can tell you honestly that the Axis has paid a terrible price in both submarines and men to achieve her record of sinkings on the Atlantic seaboard.

"It is true that we would sink more submarines had we more destroyers and more planes at our disposal to use against them. But it might be well to consider that had we diverted more destoyers and more planes to submarine sinkings we would have achieved much less elsewhere.

Advice To Citizens

"It would be well for the average citizen to remember that those in high command make their choice of the disposition of their forces so as to win this war, and to win it as fast as possible."

The district commandant predicted that the dirigible—for the most part the type of airship which will operate from the new base—would "greatly lessen the number of sinkings in our coastal waters and the lighter-than-air base at Elizabeth City will help us to destroy the Axis submarines operating in this vicinity before their toll mounts higher than it is at present."

SHIP ATT

U. S. Embassy Says That North American Vessel Sent SOS

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, April 1 (AP)—The United States Embassy announced tonight that a North American ship was attacked last night off the coast of the State of Ceara, adding that the stricken vessel had sent a distress signal.

The embassy and other official sources said no additional information was available.

PT Patrol Is Operating Off Panama

APR 2 1942

Crews Totally Unafraid, Equally Full of Daring, AP Correspondent Says

BY CHANDLER DIEHL

Off Panama, April 1—(AP)—One of the mightiest forces serving in the joint air, sea and land defense of the Panama canal is the fleet of patrol torpedo boats operating in the waters off Panama.

These pint-sized battle-buggies are the razzle-dazzle units of the navy's attacking force, and they have true high-scoring power as proved by the results turned in by the tiny group operating with Gen. MacArthur in the Philippines.

The mosquito fleet of the Panama sea frontier now is on daily battle maneuvers and correspondents have just been permitted to see the performance of these mighty mites in tropical waters.

There's no question about razzle-dazzle performance. The PT boats have speed, drive, swing, change of pace, power and deception. They zig-zag deceptively, then drive in hard on their target.

Freighter Sample Target.

One target for a simulated attack in the day's maneuvers was a coastwise freighter.

Foam flying, the vessels of the mosquito fleet converged on the target ship, and it was easy to picture how these shifty little runners maintain the attacking edge in any combat. They can feint more cumbersome enemies into position for an attack, and then speed in—the tiniest sort of target—to loose their torpedoes.

The men that run these PT boats off Panama are confident of their craft in the extreme. They are totally unafraid—equally full of daring.

The Caribbean mosquito fleet has a fine combination of experience and youth.

Boss man is Lieut. Comdr. Earl S. Caldwell of Washington, D. C., only 38 years old, but a veteran of service aboard aircraft carrier, battleship, heavy cruiser and destroyers, and, most important, one of the pioneers of PT boat service.

All Young Men.

Junior officers of the mosquito fleet, commanding the individual boats, are keen, quick-thinking, action-hunting lieutenants and ensigns—average age, about 25.

Crews are picked men—chosen from a waiting list according to bureau of navigation tests. They're young in years but all are experienced.

Every member of the small crew is trained to handle any of the assignments aboard, and any casualties suffered during an engagement need not destroy the boat's effectiveness.

The whole set-up is geared for speed. Drill maneuvers and tactical operations—practiced daily—have become second-nature, and teamwork is at fine edge. All tactical doctrine has been boiled down to a single, small sheet of simple signals.

APR 2 1942

Always in Readiness

Boats are on the alert always—day and night. A night take-off can be executed in a few minutes for the men sleep aboard no matter where the craft is anchored.

There are frequent co-ordinated maneuvers with planes of the Caribbean Defense Command. Sometimes the action is joint; sometimes the planes dive low in simulated attack.

The David-Goliath set-up appeals to all hands aboard, and they're hoping mostly for an encounter with an Axis aircraft carrier—ready and anxious to put proof to the old axiom: "The bigger they come, the harder they fall."

Doctor Relates Birth of Baby in Open Lifeboat

With 2 of His Ribs Broken He Delivered Child After U-Boat Torpedoed Vessel

NORFOLK, Va., April 1 (AP).—Attended by a ship's doctor who was in agony because of two broken ribs, a young mother gave birth to a son in a crowded lifeboat pitched about by fifteen-foot waves after their ship was torpedoed and sunk off the Atlantic Coast Sunday by an Axis submarine.

Rescue ships picked up eighty-nine survivors of the American passenger-cargo ship and landed them at Norfolk. Three others were known dead and twenty-nine were missing, the 5th Naval District said in announcing the sinking tonight. Those saved included thirty-one passengers and fifty-eight crewmen. The three known dead were crew members.

Missing were eleven passengers and eighteen crewmen.

"A Brave, Lovely Woman"

Dr. L. H. Conly, of Brooklyn, told reporters that he delivered Mrs. Desanka Mohorovicic of an eight-pound son in total darkness, without anesthesia and with only the "simple instruments" contained in the lifeboat's medical kit.

Mrs. Mohorovicic, twenty-eight-year-old wife of an attache of the Yugoslav Consulate in New York, was in labor for "three or four hours," but stood the pain very well, Dr. Conly said, adding that she was "a brave, lovely woman."

The baby was born thirteen hours after the survivors took to the lifeboats, in which they were tossed about by high seas for some forty hours before their rescue. The mother and her baby, together with Mrs. Mohorovicic's two-year-old daughter, Visna, were taken to a Norfolk hospital, where they appeared to have suffered no ill effects from their harrowing experience.

"Every one was good to me," the young mother told reporters in broken English from her hospital bed. She said that after the baby was born she placed him inside her dress to shelter him from the cold. Her legs were badly bruised when she fell while making her way to the deck with Visna in her arms after the torpedo struck.

Two Ribs Broken

From his bed in another hospital, Dr. Conly told how two of his ribs were broken in a fall into a lifeboat. He released his grip on the man-rope as his feet touched the lifeboat seat, but at that moment the boat dropped deeply between two swells and he fell into the boat.

He had no time to get his medical bag after the submarine pumped two torpedoes into the ship, Dr. Conly related.

After the baby was born, the doctor said, "we took a turban from another woman in the boat and wrapped the baby in it." He said the twenty-four persons in the boat had given their blankets to other survivors on a raft, and the only cover available for Mrs. Mohorovicic was a sail which was stretched across one end of the boat.

When their rescue ship came alongside the lifeboat, one of the crewmen handed the naked baby up to a seaman on the deck of the rescue vessel. "I have never seen an expression on any one's face like that on the face of that seaman," Dr. Conly said.

Dead and Missing

The Navy said the three seamen known to be dead were:

Pete d'Addio, barber, 1220 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.

Richard De Rosas, saloon steward (wife, Esther), 624 West 207th Street, New York.

Edward M. Devaney, night steward, Detroit.

Missing passengers were listed as follows:

C. F. Cischek, 310 Park Avenue, Hoboken, N. J.

Miss R. Blythe Clark, Evanston, Ill.

Arthur Davis, 205 West 143d Street, Street, New York.

General M. Djoukanovitch, Yugoslav Legation, Washington.

Mrs. Setter and small daughter, 12 East 32d Street, New York.

Mrs. E. E. Govett and son, Leonard, Annapolis, Md.

Miss H. M. Jacobs, Chicago.

Mrs. R. D. Wrigley, 10 Bridge Street, New York City.

Miss Anna Zurcher, Montreal.

Missing crewmen were:

Norman W. Lee, first assistant, Beacon, N. Y.

Rudolph, Lenhardt, third radioman, (mother, Sophie), 214 East Seventy-seventh Street, New York.

Ralph E. Clark, seaman, Cambridge, Mass.

Lawrence L. Frank, seaman, (father, Sidney), 615 Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn.

Armando A. Ferreira, quartermaster, Portugal.

Frances Calivao) 387 Union Street, Brooklyn.

Robert M. Peck, seaman, (wife, Margaret), 193 Barnett Place, Cedarhurst, L. I.

William E. Hannegan, electrician, (uncle, Edward), 208 East Thirty-fifth Street, New York.

James B. Jensen, wiper, (wife, Katherine), 50 Macdougall Street, New York.

APR 2 1942

James M. Parker, utility, Philadelphia.

Arthur C. Hobirk, utility, Jacksonville, Fla.

William Jefford, messman, Philadelphia.

Diego Magulin, messman, (niece, Frank Blondin, messman, Henderson, Ky.

Adolpho Moreno, steward, Valparaiso, Chile.

Joaquin Rodriquez, bellboy (wife, Mercedes) 600 West 138th Street, New York.

Arthur C. Comone, deck steward, (wife, Dulce) 612 West 137th Street, New York.

Duncan MacNicol, first officer (wife, Elinor), 220 East Seventy-third Street, New York.

Quartermaster Americo Rodriguez, of Lowell, Mass., said five lifeboats were launched from the stricken ship, which went down within twenty minutes, but that his boat was capsized by a giant column of water caused by the explosion of the second torpedo.

"There were two women and one child in my boat," Rodiguez said. "After the boat capsized they had disappeared. I found a life raft and climbed aboard it. Several persons were in the water near by, including a woman and a little girl. We helped them aboard the raft."

Radio Man Trapped

Chief Radio Operator Albert Viada, of Astoria, Queens, related that the door to his cabin was jammed by the blast of the first torpedo and that he had to kick his way out to get to the wireless room where he found the explosion had wrecked all of the sending keys and three of the four transmitters. He rigged an emergency set and by using two pieces of broken wire tapped out a call for assistance.

Viada boarded a raft with nine others after he abandoned the ship. The men on this raft saw Mrs. Richard Wrigley, of New York, in the water and tried to reach her, Viada said, but "the waves carried her away." Mrs. Wrigley's husband and daughter, Irene, were among survivors landed here.

The crew of the rescue ship raised $30 and presented it to Mrs. Mohorovicic and the surviving passengers of the torpedoed ship increased the gift to $210. The Navy Relief Society, through its branch at the Norfolk naval base, provided a layette for the baby, whose mother has named him Jesse Roper Mohorovicic.

War Communiques

APR 2 1942

American

WASHINGTON, April 1 (AP).—War Department communique No. 171, based on reports up to 4 p. m.:

1. PHILIPPINE THEATER:

Heavy fighting in Bataan ceased early today. Superior enemy numbers and fire power forced some of our outposts to withdraw a short distance, but no material change in the situation resulted. The enemy suffered heavy casualties while our losses were slight.

Throughout April 1 the ground action in Bataan was limited to intensive patrol activity with occasional sharp clashes.

Naval units shelled our positions along the west coast of Bataan, while dive bombers attacked our front lines.

There were several harassing enemy raids on Corregidor which did little damage. During the afternoon these attacks were accompanied by the shelling of our fortifications by enemy batteries on the Cavite shore.

In Mindanao our forces carried out two spectacular raids which proved highly successful.

A small number of our troops raided a Japanese supply base in the vicinity of Digos in Davao Gulf. Twenty-two enemy warehouses containing large stocks of food, gasoline, ammunition and other military supplies were burned to the ground. Several vehicles and other heavy military equipment were destroyed. Our forces suffered no casualties.

In the other raid one of our native Sulu units penetrated to the heart of the Japanese-occupied city of Zamboanga, taking the enemy completely by surprise. Our troops destroyed several machine-gun nests and other military installations, inflicting heavy casualties. Following the raid our troops withdrew without any losses.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

War Department communique No. 170, based on reports up to 9:30 a. m.:

1. PHILIPPINE THEATER:

Japanese infantry opened a heavy attack on the right center of our line at about 8 p. m., March 31. Several waves of assault troops, supported by heavy mortar fire, made repeated attacks on our outposts. Some of our advanced positions were taken after fierce bayonet fighting. Our troops were reinforced, and after several hours of savage hand-to-hand combat the enemy attack was brought to a halt before it reached our main line.

A formal apology was made by the Japanese imperial high command in the Philippines for the aerial bombing of our base hospital in Bataan. In a radio broadcast a Japanese Army spokesman declared that the bombing was unintentional.

The enemy made a number of minor air raids on Corregidor and our rear bases in Bataan during the daylight hours of March 31. Most of these attacks were made by flights of two planes. The 116th air attack on Corregidor was brought to an abrupt end when the two heavy Japanese bombers engaged in the raid were shot down by our anti-aircraft artillery at about 5 p. m., March 31.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

Australian

MELBOURNE, Australia, April 1 (AP).—An official communique:

R. A. A. F. aircraft attacked an enemy airdrome at Koepang early this morning. An estimated six enemy aircraft were destroyed and another six damaged. Many fires were seen and six expolsions were observed. Despite the heavy attack all our bombers returned.

Allied aircraft raided Salamaua airdrome this morning and dropped a number of heavy bombs on the runways. Successful results were observed.

Tuesday night's enemy air attack on Darwin was made by a smaller force than first was thought. No service targets were hit and there were no casualties or damage.

The total Jananese losses for three days are four enemy planes destroyed, eighteen probably destroyed and eleven damaged.

An earlier communique:

During Royal Australian Air Force and Allied raids on Koepang and Lae and Jaanese counter-attacks on Darwin and Port Moresby on March 30-31, three enemy aircraft were destroyed, ten probably were destroyer and five others, including four flying boats, were damaged. Near misses on a Japanese ship and direct hits on buildings also were scored by our airmen.

While Japanese aircraft were raiding Darwin on the afternoon of March 31, one escorting "zero" fighter was shot down and one enemy bomber probably was damaged. We suffered no aircraft losses.

Another enemy air attack was made on Darwin early in the evening of March 31 by a medium force of bombers. Neither casualties nor damage were reported.

Further details of the successful raid by R. A. A. F. bombers at Koepang, when six grounded enemy aircraft were probably destroyed, indicate that an additional four enemy flying boats were damaged by machine-gun fire. Near misses were noted on a ship in the harbor. One "zero" fighter was shot down and one enemy bomber possibly destroyed.

It is now known that buildings received at least five direct hits with heavy bombs during the Allied attack on Lae Monday, while two grounded aircraft probably were destroyed. Fires were started among the buildings.

A Japanese bomber which flew over Port Moresby yesterday was attacked and a wing shot off. The plane crashed a few miles from town.

During an attack by "zero" fighters on an Allied bomber near, Port Moresby Monday, which was reported in an earlier communique, one "zero" fighter probably was shot down. It last was seen trailing black smoke from the engine.

British

NEW DELHI, April 1 (AP).—A British communique on the Burma situation:

The attack to clear the road blocked at Shwedaung did not materialize, as a force to the south consisting of units of the Gloucesters, West Yorkshires, Cameronians and Duke of Wellingtons, assisted by two Indian Frontier Force battalions from the north, opened the road late on March 30 after hard fighting under intense enemy air action throughout the day. The enemy sustained heavy losses during these engagements and our casualties were moderate.

The situation as of March 31 is that our troops now are back in their original defended areas.

The enemy are in force, holding Shwedaung and on the western bank of the Irrawaddy, while other columns are operatin to the east astride the railway north of Paungde, still having complete control of the air.

Our river patrols have fought extremely successful actions and now have withdrawn to the north, protecting our right flank from infiltration.

Yesterday the enemy bombed a landing ground in central Burma and another in northern Burma. Damage was negligible.

VALLETTA, Malta, April 1 (AP).—A British communique:

There have been eight alerts during the last twenty-four hours, some of several hours' duration. With improvement in the weather the Luftwaffe has returned to mass attacks with bomber formations strongly protected by fighters, notwithstanding which our Hurricanes and Spitfires continuously attacked the enemy bombers. There were some civilian casualties and property damage.

LONDON, April 1 (AP).—An Air Ministry communique:

A small force of bombers, escorted by fighters attacked the docks at Boulogne early this afternoon. Anti-aircraft gunfire was encountered but very few enemy fighters were seen.

One bomber was lost. Two of its crew are safe though wounded.

MOSCOW, April 1 (AP).—A Soviet Information Bureau communique:

On April 1 nothing of importance occurred on the front.

On March 30 thirty-one German planes were destroyed, and not twenty-five as previously reported.

On March 31 twenty-four German planes were destroyed. Our losses were thirteen planes.

During the last two days our troops operating in certain sectors of the Leningrad front effected a number of successful operations, annihilating about 3,000 German officers and soldiers.

An earlier communique:

During the night of March 31-April 1 there were no substantial changes at the front.

Our units on one of the sectors of the western front occupied three inhabited localities. To recover lost positions the enemy made several counter-attacks which were repelled with heavy losses to his forces.

n another sector, one artillery unit destroyed thirteen Geman guns, destroyed five pillboxes and captured much booty.

One unit operating on the Kalinin front successfully repelled an enemy counter-attack. In the pursuit of the enemy which followed, our troops inflicted heavy losses on him. More than 350 enemy killed in officers and men remained on the battlefield. Booty was captured, including ten guns.

German

BERLIN (From German broadcasts), April 1 (AP).—A German high command communique:

In the Donet region, fresh attacks by strong enemy forces were repulsed.

On the central and northern sectors,enemy attacks also were beaten off in stiff fighting.

In an attack of our own in the area northeast of Orel, troops of a motorized infantry division threw the enemy out of his positions, took hundreds of prisoners and captured seven guns, sixty-five minethrowers and machine guns.

On the southern sector of the front, Italian fighters attacked a superior enemy fighter formation and shot down, without loss to themselves, four Soviet aircraft for certain and two probables.

In weeks of the most strenous defensive fighting, the Bavarian 97th Light Infantry and the Brandenburg 257th Infantry division have beaten off a number of attacks of superior enemy forces, supported by tanks, and inflicted heavy losses in men and material on the enemy.

In North Africa, a thrust by British reconnaissance forces was repulsed. Successful air attacks were directed against airfields in Marmarica and the coastal area of Egypt. The desert railway was effectively bombed.

On the island of Malta, state wharves and submarine bases of Valletta as well as British airdromes were bombed by day and night. German fighters shot down two enemy planes in air combats.

German bombers damaged a large merchant ship by several bomb hits off the Englgish south coast.

During yesterday and last night some British aircraft carried out nuisance flights into the western Reich territory. Some bombs were dropped, causing slight material damage and casualties.

Japanese

TOKIO (From Japanese broadcasts), April 1 (AP).—An imperial headquarters communique:

Formations of Japanese naval aircraft March 30 carried out a smashing assault on Port Darwin, destroying the airfield and military establishments. Fighter aircraft which accompanied the bombers shot down nine out of ten enemy planes which flew up to meet them.

Another unit of Japanese naval planes which raided Port Darwin March 28 shot down four out of seven United States aircraft which sought to intercept them. Heavy damage also wa scaused to military establishments, while three concealed enemy aircraft were set ablae.

Six enemy aircraft were shot down and heavy destruction was caused to the airdrome and military barracks and to anti-aircraft batteries when Japanese naval planes conducted a series of raids on Port Moresby between March 24 and March 28.

Italian

ROME (From Italian broadcasts), April 1 (AP).—An Italian high command communique:

One of our recannaissance patrols has had a successful encounter with enemy armored patrols which were supported by artillery east of El Mechili. The enemy lost several armored cars. The crew of one of these, including an officer, was captured.

German fighter planes have shot down two Curtiss planes over Martuba.

Italian torpedo aircraft carried out a successful attack on a convoy 1 nthe eastern Mediterranean and sank a large merchantman.

An Italian submarine returning to its base has confirmed it torpedoed and damaged an enemy cruiser March 23 in the eastern Mediterranean, as mentioned in a previous Italian communique.

NOBLE, JONES FACE 3 SETS OF CHARGES

Held by the Government for Violation of Wartime Utterances Statute

CRIMINAL LIBEL ALLEGED

California Also Orders Felony Complaints Laid Against Them and Seven Others

LOS ANGELES, April 1 (AP)—Federal and State Governments cracked down from three directions today on Robert Noble and Ellis O. Jones, arrested last night and accused of criticizing America's war effort and General Douglas MacArthur.

The Federal Government arraigned them on charges of disloyal acts or words in time of war. Preliminary hearings were set for April 15, and they were held in default of $10,000 bail each.

The State filed charges of criminal libel against them here, alleging that they wrote in a magazine published by The Friends of Progress that General MacArthur, in leaving Bataan for Australia, "just ran out in the dead of night. . ."

In San Francisco Attorney General Warren ordered felony complaints filed against them and seven other alleged members of The Friends of Progress, accusing them with failing to register under the Subversive Organizations Act. He commented that evidence "indicates clearly that their organization is subversive in character and is designed to destroy our war effort and with it our country."

Noble, meanwhile, remarked in jail:

"I was amazed at these new charges. I made a thorough study of the sedition laws after my arrest in December (he later was freed) and I am positive I have violated no law, nor have I tended to lower the morale of the country. I feel I know as much about the statutes as any one else.

Noble is the former promoter of the "$25 every Monday morning" pension plan. Jones is head of The National Copperheads, an isolationist organization.

Both were arrested last December on charges of sedition, but Attorney General Biddle ordered their release a few days later with the comment, "Free speech as such ought not to be restricted."

"I don't believe there's been anything said that is different from anything I said before," Noble also said today. "I have kept in correspondence with Biddle since the other matter and have received no indication that there was any trouble in store for me."

FIRM WITHHELD DATA ON RUBBER FROM NAVY DEPT.

APR 2 1942

Standard Did Not Give Full Information, O'Mahoney Charges.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP) The president of Standard Oil company (New Jersey) acknowledged today that the company failed to give all information about its synthetic rubber processes to a Navy representative in 1939 but contended that the company did furnish "everything the government could make practical use of."

W. S. Farish, Standard president, made this statement after Senator O'Mahoney (D-Wyo) had challenged his testimony that Standard gave "full information" to the Army and Navy "covering Standard's synthetic rubber activities."

Some Data Withheld

"When you testified that you were making full disclosure," O'Mahoney asserted, "as a matter of fact you were not."

Farish protested O'Mahoney's conclusion, asserting that the company had given the Navy's representative "everything that he was interested in."

"The Navy was not, as I understand it," Farish told the committee, "interested in the manufacture of the product but in its possible use.

"The idea was to see if this rubber had such properties that the Navy would be interested in using it."

"It was your judgment and not the government's judgment that governed the disclosure," O'Mahoney asserted during the exchange.

Refers to Letter

O'Mahoney raised the point in connection with a letter, taken from Standard's files and read into the record last week by Thurman Arnold, anti-trust chief, indicating that a Navy department civilian employe, identified only as Mr. Werkenthin, had visited Standard's plant in 1939 in search of information.

Farish said that Werkenthin visited the plant "at the request of our people who were working with the Navy."

In the letter, an unidentified Standard representative reported that Werkenthin was not given any complete picture of the method of producing Standard's butyl rubber.

"Because of the possible application of butyl rubber to some of the Navy's requirements," the letter said "Mr. Werkenthin had been instructed also to look into the manufacturing process.

Could Not Steer Him Away

"You will recall that I took up this question with you before his arrival. As agreed upon, I took Mr. Werkenthin over to the 'K' plant when it appeared that I could not very well steer his interest away from the process.

"However, I am quite certain that he left with no picture of the operations other than that a considerable amount of distillation and refrigeration is involved in the handling of the light hydrocarbons, and that refinery gas rather than straight butadiene is the raw material."

O'Mahoney, who headed the now defunct temporary National Economic committee which made an extensive inquiry into alleged monopolistic practices of business, said a layman could not "avoid the inference that an official of Standard was instructed to steer the Navy official away from a knowledge of the manufacturing process."

When O'Mahoney said he could understand how the company had become "entrapped in this position," Farish protested use of the word "entrapped," asserting that it was "a natural position for us to take."

The witness agreed when O'Mahoney observed that Werkenthin "was there at your request to see what you were willing to show him and nothing else."

FARISH DENIES STANDARD OIL BLOCKED NAVY

APR 2 1942

Says Service Was Interested Only in the Use to Which Butyl Could Be Put.

PROCESS WAS NOT INVOLVED

Witness Says Company Gave Army and Navy All Information Useful to Them.

Washington, April 1 (A. P.).—W. S. Farish, president, testified under questioning today that officials of the Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) had not disclosed the full process of manufacturing synthetic rubber to a civilian representative of the Navy when the latter inspected the company's plant in 1939.

This disclosure caused Senator O'Mahoney, Democrat, of Wyoming, to assert in a hearing befor the Senate Defense Investigating Committee that any layman such as he could not "avoid the inference that an official of Standard was instructed to steer the Navy official away from a knowledge of the manufacturing process."

Testimony on the incident came after Mr. Farish, replying to charges made last week by Assistant Attorney-General Thurman Arnold that the company had stifled synthetic rubber production in this country because of cartel agreements with the German die trust, told the committee that Standard had turned its information about synthetic rubber over to the Munitions Board in 1939.

Senator O'Mahoney read from a letter, taken from the company's files and previously introduced in the record by Mr. Arnold, excerpts indicating that a naval representative, identified only as Mr. Werkenthin, had visited Standard's plant in 1939.

Navy Not Interested in Process.

In this letter, an unidentified representative of the company said that Mr. Werkenthin came away without any fundamental knowledge of Standard's process of producing butyl synthetic rubber.

Mr. Farish insisted that Mr. Werkenthin was a civilian employee who was interested primarily in the use to which the navy might put the product, that he had little if any interest in how it was manufactured and that the navy itself did not desire to enter the synthetic rubber producing field.

"It is clear then," Senator O'Mahoney persisted, "that when you testified that in 1939 you were making full disclosures to the army and the navy about synthetic rubber, you were giving them only part of the information."

"We were giving them everything they could make use of," Farish replied.

"But you were the judge," Senator O'Mahoney persisted.

Letter Again Read Into Record.

Senator O'Mahoney again read into the record the letter which had brought about the testimony.

In part, it said: "Because of the possible application of Butyl rubber to some of the navy's requirements, Mr. Werkenthin had been instructed also to look into the manufacturing process. You will recall that I took up this question with you before his arrival. As agreed upon, I took Mr. Werkenthin over to the 'K' plant when it appeared that I could not very well steer his interest away from the process. However, I am quite certain that he left with no picture of the operations other than that a considerable amount of distillation and refrigeration is involved in the handling of the light hydrocarbons and that refinery gas rather than straight butadiene is the raw material."

In a statement read to the committee, Mr. Farish said that five-pound samples of three types of synthetic rubber had been delivered to the Army-Navy Munitions Board in January, 1939, "together with complete information."

He said that Standard not only had given technical information on synthetic rubber to the army and navy but also had urged the Government in 1939 "to act promptly if there was any possibility that rubber supplies might be cue off in the event of war."

Mr. Farish said that despite difficulties encountered in translating the laboratory process of making synthetic rubber to commercial operations, rapid progress had been made toward erectin plants which would turn ou 7,300 tons yearly. He complained, however, that lack of material now was delaying plant construction.

MEN REGISTERED TWO MONTHS AGO FACE CALL IN MAY

Immediate Classification Ordered, with Induction to Follow

APR 2 1942

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP) Draft headquarters served notice today that some of the men who registered on Feb. 16 may be summoned to the training camps in May, and that June most probably would see a portion of them in the service.

Those who registered on that date were men between 35 and 44 inclusive and those who had become 20 and 21 in the recently preceding months. A lottery determining the order of their liability for service was conducted on March 17.

Classification Ordered

The intent of the army regarding this group was made plain in selective service order to all local draft boards. They were told to start classifying the new registrants immediately and prepare to fill the June call, and possibly the May call, in part from them.

This clarified an uncertainty as to whether these men would be lumped with the earlier registrants and become subject to early call or whether the Army would exhaust the first group before tapping the second.

The method of coordinating the two groups is to be explained in detail in a later announcement. As recently outlined, the plan is as follows: After the men have been classified, a local board determines how many from each group are 1-A. If it has, for example, sixty 1-A men from the first group and 40 from the second, all calls from the Army for new men are filled 60 per cent from the first and forty per cent from the second.

Will Fill June Call

"Local boards," the selective service headquarters announcement said, "were instructed to start classification at once of the several million men who enrolled on Feb. 16, and to prepare to fill the Army's June call for men, and possibly the May call with these registrants and registrants from the first age group."

After explaining that those who registered prior to Feb. 16 were referred to as the "first age group," and those who registered on Feb. 16 as the "second age group," the announcement continued:

"The War department has indicated that beginning June 1, 1942, requisition will probably call for men of both age groups. In such event it will be necessary to lay calls for the month of June, 1942, and for subsequent months on both age groups. In those local boards where the first age group is exhausted by June 1, 1942, calls will of necessity be made only upon the second age group.

"The precise method which will be followed for the filling of calls for the month of June, 1942, and for subsequent months, as between registrants in the first age group and registrants in the second age group, will be made the subject of a subsequent memorandum."

Glittering Lights Dimmed In Florida Area For Duration

Miami Beach Hotels Leased For Army Air Corps

Miami Beach, Fla., Apr. 1 (AP)—The bright lights of this glittering resort have been dimmed for the duration.

A tourist season that started before Pearl Harbor has run its course with a normal amount of play in night clubs, on golf courses, tennis courts, in ocean-fornt pools and Cabana colonies.

Now Miami Beach is in the Army. Most of the hotels in a 24-block strip running south from Thirty-first street have been leased for an Army Air Corps technical training camp. Twenty-four already have signed up. Many others will join the program.

The resort has hotel and apartment space for about 100,000 tourists. The Air Corps, already on the training job, is making plans to house 30,000 men at the peak of its program. It will double the population of the city, which has an official year-round count of 26,000 residents.

Miami Beach proper has 329 hotels, of which about 40 per cent will be used by the Army. Many of the remainder will stay open throughout the year. They expect to draw thousands of families here to enjoy vacations and visit their sons and husbands who are in the training camps.

The arrival of the Army means the end of bathing-beauty pictures and playtime resort appeal. In their place, the beach will direct its advertising and publicity toward attracting soldiers' families to the hotels and apartment houses that remain in private hands.

Some of the most luxurious beach hotels will house Air Corps trainees. Fancy suites have been broken up, with three men to a room. The Miami Beach golf course is a parade ground. Lounges, hotel bars and dining rooms will be assembly rooms and class rooms. Recreation will be available on some of the nation's best beaches and in palm-bordered swimming pools.

CONTRACTS AWARDED FOR RUBBER FACTORIES

WASHINGTON, April 1 — (AP) Secretary of Commerce Jones announced today that Rubber Reserve company and the Defense Plant corporation, RFC affiliates, have awarded contracts "which will bring the annual production of synthetic rubber to more than 700,000 tons.

The plants participating in the contracts and agreements will go into operation over the next 18 months, an announcement said, "and if no unforeseen construction delays are encountered, all should be in production by the end of 1943.

Gen. Burns Nominated As Chief of Ordnance

Major General's Rank Asked for Sharp and Campbell

WASHINGTON, April 1 (AP).—The nomination of Major General James H. Burns to become chief of ordnance in June when the four-year tour of Major General Charles M. Wesson expires, was sent to the Senate today by President Roosevelt for confirmation. General Burns, now executive officer of the munitions assignment board in Washington, is a resident of Pawling, N. Y.

At the same time, the President nominated Brigadier Generals William F. Sharp, of Monkton, Md., and Levin H. Campbell jr., of Yonkers, N. Y., for promotion to major general. General Sharp is chief of field artillery forces under Lieutenant General Jonathan M. Wainwright in the Philippines, and General Campbell is assistant chief o industrial service-production in th office of the Chief of Ordnance Washington.

LEW AYRES LIKES FIRST DAY IN CAMP

Will Be in Charge of First Aid Work with Timber Crews.

WYETH, Ore., April 1.—(AP) Lew Ayres, the motion picture actor who declined to bear arms for his country, registered at a quiet conscientious objectors' camp today.

Attended by a gallery which deserted a minor fire to witness his arrival, Ayres became the 171st enrollee at the camp, supported and operated by the Brethren and Mennonite churches.

After luncheon, which consisted of vegetable soup, curried rice, canned cherries, coffee with condensed cream, bread and butter, Ayres remarked:

"Gee, this is an ideal spot."

He immediately was given a duty assignment. With another enrollee, Ayres will handle emergency first aid work. He will arise at 6 a. m. and will depart with work gangs in nearby timber at 7:30 o'clock, after a brief devotional period. He will report back to camp at 5 p. m., and will retire at 10 o'clock. With others, he will be allowed three short recreational leaves a week.

During some of these he hopes to climb nearby Wind mountain.

He said he also would like to attempt to scale Mount Hood, which towers above the camp.

Ayres seemingly was accepted immediately by other men at the camp. One reported back to his fellows:

"He looks like a real guy."

KILDARE FILMS WITHDRAWN

CHICAGO, April 1—(AP) Withdrawal of all "Dr. Kildare" films starring Lew Ayres from 100 movie houses in Chicago and Illinois cities was announced today by the Balaban and Katz corporation and its downstate subsidiary, Great States company.

Ayres went from Hollywood yesterday to an Oregon camp for conscientious objectors to war, at his own request.

India Is Seen Failing to Rise To Her Greatest Occasion

APR 2 1942

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

Pessimism emanating from New Delhi regarding the fate of Great Britain's offer of Dominion status is causing widespread expressions of fear that Indians who have sought so eagerly for independence are now going to fail to rise to the occasion and seize the opportunity of centuries.

This is far more than a family affair in the British Empire. It is one of the paramount issues of the moment for the whole world, for with the hordes of the Rising Sun milling at the gates, the course of the war is involved.

Only this war crisis could have induced Great Britain to make such a sweeping concession, for the British are convinced that India isn't ready for self-government. True, there are difficulties to be overcome, but those are largely inherent in the religious and social structure of India. They haven't been injected into the offer by the British, and would still be present if Great Britain withdrew entirely and let India go her own way.

It is astonishing to hear Indian leaders insisting that they can't accept Britain's qualification that conduct of the war remain in British hands. India has no military experts, and not even a butter-paddle with which to defend herself.

In short, it is disappointing to India's host of friends and well-wishers to see her hesitate.

What Has Happened to Gandhi?

One wonders what has happened to Gandhi. The greatest individual force in all India is the Mahatma. Millions follow him blindly and many of them literally worship him, despite his efforts to dissuade such practice. There's small doubt that he could persuade acceptance or rejection of the British offer.

Here's one of the outstanding leaders of generations. For long years he has battled for Indian independence. He has gone to prison many times for his crusade. He even journeyed to England in his loin cloth and shawl to plead the cause of his people.

And yet now when he has a double Nelson on John Bull (and we trust Friend John will excuse our bluntness) Gandhi hesitates over an offer which, if it doesn't give him precisely what he wants, assuredly must lead to it. Having defended the Mahatma in many arguments in conservative England, and having even folded my long legs up to sit on the floor and listen in admiration to his words of wisdom, I feel at liberty to ask what has happened to his famous sagacity.

Gandhi is a great man, spiritually and mentally, but he is stubborn. You can move a mountain easier than you can move this eighty-five-pound man once his mind is made up. You've seen the way he has forced both the British and his own followers come to heel with his innumerable hunger-strikes. It always was the other fellow who gave in—never Gandhi.

Face Enslavement by Japs.

But this time the other fellow isn't in position to give in. The way matters stand, with the Jap successes continuing in Burma, Gandhi may find himself not anly without dominion status but a slave under the Japanese yoke. Countless millions of his people may follow him into servitude merely on his word.

One sometimes wonders whether the Indians realize their danger. Gandhi doesn't believe in war, of course, and declines to employ force under any circumstances. A few weeks ago he asserted that if the Nazis came to Hindustan, the all India Congress, of which he is spiritual head, would give them the fight it has given Britain—that is, passive resistance.

That's all very well, but India thinks she can beat the Japs by passive resistance, she has a brutal awakening coming. This is a grim time when idealism must be bolstered by realism—or call it plain horse-sense. Certainly it is a dangerous moment to be arguing on the battlements.

LONDON,APRIL 1-(AP)-AMERICAN-MADE BOMBERS AND FIGHTERS ARE NEEDED URGENTLY BY THE RAF TO CHECK A GERMAN DRIVE ON EGYPT AND THE SUEZ CANAL THIS SPRING, A BRITISH AVIATION SOURCE SAID TODAY.

STRESSING THE "TREMENDOUS IMPORTANCE" OF BUILDING UP THE AIR STRENGTH THERE AFTER THE "RESHUFFLE" CAUSED BY THE OUTBREAK OF WAR IN EAST ASIA, THIS SOURCE SAID ADOLF HITLER "MUST TRY AN ADVANCE IN THE MIDDLE EAST THIS SPRING."

"AT BEST," HE SAID, "HE HOPES TO DRIVE US OUT OF EGYPT AND TAKE SUEZ. AT WORST HE HOPES TO PIN A MAXIMUM OF BRITISH FORCES IN LIBYA."

APR 2 1942

THE CONTINUING AERIAL ASSAULT ON MALTA WAS DESCRIBED AS A PRELUDE TO THE COMING DRIVE.

"AMERICAN BOMBERS ARE NECESSARY IF THE RAF IS TO CONTINUE TO HAMMER AXIS COMMUNICATIONS AND DEBARKATION PORTS IN THE MEDITERRANEAN," HE SAID.

STOCKHOLM, APRIL 1-(AP)-AXEL JONSSON, PRESIDENT OF THE SWEDISH AMERICAN LINE, SAID TODAY THE MOTORSHIP GRIPSHOLM, NOW AT GOTEBORG, WAS BEING RE-OUTFITTED AND THAT NEGOTIATIONS WERE UNDER WAY FOR HER CHARTER TO THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT FOR AN EXCHANGE OF UNITED STATES AND AXIS DIPLOMATS.

APR 2 1942

THE STEAMSHIP DROTTNINGHOLM, ALSO OF THE SWEDISH AMERICAN LINE, ALREADY HAS BEEN CHARTERED FOR THE SAME PURPOSE AND IS WAITING AT GOTEBORG TO SAIL FOR THE UNITED STATES BETWEEN APRIL 10 AND 15, THE AMERICAN SWEDISH NEWS EXCHANGE REPORTED.

THE NEWS AGENCY SAID JONSSON CONFIRMED REPORTS THAT IF THE NEGOTIATIONS WERE COMPLETED THE GRIPSHOLM WOULD PICK UP JAPANESE DIPLOMATS IN THE UNITED STATES AND TAKE THEM TO PORTUGUESE EAST AFRICA WHERE AN EXCHANGE WOULD BE MADE FOR AMERICAN DIPLOMATS IN EAST ASIA.

THE DROTTNINGHOLM WOULD TAKE GERMAN AND ITALIAN DIPLOMATS FROM THE UNITED STATES TO LISBON IN EXCHANGE FOR AMERICANS IN EUROPE.

SANTIAGO, CHILE, APRIL 1-(AP)-SEVEN COMMUNIST DEPUTIES IN THE CHILEAN CHAMBER WALKED OUT TODAY WHEN ARGENTINE FOREIGN MINISTER ENRIQUE RUIZ GUINAZU, A GUEST SPEAKER, REFERRED TO THE "SIMILARITY OF INTERNATIONAL POLICY THAT CHILE AND ARGENTINA HAD SHOWN AT THE RIO DE JANEIRO CONFERENCE." IT WAS THERE THAT THE TWO COUNTRIES OPPOSED AN IMMEDIATE DIPLOMATIC BREAK WITH THE AXIS.

ONE OF THE COMMUNISTS ALSO WAS VOCAL IN HIS DISAPPROVAL OF RUIZ GUINAZU'S REMARKS, SHOUTING "DOWN WITH FASCISM."

THE ARGENTINE FOREIGN MINISTER, WHO HEADS A LARGE SPECIAL DELEGATION, IS HERE FOR THE INAUGURATION CEREMONY TOMORROW OF CHILEAN PRESIDENT-ELECT JUAN ANTONIO RIOS, WHO THUS FAR HAS NOT INDICATED WHETHER CHILE WILL SEVER RELATIONS WITH THE AXIS.

RIOS WAS ELECTED ON A PRO-DEMOCRATIC TICKET FEB. 1, BUT HE HAS REFUSED TO MAKE A STATEMENT ON CHILE'S INTERNATIONAL POLICY UNTIL AFTER HIS INAUGURATION.

SOME OBSERVERS, HOWEVER, ATTACHED SIGNIFICANCE TO THE FACT THAT RIOS DESIGNATED FOR FOREIGN MINISTER, ERNESTO BARROS JARPA, A REPUTED ADVOCATE OF PAN-AMERICAN SOLIDARITY BOTH BY WORD AND DEED. BARROS SUCCEEDS JUAN ROSETTI, THE MINISTER WHO TEAMED UP WITH ARGENTINA'S RUIZ GUINAZU AT RIO DE JANEIRO TO PREVENT THE ADOPTION OF A MORE VIGOROUS PAN-AMERICAN STAND AGAINST THE AXIS.

THE PRESENCE HERE OF RUIZ GUINAZU ALSO WAS DEEMED SIGNIFICANT BECAUSE OTHER SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRIES DID NOT SEND THEIR FOREIGN MINISTERS OR SUCH LARGE DELEGATIONS FOR THE INAUGURATION CEREMONY.

RUIZ GUINAZU'S REMARKS TO THE CHILEAN CHAMBER FURTHER BORE OUT THE BELIEF OF MANY THAT THE ARGENTINE FOREIGN MINISTER WAS TRYING TO INFLUENCE CHILE TO STEER THE SAME FOREIGN POLICY ADOPTED BY ARGENTINA--"SUPPORT OF PAN-AMERICAN SOLIDARITY, BUT NO BREAK WITH THE AXIS."

THE ARGENTINE FOREIGN MINISTER TOLD THE CHILEAN DEPUTIES THAT BOTH CHILE AND ARGENTINA "HOPE TO KEEP THEMSELVES OUTSIDE ALL ARMED CONFLICT," CALLED FOR CONTINUED COOPERATION BETWEEN THE TWO COUNTRIES AS EXEMPLIFIED AT RIO DE JANEIRO, AND SAID BOTH NATIONS "HAVE MISSIONS IN SOUTH AMERICA...THE DESTINY OF ARGENTINA IS IN THE ATLANTIC, THAT OF CHILE IN THE PACIFIC."

"THE SIMILIARITY OF INTERNATIONAL POLICY CHILE AND ARGENTINA HAVE SHOWN AT THE RIO DE JANEIRO CONFERENCE," HE CONTINUED, "HAS AN ORIGIN OF RESPONSIBILITY WITH WHICH OUR TWO COUNTRIES JUDGE THEMSELVES ARBITRATORS OF THEIR OWN DESTINIES.

APR 2 1942

"A POLICY OF ALERT PEACE, WITHOUT FORGETTING INTERNATIONAL SOLIDARITY AND ESPECIALLY AMERICAN SOLIDARITY, OBLIGES US TO LOOK OUT FOR OUR RESPECTIVE NATIONAL INTERESTS.

"ARGENTINA AND CHILE, HAVING COMPLEMENTARY POLITICAL ECONOMIES, ALSO HAVE SIMILAR POLITICAL INTERESTS. BOTH HOPE TO KEEP THEMSELVES OUT OF ALL ARMED CONFLICT."

VICE-PRESIDENT JERMONIMO MENDEZ OF CHILE, WHO HEADED THE ADMINISTRATION WHILE AWAITING RIOS' FORMAL ASSUMPTION OF THE PREDIDENCY, TOLD THE CHAMBER:

"I AM PLEASED TO EMPHASIZE THAT THE GOVERNMENT MAINTAINED NEUTRALITY TOWARD THE ARMED CONFLICT," AND RECALLED THAT THE RIO DE JANEIRO ACCORDS WERE APPROVED BY CHILE ONLY SUBJECT TO CONGRESSIONAL RATIFICATION.

APR 2 1942

THESE ACCORDS MERELY RECOMMEND THE SEVERANCE OF AXIS RELATIONS, BUT ALL PAN-AMERICAN NATIONS, EXCEPT CHILE AND ARGENTINA, ALREADY HAVE CUT THOSE TIES WITH GERMANY, ITALY, AND JAPAN.

WHEN RIOS DEFEATED GEN. CARLOS IBANEZ DEL CAMPO FOR THE PRESIDENCY, HE DECLARED IT WAS "A TRIUMPH OF THE DEMOCRATIC IDEAL AND AN ANNIHILATION OF TOTALITARIAN FORCES." HIS FOLLOWERS, REPRESENTING LEFTISTS AND ALL ANTI-DICTATOR ELEMENTS, CAMPAIGNED WITH SLOGANS OF "DOWN WITH HITLER."

APR 2 1942

RIOS APPOINTED HIS CABINET TONIGHT. THE NEW MINISTERS AND THEIR PARTY AFFILIATIONS, ARE:

ERNESTO BARROS, LIBERAL, FOREIGN RELATIONS; RAUL MORALES, RADICAL, INTERIOR; BENJAMIN MATTE, LIBERAL, FINANCE; ALFREDO DUHALDE RADICAL, DEFENSE; OSCAR BUSTOS, RADICAL, EDUCATION; REMIGIO MEDINA,

RADICAL, AGRICULTURE; EDUARDO ESCUDERO, SOCIALIST, HEALTH; PEDRO ALVAREZ, RADICAL, COMMERCE; LEONIDAS LEYTON, DEMOCRATIC, LABOR; JERONIMO ORTUZAR, DEMOCRATIC, JUSTICE; PEDRO POBLETE, SOCIALIST, LAND COLONIZATION; OSCAR SCHNKAKE, SOCIALIST, DEVELOPMENT.

MONTREAL, APRIL 1-(AP)-FREE FRENCH HEADQUARTERS HERE RECEIVED A CABLE TODAY SAYING THAT VICE ADMIRAL EMILE MUSELIER, NAVAL COMMANDER OF GEN.CHARLES DEGAULLE'S FORCES, HAS RESIGNED FROM THE FRENCH NATIONAL COMMITTEE IN LONDON. APR 2 1942

THE CABLE SAID ADMIRAL MUSELIER HAD RESIGNED "AT HIS OWN REQUEST AND HAD BEEN REPLACED BY ANOTHER ADMIRAL."

THE CABLE DID NOT SAY WHERE ADMIRAL MUSELIER IS OR WHAT HIS PLANS FOR THE FUTURE MIGHT BE.

ADMIRAL MUSELIER PERSONALLY COMMANDED THE NAVAL FORCE WHICH LAST DECEMBER TOOK CONTROL OF THE ISLANDS OF ST.PIERRE AND MIQUELON, OFF THE NEWFOUNDLAND COAST, IN THE NAME OF FREE FRANCE.

HE HAS COMMANDED FREE FRENCH NAVAL FORCES SINCE JULY, 1940, AND WAS APPOINTED A MEMBER OF THE FRENCH NATIONAL COMMITTEE IN LONDON IN SEPTEMBER, 1941.

THE CABLE TELLING OF MUSE... S ... SIGNATION WAS SIGNED BY DE GAULLE (CORRECT) HIMSELF AND SENT TO WASHINGTON, WHENCE IT WAS TRANSMITTED TO MONTREAL. IT READ:

"YOU MAY NATURALLY DISMISS AS RIDICULOUS STATEMENTS WHICH CERTAIN PERSONS ARE TRYING TO SPREAD IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA ON THE SUBJECT OF THE RESIGNATION OF ADMIRAL MUSELIER. THE FACT IS THAT THE LATTER LEFT THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE AT HIS OWN REQUEST AND HAS BEEN REPLACED ON IT BY ANOTHER ADMIRAL. ALL THE POLITICAL RUMORS AND OTHER REPORTS ABOUT THIS MATTER ARE NOTHING BUT ABSURD FANTASIES. FREE FRANCE AND THE FREE FRENCH FORCES ARE MORE UNITED AND MORE RESOLUTE THAN THEY HAVE EVER BEEN."

WASHINGTON, APRIL 1-(AP)-SIR GERALD CAMPBELL, BRITISH MINISTER, GAVE IMPLIED CONFIRMATION TONIGHT TO RECENT REPORTS THAT BRITISH PLANES HAVE BEEN SENT TO CUBA TO AID IN COMBATTING AXIS SUBMARINES. APR 2 1942

DETAILING BRITISH ASSISTANCE TO THE UNITED STATES IN THE WAR, HE SAID IN A SPEECH PREPARED FOR THE MUTUAL BROADCASTING SYSTEM:

"WE REPAIR U.S.SHIPS IN OUR PORTS, WE HAVE LATELY SUPPLIED THE EQUIPMENT FOR THE LARGEST GUN FACTORY IN THE UNITED STATES, FREE OF CHARGE. WE HAVE SENT YOU MACHINE TOOLS, SOME NEW GUNS OF A SPECIAL KIND, AMMUNITION AND SUCH TREASURED POSSESSIONS AS MANY ROLLS-ROYCE AERO ENGINES.

"THE OTHER DAY YOU READ OF BRITISH FIGHTER PLANES BEING SENT TO CUBA TO HELP YOU IN YOUR FIGHT AGAINST THE U-BOATS WHICH ARE TAKING A TOLL OF U.S. AND ALLIED SHIPS IN THE CARIBBEAN." APR 2 1942

HE DID NOT AMPLIFY THE REFERENCE BUT WENT ON TO SAY THAT "THERE ARE OTHER WAYS IN WHICH WE ARE LENDING OUR AID, BUT I MUSTN'T TELL THEM TO YOU AS THEY ARE SECRETS THAT THE ENEMY WOULD LIKE TO KNOW EVEN MORE THAN YOU WOULD."

HIS ADDRESS WAS AN APPEAL TO AMERICANS NOT TO "FALL INTO THE TRAP" SET BY NAZI PROPAGANDA TO THE EFFECT THAT "BRITAIN TAKES MUCH FROM YOU BUT GIVES LITTLE IN RETURN."

WASHINGTON, APRIL 1-(AP)-THE NAVY DEPARTMENT ANNOUNCED TONIGHT THAT A MEDIUM SIZED U.S. MERCHANT VESSEL HAD BEEN TORPEDOED OFF THE ATLANTIC COAST. (CONFIDENTIAL NOTE TO PRESS AND RADIO, NOT FOR PUBLICATION: THE SHIP WAS THE CITY OF NEW YORK; FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT LT.COMMANDER WILSON STARBUCK, PUBLIC RELATIONS OFFICER, FIFTH NAVAL DISTRICT, NORFOLK, VA. NO ADDITIONAL DETAILS WILL BE AVAILABLE AT THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.) APR 2 1942

WASHINGTON, APRIL 1-(AP)-ANY EUROPEAN COUNTRY NOT ALREADY BATTLING AGAINST AXIS INVADERS IS QUITE JUSTIFIED IN WORRYING ABOUT WHAT MAY HAPPEN IN THE NEXT FEW WEEKS, ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE SUMNER WELLES TOLD A PRESS CONFERENCE TODAY. APR 2 1942

HE WAS ASKED ABOUT REPORTS OF GROWING NERVOUSNESS IN LISBON AND STATEMENTS BY TRAVELLERS RETURNING FROM THERE THAT THE PORTUGUESE PEOPLE FEAR THAT AN INVASION OF THEIR COUNTRY IS ON HITLER'S SPRING CALENDAR.

WELLES SAID HE HAD NO INFORMATION TO IMPART ON NEW DEVELOPMENTS IN PORTUGAL, AND THEN MADE HIS OBSERVATION ABOUT JUSTIFIED WORRYING.

NEW YORK, APRIL 1-(AP)-THE SINKING OF A JAPANESE MUNITIONS SHIP STEAMING TOWARD AUSTRALIA WAS DESCRIBED FROM PEARL HARBOR ON THE CBS NETWORK TONIGHT BY LIEUT. COMMANDER WILLIS A. LENT IN THE FIRST RADIO INTERVIEW OF A U.S. SUBMARINE COMMANDER TO BE BROADCAST DURING THE PRESENT WAR.

COMMANDER LENT HAS JUST RETURNED TO HAWAII FROM JAPAN'S "BACK YARD," WHERE HE SAID HIS CREW HAD "CHALKED UP A FEW NICE HITS." THE MUNITIONS FREIGHTER WAS DESCRIBED AS A "HOME RUN."

"WE FIRED AT HIM FROM CLOSE RANGE," THE OFFICER SAID. "OUR TORPEDOES LASHED HIM AMIDSHIPS. HE STOPPED DEAD IN HIS TRACKS."

"HOW DID HE LOOK SINKING? THE COMMANDER WAS ASKED.

"I'D RATHER TELL YOU HOW HE SOUNDED," WAS THE REPLY. "HE SOUNDED LIKE 500 FOURTH OF JULYS ALL HAPPENING AT ONCE."

IT WAS EXCITING "FOR THE MOMENT," COMMANDER LENT SAID.

"OUR CREW CHEERED A LITTLE," HE SAID, "WITHOUT TURNING FROM THEIR STATIONS. THEN WE SIGHTED FOR SOMETHING ELSE TO SINK."

"JUST LIKE THAT, HUH?" ASKED THE INTERVIEWER. APR 2 1942

"JUST ABOUT," CAME THE REPLY.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 1-(AP)-MARINES AT PEARL HARBOR WERE COMMENDED FOR "PROMPT, ORDERLY AND EFFICIENT ACTION" DURING THE JAPANESE ATTACK OF DEC. 7 IN A LETTER FROM REAR ADMIRAL C.C.BLOCH, COMMANDER OF THE HAWAIIAN SEA FRONTIER, TO COL.G.D.JACKSON, JR., MARINE COMMANDER, MADE PUBLIC TODAY. APR 2 1942

"FLYING TIGERS"
WANT THEIR ICE CREAM (350)

APR 2 1942

BY H.R. STIMSON

(ADVANCE) BOMBAY, APIL 1-(WIDE WORLD)-THE MOST POPULAR MAN IN THE AMERICAN VOLUNTEER GROUP IS IN INDIA SHOPPING FOR ICE CREAM FREEZERS.

THAT GIVES YOU AN IDEA OF HOW FOND MAJOR GENERAL HUANG JEN LIN, IN CHARGE OF FEEDING THE GROUP OF FLIERS STATIONED AT KUNMING UNDER GENERALISSIMO CHIANG KAI SHEK'S COMMAND, IS OF THE BOYS.

HUANG, WHO IS 6 FEET 3 INCHES AND WEIGHS 250 POUNDS, DESCRIBES HIMSELF AS A "RESTAURANT MAN." HIS JOB IS TO PROVIDE TYPICALLY AMERICAN MEALS TO THE FLIERS IN SOUTH CHINA.

"THE BOYS SAY THEY HAVE NEVER BEEN FED BETTER," HE SAID. "THEIR ONLY COMPLAINT IS THAT THEY HAVE NO ICE CREAM. BUT I'M HOPING TO BUY ICE CREAM FREEZERS HERE.

BECAUSE THINGS AMERICANS LIKE ARE SHORT IN CHINA, HUANG HAD A LONG SHOPPING LIST, CARRYING SUCH ITEMS AS THE BEST BRAND OF AMERICAN COFFEE, SWEET CORN, CHEWING GUM, WHISKY, AMERICAN MAGAZINES AND SWING RECORDS.

APR 2 1942

AS DIRECTOR GENERAL OF CHINA'S WAR AREAS SERVICE CORPS, HUANG ALSO TAKES PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE AVG HOSTEL AT KUNMING. HIS CONTACTS WITH THE FLIERS HAVE MADE HIM AN ADEPT IN AMERICAN SLANG.

"THEY'RE A SWELL BUNCH," HE SAID. "THE NICEST GUYS I'VE EVER HAD DALINGS WITH. I'M READY TO BREAK MY NECK TO SEE THAT THEY'RE OK."

HUANG SUPERVISES THE AVG'S DAILY MENU: BREAKFAST--THREE EGGS, BACON, HOT CAKES, UNLIMITED BUTTER, JAM, MARMALADE AND COFFEE; LUNCH--SOUP, A MEAT COURSE, FOUR VEGETABLES AND DESSERT, TEA--CAKES, SANDWICHES AND TEA, AND DINNER--THE SAME NUMBER OF COURSES AS LUNCH PLUS A SALAD.

FOR ALL THIS THE AVIATORS PAY ONE ~~ONE~~ AMERICAN DOLLAR DAILY.

HUANG HAS ARRANGED WITH A CLUB OF CHINESE STUDENTS WHO STUDIED IN THE UNITED STATES TO ENTERTAIN THE FLIERS IN THEIR HOMES. THREE DAYS A WEEK HE HOLDS COURSES IN CHINESE AND ON TUESDAYS THE FLIERS ATTENDED A "KNOW CHINA CLUB" WHERE THEY LISTEN TO LECTURES ON CHINESE ART, MUSIC AND COINS.

HE ALSO FORMED THE "BURMA ROAD CLUB" FOR THOSE WHO TRAVELED AT LEAST 125 MILES ALONG THE FAMOUS HIGHWAY. NOW, HE SAID, HE IS TRYING TO ARRANGE WEEKLY DANCES BUT HE FINDS PARTNERS SCARCE AND THOSE WHO ARE JITTERBUGS EVEN SCARCER.

APR 2 1942

THE GROUP HAS A RESIDENT CHAPLAIN AND HUANG HAS ALSO ARRANGED FOR CHINESE PASTORS TO HELP HIM.

HIS GREATEST TRIUMPH, HOWEVER, IS THE SUNDAY BASEBALL GAME BETWEEN THE AVG AND THE CHINESE.

"I WAS TICKELED TO DEATH," HE RECALLED, "WHEN A CHINESE BOY BORN IN HONOLULU HIT THE FIRST HOME RUN IN THIS SERIES."

~~THE AVG, HUANG SAID, HAS BEEN SCORING AVERAGES OF 25 TO 1 AND SOMETIMES 30 TO 1.~~

THE AVG, HUANG SAID, HAS BEEN SCORING AVERAGES OF 25 TO 1 AND SOMETIMES 30 TO 1 AGAINST JAPANESE AIRMEN.

Bataan Repels 2 Heavy Attacks; Japanese Land Near India Border; Cripps Gets India Counter-Offer

Invaders In Fierce Assault

Pierce American Line But Are Hurled Back By Savage Counter-attack

NUMBER OF JAP UNITS TRAPPED

Corregidor Gunners Knock Down Three More Heavy Bombers.

APR 3 1942

WASHINGTON, April 2. (AP)—A savage onslaught by Japanese assault troops succeeded today in penetrating the defense line on Bataan Peninsula before the invaders were halted by a fierce American-Filipino counter-attack.

The War Department reported reassuringly, however, that the line was restored, and a "considerable number" of enemy units trapped. These were being mopped up late in the day, Lieutenant General Jonathan M. Wainwright advised.

2d Attack in 24 Hours

Meantime, the anti-aircraft gunners of Corregidor fortress off the southern end of Bataan destroyed three Japanese heavy bombers and a fourth bomber blew up in mid-air.

The attack which penetrated the defenders' main line was the second launched in 24 hours, a late day communique said. The first, made near the center, was readily mastered by heavy artillery fire and counter-attacks which regained outposts that had been abandoned to the foe.

The second, launched about ten a. m., was directed against the left center of General Wainwright's line. Supported by a heavy concentration of artillery fire, the Japanese assault troops advanced dangerously, the war department made clear, before the spearhead of the assault was smashed by a counter-attack which trapped the advance forces.

"Our main line of resistance has been restored and the enemy advance halted," the communique reported, adding that while Japanese losses were heavy, the defenders' casualties were "surprisingly small."

The onslaughts were the second and third to be made in rapid succession by Lieutenant General Tomoyuki Yamashita's reinforced invasion forces and indicated strongly to observers that the Japanese were intent on ending the Philippine stalemate of more than three months.

32 Jap Planes Downed

The four bombers raised the definite Japanese losses over the Manila Bay fortifications to 32. The air raids were accompanied by further artillery duels with Japanese batteries on the south shore of the bay.

Enemy air raids on beach defenses of Bataan put Gen. Wainwright's forces on the alert for an attempted Japanese flanking attack by sea.

The War Department reported that strong points along the western shore of the rugged peninsula were bombed as yesterday's frustrated major land attack dwindled to skirmishing, air raids, and artillery dueling.

Official observers said it appeared likely that Yamashita, the invaders' new commander, planned soon to supplement indecisive land and air attacks with a flanking naval foray from the China Sea such as figured in his conquest of Malaya.

The suspicion first arose when Japanese warships shelled American-Filipino positions along the west coast of Bataan yesterday for the first time in two months. Assaults from the sea were reported smashed on both January 25 and February 3, but only after desperate fighting by the forces then under command of General Douglas MacArthur.

A warship-supported attack on General Wainwright's left flank would be especially dangerous because of the curtain of concentrated artillery fire that could be laid down by the heavy guns of the naval craft. Beyond the range of the guns of Corregidor Fortress and free of air attack, the ships would risk only the possibility of hits by defending batteries of field guns.

The War Department said in a morning communique that the heavy Japanese land attack, carried out all Tuesday night and which won several outpost positions, was succeeded by aggressive patrol activities and a number of sharp skirmishes, but no further general action.

Meanwhile, Japanese artillery and dive bombers hammered at troops in forward areas and in various front and rear positions, including the beach defenses, in obvious preparation for another major assault.

Text of Communique

The text of the War Department's communique, number 173, based on reports received here up to 5 p. m., E.W.T.:

1. The Philippine theatre:

Two heavy attacks were made by the enemy last night and this morning on our lines in Bataan. The first assault was made near the center of our positions. The enemy advanced beyond the outpost line from which our troops had been withdrawn. Our artillery laid down a heavy fire on the advanced elements of the Japanese infantry, after which our forces counter-attacked and regained possession of the outpost.

The second attack was begun at about ten o'clock this morning. Enemy assault troops, supported by a heavy concentration of artillery fire, advanced against the left center of the line held by General Wainwright's American and Philippine troops. Savage fighting ensued and the enemy succeeded in penetrating our main line. In a fierce counter-attack, our forces closed the line, pocketing a considerable number of Japanese units. These hostile troops are now being mopped up.

Although the fighting is still in progress our main line of resistance has been restored and the enemy advance halted. Japanese losses are believed to have been heavy, while our own casualties were small. During today's fighting hostile planes attacked our front lines and rear areas in Bataan.

Several hostile air raids were made today on Corregidor, resulting in little damage. Our anti-aircraft artillery shot down three heavy Japanese bombers. A fourth enemy bomber, which apparently had not been hit, blew up in mid-air and fell into Manila Bay.

Artillery duels between the guns of our forts and those of Japanese batteries on the south shore of Manila Bay were frequent during the day.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

Enemy Makes Claims

TOKYO, April 2 (From Japanese broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press in New York)—Japanese Imperial Headquarters declared today that anti-aircraft batteries, an airfield, barracks and other military establishments on Corregidor, the United States' fortress isle in Manila Bay, had been damaged beyond repair by repeated Japanese naval air attacks between March 24 and 31.

CORREGIDOR ADDS 12 PLANES IN WEEK TO GUNNERS' TOLL

APR 3 1942

Only Confirmed Losses of Enemy Listed on Fort's Conservative Scoreboard.

BY DEAN SCHEDLER

CORREGIDOR, P. I., March 31—(Delayed)—(AP) Corregidor's accurate anti-aircraft guns shot down 12 Japanese planes in the last week, making a total of 66 bagged by the island-fortress's guns since the start of the war.

The figures are taken from the scoreboard which lists only confirmed losses inflicted on the enemy.

(A War department communique today, April 2 listed four more bombers shot down over Manila Bay fortifications but placed the definite number of Japanese losses at 32).

Must See Plane Crash

The 16th coast artillery anti-aircraft units are over-careful in crediting the batteries with hits and with recording planes actually downed. Planes are marked as down only after this has been confirmed by observation. Many times bursts of anti-aircraft fire amid tight formations of enemy planes are seen to shake up the planes, causing some to veer from their course, trailing smoke as far as they can be seen. But unless such a plane is seen actually to come down, it is marked up as a "probable" loss to the enemy.

The motto of the hard-hitting 16th, commended by the veteran Col. Theodore M. Chase, of Washington, D. C., is "Coelis imperamus," which translated literally means: "We rule the heavens."

During the past week, and since the start of the war, they have demonstrated they can dish it out to the enemy, as well as take it.

120 Air Attacks

According to Major T. K. McNair, of Red Bank, N. J., Corregidor has undergone more than 120 actual air raids since Dec. 29, with the longest raid, of more than six hours duration, this last week.

Japanese planes, operating from a nearby Luzon island base, place Correg[illegible] in a state of almost continuous alarm, although each day the fliers have evidenced a growing respect for the anti-aircraft guns. Flights as a result have diminished in size from 27 plane formations to sorties by one and two planes at a time.

As the size of the flights diminished, the planes also climbed higher, forcing the anti-aircraft units to their utmost to pick the bomb-laden tiny specks out of the sky.

Colonel Chase's men practiced long and hard with their guns before the war started, realizing the value of anti-aircraft units as proved by the war in Europe. Since the bombing of Manila bay harbor defenses started, all soldiers have developed a great respect for their work. The hard pounding given Corregidor the last week has provided the fullest test men and material can face in fighting an enemy on uneven terms and matching air power with ground guns.

Use Searchlights at Night

Searchlights aid the gunners at night in keeping Japanese bombs pushed wide of the target areas.

One battery, under the command of Capt. C. R. Ames, Rockaway Beach, N. Y., has been dishing it out to the enemy while ducking not only bombs but also artillery shells from the Cavite shore across the bay.

Last evening I was talking to Ames and found his men all bronzed and in high spirits. A few minutes before they had assisted in some of the best shooting yet.

Two Bombers Sighted

Two bombers were flying over Corregidor at dusk. The bombers crossed flying slightly lower than previously, Ames' men and the men of the other batteries trained their guns to make each shot count.

The gun crew under Sgt. E. J. Swanson, of Lewistown, Mont., was given the order to fire. Four rapid shots from each battery roared into the sky. The first bomber was hit near one of its motors. The wing broke off, sending the plane plunging into the bay in a cloud of smoke. The action required only a few moments of intense fire. All the gun crews had been undergoing the same thing all week, in addition to taking a shelling themselves.

The score for this particular raid was "two up, two down, all clear."

It was a tonic not only to the men in the 16th's batteries, but permeated the entire body of troops on Corregidor.

The soldiers and marines let out a mighty football cheer as the two planes were shot down. Everyone is retelling the story, with many eyewitnesses declaring it was "the greatest thrill yet. It makes one able to take those bombs."

Although the two planes were not the only ones shot down for the week, the boys seemed to let out their pent-up anger in those few rounds.

U. S. Still Controls Big Philippine Area

Occupants Are Unwavering in Their Loyalty To Americans—Reverential Feeling Is Held for MacArthur.

APR 3 1942

By CLARK LEE

UNITED STATES ARMY HEADQUARTERS IN AUSTRALIA, April 2. (AP)—By far the greatest part of the Philippines, both in territory and in population, still are free of the Japanese invader and still are under the American flag.

Unwavering Loyalty

The people are unwavering in their loyalty to the United States, although considerably puzzled over the Allies' continued withdrawals and their failure to take the initiative against Japan.

En route to Australia, where I arrived three days ago, I travelled hundreds of miles over Philippine waters and by car over the islands without seeing a single Japanese plane, warship or soldier.

It is well to recall that there are 7,000 islands and reefs in the archipelago, and that so far the enemy has landed on only five.

The Japanese control the principal cities and highways in central and northern Luzon and a few ports in southeastern Luzon. However, the main prize, Manila Bay, still is beyond their reach.

Recently the Japanese occupied five points on northern Mindoro. They maintained a small force on the island of Masbate; occupy Davao and Zamboanga, at the eastern and western extremities of Mindanao, and also hold the island of Jolo.

The Japanese do not control the inner Philippine islands or the inland waters. Occasionally an enemy warship raids shipping and ports in the so-called "inland sea." But the Japanese apparently are afraid to keep a destroyer or a light cruiser on patrol there.

Torpedoboats Effective

From what I have seen of the American torpedoboats in action, I believe a few squadrons of those hard-hitting, speedy vessels in which Gen. Douglas MacArthur began his trip to Australia could keep the islands' inner shipping lanes entirely clear of the enemy.

There are dozens of airfields and scores of ports in the inner Philippines from which American planes and ships could operate. There are American and Filipino fighting forces on almost every island.

The war goes on not only on Bataan but on Mindanao, where the Moros, under U. S. officers, frequently attack the Japanese.

The Japanese are reported to have put in uniform several thousand young Japanese nationals who lived at Davao before the war. Yet despite their overwhelming numerical superiority, the invaders are said to fear the Moros so much that every night hundreds of the Japanese return to their ships to sleep.

The Moros turned back one Japanese drive south of Davao in January.

On other islands we found American and Filipino forces which were ready to fight despite their shortage of equipment, if the Japanese should come. Our greatest difficulty in travelling through the Philippines was in answering questions about help from the United States. Everybody, everywhere asked the same questions.

Tokyo Bombing Seen

To inquiries as to when Tokyo would be bombed, our customary reply was, "the bombing will start soon, probably the middle of this month (March)."

Then someone would proffer the polite objection that "we believe it would be difficult for us to bomb Tokyo before April, Sir, as the air fields in Alaska still are covered with snow and objectives in Japan probably would be hidden by clouds."

Some bright youngster usually would add:

"We believe arrangements can be made for the United States to use the Russia air fields at Vladivostok and on the Kamchatka peninsula, inasmuch as the Russians and Americans are fighting the same war, although on different fronts, and the Russians need American supplies while Americans need Siberian bases."

The people frequently expressed their respect for President Roosevelt as a forceful leader. Their feeling for General MacArthur can be described only as reverential.

They'd say:

"We believe, sir, that the MacArthur line is impregnable. We are convinced that the man has not yet been born who can defeat General MacArthur."

They pronounced it Mac-Ar-tour, with the accent on the last syllable.

A Filipino who is doing one of the most dangerous jobs in the islands at present told me:

General MacArthur Praised

"When the war is over, win or lose, I am going to build a monument to General MacArthur in my garden with my own hands. If I die my son will do it.

"There will be similar monuments all over the Philippines. General MacArthur will stand side by side with our martyred national hero, Jose Rizal."

Rizal, Filipino patriot and writer, organized the "Liga Filipina" to secure the political liberty of his countrymen from Spain. Arrested by Spanish authorities at Barcelona when he was on his way to Cuba for volunteer relief work among the yellow-fever victims, he was brought back to Manila, where he was tried and shot in December, 1896. The day of his execution ever since has been a national holiday.

When our ship neared one Philippine port, the townspeople took to the hills fearing a Japanese invasion, but they came back when they saw the Filipino and American flags.

Once ashore, officers of the Philippine constabulary soon came up to shake hands. Then a few men gathered around, squatting on their haunches. They were followed by small boys, then girls formed a larger circle around us, while the womenfolk remained a few hundred yards away.

We passed out cigarettes, and they sent boys up into the coconut trees to fetch down young coconuts. These represented an offer of hospitality. From then on, conversation followed easily.

The pattern of life in these native villages did not change much between the days of Magellan and the Spanish-American War, but they were modified greatly during the American occupation.

We have given them our language, our style of apparel (minus the shoes), the advantage of our medical knowledge, a belief in our system of government, and an economy linked to ours through the production of copra, sugar, hemp, etc. their signs are in English and each barrio has a school where English is taught.

Sergeant Edits Fortress' 2-Page Daily Between Enemy Air Attacks

APR 3 1942

CORREGIDOR, P. I., March 31 (Delayed) (AP).—This Japanese-besieged fortress has a newspaper. Its editor is Sergeant Barnard Hopkins, of Alpena, W. Va. Attached to an anti-aircraft battery, the editor is diverted from his work frequently by Japanese bombers—but he manages to get out the paper.

Picking up radio and local news, Sergeant Hopkins types out a two-page daily sheet. The masthead carries the paper's policy, which is changeable daily.

One of the best features is the daily radio dispatch picked up from Tokio. It is studded with the sergeant's best sarcasm.

Sea Assault On Moresby Is Predicted

APR 3 1942

Japs Seen Changing Tactics Because of Loss of Air Superiority.

MELBOURNE, April 2 (AP)—The Japanese bombed the northern port of Darwin today for the eleventh time, but their loss of air superiority in this theatre of war led to predictions that their next move might be a sea-borne attack on Port Moresby, key city of New Guinea.

A brief communique from the office of Prime Minister John Curtin said that seven bombers with fighter escorts conducted the Darwin raid but that no damage or casualties were reported and that the action was the only one reported in the entire area of the far southwest Pacific.

The probability that the Japanese will switch to a sea thrust at Port Moresby, less than 300 miles from the Australian mainland, was raised by the Sydney Sun. It said that with heavy rains halting the Japanese drive overland from the north New Guinea cost and with the American and Australian forces having won at least temporary air superiority, a resort to naval action was "suggested by recent movements of enemy ships, which are constantly being attacked at Lae and Salamaua by the Allied air forces."

Japs Getting More Planes

The paper warned, however, that the Japanese were obtaining aerial reinforcements "which must be described as considerable," and that "the air superiority we have gained may not be permanent and at most will dislocate the Japanese plans only temporarily."

The same paper reported eight Japanese divisions totalling 120,000 to 150,000 men and including parachutists were believed to be concentrated in Java and Singapore in readiness for the next Japanese move.

The increasing American aid to Australia was regarded as likely to cause the Japanese to hasten their attack plans.

96 Jap Planes Smashed

(A London broadcast quoting Sydney messages said the American and Australian fliers had destroyed or crippled 96 Japanese planes since March 10 at a cost of only 12 of their own planes, of which five crews were saved

(The Australian radio reported from Darwin that the red ball was being removed from the insignia of U. S. planes to avoid any possible confusion with the red emblem of Japan. This would leave the U. S. planes with a white star on a blue field.)

That the Australians and Americans are making use of the time for big-scale preparations also was indicated by Air Minister Arthur S. Drakeford.

He said Americans were helping to switch Royal Australian Air Force pilots from trainer planes to fast combat craft in a tremendous speed-up of the development of new RAAF fliers.

Heretofore, the Australians who had completed trainer flights had to finish their instruction abroad or in actual operations in Australia.

A number of RAAF stations, assembly plants and other facilities have been handed over to the American air forces, Drakeford said, and millions of pounds are being allocated to provide new bases.

In ground forces, too, Australia was rapidly keying herself up to the peak of war preparation. A broad reorganization of the army command was virtually completed with the appointment of Lieut. Gen. Henry Gordon Bennett as a corps commander and the assignment of other high officers to action posts.

Announcements were expected soon on provisions for more complete fusion of the American, Australian, Dutch and any other Allied forces under the supreme command of General Douglas MacArthur.

A national security order issued today gave the Australian states power to call on men from 18 to 60 for 48 hours of compulsory civil defense duties every four weeks.

Allies' Planes Bomb Ships Constantly

APR 3 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Melbourne, Australia, April 2—The Japanese, halted in their attempted overland drive in New Guinea by torrential rains and robbed temporarily of air superiority by the rising Allied strength, soon may launch a sea-borne attack on Port Moresby, it was predicted today.

The likelihood of such a move against the key position on New Guinea's south coast, which lies within 300 miles of Australia, is "suggested by recent movements of enemy ships, which are constantly being attacked at Lae and Salamaua by the Allied air forces," said the Sydney Sun.

Jap Air Force Growing

At the same time, the newspaper reported, the Japanese are obtaining "aerial reinforcements which must be described as 'considerable.'" Because of this, the Sun declared, "the air supremacy we have gained may not be permanent and at most will dislocate the Japanese plans only temporarily."

The Japanese kept up their air attacks, giving Darwin its eleventh raid of the war this afternoon.

A brief communique on this, the only action reported from the Anzac war zone during the day, said the raid was carried out by seven bombers, escorted by fighters, but that there was no damage or casualties.

(The Japanese made their first night raid on Darwin last night, the All-India radio reported today a London dispatch said. No details were given.)

Insignia Being Changed

(The BBC, quoting a message from Sydney, reported that United States and Australian planes have "destroyed or crippled ninety-six Japanese planes with a loss of twelve of their own" since March 10, and added that the crews of five of the Allied aircraft were saved. The Australian radio broadcast a report from Darwin that the red circle in the insignia of United States planes is being changed to white to avoid any possible confusion with the solid red emblem of Japan.

(Both broadcasts were heard in New York by CBS.)

Reorganization of the Australian army, rapidly being keyed to a peak war pitch, was virtually completed, meanwhile, with the appointment of Lieutenant General Henry Gordon Bennett as a corps commander and the assignment of various other high officers to important posts.

The appointment of Gen. Bennett, who commanded the Australian imperial force in Malaya and escaped after the surrender of Singapore, was announced by Army Minister Francis Forde.

Gen. Bennett's chief of staff will be Brig.-Gen. W. M. Anderson, who formerly was attached to an armored division and served in the Middle East last year.

United States Spends Millions.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur was expected to disclose soon how United States higher commands would be dovetailed with Anzac commands.

Millions of pounds already have been allocated to provide United States forces in Australia with air bases, living quarters and some forms of equipment, Air Minister Arthur S. Drakeford disclosed, and more millions will follow.

A number of former royal Australian Air Force stations, aircraft assembly factories and other facilities also have been turned over to the United States forces, he said.

Mr. Drakeford also disclosed that Americans were taking part in training R. A. A. F. pilots in combat machines. This aspect of the co-operation, he said, is of tremendous value to Australia and has assisted in speeding up the final stages of the empire training system.

An added value, he said, was that members of the Australian and American forces rapidly were becoming buddies and producing a well-oiled fighting machine.

The halting, at least temporarily, of the Japanese is proof, Mr. Drakeford said, that Australian and American co-operation had a truly iron ring about it.

The power to call upon men between the age of 18 and 60 years old for compulsory civil defense duties was delegated to the States today by Prime Minister John Curtin in a national security order.

Those affected may be required to perform a maximum of forty-eight hours of air raid precautions service in any period of four weeks.

Jap Troops Reported Massed In Indies Area for New Drive

Large Numbers of Parachutists Believed to Be Included in Force Being Assembled at Singapore and in Java

APR 3 1942

Sydney, April 2 (A. P.).—The Sydney Sun's correspondent at United Nations Headquarters reported today that eight fully equipped Japanese divisions, between 120,000 and 150,000 men, now are believed massed in Java and at Singapore awaiting the starting signal of Japan's next major offensive.

These forces are said to include large numbers of parachute troops.

The Sun correspondent said that the growing flow of United States aid to Australia was considered likely to speed Japan's next move, implying it would be against Australia.

Clark Lee Describes Trip To Australia

By Clark Lee

Clark Lee, 35-year-old Associated Press war correspondent who covered the fall of Manila and for more than two months reported the defense of Bataan, arrived in Australia three days ago from the Philippines. Lee left Bataan sometime before Gen. Douglas MacArthur made his own epic trip to Australia to take over the Allied supreme command on that continent. He landed in Australia just two weeks after MacArthur's arrival.

In the following dispatch, he sheds fresh light on the conditions under which MacArthur, his wife and young son, and many of his staff, made their journey through waters supposedly controlled by the Japanese.

General MacArthur's Headquarters in Australia, April 2—For military reasons the story of our trip from Bataan Peninsula to Australia has been delayed and even now the details cannot be published, but as a matter of fact the journey was rather uneventful and the highlight was congratulating General MacArthur today and hearing the story of his trip from members of his staff.

We knew when some days ago we heard by radio of his arrival in Australia that he must have left Bataan with great reluctance and only because he believed that by doing so he could better serve the Philippines and the whole Allied cause.

Bulkeley Called In

When it was finally decided that he would have to leave, MacArthur called in Lieut. John D. Bulkeley, motor torpedo-boat commander, and asked if the lieutenant could take him through.

Bulkeley looked squarely at MacArthur with his cold green eyes and replied:

"On the nose, sir."

APR 3 1942

Bulkeley thought, so the general discovered later, that the assignment was to run through the Japanese lines all the way to Australia in his tiny but tough boat.

Jap Ships Dared

The general made clear that their destination was an island in the Philippines and asked Bulkeley if he could make it through waters in which the Japanese were attacking shipping.

"Can do, sir," Bulkeley answered—and it is history that he did, although the journey was difficult.

MacArthur is delighted with the co-operation he has received in Australia and is as confident as ever that the Japanese can be stopped and crushed.

Attacks Successful

Just before we left the Philippines he staged several attacks which pushed the Japanese back a considerable distance on Bataan.

These blows were combined with an attack on Japanese ships in Subic Bay by MacArthur's midget but ingenious air force.

His aviators rigged a bombing device onto their planes enabling them to dive at targets with fairly heavy explosive loads. The caught ten ships in Subic Bay and sank five of them, including an 18,000-ton transport on which it was estimated that 6,000 Japanese soldiers were killed. (The War Department has already announced these sinkings.)

The Japanese were heard at that time to complain bitterly about "MacArthur's unfairness in sending planes to bomb and machine gun soldiers while innocently swimming in Subic Bay and not carrying weapons."

My trip was tame compared with MacArthur's.

Melville Jacoby, correspondent for Time and Life magazines, and his wife and I left Bataan for reasons which still cannot be disclosed except to say that the journey definitely was not an escape from the war we had seen since its first day and in which we had developed the sincerest admiration for MacArthur and his Filipino and American soldiers, whose gallant cause we believe is still not lost.

We hope to return to see them reconquer the Philippines.

In making our trip to a certain point in northern Australia, we had several lucky breaks.

Once our vessel played hide and seek with a Japanese destroyer which had been shelling ports and shipping in inner Philippine waters.

We sighted planes three times but nothing happened.

Once we sighted a convoy of eight ships, probably Japanese, but we ducked into a rainsquall and changed course. It was the only rainy day of the trip through the danger area.

APR 3 1942

Escapes Second Ship

The following day another ship sighted us and began a pursuit, but we proved the faster, fortunately, since we were unprotected against surface attacks.

That day we spent eight hours making a wide circle to avoid the converging point of a number of Japanese supply routes.

We passed numerous Japanese air and naval bases at pretty close range, but our luck held.

After leaving the danger area, the trip became monotonous. We passed the time playing cards with Lewis Carson, of San Francisco, who was a Shanghai business man, and Richard van Landingham, of Los Angeles, who was a Manila banker.

My only possessions were a portable typewriter, one pair of shorts, two shirts and a pair of tennis shoes.

On landing, Mrs. Jacoby made a beeline for a beauty shop, and then for a department store. She now is wearing dresses instead of slacks for the first time since leaving Manila on New Year's Eve, when all had to abandon everything except the clothes they were wearing.

Hopes of Holding Australia for Offensive Voiced by Connally After Hart Testifies

APR 3 1942

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, April 2—Senator Tom Connally of Texas said today that on the basis of information given the Foreign Relations Committee, of which he is chairman, by Vice Admiral Thomas C. Hart during the day he was encouraged to believe that the United Nations forces were sufficiently strong to hold Australia as a base for future offensive action against the Japanese.

Admiral Hart, appearing before the committee in a closed session, was said to have been questioned in detail about the disposition of forces in the Southwestern Pacific, where he turned over the command of the United Nations naval units to a Netherland admiral before the fall of Java.

"Apparently the military and naval situation in the Southwest Pacific is much more hopeful than some of us had thought," said Senator Connally. "From such information as is available, in my opinion, the United Nations have been able to get considerable supplies and aircraft to Australia.

"Australia has brought back many of her land troops and on the whole I believe that the United Nations will be able to hold there while offensive power is being built up."

Admiral Hart, reviewing operations in the whole Pacific war theatre, was said to have declined to estimate how long American and Filipino troops could hold out in the Philippines before reinforcements reached them.

Senator Connally said the steady reinforcing of Australia was encouraging.

Hurley Sworn as Envoy

AT UNITED NATIONS HEADQUARTERS, Australia, April 2 (AP)—General Douglas MacArthur's Headquarters announced today that Brig. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley had been sworn in as United States Minister to New Zealand after reverting to an inactive status in the United States Army. Mr. Hurley, a former Secretary of War in Washington, assumed the Ministership yesterday in Wellington, capital of New Zealand, after a period of active duty with the United States Army in the Southwest Pacific area.

LEND-LEASE AID IN MELBOURNE

Melbourne, April 2—(AP)—Alder G. Smith arrived today from Washington to join the U. S. lend-lease mission headed by W. S. Wasserman.

He noted Great Britain and Australia were the only two place outside the United States wher the lend-lease administration ha set up offices.

U. S. Troops to Get Testaments

AT UNITED NATIONS HEADQUARTERS, Australia, April 2 (AP)—With Easter just three days away, it was disclosed today that United States Army authorities were preparing to distribute to the American forces pocket-size Testaments containing a foreword by President Roosevelt.

Dutch Troops Still Fighting Japs in Indies

Isolated Forces Battling in Java, Borneo, Sumatra, Celebes.

APR 3 1942

WASHINGTON, April 2 (AP)—Netherlands Indies forces were reported here today to be still giving blows to the Japanese invaders, nearly four weeks after the loss of Java.

Authorized sources said isolated detachments were known to be fighting the foe in Java, Borneo, Sumatra and Celebes, and possibly other islands.

Netherlands flyers and planes which escaped the foe in Java in early March were said to be operating with American and Australian air forces, hammering at Japanese air bases in New Guinea and elsewhere near the northern perimeter of the continent.

Some ground forces likewise were believed to have been transferred from Java to reinforce Australia's defenders.

Netherlands naval units which escaped the disastrous battle of the Java Sea and other sea fighting were shifted to the Indian Ocean to serve under British naval command.

Severed communications make it impossible to assess the effectiveness of the resistance put up by relatively small Dutch forces in the principal Indies islands. Military authorities believe it is of the same general nature as the persistent raids carried out in the Philippines by forces operating in Mindanao and other islands separated from the main Bataan Peninsula fighting front on Luzon.

Jap Forces Landed 100 Miles From India

Fleet Puts Troops on West Burma Coast—Entire Right of Allied Burmese Line Menaced, Says Chinese Spokesman.

APR 3 1942

LONDON, April 2. (AP)—Japanese troops protected by cruisers and destroyers have landed at Akyab, the chief Western Burma port within 100 miles of the Indian frontier, and thus have raised a menace to the whole of the present right Allied Burmese line, a Chinese Army spokesman announced today in Chungking.

Lull In Burma Fighting

British and Chinese communiques indicated meantime that action afield in central Burma had fallen into a lull on both the right and left Allied anchors, the one about Prome on the Irrawaddy River and the other above Toungoo in the basin of the Sittang.

The report of the enemy's Akyab landing raised the gravest of prospects.

Between Akyab and the Irrawaddy Basin a mountain range intervenes, but a trail leads from the city across the mountains to Minbu, 100 miles north of Prome and only 20 miles below the center of the Burma oil fields at Yenangyaung.

A heavy enemy flanking movement over that trail, it was pointed out, might soon make indefensible the present British positions about Prome, aside from putting the oil fields in imminent danger.

The enemy naval forces reported to have effected the Akyab landings were presumed to have operated either from fallen Rangoon or from the recently seized Andaman Islands in the Bay of Bengal.

The Chinese spokesman said the enemy units comprised two heavy cruisers, three light cruisers, five destroyers, four transports and two supply ships.

Prome Front Unchanged

From the Prome front, the British Command reported no substantial change since yesterday and said there had been none other than patrol action.

Already outnumbered, the British forces—English and Scottish troops and some Indians—were faced with a rising threat by traitorous Burmese. Four thousand such mercenaries were officialy reported now to be in action in aid of the Japanese on the Prome front alone, 1,000 of them standing on the west bank of the Irrawaddy in a threat to the British right flank.

On the Chinese-held front above Toungoo, said a Chinese communique from New Delhi, quiet had fallen after the heavy and bloody fighting that preceding the establishment of the present Chinese positions around Nangyun, 12 miles above Toungoo.

These positions had been formed by the juncture of the Chinese Toungoo garrison of 8,000 to 10,000 with other Chinese forces to the north. The Toungoo garrison, said the Chungking Army spokesman, for a week was under the assault of 40,000 Japanese.

Japanese Advancing

Later a Chungking dispatch quoted a Chinese military spokesman as saying that the Japanese vanguard on the Toungoo front was advancing west of the railway and had reached a point to the southwest of Yedashe, which is six miles above Nangyun.

The Chinese were declared still in control of the railway between Yedashe and a point immediately north of Toungoo.

There was no confirmation of a report broadcast by the German-controlled Paris radio that the Japanese had gone up the Sittang to land at Yedashe.

Dispatches from Chungking which said Lieut. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, American commander of the fifth and sixth Chinese armies in Burma, had been placed under the authority of General H.R.L.G. Alexander, British commander in Burma, were declared officially by the War Office to be erroneous.

The War Office said that General Stilwell's command was "quite independent of General Alexander.

"Strategic control of Burma is under Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell," the War Office statement said. "General Stilwell is an Allied commander operating quite freely but within the ambit of strategical necessities. He does not come under Wavell for administration apart from the strategical part. Neither is he under General Alexander, but it quite independent."

WARSHIPS COVER INVASION

British Troops Guarding Oilfields Along Central Front Are Threatened on Flank.

London, April 2 (A. P.).—A Chinese spokesman in Chungking said today that Japanese troops, covered by a force of cruisers and destroyers, had landed at the chief western Burma port of Akyab, bringing the war within 100 miles of the Indian frontier and posing a new flanking threat to the main British lines guarding the central Burma oil fields.

There was no official confirmation of the statement in London. But British observers did not minimize the threat and predicted that any Japanese flanking attack from such a base soon would make the present British positions, based on the town of Prome, 180 miles southeast of Akyab, untenable.

At the same time, the Nazi-controlled Paris radio broadcast reports that powerful enemy forces sent up the Sittang River to land at Yedashe, some eighteen miles north of Toungoo, were threatening anew the Chinese lines centered on Nangyun, only twelve miles above Toungoo, along the Mandalay-Rangoon rail line.

Japs Raid North Burma.

Communiques by both the British and Chinese headquarters told of a raid on north Burma yesterday as the Japanese continued to press the advantage of air superiority. The British said that the raid was directed at an airdrome.

Chinese headquarters said that the Japanese hurled twenty-seven bombers and fifteen fighters at a north Burma town not previously attacked (perhaps Mandalay itself), then returned at dusk in a second assault. Some casualties were reported, but the Chinese said that the damage was negligible.

Oil Fields Are Japan's Goal.

Akyab, on the western coastal plain, is separated from the Irrawaddy River basin by the Arakan Yoma Mountain range, but observers pointed out that a trail leads from Akyab across the mountains to Minbu, on the Irrawaddy, 100 miles north of Prome and twenty miles below Yenangyaung, center of the Burmese oil fields, which are the chief goal of the Japanese drive.

The British and Indian troops holding Prome already are outnumbered by the Japanese and hostile Burmese forces. Akyab, which at the last census had a population of 38,094, lies 350 miles across the Bay of Bengal from Calcutta. It is one of the few serviceable ports between Japanese-held Rangoon, the former Burmese capital, and Chittagong, to the north.

Dispatches from Chungking which said that Lieut. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, American commander of the Fifth and Sixth Chinese Armies in Burma, had been placed under the authority of Gen. H. R. L. G. Alexander, British commander in Burma, were declared officially by the War Office to be erroneous. The War Office said that Gen. Stilwell's command was "quite independent of Gen. Alexander.

"Strategic control of Burma is under Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell," the War Office said. "Gen. Stilwell is an Allied commander operating quite freely, but within the ambit of strategical necessities. He does not come under Wavell for administration, apart from the strategical part. Neither is he under Gen. Alexander, but is quite independent."

Akyab is only 100 miles southeast of the India-Burma boundary and a landing there represents a direct threat to the rear of the British Imperial lines now guarding the central Burma oil fields. These lines are based on the Irrawaddy River town of Prome, which lies 180 miles southeast of Akyab.

APR 3 1942

No Chinese in Thailand.

The Chungking spokesman, citing Chinese Intelligence reports, said that a Japanese flotilla consisting of two heavy and three light cruisers and five destroyers escorting four transports and two supply ships was spotted at Akyab on March 27. The Chinese forces, which evacuated their positions in Toungoo two days ago, are making a firm stand on the outskirts of the city, he declared, though they are outnumbered by four to one, with one Chinese division of 10,000 men standing off two Japanese divisions totaling 40,000.

The spokesman declared emphatically that, contrary to widespread reports, of Chinese troops invading Thailand, not a single Chinese soldier has been on Thai soil so far. He said that there had been minor skirmishes near the Thai-Burmese border, where the Chinese beat off three attacks by combined Japanese-Thai detachments.

Hostile Burmese Active.

New Delhi, India, April 2 (A. P.).—A British communique on the battle of Burma reported today there had been no substantial change since yesterday on the Irrawaddy front, where the main British forces now are holding a line south of Prome.

It said that "a reconnoissance in force down the railway line (to Rangoon) destroyed an enemy patrol; otherwise there has been no contact with the enemy."

Hostile Burmese forces on that front now number more than 4,000, it added. More than 1,000 of this force were said to have been located yesterday on the west bank of the Irrawaddy River opposite Prome, in an infiltration threat to the British right flank.

Japanese scouting planes were active over the whole front yesterday, the communique said, and an airdrome in northern Burma was raided but no details had been received of damage or casualties.

Indian Leaders Hint Readiness To Compromise

APR 3 1942

Congress Party Rejects British Proposal But Leaves Door Ajar.

NEW DELHI, India, April 2—(AP)—With Japanese invaders reported barely 100 miles from the Bengal border, the pressing problem of India's fighting participation in the war appeared tonight to have been saved from a cold stalemate by indications of willingness to compromise on details of the independence issue.

The executive committee of the powerful All-India Congress party rejected, point by point, Britain's offer of post-war Dominion status in return for full war participation under British direction, but it was reported to have advanced its own counter-proposals which might keep the discussions going.

Cripps Delays Return Home

Sir Stafford Cripps, special envoy who brought Britain's offer to India, changed his mind about leaving for home next Monday. He declared, instead, that "I think I can possibly do something useful next week."

He had before him already the previous rejections of Britain's proposal by the Sikhs, warriors of the Punjab, and by the extremist Mahasabha group of Hindus.

Yet to be heard from formally, however, was the Moslem League, second largest of India's complex political and religious groups, whose working committee meets tomorrow at Allahabad.

The text of the Congress party's rejection and of its counter suggestions was not expected to be made public immediately.

It was intimated strongly, however, that the British War Cabinet might be asked to make some concession to the insistence of this and other strong Indian groups for an immediate voice in defense responsibility rather than acceptance of purely British leadership.

With the British Army in Burma the last obstacle between the Japanese and India, there were unconfirmed reports that Sir Archibald P. Wavell, commander in charge of India's defense, might participate in future discussions with the Congress Party leaders.

Wavell's decision whether he could command the defense forces if responsibility behind the Indian front were transferred to Indian hands might govern the War Cabinet's choice on whether to yield on that point.

Proposed Defense Formula

(The exchange telegraph agency in London said Indian moderate leaders had received tentative assurance that the formula for defense coordination advanced by the moderate Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru would be acceptable to Cripps. This formula was said to call for a minister of defense coordination with a small defense council including the commander in chief and presided over by a minister. The council would deal with civilian defense and internal security.)

The Congress Party's reply was understood to criticize particularly the British proposal to keep the direction of India's defense in British hands, and to question the option which Britain would give for certain provinces to remain outside the future India union.

The reply was said to have examined the British proposals in the light of past declarations by the party, especially in the resolution at the meeting last December at Bardoli.

That resolution expressed sympathy with "peoples who are subject to aggression and are fighting for their freedom" and said "only a free and independent India can be in a position to undertake the defense of the country on a national basis."

"The whole background of India is one of hostility and distrust of the British government," that resolution said. "Not even the most far-reaching promises can alter this background, nor can a subject India offer voluntary or willing help to arrogant imperialism which is indistinguishable from Fascism."

Editorials in the Indian press meanwhile, voiced resentment over what editors understood to be an unfavorable reaction in the American press to the reluctance of India's leaders to come to an agreement with the British. These editorials said India's complex problems are not easily understood from afar.

Working overtime on the Indian problem, Sir Stafford notified the Board of Ministers of Ceylon that he would not be able to deal with the Crown Colony's constitutional problems on his present visit to India. He said reforms there would be taken up after the war.

Counter-Proposal Indicated

But it was understood that the committee also was drafting counter-proposals to be submitted to Cripps if the British War Cabinet member so desires.

By postponing his departure for home in the midst of the evident stalemate over Britain's take-it-or-leave-it offer, Cripps seemed to have left the door ajar for negotiation on counter-proposals.

Before he did this and before it became known that the Congress party committee was drafting a counter-plan, virtually all hope for the success of the Cripps mission had vanished.

APR 3 1942

Reps. Azad And Nehru

The All-India radio said that Cripps received the Congress party's resolution of reply to the British proposal this afternoon when he was visited by Maulana Abdul Kalan Azad, party president, and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, past president.

The two Indian leaders stayed for an hour, and upon their departure Cripps told reporters, "I hope there will be many more meetings between us."

The party's reply, approved after five days of deliberation, was reported to be detailed in reasons for the rejection.

Raises Questions

It was understood to criticize the British proposal that direction of Indian defense remain entirely in British hands rather than Indian military men, and to question both the option which Britain would give certain provinces to remain outside the future Indian union and the representation of the Indian principalities in the future constitution-making body.

It was possible that the text of the resolution of rejection would not be published immediately. Thus, before it is brought into the open, Cripps could devote further efforts to narrowing the difficulties he referred to in the press conference in which he announced delay of his departure, first scheduled for Monday.

Considered Hopeful Sign

The congress party's decision not to turn down the Cripps offer without suggesting an alternative was considered a hopeful sign especially as Cripps had indicated there might be a chance of compromise on the defense issue.

Editorials in the nationalist Indian press expressed resentment over what the editors understood to be the tone of the American press. They have received word of unfavorable reaction to the reluctance of India's leaders to strike a bargain with the British.

Indian nationalists declared that American editors do not understand all the angles and nuances of the Indian political situation and that American press reaction would not affect their stand.

Watching U. S. Moves

Official Washington, however, was under close watch for any sign that the United States Government might use its influence to obtain a British-Indian settlement.

(Sir Girja Shankar Bajpai, Indian general agent in Washington, conferred with President Roosevelt for an hour and a half late yesterday. Leaving the White House, he said that the Pacific War Council and other matters were discussed, but that the talks did not concern British-Indian relations.)

Difficulty "Narrowing"

Announcing that he was prolonging his stay for a short time Sir Stafford said: "Points of difficulty are coming down to fairly narrow limits and with good will we may be able to solve the difficulties."

Whether the Indian parties with the country already under the shadow of the Japanese would direct its own defenses still appeared to be the crux of the differences. There were indications that Great Britain might give up insistence on keeping charge of defense until after the war.

To reporters Sir Stafford said: "It is rather natural, in a state of keen excitement, that people tend to over-commit themselves in a particular direction at rather too early a stage. But, I think that, judging from what I have seen in the press this morning, they are sobering down a little now to a more thoughtful frame of mind."

No Alternative in Mind.

Sir Stafford evaded inquiries about the possibility that an Indian might be put in authority over the defenses. Asked whether, if he had no power to agree to the appointment of an Indian defense minister, he could obtain such authority from his Government, the envoy replied:

"I can obviously consult the Cabinet at any moment if I consider it necessary."

To the question of whether he had referred that issue to his Government, he answered:

"I have kept his Majesty's Government informed, but I have not got any alternative scheme or plan on which to consult them."

Even before his announcement, it was evident that there was a general desire to avoid any hasty conclusions and especially to find a satisfactory formula concerning the defense portfolio.

Sir Stafford said that he had received no word as yet of the reactions of the Moslem League, the largest minority organization.

The British plan was rejected last night by the Sikhs, a warrior people, who objected that they would be outnumbered by Moslems in the Punjab and by the Mahasabha group of Hindus.

Indian nationalists argue that only an Indian could rally the Indians to the all-out war pitch which the British desire, and that India's defenses could be intrusted safely to such a man as Capt. Sir Sikander Hyat Khan, Premier of the Punjab, which provides the bulk of Indian troops.

[redacted]).—The Daily Herald, a Laborite party newspaper, said last night that Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, Commander-in-Chief in India, and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru of the Congress party would meet to discuss defense.

An editorial in the authoritative Times of London, its third on the India question in successive days, supported such a possibility. Although it declared that it was essential for Gen. Wavell to retain supreme command in India, it pointed out that India might have a share through a member of the Allied Defense Council in a position analogous to that of the War Secretary in the British Cabinet.

Ceylon Receives Reply

COLOMBO, Ceylon, April 2 (AP)—Sir Stafford Cripps notified the Board of Ministers of Ceylon today that he would not be able to deal with Ceylon's constitutional problems during his present visit to India. He promised that the reforms would be taken up as soon as the war was over. The Ministers had requested that Sir Stafford either visit Ceylon or receive a delegation at New Delhi.

China Road Nearly Finished

Chungking, China, April 2 (AP)—"Route B," the substitute for the Burma Road, from India to China, should be ready for service "perhaps within a month," a spokesman of the Transportation Control Bureau reported today.

Chinese Cut Railway

(By the Associated Press)

Chungking, April 2—Chinese forces have destroyed the Tatung-Puchow railway running south into Shansi province in twenty places to prevent the Japanese from sending reinforcements into the Shansi battle area, Chinese dispatches said today.

Heavy Japanese troop movements over this line have been reported recently, apparently in preparation for a big drive against the Chinese still holding part of the mountainous interior of Shansi or for an attempt to cross the Yellow river to invade Shensi province to the west.

Artillery duels between Chinese and Japanese batteries across the Yellow river were reported continuing.

(The Tokyo radio, in a broadcast of a Domei dispatch, reported heavy fighting in the interior of Shantung province, on China's east coast hundreds of miles behind the limits of Japan's drive into China. The dispatch said heavy losses had been inflicted on Chungking troops under Gen. Yu Hsueh-chung.)

Chinese Tennis Player Safe

CHUNGKING, April 2 (AP).—W. C. Choy, former Davis Cup tennis player for China, has escaped from Hongkong and is expected in Chungking shortly, it was reported today.

Says Prisoners Held by Japanese Are Starving

LONDON, April 2 (AP)—Dr. Gordon King, who has just escaped from Hong Kong and reached Chungking, was quoted by Reuters news agency tonight as declaring half the 1600 Britons and 300 Americans interned in Hong Kong's Stanley Prison were in danger of death by starvation within six months.

APR 3 1942

Dr. King, a physician and former professor in Hong Kong University, said the Japanese had refused requests by an Italian bishop, the Swedish consul and others for better treatment of the prisoners, scores of whom already looked like skeletons. Many of the prisoners are children or old persons.

Japanese Ship Losses to U. S. Now Put at 101

58 Reported Damaged in Unofficial Count Which Includes Probable Losses

NEW YORK—APRIL 2 (AP)

Sinkings of Japanese ships of all types by American forces have passed the 100 mark, according to an unofficial compilation by The Associated Press of official American claims. Fifty-eight Japanese vessels have been reported damaged. The compilation follows:

Japanese ships	Damaged	Sunk
Transports	24	42
Battleships	3	1
Cruisers	14	6
Destroyers	7	8
Submarines	1	7
Minesweepers	1	1
Seaplane tenders	1	1
Gunboats	2	1
Supply ships	0	3
Lighters	0	2
Freighters	2	19
Tankers	1	6
Aircraft carriers	2	2
Barges	0	2
Totals	58	101

APR 3 1942

Where Australian and Netherlands East Indies forces took part in actions, and announcements did not make clear which results were credited exclusively to the United States, the totals have been marked as American achievements. Probable or possible sinkings, unless confirmed, are listed in the "damaged" column.

Hawaii Pilot Tells How Sub Was Blown Up

By Wendell Webb
Associated Press Correspondent

Honolulu, April 2—The sinking of a Japanese submarine by a United States Army bomber, skippered by a youth who battled through the December holocaust in his bedroom slippers, was revealed today as the result of a commendation by Secretary of Navy Knox.

The skipper was First Lieutenant James V. Edmundson, 26, of Santa Monica, Cal., former football star at Santa Monica Junior College, an eager, rugged youth who "would do almost anything to get to Australia or anywhere else to fight."

Sighted Periscope

He was decorated with the Order of the Purple Heart today, but not for his feat in the air. It was because he was knocked down by a bomb fragment December 7 and got up again to do what he could to stem the Japanese attack. He still carries the scar on his forehead.

APR 3 1942

Lieutenant Edmundson has flown more than 40,000 miles on Hawaiian dawn patrol, but the highlight of his career came when he sighted a submarine periscope just breaking the water off the island of Oahu a few weeks ago.

Pilot Credits Crew

"Yes, I saw it, but it was my crew that got it," he declared; "those boys really went to town."

He interrupted his conversation frequently to watch fighter planes dive at plane-towed targets high over Wheeler Field. The interview was "on the line" in front of a hangar. Planes overhead drowned the conversation time and again.

"We were flying along in pretty heavy weather," Edmundson related. "All of a sudden I happened to see the periscope just breaking the water. And within forty-five seconds my crew had flashed word to our base, the bomb doors were opened, the bomb sights adjusted and we had dropped two bombs right at the stern of the submarine."

(He failed to mention that it must have taken fast maneuvering on his part to get into position.)

Metal Flies Up

"Every member of the crew was at his station," the lieutenant continued. "The bombardier and the navigator must have had everything plotted—speed, altitude, wind and drift. There wasn't a second's delay. If there had been, we would never have got him, because he would have sighted us first.

"The decks were barely awash when the first two bombs were dropped. The navigator and the gunner told me some big metal pieces flew up astern when they hit. That's probably why he did not submerge right away. He couldn't.

"Anyway, we made another turn and the bombardier dropped three more bombs that practically blanketed him, and on the third time around a bomb hit him right on top. He just blew up and disintegrated, apparently, and all we could see was a great circle of white foam of sulphuric acid from his batteries. The concussion even shook our plane a thousand feet above. A few minutes later all there was to see was a big oil slick, and after circling awhile, we went home."

And that's the story of the dawn patrol flight which brought results and which was the reason Secy. Knox said yesterday in Washington that Edmundson should be cited for "keen observation, flying skill and successful attack with bombs."

His Home Bombed Dec. 7.

Bombs wren't anything new to Lieut. Edmundson. He was on the receiving end of them Dec. 7. Fragments wene right through the house where he lived with his wife, the former Lee Turner, who now is with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lomax Turner of Long Beach, Calif.

He was stationed at Hickam field then, and saw his buddies struck down right and left.

Edmundson was born in Hollywood, June 13, 1915. He formerly worked as a salesman, window trimmer and stock clerk, attended University of California at Los Angles, then was timekeeper at the Douglas Aircraft plant in Los Angeles.

"I saw all those planes coming out and knew someone would have to fly them," he recalled, "so I wrote to the War Department asking where the schools were."

Flew in Slippers.

In 1937 he went to Randolph and Kelly fields in Texas and later had a tour of duty at Lowry field in Denver. He came to Hawaii in 1939. He was married here Thanksgiving day, 1940.

Of the Dec. 7 attack by the Japanese, he recalled:

"I heard planes, and looked out the window, to see the enemy streaking toward Pearl Harbor. I got on what clothes I could and went out. I certainly wore out those bedroom slippers before I got home four nights later."

Edmundson insisted his crew was more to be credited than he for the destruction of the Japanese submarine off Oahu.

They were: Co-Pilot Lieut. Arnold Johnson (address unavailable); Bombadier Sergt. Joe Wilderman of Oklahoma City; Navigator Lielt. Edwin Lanigan of Boston; Engineer Sergt. Frank Bowen of San Antonio, Texas; Radio Operator Sergt. E. P. Smith of Columbus, Neb.; Assistant Radio Operator Corp. Russell Hultgren of Lavene, Calif; Gunner Sergt. Leonard Taliaferro of Arlington, Ga.

Lieut. Edmundson never approached being boastful, but he commented "I'll bet everyone in that plane would like a good crack at something in the air."

141 Are Decorated For Dec. 7 Heroism

Army Men Get Awards at Honolulu

HONOLULU, April 2 (AP)—Against a backdrop of stationary bombers at Hickam Field and to an accompaniment of pursuit planes and bombers roaring overhead, 141 Army men were decorated today for gallantry during the Japanese attack of Dec. 7.

Thirteen were awarded Silver Stars. The Order of the Purple Heart was bestowed on the others.

Brig. Gen. Willis H. Hale described the colorful ceremony as the largest mass decoration in the history of the Army.

The ceremony took place on the runways — the same ground where hundreds of the heroes' comrades were killed while they carried on.

Eight men arrived from hospital beds in wheel chairs to receive their decorations.

ASK HUMBLY FOR FOOD IN HAWAII NOW

Days of Brusque Orders to Grocer, Butcher and Waiter Gone

HONOLULU, April 2 (Wide World) —The grocer and the butcher and the waiters are kingpins in civilian Hawaii now.

Brusqueness Past

No longer does the housewife say brusquely, "I would like a pound of butter, two dozen oranges, a dozen eggs, and two thick steaks."

She is much more likely—if she has the money to meet greatly increased prices—to ask humbly, "When you get any butter or eggs or meat, I wish you'd let me know and save me some."

She's long since learned it does no good to ask for oranges or other citrus fruits.

The waiter, too, isn't told any more to bring the best steak in the house, or a plate of ham and eggs, or "make it heavy on the butter."

Rather, he's asked gently whether there's any meat available, whether he could dig up a couple of eggs, or whether there's a bit of butter to go with the bread and jelly.

A recent tour of four representative eating places in Honolulu showed none had steaks, one had eggs, another one had bacon, and two had butter substitutes in limited quantity. Green vegetables were scarce.

One general store had a window sign saying: "No meat for sale."

There are few complaints, however, and Hawaii isn't starving. It seems generally agreed that the war effort is far more important than a variety of food.

Bravery In Moving Jap 'Duds' Told

St. Louis, April 2 (AP) — To the heroes of Pearl Harbor an army ordnance officer today added the inexperienced men who risked their lives to dispose of unexploded bombs and shells in the Japanese attack of December 7.

Capt. Oren E. Hurlbut, here on brief leave, said: "Only two officers and myself and two or three unlisted men had had any experience in that kind of work and that was on the firing ranges in peacetime.

"When the first call came to take care of an unexploded shell during final stages of the bombardment Lieutenant Jack Armstrong, of Minneapolis, a reserve officer who had been on duty but six months, and one private, equally inexperienced, did the job."

American-Born Japanese Is Acquitted by Jury

Seattle, April 2—(AP)—Kenji Ito, American-born Japanese attorney, was acquitted by a federal jury yesterday on a charge of failing to register as an agent of the Japanese government.

Ito told the jury:

"I'd rather live in this country behind bars than in another country where dictators hold the olive branch in one hand and the dagger in the other."

Benzedrine 'Air Pills' Given Jap Fliers, Belief

Boston, April 2—(AP)—Possibility that the Japanese may be equipping their fliers with "air pills" made of benzedrine to enable them to withstand extremely high altitudes was advanced today by scientists attending the meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.

The theory was expressed following coincidence of a report from the war zone that certain pills had been found on captured Japanese, and a report made to the meeting that rats had been enabled to withstand simulated altiudes of more than six miles through administration of benzedrine.

Germans Lose On 2 Fronts

Russians Also Claim Vast Booty Seized in Leningrad and Kalinin Areas.

SOVIET CAVALRY BEATS OFF TANKS

Leningrad Radio Reports Big-scale Fighting Raging Before City.

MOSCOW, Friday, April 3. (AP)—The Russians announced officially today that more than 22,000 Germans had been killed in the Leningrad and Kalinin sectors in a violent Red prelude to Adolf Hitler's threatening spring attempt to smash the Soviet Union.

Twelve thousand Nazis were slain in the Leningrad area between March 23 and March 31, a special communique said. A regular communique issued at noon yesterday said that 3,000 Germans had been killed in the last two days, indicating the growing ferocity of the battles around the approaches to that important Baltic city.

Enormous Haul of Booty

On the Kalinin, or northwestern front between Ilmen and Rzhev, the Russians said, 10,000 more Nazi dead were counted between March 21 and April 1. It is in this area, at Staraya Russa, that the Russians have been steadily cutting down the encircled 16th Nazi army despite vast numbers of German reserves thrown against the Red cordon.

After days of official silence, the Russians issued a series of communiques listing an enormous haul of German booty, captured or destroyed.

Among the items reported destroyed on both fronts were 58 Nazi airplanes, 642 ammunition and supply trucks, 108 trench mortars, 39 tanks, 100 guns and machine-guns, six ammunition dumps, one food warehouse, and a great number of blockhouses and reinforced Nazi dugouts.

List of Captured Supplies

The Russians listed this haul in captured material: Seventeen tanks and armored cars, 515 machine guns, 86 trench mortars, 62 guns, 1,347,300 rounds of ammunition, 9,000 shells and 158 cases of shells, 165 trucks, 17 motorcycles, 5,300 hand grenades and 54 cases of grenades, 11,300 mines and 220 cases of mines, 15 radio transmitters, 130 horses, 3,000 flares, 300 pairs of skis, eight oil tanks, and other equipment.

As usual, the Russians refrained from identifying the specific localities where their armies were fighting, but insisted they retained the initiative begun last December when the Germans were rolled back from the gates of Moscow.

The regular midnight communique said merely that the Red Army had "occupied several populated places in offensive operations" yesterday, and a supplementary announcement said a cavalry unit under "Comrade Timofeev" had beaten off superior tank-equipped Nazi forces which had attacked his outfit.

"The Germans lost in killed alone more than 650 officers and soldiers," the communique said.

Another Nazi Sub Destroyed

On another unidentified sector the Russians asserted they repulsed another German effort to capture Village "K," and that 18 German tanks were smashed and hundreds of Nazis slain at the approaches to the village.

In the far north the Red fleet announced the destruction of another German submarine operating in the Barents Sea on the United Nations' supply route to Murmansk.

Leningrad Fighting Growing in Intensity

LONDON, April 2 (AP)—Big-scale fighting now in progress on the Leningrad front is growing in intensity "with every hour that passes," the Leningrad radio reported tonight.

"The village of 'N,' which had been fortified by the Germans and which served as a center for several villages occupied by the enemy has been captured by our forces," the Leningrad announcer said.

"Our men advanced from the northwest, where the Germans least expected an attack, as they considered they were protected by marshes. Our troops, however, crossed the marshes and appeared in the rear of the enemy forces."

In a northwestern sector, he said, 50 German tanks supported by planes led the Nazi infantry into an attack, but the Red army repulsed it.

At another point, it was acknowledged, "The Germans managed to drive a wedge into our defense positions but were unable to widen the gap.

In the past 24 hours, with fresh reinforcements, the Germans have been launching one tank-supported counter-attack after another, but in vain, the Leningrad radio asserted.

Thus the fighting around Leningrad gave quick import to the comment of Swedish observers who earlier today said the approach of good weather would make the position of Russia's second-largest city more dangerous and that the Germans might be able to take it this summer—if they were willing to pay a bloody price.

A Russian communique prior to the Leningrad radio announcement said 3,000 Germans had been killed in the past two days in successful Red army operations on that front.

Finnish Anxieties Worry Nazis

The Germans said Leningrad had been subjected to "heavy artillery fire," and the new focus on that front was regarded in London as possibly aimed at quieting the mounting anxieties of Finland.

Temporarily, at least, the Leningrad sector overshadowed anticipations of a great new campaign in which Germans and Russians will meet head-on in the south with all the force they muster.

Dispatches from neutral Stockholm said a decisive battle was expected to start within two or three weeks on the southern Russian front, where both the Germans and Soviets are moving up great masses of reserves.

These reports said that while the Red Army had preserved the initiative in bitter winter fighting in the south, the actual warfare in that zone recently had been only a sideshow compared with the vastness of preparations behind the lines.

Swedish observers said that after several days of bringing extra troops up to ready positions on both sides, the Germans had flown large groupings of bombing and pursuit planes to Ukrainian bases. The Stockholm consensus was that the big and probably decisive conflict would start as soon as the ground dried out.

London observers noted that the German radio, which for the past week has been stressing claims of Russian losses on the southern front, had now added that railways were congested with freshly-trained German reserves moving eastward.

This was taken in London to indicate that most of the Nazi reserves already were in position and that efforts were being made to reassure German fears at home of a Russian offensive catching the Nazi command unaware.

Leningrad Russ Forces Claim New Gains

front troops had effected a number of successful operations in the last two days, annihilating about 3,000 German officers and soldiers.

Twenty-four German planes were reported to have been destroyed Tuesday, against a loss of thirteen Russian planes.

(Recent differences among Axis junior partners in the Balkans were apparently submerged again in the interest of Adolf Hitler's spring military operations.

Bulgar Purge Reported

(Although traditionally a friend of Russia, Bulgaria was reported by Bern sources to be purging her army of hundreds of officers with Soviet sympathies through transfers and arrests. Axis accounts say King Boris has pledged some 200,000 Bulgarian troops for the Eastern Front.

(Foreign Minister Mihail Antonescu of neighboring Rumania declared his nation intends to carry on the war against Russia to the end because "we are fighting for a new state and a new human being." Antonescu described the statement as an answer to foreign reports that Rumania wished to withdraw her soldiers.)

APR 3 1942

Kalinin Toll Given

The Soviet information bureau's midday communique reported no essential change on the front during the night.

It reported, however, that more than 300 German officers and men had been wiped out in one day's fighting on the Kalinin front northwest of Moscow, while 180 officers and men were killed in fighting in another sector.

Leningrad Suburbs Shelled

BERLIN, April 2 (From German broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press)—The High Command reported today that "military installations in the suburbs of Leningrad were subjected to heavy artillery fire" in German offensive operations on that front.

"Effective results could be observed," the bulletin added.

In several other sectors the Red Army continued its attacks on German positions, suffering heavy losses, the communiqué reported.

The Russian Air Force lost forty-five planes yesterday in air combats and on the ground, it was reported.

Nazi Raiders Pound British Towns; Paris Area Again Bombed

One Place Under Heaviest Attack of War —Damage Considerable—RAF Again Raids Ex-Ford Plant Outside Paris.

APR 3 1942

A SOUTHEAST BRITISH COAST TOWN, Friday, April 3. (AP)—A number of persons were killed, some were hospitalized and considerable property damage resulted from a sweep by German air raiders flying in bright moonlight over widely scattered coastal points early today.

Ruins Searched for Victims

Observers in one town, speaking from experience in previous bombings, said the raid there was the worst they ever saw or heard.

Rescue workers dug into ruins for victims through the early morning hours. One family was found trapped in the wreckage of their house.

The Nazi bombers swung over the sea in the face of strong ground defenses, unloaded their cargoes and veered off sharply.

Although the attack was on a heavy scale it was not long in duration.

The raiders crossed the Strait in brilliant moonlight and ran into a devastating anti-aircraft barrage which thundered on for about an hour without letup.

Some Raiders Turned Back

The attackers flew over very low. Concentrations of searchlights picked them out and exploding shells sparkled in the sky over a wide area.

The attack, more intense than any for some time, came about two hours after a light raid which caused neither casualties nor damage.

The concentrated antiaircraft fire meeting the big raid apparently turned back some of the Nazi planes.

A number of bombs were seen bursting at several points along the coast.

British fliers had dropped leaflets over Paris warning the French they were coming back again after their destructive raid last month on the Renault tank and automotive plant working to supply the Nazi eastern front armies.

An informed British source indicated today that the second strike at the Matford works was lighter than Wednesday night's attack, but said the British "got in some good licks."

Buried in Homes

The German counter-attack on Britain's coastal defense belt was the worst yet experienced by some townsmen there who had weathered the heavy 1940 blows. A number of persons were killed and wounded. Others were buried in their wrecked homes.

The Germans, favored by bright moonlight, also were reported over southern Wales.

The R. A. F. attacks of Wednesday night also were directed at the Reich's railroad network which is shuttling munitions toward the Russian front.

15 Bombers Lost

Fifteen bombers were missing from these far-ranging raids, interpreted authoritatively here as primarily blows to assist Russia. The Paris factories are reported turning out vehicles for the Germans in the east and the German railroads are strained to the utmost in transporting supplies for spring offensive action against the Red armies.

It was the R.A.F.'s biggest loss in a single night since the Nov. 7 raid on Berlin in which 37 British planes were destroyed, and it was above the average of 10 to 12 which the R.A.F. feels it can afford to lose in one night at the present scale of operations.

Bright moonlight aided the attackers and the German night fighters alike.

Canadian airmen, led by Johnny Fauquier, Ottawa bus flier, told of blasting debris high into the sky at Poissy, eight miles west of Paris on the left bank of the Seine, of setting bright fires and of feeling the blast of bombs which made direct hits on the Matford factory from extremely low altitudes.

Low-Level Attack

One of the Canadian-flown Wellington bombers came out of the target area at 500 feet, and the pilot said the bomb blast "nearly lifted us out of the sky."

Latest reports from Vichy said that fairly heavy damage was caused at Poissy, with the Matford factory the chief target. The French reported that one British plane was shot down in flames at nearby Marly, with three members of the crew killed and one made prisoner.

Paris anti-aircraft defenses were active during the alert, from 4 to 5:30 a. m., and bombs were reported dropped in several western and northwestern Paris outskirts.

It also was learned today, a Vichy dispatch said, that at least 40 persons were killed, including 14 children, and 72 wounded in the region of Boulogne-Sur-Mer Wednesday afternoon during the R.A.F. bombardment of the channel coast.

(Ford headquarters in Detroit said the Ford Motor Co., had had no contact with the Matford plant since the fall of France. The concern was formed about ten years ago, Ford interests combining with the Mathis Co., a French Alsatian firm, for the manufacture of light cars.)

Now reported turning out 20 trucks a day for the Nazis, the Matford plant was bombed in daylight March 8, five days after the big R. A. F. raid on the Renault works, first in the Paris area. The newest raid was not on the same scale as the Renault attack, but a British spokesman called it "a good little show."

In addition to the raids on German rail centers, the Le Havre docks and other occupied centers in France and Belgium were raided overnight and leaflets, intended for the Nazi army of occupation, were dropped over Brussels.

One of the bomber pilots who attacked Northwest Germany said the attack was pressed home despite snow and sleet which stretched the return trip to four hours.

Count 20 Fires

He reported hits on a freight train near the Rhine and that "the rear gunner counted 20 separate fires among freight cars."

One pilot flew so low he could see a man firing a rifle at his plane. On the return trip, ice from the propellors tore holes in the fuselage as the plane fought a 65-mile-an-hour wind.

R.A.F. Bombers Strike At Matford Works

LONDON, Friday, April 3—(AP) The Royal Air Force's heavy bombers struck for the second straight night last night at the Nazi-directed Matford automotive works outside Paris, while British ground crews struggled against a terrific German air attack along the southeastern English coast.

RAF Raids Paris Plant And Wide Rhine Area

APR 3 1942

(By the Associated Press)

London, April 2—The Royal Air Force bombed industrial objectives and communications in west and northwest Germany and the environs of Paris last night, in far-ranging raids from which fifteen bombers are missing, the Air Ministry said today.

"In occupied territory," the Air Ministry said, "bombing attacks were made on the Matford (truck) works at Poissy (a suburb eight miles west of Paris) and on the docks and shipping at Le Havre.

"Mines were laid in enemy waters."

A Blow For Russia?

One authoritative British interpretation saw these attacks as new blows in the battle for Russia, since they were directed primarily against railway lines which carry munitions from the Ruhr to the eastern front, and against a truck-making factory outside Paris.

Fighter command aircraft attacked objectives in Belgium and northern France, and during these thrusts an enemy bomber was destroyed, the Ministry reported.

The RAF smash at the Matford works was the second time in less than a month. The previous assault took place in broad daylight on March 8, when bombs were reported to have fallen squarely on the plant, which the British said was turning out twenty trucks daily for the Nazi war machine.

Held Interest In It

[The Ford Motor Company has an interest in the Matford works, but at Ford headquarters in Detroit it was said that there had been no contact with the plant in the Paris suburbs since the conquest of France. The Matford concern was formed about ten years ago, Ford interests combining with the Mathis Company, a French Alsatian firm, for the manufacture of light cars.]

First reports of the night operations against Germany indicated that the attack was on a large scale.

A British source said the attack last night was not on the same scale as the R. A. F. smash on the Renault plant March 3, one of the heaviest the British have made. But he called it "a good little show" nevertheless.

Last night's operations, although formidable, were said to be not on the same scale as the RAF smash on the Renault plant March 3, one of the heaviest the British have made. They were the first the RAF's big bomber squadrons have been able to make in force since the German Baltic port of Luebeck was blasted last Saturday night.

British fighter-bombers were active last night, attacking airfields, a factory and railway centers in France and Belgium, the Ministry reported.

A Czech pilot shot down one Junkers-88 and damaged another as they were taking off from a German-occupied airdrome on the continent, it said.

Bombers Over Wales First Time in Months

LONDON, Friday, April 3 (AP)—Enemy bombers were reported over Southern Wales early today for the first time in months.

A single raider last night dropped bombs on a southeast coast town but they fell on open ground, causing neither casualties nor damage.

French Ack-Acks Pepper British

Vichy, April 2 (AP)—The RAF dropped bombs in the west and northwest outskirts of Paris early today and "thus far one death and several wounded are reported," the Vichy News Agency said.

The alert lasted from 4 to 5.30 A. M. APR 3 1942

"The RAF dropped bombs at a number of points," the news agency reported," particularly at Rueil, Cormeilles-en-Parisis Sannois and Poissy." Anti-aircraft defense of Paris, however, entered the action.

The Matford truck factory at Poissy was reported to have been slightly damaged.

NAZI STATIONS SILENT

Go Off Air After Remark About Breslau.

London, April 2 (A. P.).—Several German radio stations went off the air at 7:15 P. M. tonight (2:15 P. M. New York time) after telling listeners to tune in on Breslau.

Stations going off the air usually is an indication that air raiders are approaching, but ordinarily this comes only well after nightfall.

There was no explanation of the reference to Breslau, in Eastern Germany near the old Polish border.

Germans Claim 11.

Berlin, (From German Broadcasts), April 2 (A. P.).—The German High Command announced today that eleven British bombers were shot down during nuisance raids over western Germany last night.

It said the raiders inflicted only slight material damage and reported some losses among civilian population.

R. A. F.'S SCORE IN MARCH

Losses of Nazis in West and Middle East 159 to Britain's 144

LONDON, April 2 (AP)—Germany lost 159 planes during March over the British Isles, the Mediterranean area and the European Continent, exclusive of the Russian front, according to figures released today by the Air Ministry. Britain's losses came to 144.

The breakdown was: Over Britain—Germany 7, Britain 0; over Europe—Germany 59, Britain 102; over Mediterranean area — Germany 93, including 59 brought down by Malta's defenders; Britain 42.

In addition, the Admiralty reported six Axis planes shot down by warships.

27 GERMAN PLANES DOWNED AT MALTA

14 Nazi Losses Confirmed, 13 Others Probably Destroyed.

APR 3 1942

VALLETTA, Malta, April 2. — (AP) The Germans in a persistent dawn-to-dawn attack begun yesterday morning lost a total of 27 planes destroyed, probably destroyed or damaged, the heaviest losses ever suffered in a 24-hour period over Malta, the British announced in their communique tonight.

In the peak period of steadily intensifying German assaults on this British Mediterranean island stronghold the Germans certainly lost 14 planes, the communique said, and the additional 13 were "probably destroyed and damaged."

Raiders appeared before dawn Wednesday and were over the island continuously until about daybreak this morning.

In defending Malta the British sent up the heaviest anti-aircraft barrage yet heard by the hardy Maltese who daily through nearly 2,000 raids already have witnessed some of the bitterest air fighting and heaviest bombing of the war.

Throughout the attacks there were no R.A.F. losses, the communique said.

The Germans, after their terrific losses, returned only for scattered raids today, and all were slight.

German fighters shot down two British planes in the continued day and night attacks upon Malta and two British planes were destroyed in Libyan operations, the communique said.

Gibraltar was raided by Italian aircraft, it said.

The High Command said two British planes had been destroyed in Libyan operations and "on the Cirenaica front there were clashes of patrols and normal air activity."

Report Hits on British Warships

BERLIN (from German broadcasts), April 2 (AP).—The German high command said today that direct hits were scored on British destroyers and submarines in continued day and night aerial attacks on Malta.

British Libyan Patrols Clash With Axis Outposts

Cairo, April 2 (A. P.).—British fighting patrols advanced Tuesday night to make contact with Axis outposts in the desert south of Tmimi, the British command announced today. This inconclusive action was all the communique had to report.

ITALIAN CRAFT SUNK

Rome Says Most of the Crew Were Saved.

Rome (From Italian Broadcasts), April 2 (A. P.).—The Italian High Command reported today that a light Italian patrol vessel had been lost in torpedo action by a submarine.

A great part of the crew was saved, the High Command announced. It placed the attack in the central Mediterranean.

U. S. BOMBER SETS ATLANTIC RECORD

Consolidated Makes Flight in 400 Minutes.

London, April 2 (A. P.).—The new Newfoundland-to-Britain flight record is 400 minutes, the holder is a United States-built Liberator (Consolidated) bomber and the pilot isn't going to be penalized for aerial speeding after all, British authorities disclosed today.

The old trans-Atlantic mark was eclipsed by an hour. The average speed for the 2,200-mile trip was 330 miles an hour.

The pilot was warned when he landed of prospective disciplinary action because of a belief he had pushed the bomber's four motors beyond the limit assigned for ferry operations, but he was exonerated at a ferry command inquiry.

"A combination of the qualities of the airplane, an exceptional tail-wind and magnificent navigation" were then credited.

The ferry command said that the bomber, after arrival at night over its designated field, circled about in the air for three hours because it still had too much gasoline aboard to be landed safely in the darkness.

LAVAL RETURNS TO VICHY TO SEE CHIEF OF STATE

Former Premier Talks With Petain About French-German Relations

VICHY, UNOCCUPIED FRANCE, April 2 (AP)—Former Premier Pierre Laval came to Vichy today for the first time since he was ousted from power in the Vichy regime and conferred with Marshal Petain on the question of French-German relations.

Laval Issues Statement

After the meeting Laval, a strong proponent of collaboration with Germany, issued a communique to the press referring to a recent series of such meetings elsewhere with Marshal Petain on the French-German issue. One of these was held on March 27.

Since that meeting there were many rumors here, but today's communique—issued by Laval himself and authorized by the Vichy information secretariat—was the first official French word of the conferences.

The communique:

"As initiator of the Montoire policy (when Marshal Petain met Adolf Hitler for his first collaboration talk), and considering that the external situation of France is growing worse daily, I thought it my duty to have an interview with Marshal Petain.

"Conversations have taken place between the chief of state and myself. They ended today with the last interview at Pavillon Sevigne."

DALADIER TO ASK FOR INVESTIGATION OF FIFTH COLUMN

Former Premier Gets in Last Word as Court Takes Easter Recess.

By MAC MOST

RIOM, Unoccupied France, April 2—(AP) Former Premier Edouard Daladier, himself on trial with four other one-time political and military leaders of France, declared today he might ask for an investigation of "a fifth column of fake intellectuals who created a deleterious atmosphere in the country."

Thus Daladier, the most outspoken of the defendants, got in the last word of the 26th sitting of the special tribunal named by Chief of State Marshal Petain to determine the guilt for France's defeat in 1940.

Court Recesses

Following Daladier's statement, presiding Judge Pierre Caous adjourned the court until 1:30 p. m., April 14, to allow for the Easter holidays, as he announced.

(A Vichy message last week said it was not certain that the trial would be resumed after the adjournment. Germany wants to stop it.)

Daladier's fifth column charge came in an outburst following the testimony of the final witness, General Joseph Bernard, chief of the Army Service corps, who charged that lack of certain materiel for France's soldiers was the result of distribution failures rather than inadequate production.

This was the former premier's rejoinder:

APR 3 1942

Demands Investigation

"In view of repeated testimony of several witnesses to the effect that stocks were left in depots and not distributed to the army, if the question is not clarified, I am going to ask an investigation of the activity of a fifth column of fake intellectuals who created a deleterious atmosphere in the country."

Bernard asserted that as against 100,000 pairs of shoes produced each month for the army before the war, wartime production rose to 2,260,000 pairs. Blankets, produced at a rate of 200,000 a month before the war, were being turned out at a monthly rate of 1,025,000 before the war was two months old.

Saying only 2,800,000 soldiers were mobilized and sent to the front, Bernard added, "If they did not get the materiel intended for them it was not because it was unavailable."

Bernard declared that in the spring of 1940 he found 2,000,000,000 francs worth of undistributed clothing in a depot at Troyes. Another example of distribution breakdowns, he said, was the fact that 40,000 army horses died because fodder never reached them between November, 1939, and March, 1940.

The private purveyors cartel did everything to hamstring the spreading out of orders among manufacturers throughout the country, the officer declared. He also made the point that not one blanket nor one pair of shoes was ever given out of army stocks to the Spanish Republicans.

The first witness today was Gen. Francois Marescaux, antiaircraft expert, who testified that "the condition of our antiaircraft defenses was perfectly alarming," adding:

"Some batteries had received their crews but not their materiel; others had received their materiel but not their munitions."

In addition, he went on, there were antiaircraft machineguns mounted on armored cars which could be fired only forward.

"They were developed in the last war to fire on captive balloons—only captive balloons are always ahead of your lines while enemy planes may be just as well behind you."

To have gone directly to the top with his critical observations, Marescaux said, would have been considered a "serious breach of military discipline," and so he tried to act through his superiors, but they carried the matter no further.

Daladier's Defense

Daladier defended himself by saying that "every time I wanted to order some antiaircraft guns, the officers in charge would answer me that they had not yet worked out a satisfactory model."

The general attitude toward antiaircraft ground defenses, the former premier said, was summed up in the words of an army man who had told him, "the only time an airplane is brought down is because somebody made a mistake—either the aviator or the gunner."

That attitude still remains, he said. He cited the recent British bombing of the German Baltic port of Luebeck—carried out, he said, despite the fact that Luebeck "is protected by the best of German antiaircraft guns."

DALADIER ASSAILS FIFTH COLUMNISTS

APR 3 1942

Accuses 'Fake Intellectuals' of Ruining France.

Riom, April 2 (A. P.).—Former Premier Edouard Daladier, one of five former military and governmental leaders of France on trial for the French defeat, charged today that "a fifth column of fake intellectuals" created an atmosphere conducive to army mismanagement. The court, at the end of today's proceedings, suspended its sessions until April 14 for the Easter holidays.

[A Vichy message last week said that it was not certain that the trial would be resumed after the recess.]

"In view of repeated testimony of several witnesses to the effect that stocks were left in depots and not distributed to the army, if the question is not clarified, I am going to ask an investigation of the activity of a fifth column of fake intellectuals who created a deleterious atmosphere in the country," M. Daladier said.

This came as an outburst after the testimony of the final witness before the adjournment, Gen. Joseph Bernard, Chief of the Army Service Corps, who discussed the army's lack of shoes and blankets.

When Gen. Bernard had finished and M. Daladier had responded, the presiding judge, Pierre Caous, adjourned court until 1:20 P. M., April 14, "for the Easter holidays." Today's was the twenty-sixth sitting.

ADMIRAL AUBOYNEAU PICKED BY DE GAULLE

Heads Free French Navy—Muselier to Receive Another Post

LONDON, April 2 (AP)—Rear Admiral Philippe-Marie Auboyneau has been named commander of Free French naval forces in succession to Admiral Emile Muselier, the Free French press service announced today.

The service added that Admiral Muselier, "who of course remains a member of the Free French forces, is now spending a month's leave in the country for reasons of health." At the end of his leave General Charles de Gaulle, leader of the Free French, will offer him another post, the service said.

The announcement also noted Admiral Muselier's recent resignation from the Free French National Committee, saying there was "no truth whatever in certain rumors circulating recently" concerning friction between Admiral Muselier and his chief. The Admiral, who led the Free French occupation of St. Pierre and Miquelon Islands off the Newfoundland coast last December, returned to London about a month ago.

Admiral Auboyneau, who at 41 is rated one of the best younger men in the French Navy, at present is Free French naval commander in the Pacific, where Free French forces recently were placed under General Douglas MacArthur's command on order of General de Gaulle.

Auboyneau served as liaison officer with the British fleet at Alexandria until the fall of France.

WILL NOT BREAK WITH AXIS NOW, RIOS ANNOUNCES

New President of Chile to 30.24-15753

30.24-15753

Work for Continental Solidarity, However

APR 3 1942

SANTIAGO, Chile, April 2 (AP)—President Juan Antonio Rios indicated in his inaugural address tonight that the new administration of Chile plans no immediate diplomatic break with the Axis.

Only If Nation Asks It

He hinted that he would make the break only if "the national will" calls for it.

Then the 21st president of the republic promised that Chile would "faithfully carry out her duties of continental solidarity."

Chile has worked jointly with Argentina to stall off attempts at the Rio de Janeiro conference last January for a solid American break with Germany, Japan and Italy.

The American republics eventually compromised on a joint resolution recommending that all break with the Axis and Chile and Argentina made it unanimous.

However, neither has broken off relations, and Rios' statement tonight on Chilean foreign policy was foreshadowed by the presence of Argentine Foreign Minister Enrique Ruiz Guinazu at the Rios inaugural ceremonies here.

Moreover, Ruiz Guinazu made a speech to the Chamber of Deputies yesterday after which half a dozen Communist deputies walked out in protest.

Broadcasting to the nation from the Alameda Palace, the new Chilean president said:

"The Government will cultivate cordial relations which are maintained with all other countries, and the ministry of foreign affairs of Chile will act in the international field with the serene dignity which corresponds to its traditions.

"Our country, in accordance with its standards of loyalty and the sentiments of the citizenry, will carry out faithfully the duties of continental solidarity . . .

"The executive will adopt important steps when they must be taken under the unmistakable expression of the national will."

Rios, elected by the "Democratic Front," a political combination with a platform for democracy and American solidarity, said that "I will keep up the same spirit in government which brought me to it."

Calls for Unity

"I again call for a union of the diverse groups and various forces to support what the ordinary basis of a republican democracy and social justice requires," Rios said.

The new president expressed hope that the union of pro-Democratic groups would "be continued for a dynamic purpose and not to satisfy selfish aims."

"The concept of a national government," he said, "will not be used to cover doctrinary arguments nor to advance political ends, but to stimulate action in our human capital."

Rios promised an impartial administration.

"I repeat," he said, "that the state with its powers will protect legal rights and fulfill its task without favoritism."

At the Rio conference of American foreign ministers, while Chile was operating under an acting president after the death of "Popular Front" President Pedro Aguirre Cerda, the Chilean delegation reserved the right to refer the resolution to Congress for ratification.

Juan Rossetti, the Chilean foreign minister who teamed up with Argentina's Ruiz Guinazu at Rio against all the other republics, was replaced in the cabinet by Rios' new Foreign Minister Ernesto Barros Jarpa, a reputed advocate of Pan-American cooperation.

INAUGURATION OF NEW CHILE PRESIDENT ON

Ceremonies Begun at Santiago; Statement Regarding Axis Awaited

SANTIAGO, Chile, April 2 (AP)—Ceremonies for the inauguration of President Juan Antonio Rios, 53-years-old pro-democratic statesman, began at 4 p. m. today with a procession in which Rios was driven to Congress in a horse-drawn state carriage.

Lined With Troops

The streets of the capital were lined with troops and great crowds of spectators.

One of the first things the new President is expected to do is make a clear statement of Chile's position regarding the Axis. Chile and Argentina are the only two American republics which have failed to break off relations with the Axis.

Rios promised such a statement on Feb. 1 when he was elected over Gen. Carlos Ibanez del Campo in what he termed "a triumph of the democratic ideal and an annihilation of totalitarian forces." Since then he has parried questions as to whether Chile would break with the Axis.

Led Opposition

In this connection it is regarded significant that Argentina's foreign minister, Enrique Ruiz Guinazu, has been here since Sunday at the head of a large delegation sent for the inauguration ceremony. Guinazu led the opposition at the recent Pan-American conference to the United States proposal for a complete immediate Western Hemisphere break with Germany, Italy and Japan.

Chile then supported Argentina.

Yesterday seven Communist deputies in the Chilean chamber walked out when Ruiz Guinazu, as a guest speaker, referred to the "similarity of international policy that Chile and Argentina had shown" at the Pan-American conference.

The Communists charged that Argentina was trying to lead Chile along a course which would aid Fascism.

5 NORWEGIAN SHIPS FREE IN SEA DASH

Six Others Accounted for After Slipping Out of Swedish Harbor.

STOCKHOLM, April 2.—(AP)—Six of the 11 Norwegian merchant ships which dared the German blockade in a mass dash from Sweden were accounted for tonight as either lost or turned back, leaving five with at least a chance to reach haven in Britain.

The 11 vessels had been tied up in Goteborg, Sweden, since the German invasion of Norway April 9, 1940. Under charter to Britain from the Norwegian government-in-exile, they all left Goteborg Tuesday night during a heavy snowstorm.

(A Swedish court had upheld the charters on March 17, overruling German attempts to get control of the ships through owners still in Norway.)

Attacked by Destroyer

According to information based mainly on observations of fishermen, the ships were attacked Wednesday by a German destroyer and four trawlers almost as soon as they got outside Swedish territorial waters, the 5,222-ton Buccaneer and the 12,258-ton whaleship Skytteren being sunk by gunfire of Maaseskaer at the mouth of the narrow Skagerrak.

The fishermen said another ship was seen burning fiercely, another ran aground, and two, the 5,653-ton Lionel and the 5,263-ton Dicto, fled back to Goteborg.

Loss of Life Heavy

Empty lifeboats were seen adrift in the Skagerrak, and some reports said loss of life was probably heavy. Others said the German forces captured some of the crews.

At least two large ships were sighted racing westward for the open sea and Britain, 500 miles away. What happened to the remaining three was not reported.

(A dispatch by the Vichy News Agency under a Stockholm date said six ships escaped, protected in the narrow seas by British planes and farther out by British warships. This report was not confirmed by other sources, but the American-Swedish News Exchange reported the merchantmen had British officers and crews aboard.)

Stockholm sources said definite information on what happened to all the flotilla could not be expected for several days.

Besides the ships named, the others were:

Charente, 1282 tons, Lind, 461; Gudvang, 1469; Storsten, 5243; Rigmor, 6305; B. P. Newton, 10,324, and Realf II, 5069.

I SHIPS DARE NAZI BLOCKADE; 2 SUNK

Norwegian Craft Fleeing Goteburg are on Way to England

By The Associated Press

Stockholm, April 2.—German warships blocking the Skagerrak were declared today to have sunk at least two of eleven British-chartered Norwegian merchant ships which risked a daring dash to England from Goteborg, Sweden, and although several others were reported turned back, the possibility was held out that some might yet be at large and racing toward safety.

The merchantmen which slipped out of Goteborg in a snowstorm Tuesday night ran into a blockade of Nazi warcraft which had lain in wait for them since the Germans found themselves unable to seize control of them through action in the Swedish courts.

From the stories of fishermen and residents of the little coastal towns which shook with cannonading Tuesday night and yesterday, Swedish newspapers compiled this record of the fate of the ships:

Two of the merchantmen, the 12,358-ton whale oil ship Skytteren, and the 6,222-ton Buccaneer, were sunk by German gunfire almost as soon as they passed the three-mile territorial limit outside Goteborg.

One ship went aground; one was seen burning at sea and perhaps sank; two, cut off from hope of escape, turned back into a Swedish port yesterday afternoon. At least two more were said to be returning, perhaps damaged.

At least two large cargo vessels were given at least a fighting chance of reaching British ports. Fishermen said they were last seen yesterday, undamaged and racing for the open sea.

Norwegian official circles said that the Skytteren and Buccaneer had been sunk by a German destroyer and four armed trawlers.

The two ships which turned back and regained the safety of Goteborg harbor were identified as the 5,653-ton Lionel and the 5,263-ton Dicto.

[A dispatch by the Vichy news agency under a Stockholm date said six ships escaped, protected in the narrow seas by British planes and farther out by British warships. This report was not confirmed by other sources. The American-Swedish news exchange reported the merchantmen had British officers and crews aboard.]

Altogether the ships' tonnage amounted to about 60,000.

Besides the four named, they were listed by Swedish newspapers as the Charente, 1,282 tons; Lind, 461 tons; Gudvang, 1,469 tons; Stosten, 5,343 tons; Rigmor, 6,305 tons; B. P. Newton, 10,324 tons, and Realf II, 5,069 tons.

Fishermen said a third ship was seen burning fiercely, surrounded by German warships and armed trawlers. She had a gaping hole aft of her engine room and flames were shooting from her hold.

The fishermen expressed belief that she had been set afire by her crew to keep the ship out of German hands.

BERLIN CLAIMS 105 SHIPS FOR MARCH

646,900 Tons Reported Sunk During Month.

APR 3 1942

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), April 2 (A. P.).—The German Navy and Air Force sank 105 enemy merchant ships totaling 646,900 tons during March, the Nazi High Command reported today, asserting that ninety-one ships totaling 584,900 tons were sent to the bottom by U-boats alone.

"The war against British supply shipping and the United States in March was very successful," said the daily communique. In addition to the 105 vessels listed as sunk, 39 merchantmen were said to have suffered heavy damage from torpedo and bomb hits.

35 Torpedo Victims Land.

An East Coast Canadian Port, April 2 (A. P.).—Thirty-five members of the crew of a torpedoed merchant ship have arrived here, most of them suffering from injuries and exposure.

The men, rescued by another merchant ship, were taken to a hospital on their arrival.

No details of the sinking were available.

He found the mother and baby, who weighed eight pounds at birth, apparently none the worse for the harrowing experience which followed the torpedoing of an American passenger-cargo vessel on the Atlantic.

Read Story in Newspapers

Mohorovicic said that when he read a newspaper story Wednesday stating that a baby had been born in a lifeboat he felt certain that it was his wife despite the fact that names were omitted from the account. "You can imagine how I felt," he said.

He was notified last night that his 28-year-old wife, the baby and Visna, a two-year-old daughter, were among 87 survivors of the vessel and he took the first train from New York to Norfolk. Three crewmen were killed and 29 others missing from the ship blasted by an Axis submarine.

Own Ship Torpedoed

Mohorovicic said that his ship was torpedoed Feb. 17 while enroute to this country from Capetown. He was injured and spent several days in a hospital.

Stating that he was "very happy," Mohorovicic said he and his family planned to begin "a new life together" in the United States where everybody and everything is "superlatively splendid."

Waves that were from 15 to 20 feet high tossed the lifeboat about in the darkness when Mrs. Mohorovicic went into labor, according to Dr. L. H. Conly, Brooklyn, ship's doctor, who attended her despite pain from two ribs which he fractured in falling into the boat.

First Bath in Sea Water

The child was born about two and a half hours later, the doctor said, adding that he did not have to bathe the new born babe.

"The sea did that for me," the doctor explained. "He was wringing wet when it was all over. We all were."

The mother had only a portion of a sail for cover and she kept the almost naked baby inside her lifebelt to keep him warm.

A party of 24 had been crowded into the lifeboat for thirteen hours when the baby, who has been named Jesse Roper Mohorovicic, was born. They were at sea in the boat 24 hours before being picked up by a rescue ship.

DOCTOR INJURED IN FALL

Delivers Infant in the Crowded Craft, Lacking Anæsthetics or Proper Equipment.

Norfolk, Va., April 2 (A. P.).—Three members of the crew were killed, twenty-nine were still missing today, and eighty-nine passengers and members of the personnel were safe in port here, following the torpedoing by an Axis submarine of an American passenger-cargo ship.

The torpedoing occurred on Sunday morning and the details of the sinking have not yet been divulged by naval authorities.

Among the survivors reaching here was an eight-pound baby, born in an open lifeboat to Mrs. Desanka Mohorovicic, 28 years old, of New York and already named Jesse Roper.

[Announcement was made on Tuesday of the presence of a newly born baby among the survivors of a torpedoing of a vessel off the Atlantic coast.]

Young Jesse was born thirteen hours after the launching of the lifeboat in which rode twenty-four persons. The mother, wife of an attache of the Yugoslav Consulate of New York, had then been in labor three or four hours.

Dr. Leonard H. Conly of Brooklyn, the ship's doctor, suffered from the fracture of two ribs received in a drop from the ship into the lifeboat.

Only a Medical Kit.

He had no anesthesia and only the simple instruments of the lifeboat's medical kit.

A sail, the only cover at hand—was stretched across one end of the lifeboat as a makeshift protection for the mother, and the job was done.

Jesse did his part by living out the next twenty-four hours until a rescue vessel came, cradled in a woman's turban and tucked beneath his mother's dress against the cold wind of the sea.

The infant, his mother and a two-year-old sister, Visna, were in a Norfolk hospital today, showing no ill effects from the experience.

The crew of the rescue ship and surviving passengers of the torpedoed vessel put together $210 and presented it to Mrs. Mohorovicic. The Norfolk branch of the Navy Relief Society provided a layette.

The doctor, who told the story to newspaper men here, said of Mrs. Mohorovicic:

"She was a brave and lovely woman."

APR 3 1942

The Woman's Story.

Mrs. Mohorovicic told reporters in a combination of halting English and French that she had expected a child to be born this week. "But," she said, "I thought he'd be here in New York—in free America. But it wasn't so badly. We're here, we're well—grace de Dieu."

The blond, husky young woman had had other harrowing experiences on her trip to America.

"We went under bombarding on the way to Cape Town from Ankara where Visna was born," she said. "That was badly, too."

"The sea was very, what you call it, rough," she said describing the height of the waves with sweeping motion of her descriptive hands.

"I was in cabin with her," pointing to Visna. "The torpedo strike. I take her and blankets and start upstairs. The second torpedo, she strike us; I falled down the stairs. See—marks on me," she said, pointing to black bruises on her legs.

Accordingly to Dr. Conly, the mother's ordeal was unexpectedly easy.

"The child was born in two and a half or three hours after labor began," he said.

Holds Baby Within Lifebelt.

"She kept him inside her lifebelt which was like a kangaroo's pouch. It was the only place where he could be kept at all warm. She tried to nurse him. After that first night, when she was too weak to move, she sat up and stayed there the rest of the time holding the almost naked baby against her chest. She is a remarkable woman."

The physician reported that he did not have to bathe the newborn babe.

"The sea did that for me. I didn't have to. He was wringing wet when it was all over. We all were. The worst thing about it it," the doctor continued, "was having to work bent over under the sail covering without any light to work on. Mrs. Mohorovicic was lying on a water keg. While I was working over her it was like being on a scenic railway. We swooped up and down waves that were fifteen or twenty feet high."

Gloucester, N. J., April 2—Battered and set afire by torpedoes from an enemy submarine, a medium-sized Norwegian motor tanker sank under a hail of shells off the Atlantic Coast early on the morning of March 27, the Fourth Naval District announced today.

Eight of the crew of thirty-seven, including most of the ship's officers, are missing and believed dead. The twenty-nine survivors were picked up by a Portuguese freighter after spending about seven and one-half hours in two lifeboats and were brought here March 31.

Shelled Fifty Times

The 58-year-old chief engineer of the tanker said the attack came without warning about 2.30 A. M. The ship was struck by two and perhaps three torpedoes, he said, and was bombarded by about fifty shells before she finally went down.

The first torpedo struck just forward of the bridge on the port side, setting the bridge afire. It was followed almost immediately by a second which struck just behind the amidships section, the chief engineer said.

3 Torpedoes Reporte

The crew abandoned ship within a few minutes after the attack. The submarine then rose to the surface and shelled the burning hulk until it sank five hours later.

One survivor who was in his cabin when the attack began, said a third torpedo hit the ship on the port side, aft, after two lifeboats were launched.

Survivors See Sub

He said the bridge and oil-soaked sections of the ship were ablaze when he reached the deck after the first explosion, and that apparently none of the ship's officers who were on the bridge was saved.

The submarine was sighted by the survivors about two hours after the attack. They said it remained on the scene until about 8 A. M.

New U-Boat Threat Looms In Atlantic

U. S. Navy Steps Up Campaign to Drive Subs From Sea

Washington, April 2 — (AP) — America's anti-submarine campaign is being stepped up rapidly to meet an expected all-out summer drive by 300 to 400 U-boats, reliable sources said today.

The navy announced late yesterday that 28 Axis submarines had ben sunk or presumed sunk by U. S. forces thus far. Naval observers said, however, that the rate of destruction was still too low to check the German drive. They gave this picture of the situation:

Germany had at the very least 120 ocean-going submarines before Dec. 7 and 180 more building for service by midsummer. New evidence indicates that this figure is ultra-conservative, and salvaged parts of destroyed submarines show the Germans have developed very rapid methods of construction.

Although Germany has suffered heavy U-boat casaulties thus far, the rate of sinking has not slowed the present U-boat campaign and would be of dubious effectiveness against a more intense drive.

No Diversion Of Naval Power.

Even so, the Germans have failed to divert U. S. naval strength from more vital war-fronts to form convoys in American waters—the second line in the ocean battle. The number of merchant craft sunk off the Atlantic and Caribbean coasts is approaching the 80 mark, but this rate might prove far from crippling in view of the tremendous ship-building program and development of land transportation facilities to bear some of the load.

The United States is making large increases in patrol forces, particularly in the air, and is developing new methods of locating and destroying U-boats. Placing army planes on the patrol under direct command of the navy has stimulated the submarine hunt. Further large increases in the patrol await only the delivery of anti-submarine craft and the training of crews.

Real Fight Just Beginning.

Naval observers emphasized that while the battle of the American coast is far from won, it is also far from lost. The real fight is just beginning.

Of the total of 28 Axis submarines announced sunk or presumed sunk, seven were in the Pacific. Donald Francis Mason, a 28-year-old Rochester, Minn., naval flier emerged as one of the heroes of the preliminary campaign.

Mason is the Atlantic pilot who recently reported "Sighted sub, sank same." On a later patrol, Mason blew up another submarine with depth charges. He has been awarded a Distinguished Flying Cross, a silver star to the cross and a commission as an ensign.

Another recent sinking in the Atlantic was accomplished chiefly by Ensign William Tepuni of San Francisco. Tepuni bombed a U-boat until it lay helpless on the surface and was finished off the next day by destroyers. He was awarded a Distinguished Flying Cross.

The Navy first said that the Mason and Tepuni attacks "bring to 21 the number of enemy submarine sinkings formally announced by the Navy," adding that "this figure does not include four credited to the Army." Later the Navy total was officially changed to 24 "sunk and presumed sunk."

Locations of the submarines successfully attacked in the Atlantic have not been divulged, but in the Pacific, the Japanese, according to various official announcements, have lost one off the West Coast, two at Pearl Harbor, two in the Marshall Islands, one at Wake Island and one in the Hawaiian area.

Destroyer Farenholt Commissioned By Navy

NEW YORK, April 2 (AP)—Amid the din of workmen's hammers on two new battleships, the Navy today commissioned the 1,650-ton destroyer Farenholt at the Navy Yard, Brooklyn.

Rear Admiral Edward J. Marquart, commandant of the third naval district, told the 200 officers and men and 150 guests that "this ship is being commissioned in the presence of the construction of two of the most modern battleships in the world."

APR 3 1942

The destroyer, completed at a cost of $6,000,000, was launched Nov. 19 by the Bethlehem Steel Corp., at Staten Island. She was handed over to her new commander—whose name is a naval secret—by Capt. Harold V. McKittrick, senior captain of the yard.

The ship was named after the late Rear Admiral Oscar W. Farenholt and a telegram was received at the ceremonies from Rear Admiral Herman F. Farenholt, medical corps, USN, son of the late rear admiral.

Destroyer Is Named Kendrick

SAN PEDRO, Calif., April 2 (AP)—The destroyer Kendrick, first craft of its kind to be built at a Los Angeles shipyard since the first World War, slid down the ways today.

The vessel, named for the late Master Charles S. Kendrick, whose title compares with the Navy's present-day commander, was christened by his granddaughter, Mrs. J. Hanson Delvac of Elmhurst, L. I.

Sub Launched at Groton

NEW LONDON, April 2 (AP)—The submarine Barb was launched at the Electric Boat company yard in Groton, with a brief ceremony today. Scarcely 50 naval officers, their wives and other guests were present along with a large number of Electric Boat employes who gave up part of their 15 minute lunch period to watch.

FINAL CONTRACTS IN SHIP PROGRAM PLACED IN FLORIDA

2,300 Freighters, Tankers to Be Constructed in U. S. in Two Years.

WASHINGTON, April 2.—(AP) Awarding of contracts for history's greatest shipbuilding program—2,300 freighters and tankers of 23,000,000 deadweight tons in two years—was completed today by the Maritime commission.

Final contract in the vast program was for a new six-way shipyard at Panama City, Fla., where the J. A. Jones construction company, Charlotte, N. C., will build 33 emergency freighters of the Liberty ship design.

While the 1942 goal remains 8,000,000 deadweight tons, the 1943 goal has been increased from 10,000,000 tons, the figure established by President Roosevelt immediately after Pearl Harbor, to 13,000,000 tons.

The 23,000,000-ton program for the two-year period does not include more than 700 other craft under commission order, such as tugs, wooden barges and small power boats.

Present schedules call for the delivery of about 750 ships in 1942 and the remainder next year. Delivery of ships reached a one-a-day basis in February, but the program calls for an average of three a day over the two-year period. Peak production, the commission said, is expected to be reached late this year.

Of the merchant vessels under contract, 1,511 are of the Liberty ship design. Designed for mass production, this emergency freighter has a capacity of 10,500 deadweight tons. Tanker contracts call for 313 vessels. The remaining vessels on the program are of various "C" designs, which the commission regards as the finest merchant ships ever constructed.

The Liberty ships were designed primarily for war-time emergency uses, while the standard design "C" vessels are intended as replacements for obsolete ships now in the American merchant marine.

WASHINGTON, April 2—The following War Department communiqué, based on reports received up to 9:30 A. M., was issued today:

1. Philippine Theatre—Aggressive patrol activity on both sides characterized the fighting in Bataan during the past twenty-four hours. There were a number of sharp skirmishes, but no general action. Enemy artillery and dive-bombers shelled and bombed our positions. There were several enemy air raids on our rear installations, beach defenses and troops in forward areas.

Intermittent air attacks on our harbor defenses continued throughout the day and night. Enemy bombers were forced by our anti-aircraft fire to fly at extreme altitudes, and consequently the bombing was inaccurate and ineffective. Hostile batteries on the south shore of Manila Bay shelled Corregidor. No damage was inflicted by either the bombing or the shelling. Our forts returned the fire of the enemy batteries.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

Another War Department communiqué, based on reports received up to 5 P. M., said:

1. Philippine Theatre — Two heavy attacks were made by the enemy last night and this morning on our lines in Bataan. The first assault was made near the center of our positions. The enemy advanced beyond our outpost line from which our troops had been withdrawn. Our artillery laid down a heavy fire on the advanced elements of the Japanese infantry, after which our forces counter-attacked and regained possession of the outposts.

The second attack was begun at about 10 o'clock this morning. Enemy assault troops, supported by a heavy concentration of artillery fire, advanced against the left center of the line held by General Wainwright's American and Philippine troops. Savage fighting ensued and the enemy succeeded in penetrating our main line. In a fierce counter-attack, our forces closed the line, pocketing a considerable number of Japanese units. These hostile troops are now being mopped up.

Although the fighting is still in progress, our main line of resistance has been restored and the enemy advance halted. Japanese losses are believed to have been heavy, while our own casualties were small. During today's fighting hostile planes attacked our front lines and rear areas in Bataan.

Several hostile air raids were made today on Corregidor, resulting in little damage. Our anti-aircraft artillery shot down three heavy Japanese bombers. A fourth enemy bomber, which apparently had not been hit, blew up in mid-air and fell into Manila Bay.

Artillery duels between the guns of our forts and those of Japanese batteries on the south shore of Manila Bay were frequent during the day.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

Chinese

NEW DELHI, India, April 2 (AP)—Chinese Army Burma Headquarters said today in a communiqué:

The Toungoo front was quiet last night.

A town in Northern Burma was bombed by the Japanese for the first time early yesterday afternoon when twenty-seven bombers and fifteen fighters came over the town in three waves. Damage was negligible, although there were some casualties.

The town in Northern Burma again was bombed by Japanese planes about 7:15 P. M. yesterday. There was no damage and no casualties were reported.

British

NEW DELHI, India, April 2 (AP)—A British communiqué on fighting in Burma said today:

There has been no substantial change since yesterday on the Irrawaddy front.

A reconnaissance in force down the railway line destroyed an enemy patrol; otherwise there has been no contact with the enemy.

It is estimated that hostile Burmese forces on this front now number over 4,000. One thousand of them were located yesterday on the west bank of the river opposite Prome. We destroyed by gunfire one infantry gun in their possession.

Enemy reconnaissance aircraft were active yesterday over the whole front. An airdrome in Northern Burma was raided, but so far there are no details of this raid.

LONDON, April 2 (AP)—An Air Ministry communiqué said today:

Last night aircraft of the Bomber Command bombed industrial objectives and communications in West and Northwest Germany.

In occupied territory, bombing attacks were made on the Matford works at Poissy and on docks and shipping at Havre. Mines also were laid in enemy waters.

Fighter Command aircraft attacked objectives in Belgium and Northern France. During these attacks an enemy bomber was destroyed.

Fifteen of our bombers are missing from the night's operations.

APR 3 1942

CAIRO, Egypt, April 2 (AP)—The British Command communiqué said today:

Our fighting patrols went out during the night of March 31-April 1, reaching enemy outpost positions about Aleima and Aggara, south of Tmimi.

The R. A. F. Middle East Command issued the following:

Shipping and harbor installations at Bengazi were effectively raided by bomber aircraft of the Middle East Command during Monday night, March 30-31.

In the forward area in Cyrenaica, our fighter aircraft maintained offensive operations. Enemy ground forces, transport vehicles, camps and road communications in the Martuba, Tmimi and Derna areas were attacked during Tuesday night, March 31-April 1.

Enemy aircraft were active over Malta during March 31 and yesterday, April 1. Our fighter aircraft shot down three JU-88's and another German bomber was destroyed by anti-aircraft gunfire. Other enemy bombers and fighters were severely damaged.

Five of our aircraft are missing.

VALLETTA, Malta, April 2 (Reuter)—A communiqué issued here today said:

Fourteen enemy aircraft were destroyed over Malta on Wednesday and thirteen were probably destroyed without R. A. F. losses. In four mass raids on the harbor area by the German Air Force Wednesday, anti-aircraft artillery destroyed five Junkers-87's, two Junkers-88's and one Messerschmitt-109. R. A. F. fighters destroyed two Junkers-87's, two Junkers-88's and two Messerschmitt-109's and probably destroyed five Junkers-87's and damaged five Junkers-88's, one Junkers-87 and two Messerschmitt-109's without loss to themselves.

Russian

MOSCOW, April 2 (AP)—The Soviet Information Bureau broadcast the following communiqué today:

During the night of April 1-2 no essential changes took place at the front.

One of our units operating in one sector of the Kalinin front in one day wiped out more than 300 enemy men and officers and captured twenty anti-tank guns, ten heavy machine guns and other equipment.

In another sector of the front one of our units annihilated 180 men and officers.

The Soviet Information Bureau tonight issued the following:

During April 2 in several sectors of the front our troops carried out offensive operations and occupied several populated places.

During April 1 fifty-seven German planes were destroyed. Our losses were eleven.

An enemy submarine was sunk in the Barents Sea by our ships.

MOSCOW, Friday, April 3 (AP)—The Soviet Information Bureau issued the following special communiqué today on recent activity on the Leningrad front:

During the period of March 23 to 31, Soviet troops operating on the Leningrad front have wiped out more than 12,000 German troops.

During the same period our troops captured the following booty: 35 guns, 10 tanks, 6 armored cars, 65 mortars, 385 machine guns, 28 anti-tank rifles, 173 automatic rifles, 1,562 rifles, 11 wireless transmitters, 129 motor trucks, 17 motorcycles, 3,000 flares, more than 5,300 hand grenades, 54 cases of grenades, more than 7,600 shells, 158 cases of shells, 11,300 mines, 220 cases of mines and 1,291,300 rounds of ammunition.

Our troops destroyed in the same period 23 planes, 25 guns, 83 trench mortars and 45 lorries containing war material.

Another special communiqué, covering recent action on the Kalinin front, said:

In the period of March 21 to April 1 on the Kalinin front, the Germans lost in killed about 10,000 troops.

During the same period our troops captured the following booty: six tanks, 27 guns, 130 machine guns, 21 trench mortars, 41 automatic rifles, 560 rifles, 1,400 shells, 56,000 rounds of ammunition, four radio transmitters, 36 motor trucks, eight oil tanks, seven parachutes, 130 horses, 300 pairs of skis, one gasoline dump and one foodstuffs store.

During the same period our troops destroyed 35 planes, 39 tanks, 443 lorries, 52 guns, 23 machine guns, 25 trench mortars, 154 ammunition wagons, six ammunition dumps, one foodstuffs storehouse and a great number of blockhouses, dugouts and firing points.

German

BERLIN, April 2 (German broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press)—The German High Command communiqué said today:

In the East the enemy suffered heavy losses in his repeated attacks on several sectors of the front and in offensive operations carried out by German troops military installations in the suburbs of Leningrad were subjected to heavy artillery fire. Effective results could be observed.

The Soviet Air Force yesterday lost forty-five planes in air combat and destroyed on the ground.

In North Africa, airdromes and camps in Marmarica, the desert railway and enemy columns of motor vehicles on the Egyptian coast were bombed effectively.

Military installations in Malta were attacked in waves by strong formations of German bombers and fighters by day and night. Large fires and heavy explosions were caused by direct hits on hangars, billets and planes on the ground.

British anti-aircraft positions were put out of action. In the port of Valletta enemy submarines and destroyers received direct hits. In air combats three British planes were shot down.

Italian bombers attacked the British fortress of Gibraltar with good results.

Nuisance raids by British bombers last night were directed against Western Germany. There were some losses among the civilian population. Material damage was slight. Night fighters and anti-aircraft guns shot down eleven of the attacking bombers.

The war against British supply shipping and the United States in March was very successful. The German Navy and Air Force sank 105 enemy merchant ships totaling 646,900 tons. Of this total, German U-boats accounted for ninety-one ships totaling 584,900 tons. Besides this, thirty-nine additional enemy merchantmen were damaged heavily by bomb and torpedo hits.

Italian

ROME, April 2 (From Italian broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press)—The Italian High Command issued the following communiqué today:

On the Cyrenaica front there were clashes of patrols and normal air activity.

One Curtiss plane was destroyed by German fighter planes and one three-engine British bomber crashed in the region east of Barce.

Strong Axis air formations attacked Malta in night and daylight raids. Our bomber formations have attacked heavily airdrome facilities at Halfaya and Micaba, causing heavy destruction. Two enemy planes were shot down in combat by German fighters.

One of our light patrol vessels was sunk by an enemy submarine in the Central Mediterranean. A great part of the crew was saved.

Gibraltar was attacked and bombed by our air formations. Fires and explosions were observed in the region of the fortress, where military objectives were hit repeatedly in spite of immediate intervention by British fighters, which lost one plane.

Our air formations were able to complete their task and return to their bases without loss.

Standard Oil Accused Of Divided Loyalties

Sen. O'Mahoney Makes Charge as Company Denies Attempt to Secure Monopoly Over Synthetic Rubber Processes.

APR 3 1942

WASHINGTON, April 2. (AP)—Officials of Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) acknowledged today that the company sought in 1939-40 to prevent individual companies from undertaking development of Standard's synthetic rubber for use in tires, but said this policy was adopted in the belief that large scale development could be achieved only by cooperative action of the major rubber companies.

Army, Navy Advice Followed

This testimony was given to the Senate Defense Investigating Committee by W. S. Farish, president, and F. A. Howard, vice-president, of the company.

Denying that the objective of the company's policy was to maintain a monopoly control over synthetic rubber processes acquired from I. G. Farben, the company's German associate, the officials asserted that they had taken the lead in attempting to develop synthetic rubber in the United States and had followed a policy recommended by the Army and Navy munitions board.

"We didn't see how synthetic rubber could ever compete with natural rubber," Howard told the committee, "unless all the interested parties pitched in and tried to make a go of it as a cooperative matter."

As a result of this belief and the concurrence of the Army and Navy, Howard said, when Standard acquired control of Farben's patents in this country in 1939, it issued only "stop-gap" licenses to rubber companies for use in making relatively high-priced specialty items and to fill only their immediate needs until arrangements could be made for an industry-wide, joint venture.

Because Standard's lawyers concluded that such a venture might violate the anti-trust laws, Howard testified, the project was abandoned.

During questioning of the witnesses Senator O'Mahoney (D-Wyo.) told them that "your difficulty proceeds from the fact that you are bound by two loyalties," which he said were "loyalties to I. G. Farben" and "loyalty to the United States and its policies."

His comment was based on a letter, dated Jan. 20, 1941, in which the manager of the Standard Oil development company observed that under 1939 agreements Standard Oil would have to refer Japanese and South American companies to the German concern.

Conflict of Loyalty Denied

Denying that any "conflict of loyalty with the United States" was created by this arrangement, Howard said it grew out of "the simple fact that we did not own the patents in the countries in question, and I. G. did own them."

Howard testified that there was "never at any time" any effort by Standard to control retail prices in licensing agreements.

He acknowledged that Standard did not issue licenses to rubber companies which permitted them to manufacture synthetic rubber for other than their own use.

"As owner of the patents," he said, "we might properly have monopolized the whole business."

Instead, he told the committee, the company issued limited licenses which would enable the rubber companies to manufacture for their own use but not to sell to their competitors, a market which Standard reserved for itself.

After the conclusion of the Standard company's testimony, which had continued for three days, a reporter told Chairman Truman (D-Mo) that he has termed the company's relations with I. G. Farben of Germany "treasonable" after hearing Thurman Arnold, anti-trust chief, testify before the committee last week.

"After hearing Standard's testimony," the reporter asked, "do you still think it's treasonable?"

"I haven't changed my opinion a bit," Truman replied.

Howard told the committee that Standard sought through its license arrangements to prevent "premature development" of tire rubber by the Goodyear Rubber Company because "we were trying to keep the situation open until we could develop some more rational and constructive plan."

"If they undertook an independent development," he said, "it would have made it more difficult to work out a joint development of synthetic rubber in the United States."

Howard identified as his own a 1938 letter deploring German government restrictions on "freedom of action" by Farben in the United States in view of the fact that the rubber companies were going ahead with various types of synthetic rubber.

Howard said Standard had a large investment in the Farben rubber patents and feared that if they were not commercially developed in the United States the market would be taken by others. Farben obtained consent, he said, to license firms in the United States.

"Wasn't it the purpose," O'Mahoney asked, "to see to it that Standard and I. G. beat the rubber companies to it and got control of the field? As owners of these patents you were trying to make these patents stand up, weren't you?"

"Yes," Howard said, "we were certainly trying to do that."

Denies Secret Given Germans

Howard said an erroneous impression had been circulated that his company had turned over "the secret" of Butyl rubber to Germany in 1938.

"It was not a secret," he said, adding that the formula had been set forth in patent applications filed in every country in the world. The formula was developed in 1937, he said.

Senator Mead (D., N. Y.) raised a question as to the future of synthetic rubber, asserting manufacturers would hesitate to go into a business that might collapse after the war. Farish said it would be necessary "to remove the competition of cheap natural rubber" if the synthetic process was to survive the war.

Farish read into the record a recommendation that the synthetic rubber production program be expanded to take care of essential civilian needs as well as military requirements.

"We do not realize what a rubber shortage means to a nation that has built its civilization around the use of 30,000,000 automobiles," he said. "Take them from the highways and we must change many of our habits of life."

Fortunately, he said, the United States had unlimited quantities of raw materials for synthetic rubber, oil and natural gas.

"No other country can create a synthetic rubber industry as speedily or as effectively as the United States," he said.

Claims Nazi Propaganda Written by Wallace Aide

APR 3 1942

WASHINGTON, April 2. (AP)—A member of the Dies committee told the House today that C. Hartley Grattan, economic analyst for the Board of Economic Warfare headed by Vice President Wallace, wrote the foreword to a 1940 German "White Paper" which attempted "to lay the blame for the invasion of Poland on certain American officials.

Denunciation of U. S. Policy

"This foreword," added the committeeman, Rep. Voorhis (D-Calif), "consists all the way through of a vigorous denunciation of this country's foreign policy of support to England and France."

Later Grattan said in a statement that "Mr. Voorhis' interpretation of my foreword is very misleading and unworthy of him. My foreword can only be judged fairly if read as a whole. I strongly criticize the Nazi use of the document. I have always been opposed to Fascism, both abroad and at home. Any implication to the contrary is a gross injustice."

Voorhis emphasized that the foreword was written at a time when Russia and Germany had a non-aggression pact. He noted that Grattan was one of the men mentioned by Rep. Dies (D-Tex) in a letter last Sunday to Vice President Wallace, which charged that 35 officials or employes of the economic warfare board had been linked with Communist-front organizations.

Voorhis made his remarks about the time that the White House was striking out at Dies, chairman of the House committee on un-American activities, William D. Hassett, a presidential secretary, told reporters that Axis radio stations had been repeating the Dies charges against the 35 warfare board officials. Hassett said that a German station, another in Vichy and station Debunk, which purports to be in this country, but actually is in Europe, had broadcast Dies' accusations.

Hassett asserted that the White House was not drawing any conclusions, adding that he thought the "conclusions are quite obvious."

Dies Urges House-cleaning

At Jasper, Tex., Dies replied that the best way to stop Axis powers from quoting such charges is to rid the public payroll of men who have been affiliated with communist-controlled organizations.

Rep. Voorhis, who discussed Grattan in the House today, has not always seen eye to eye with Dies on committee procedure. In fact, he complained earlier in the week that the charges in Dies letter to Wallace had been made without the knowledge of the committee, and without having given a hearing to the men accused.

Today, however, he said he had received information about Grattan which "makes a most serious picture."

"On yesterday," he said, "it was brought to my attention that Mr. C. Hartley Grattan in May of 1940, which was between the time of the signing of the pact between Russia and Germany and the time that Germany attacked Russia, wrote the foreword to the so-called 'German White Paper', which was an attempt to lay the blame for the invasion of Poland on certain American officials, and that this foreword consists all the way through of a vigorous denunciation of this country's foreign policy of support to England and France.

"The German White Paper was distributed in America through Manfred Zapp, the head of Transocean News Service, which was shown conclusively to be a Nazi propaganda agency.

"I understand that the vice-president has stated that thorough investigation will be made of all these charges in order that justice may be done to individuals and the government service protected as well. I believe that in connection with such an investigation this fact about the German White Paper, taken together with the other matters about Mr. Grattan presented in Mr. Dies' letter makes a most serious picture indeed so far as he is concerned."

DIES IS QUOTED BY AXIS RADIO

White House Takes Notice of Row With Wallace.

APR 3 1942

Washington, April 2 (A. P.).—The White House took note today of the controversy between Vice-President Wallace and Representative Martin Dies of Texas by citing a Federal Communications report that two Axis radio stations and one in Vichy had picked up Mr. Dies's charge that thirty-five employees of the Board of Economic Warfare were affiliated with Communist front organizations.

William D. Hassett, an assistant presidential secretary, read excerpts from a report from the FCC monitoring service. The report said that an official German broadcast to North America on Tuesday, another from Vichy on the same day and a third yesterday from station "Debunk," which purports to be in this country, had repeated Mr. Dies's charge.

Mr. Hassett said that the FCC report was being disclosed on his initiative and that he did not know if the President even had seen it. These reports, he said, come to the White House periodically and not necessarily on request.

'Conclusions Are Obvious.'

Mr. Hassett said that the White House was not drawing any conclusions, remarking that he thought that the "conclusions are quite obvious." The official German broadcast, as recorded by the FCC and relayed to the press by Mr. Hassett, carried the caption that "Dies revelation indicts President" and went on to say:

"An old truth has been proved again by developments in the Bureau for Economic Warfare in Washington. By way of Geneva, Switzerland, comes a report of communist domination in this New Deal organization in the American capital.

"The report states thirty-five officials in this bureau have been shown to be members of Stalin's worldwide anti-American Comintern organization. This accusation was made to Vice-President Wallace by Martin Dies, Chairman of the Committee to Combat Un-American Activity."

The report added, Mr. Hassett said, that the Berlin broadcast accused the President and Mrs. Roosevelt of primary responsibility for "this unsavory mess."

Dies Replies From Texas

ORANGE, Tex., April 2 (AP).—The best way to stop Axis powers from quoting material charging the presence of members of Communist-controlled organizations upon the public pay roll is to get these people off the public pay roll, Representative Martin Dies said today.

Speaking by telephone from his lodge in Jasper, Tex., he said in part in reply to the White House announcement:

"It may be true that the Axis powers have quoted from some of our material showing the presence of members of Communist-controlled organizations upon the Federal pay roll. The thirty-five people mentioned in my letter are working for a post-war planning agency. Their activities have nothing to do with winning the war. They are taking advantage of the war effort to lay plans to remake our country. The principal economist for them, Mr. Parmelee, is on record against our church and religion and our form of worship. Certainly the American people expect us to expose these people and get them off the pay roll.

"Are we going to permit government officials to take advantage of the war to defeat our aims and purposes? I shall ask every newspaper to publish in full my letter to Mr. Wallace. That letter contains excerpts from the writings of some of these people. The organization to which they belong, the American League for Peace and Democracy, adopted a resolution at a convention pledging its members to obtain jobs in government service and in defense industries to sabotage our war effort. Should members of this kind of organization hold key positions in our government? I insist that they should not, and I believe that 95 per cent of the American people support me in this position."

PREDICT FEWER SEDITION CASES THAN IN WAR I

Justice Department Officials Point to Change in Conditions

APR 3 194

WASHINGTON, April 2 (AP)—Justice Department officials predicted today that sedition charges filed during the present war would number only a small fraction of those brought during World War 1.

Old Law Off Books

For one thing, they pointed out, the old sedition law was taken off the books after three years. For another,

Federal officials, keeping in mind the mistakes of 1917 and 1918, say they are moving more slowly and carefully today.

Since the outbreak of the war last Dec. 7, four persons have been accused of sedition by the Justice Department, but officials warned that others would follow.

There is not today, as there was 25 years ago, a sedition law by that name. Prosecution for that offense, which can be defined briefly as "excitement of discontent against the Government, or of resistance to lawful authority," can be under either the 1917 Espionage Act or the 1940 Alien Registration Act. Penalties run up to 20 years imprisonment and $10,000 fine.

When the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, feelings flared all over the United States, but probably nowhere stronger than in California. Several persons were seized on sedition charges for speaking against the Government. Atty. Gen. Biddle ordered that he be given the facts in each case, and soon all of the charges were dropped.

Biddle has reiterated on numerous occasions that he was determined to "step carefully and to stamp with a heavy foot."

"By going slowly," he said today, "we expected to get better cases, and we did."

Two of those released early in the war were rearrested this week on the same type of charge originally brought—but on wholly different evidence.

Distinction Made

Biddle makes this distinction between the basis of charges in many first World War cases and the basis which he insists must be established today:

Formerly, private citizens, editors, writers and publishers were prosecuted merely for disagreeing with the Government or criticizing the war effort. Among the more than 2000 arrests under the old sedition law were such cases as a man seized for telling a Red Cross worker, "No soldier will ever see those socks you are knitting." A man was convicted for expressing distaste for the YMCA. A motion picture producer went to prison because he made a picture, "The Spirit of '76," held to have reflected unpleasantly upon our British Allies.

Must Be Willful

Today, the rule is that, to be deemed sedition, an act—that is, an utterance or writing—must be shown to have been willfully designed to cause harm to the United States Government. For that reason, the department expects to show in each case being brought that the utterance or writing was clearly directed to members of the military or naval forces or against persons eligible for those forces.

The law under which charges are being filed are clear on that point. The 1917 act covers "false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies."

Both the 1940 and the 1917 laws also forbid attempts to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny or refusal of duty in the military forces.

Those laws can be enforced fully without impairing free speech, Biddle says. He decries "witch hunts." Mere criticism of the government, no matter how bitter or irresponsible, doesn't constitute sedition unless it clearly gives rise to the danger of an overt act which harm national objectives.

Ebell Citizenship Revoked in Texas

Accused of Remaining Loyal to Nazi Government

EL PASO, Tex., April 2 (AP)—The United States citizenship of Dr. Wolfgang Ebell was revoked today by Federal Judge Charles Boynton after a trial on charges that the 50-years-old German-born physician retained allegiance to the Nazi government.

Ebell was held in jail under $20,000 bond as an enemy alien for action of the enemy alien board on charges of illegally corresponding with the German government.

The doctor was taken into custody some months ago. He was naturalized in 1939.

Witnesses related frequent remarks made by Ebell since he came here in 1937, among them "Hitler some day will rule the world" and "Bah, you Americans. Just you wait."

'Social Justice' Mail Ban Asked in Petition

WASHINGTON, April 2 (AP)—Joseph Goldstein, who said he was a former city magistrate in Brooklyn, N. Y., presented to the Post Office Department today a petition asking that the weekly magazine "Social Justice" be denied the use of the mails.

Goldstein said the petition was signed by approximately 5,000 persons, representing many faiths, including a large number of Catholics.

The petition also was signed by executive officers of the American Protestant Defense League, Goldstein said, adding that all of the signers lived in the New York area. He left the petition with Vincent Miles, solicitor of the department.

The department made no official comment on the petition. Goldstein said he would send copies of it to the Justice Department and to the White House.

The petition said "Social Justice," published at Royal Oak, Mich., entered the mails as second class matter.

FBI to Seize 1,000 For Draft Violations

SAN FRANCISCO, April 2. (AP)—The FBI, taking note of hundreds of cases of either careless disregard or wilful violations of the Selective Service Act, ordered the arrest today of 1,000 northern Californians.

Complaints filed by Nat J. L. Pieper, head of the San Francisco FBI field office, allege a variety of violations — failure to register, neglecting to provide draft boards with address changes, failure to answer questionnaires, submission of false and misleading information and refusing to report for physical examination or induction

Local police were making the arrests.

Conviction carries a penalty of up to 5 years in prison or a fine of $10,000, or both.

In previous action against draft law violators, steps were taken against only a few at a time.

ASK COMPLETE TRIAL BE GIVEN TO SEA OTTER II

Senators Charge Navy and Board Hostile to Experimental Ship

WASHINGTON, April 2 (AP—A Senate naval affairs subcommittee urged today that a "full, complete and sympathetic" trial be given to the Sea Otter II, experimental cargo ship powered with automobile engines.

Filed by Gillette

The committee, in a report filed by Chairman Gillette (D-Iowa), said a series of secret hearings had convinced members that certain governmental agents in the Navy and Maritime Commission "had preconceived convictions against any value in this type of construction" and that "they have evinced and continue to evince a hostility to the proposal and its sponsors."

The idea of the Sea Otter is credited to Comdr. Hamilton V. Bryan of the Navy.

Of radical design, with propellor located amidships, the ship was hailed last summer after tests of a scale model as possibly the answer to submarine warfare. President Roosevelt at a press conference spoke enthusiastically of its possibilities.

A full-size ship of about 240 feet was then built at Orange, Tex., and was turned over to the Navy on Oct. 20. The craft was taken on a trial run under Bryan's direction to Charleston, S. C., and has been tied up at the Navy Yard there since.

Admitted Doubts

Saying that Bryan, the inventor, "was given to understand that he was not wanted on the gounds where the boat was being constructed," the committee said that Eads Johnson, in charge of construction, testified that he had "serious doubts as to the feasibility of the boat" but was willing to reserve judgment on it until after it had been given a trial.

The committee cited a report of the board of directors of Ships, Inc., government corporation formed to build Sea Otters. The directors included Secretary of the Navy Knox and Chairman Emory S. Land of the Maritime Commission.

This report said that the size of the small vessel was against its satisfactory operation in the North Atlantic or in high seas, that it was subject to rolling and that its draft was much greater than had been anticipated because propellers were projected down from the hull.

Other disadvantages listed were that the crew required per ton of cargo was high in comparison with other ships and that the amount of steel required to construct it was high per ton of cargo.

Advantages Listed

Among advantages listed was the fact that the ship could get propulsion machinery from the automobile industry, avoiding conflict with Navy and Maritime Commission demands for heavier engines, that it could be built with steel from strip mills, and that it could be constructed with simpler hoisting equipment than other vessels.

Due to low visibility and short length, the report said, the ship would not be an easy target for submarines. Due to standardization, it could be constructed rapidly and relatively inexpensive propulsion machinery used, the report added.

The committee said its inquiry showed that boats could be built in from four to six weeks and that production could easily be stepped up to one a day. It said proponents had met objections as to the vessel's draft by submitting new designs under which the propellers would not extend substantially below the bottom.

Senators Hit Bottlenecks In Plane Program

Probers Claim Production Lags Because of Poor Planning.

APR 3 1942

WASHINGTON, April 2 (AP)—The Senate Defense Investigating Committee, blaming the situation on poor planning, reported today that warplane assembly lines in some of the bigger factories weer operating below top speed because vital parts were not ready on time.

In a formal report to the Senate, the committee said a sub-committee which recently visited the West Coast had found that the fault lay largely in the government's failure to bring about expansion of the facilities of upwards of 4,000 subcontractors who supply parts.

"A poor job of over-all planning, from aluminum ingots to finished aircraft, by the armed services and the old OPM (office of production management) must be blamed for the situation," the committee said. "The usual red tape and delays in making contracts also were partly responsible."

Commenting that it had been informed the War Production Board "still does not have a single top notch aircraft production man in its setup," the committee recommended that the production agency draft one immediately.

Furthermore, it urged that "instead of wasting its energies on a generalized plea for 'all out production' which has confused management, labor and the public, the WPB concentrate its efforts on breaking those bottlenecks which are, in the aircraft industry to the committee's certain knowledge and probably in other fields, really holding up peak production."

Employes in most West Coast plants, the committee reported, were working 48 hours a week and only one employer advocated modification of the 40-hour week law under which workers receive time and a half pay for all work in excess of that period.

Profiteering Attempt Charged

Discussing the production of aluminum and magnesium, the committee recommended that the defense plants corporation reject a proposal by the Basic Magnesium, Inc., at Las Vegas, N. M., that the government pay $1 a ton royalty, plus the costs of quarrying, for ores from the company's deposits. It said nearby quarries were being leased for 25 cents a ton royalty.

"This proposed lease appears to the subcommittee as on of the most flagrant attempts at war profiteering to come to its notice," the report said.

Summing up its inquiry into the construction of several magnesium and aluminum plants with government aid, the report continued:

"Evidence gathered by the subcommittee indicated there is still something seriously wrong in the light metals sections of the war production board, successor of the old OPM section, which failed so miserably to anticipate and prepare for the greatly increased demand for these metals."

The committee found that construction in West Coast ship yards was progressing satisfactorily on the whole and added that labor relations in the plants visited were "excellent."

Defense Labor Plan Offered By Hillman

APR 3 1942

Proposes Consolidation of All Federal Defense Training Agencies.

WASHINGTON, April 2—(AP)—A 14-point plan to mobilize men and women for work in war industries, including government power to transfer workers from one factory to another, was laid before the Senate Labor Committee today by Sidney Hillman, labor director of the War Production Board who said 8,000,000 more war workers would be needed this year.

Consolidation of all federal defense training agencies under a unified command also was part of the program, and some members of the committee promptly told Hillman that he should be the generalissimo in charge of recruiting, training and placing defense workers.

"You asked for it," said Senator McKellar (D-Tenn).

Hillman, on leave from the presidency of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers (CIO), made the plan public after he was questioned about it during a hearing on McKellar's bill to abolish the National Youth Administration and the Civilian Conservation Corps, a proposal which Hillman opposed. It was not made clear whether Hillman was the author of the program, or what other officials may have endorsed. It is understood, however, that a proposal of this nature has been submitted to President Roosevelt.

Defends NYA

The NYA, Hillman contended, was serving a useful purpose by training defense workers. He is a member of the NYA's advisory committee.

"The manpower training program cannot afford the delay which will result if we slow down or stop one of our training agencies and transfer the important load it carries to another organization," he said.

President Roosevelt already has gone on record in opposition to McKellar's bill and today, in observance of the CCC's ninth anniversary, he declared "There is a real place for the CCC during this emergency and it will be called upon more and more to perform tasks which will strengthen our country."

The chief executive's statement was made in a letter read during an anniversary celebration at Fort Hunt, CCC camp in nearby Virginia, attended by Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator, and J. J. McEntee, the CCC national director.

Hillman's Plan

Hillman's 14-point plan follows:

1. Directives should be sent to all war contractors that all skilled craftsmen must be employed at jobs utilizing their best skills. To insure compliance with this directive, the utilization of a staff of plant inspectors is required with the authority to review as frequently as deemed necessary detailed plant operations. Provision must be made for compulsory acceptance by the plant management of the recommendations of government plant inspectors relative to the utilization of skilled workers and of training programs necessary for training within the plant of supervisory personnel, professional and technical personnel, of semi-skilled workers being up-graded to take on skilled jobs, and of beginners.

2. Procurement officers and other persons placing contracts should be directed to keep informed of and give due consideration to the labor supply situation in communities in which they are planning the placement of contracts. Representatives of the labor division should be consulted in the initial stages of all contract negotiations.

3. The President should issue an executive order centralizing control of all federal agencies engaged in defense training.

4. The President should issue an executive order designating the U. S. Employment Service under the direction and supervision of the war production board as the single agency to control recruitment and placement of workers in critical occupations essential to war production.

5. The War Production Board should set up the mechanism necessary to establish priorities of production by items of equipment and priorities of plants manufacturing such equipment in order that proper labor priorities may be determined.

6. Authority should be obtained for transferring workers among employers in accordance with the needs of war production program. Such authority should include provision for protection of seniority and other rights acquired by workers being transferred as well as transportation costs.

7. The War Production Board should direct all contracting departments and agencies to take the necessary action to insure the full utilization of the local labor supply, including women and minority groups.

Housing for War Workers

8. In-migrant war workers should have first call on all war housing. The bulk, if not all, of war housing should be rented to war workers without requirement compelling them to purchase such housing. In more critical areas, dormitories should be provided to accomodate workers whose families have been left in their former homes. In addition, authority should be obtained to requisition existing housing space for war workers.

9. To prevent delays in war production through the breakdown of local transportation systems, action should be taken: to stagger hours for departments of large industries, schools, office workers, and shoppers; and to obtain greater utilization of rail services, intercity and sight-seeing busses and other means of transportation used for services not esesntial to the war effort.

10. Legislation should be secured authorizing the War Production Board to mobilize a mobile labor crops of such size and in such skilled occupations as are deemed necessary for the prosecution of the war effort.

11. The War Production Board should curtail less essential production and services if and when necessary to meet the man-power problem of war production.

12. A national manpower board should be promptly established.

13. Man power boards should, among other things, promptly consider the realistic and practical determination of the military needs of the war and navy on one hand and industrial needs on the other. This consideration should include controls necessary to prevent wastage of skills through voluntary enlistment in the Army and Navy.

14. The necessary action should be taken to establish wage stabilization agreements wherever feasible.

Vicovari Safe, Badly Wounded

Ambulance Driver Writes From Nazi Prison Camp

NEW YORK, April 2 (AP) — Unheard from since last summer and believed lost on a sunken German raider, Francis J. Vicovari, a driver for the British-American Ambulance Corps, today was reported safe, but badly wounded, in a German prison camp.

In a letter to William V. C. Ruxton, president of the corps, Vicovari, who was a passenger aboard the shelled and mined Egyptian liner Zamzam when she was sunk April 17, 1941, wrote that he expected to be able to walk normally in about a year.

The letter said that about 3000 men were in the camp and that medical and food parcels were a godsend.

Vicovari failed to mention Edward Laughinghouse, Wilson (N. C.) tobacconist, who also has been missing since the Zamzam was sunk. Vicovari was a Manhattan resident.

President To Let Weddell Retire

Washington, April 2 (AP)—President Roosevelt, the White House disclosed today, has agreed to the retirement of Alexander W. Weddell as Ambassador to Spain.

Weddell, now in this country on leave, notified the President on March 28 that he was preparing to undergo an operation and his physician said a lengthly period of convalescence and observation would be necessary afterward.

The envoy asked permission to retire effective upon expiration of his leave. In a letter of reply dated yesterday, the President said he felt it necessary to accept the application.

MIAMI PAPERS AID CUBA

They Send Newsprint to Havana to Ease Shortage

MIAMI, Fla., April 2 (AP)—The "good-neighbor" policy received a practical demonstration here today by Miami's newspapers going to the aid of their Havana contemporaries.

The Miami Daily News and The Miami Herald are sending 250 tons of newsprint to newspapers in the Cuban capital to relieve a critical shortage.

Havana newspapers have agreed to combine in one consolidated edition during the emergency. The acute Cuban newsprint shortage is due to lack of shipping facilities.

The State Department handled the arrangements for shipment.

Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, told of the Havana shortage at his press conference today, and said that he was glad action had been taken which would assure newsprint for the papers after April 6.

Canadian Theatres Ban All Lew Ayres' Films

TORONTO, April 2 (AP)—All movies featuring Lew Ayres, a conscientious objector to bearing arms for the United States, are being recalled from the 150 Canadian theatres of the Famous Player corporation, it was announced today by Bernard Geldsaler, booking manager.

Ayres Starts Objector Duty

[By the Associated Press]

Wyeth, Ore., April 2—Work in the timbered Cascade Mountain country started today for Hollywood's Lew Ayres, who chose life in a conscientious objectors' camp rather than enter military service.

The slim, 33-year-old motion-picture star of "All Quiet on the Western Front" and the "Dr. Kildare" series turned in last night with some forty dormitory mates who came from farms, work benches and office jobs.

Work Routine Outlined

From now until the end of the war Ayres will arise at 6 A. M. and leave for the woods at 7.30 to hew trails, make clearings and—if need be—fight forest fires.

He has another assignment, that of first aid, which he shares with another enrollee.

His work day will end at 5 P. M. and his light must be out by 10 P M. Three times a week he will be permitted to leave camp for walks in the woods.

Stepping from the train at Cascade Locks yesterday, he came the half-dozen miles to the camp in the car of the Rev. Mark Shock, Church of the Brethren minister and camp superintendent. He carried his suitcase to the office and registered as enrollee No. 171.

Some Hope Seen That India May Accept Dominion Offer

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

Some hope that India might still be persuaded to accept the offer of Dominion status was injected into the crisis today by British Envoy Sir Stafford Cripps, who announced in New Delhi that "with good will we may be able to solve the difficulties."

Thus the world has an eleventh-hour reprieve from a possible tragedy, which would be as much military as political. In view of the danger of failure to reach agreement many readers are asking what is likely to happen if that unhappy position is reached. Well, the answer to that is rather a tall order to fill, especially when we are talking about a country so inflammable as India, but there are some things which stand out starkly. For instance:

Since the Indian Nationalists have made co-operation with Britain in the war effort dependent on solution of their claim for independence, they presumably would return to passive resistance. This would create a grave weakness in one of the most important Allied bases.

Non-co-operation would cut down the number of native troops available to Britain to stand off invasion. Moreover, it might affect the war industries—and India is one of the great and strategically situated arsenals of the United Nations.

All this naturally would encourage the Japanese to try invasion of India, and they need mighty little encouragement. Should they be successful it would create the possibility of a junction between them and Hitler in the Middle East—a nasty situation for the Allies.

Would Be Blow to Allies.

In short, it would represent a set-back of unpredictable proportions to the Allies, and a corresponding victory for the Axis.

Several readers of this column are asking whether there is danger of a revolution in India. I should say that the chances are against any widespread revolt so long as Gandhi retains his grip on his vast following. He is against the use of force in any form.

Of course, in a country as vast as India, with a population of 390,000,000, there is always possibility of trouble in one place or another. In this connection one recalls that on March 10 Mohammed Ali Jinnah, president of the All-India Moslem League, announced that if Britain's proposals were detrimental to Moslem interests, there would be a Moslem "revolt." His statement was widely regarded in London as being made in deadly earnest.

My observation is that the most troublesome spot is in Bengal Province, of which the great metropolis of Calcutta is the capital. Here lies most of the sedition which is to be found in India. It is unfortunate that Bengal is just across the bay from Burma, where the Japs are continuing their successes, since it is likely that Bengal would be the place they would try to land if they should attempt invasion. They naturally would hope that they would encounter slight resistance from the natives, and might even get help.

Danger in Northwest.

Another danger, as I have mentioned before, would be along the northwest frontier, up by the Khyber Pass, from the wild tribesmen. The Nazis have been working on these barbaric warriors, who are all set to take advantage of any trouble in India for an attack on the frontier settlements.

A brighter side is presented by the native princes, whose peoples constitute close to a quarter of India's population, as they might be expected to stand solidly with Britain. As a matter of fact, these vastly rich potentates undoubtedly would be happy to escape the establishment of dominion status in British India.

Many of them are virtually absolute rulers, so far as concerns their internal affairs, and have the power of life and death over their subjects. Democracy wouldn't please a lot of them, although some of the great princes are very liberal and progressive.

One also would expect the Sikhs, the great warrior race, to stand by the British. They total 4,335,000.

In any event, as already stated, with peace-minded leaders like Gandhi in the saddle, there is no present reason to anticipate any widespread trouble.

England's No. 1 Churchman Proposes 'Withering Capital' As Keystone In Christian Program For A Post-War World

(When the liberal Dr. William Temple became the 89th Archbishop of Canterbury and primate of all England last February his No. 1 task was to plan the church program after the war. His predecessor had stepped aside so that a younger man could undertake this tremendous job. Here in an article condensed from "Christianity and Social Order," a new issue in the British Penguin book series, Dr. Temple outlines governmental objectives to which he feels Christians are entitled.)

APR 3 1942

BY DR. WILLIAM TEMPLE
Archbishop of Canterbury

Cable to Wide World Features

LONDON—Christians are entitled to call upon their government to set before itself the following objectives and conditions, pursuing them as steadily and rapidly as opportunity permits.

1. Every child should find itself a member of a family housed with decency and dignity so that it may grow up unspoiled by underfeeding or overcrowding by dirty and drab surroundings, or monotony of environment.

2. Every child should have the opportunity of education until his years of muturity, so planned as to allow for his peculiar aptitudes. This education should throughout be inspired by faith in God and find its focus in worship.

3. Every citizen should be sesure in possession of such income as will enable him to maintain a home and bring up children.

4. Every citizen should have a voice in the conduct of the business or industry carried on by means of his labor, and the satisfaction of knowing that his labor is directed to the well-being of the community.

5. Every citizen should have sufficient daily leisure, with two days of rest in seven; and if an employe, an annual holiday with pay to enable him to enjoy a full personal life.

6. Every citizen should have assured liberty in forms of freedom of worship, of speech and of assembly.

The aim of a Christian social order is the fullest possible development of individual personality in the widest and deepest possible fellowship.

Possible means of advancing our sixfold objective:

1. We need more provision of decent flats or houses near places where men work, and at rent within their compass. There should be a regional commissioner of housing, with power to say that land shall be used for this purpose. If well established vested interests are disturbed, there should be compensation.

Family allowances — perhaps in form of food and clothes coupons having the value of money — should be paid by the state to the mother for every child after the first two; wages should be maintained at a level sufficient for a family of four.

2. Our principle should be that enunciated by the Education act of 1918: "Every citizen until the age of eighteen should be regarded primarily as a subject of education, not primarily a factor in industry."

3. It is most uneconomical to maintain men in idleness, and the fact of being useless and unwanted is morally the most destructive element in unemployment. The state should maintain works beneficial to the community, which it would expand or contract according to demand for labor.

4. We urge a specially created Planning Authority. This should regulate articles of association of limited liability companies and should be instructed to secure that labor is effectively represented on their directorates. There should also be provesion for one or more directors to represent public interest.

5. In some industries it would be necessary to "stagger" the days. But in most, the whole business could close down for Saturday and Sunday. Incidentally, there would be a better chance of restoring to Sunday its character as a day of worship and rest if there is full opportunity on Saturday for exercise, fresh air and amusement.

We come now to the question of how we should set about securing these various objectives.

It is not desirable to eliminate the profit motive altogether. Room must be made for reasonable satisfaction of self interests. But above all we should seek to end the right to bequeath from generation to generation a poyer to levy private taxes on industry in the form of dividends, thus maintaining a shareholding class. I suggest for consideration the following:

(A) Wherever limitation of liability is granted a minimum rate of dividends should be fixed. To secure this, articles of association should provide for allocation of surplus profits for such purposes as (1) a wage equalization fund for the maintenance of wages in bad times; (2) a dividend equalization fund; (3) a fund for extension, as distinct from renewal, of fixed capital.

(B) Though it is true that the state already checks unlimited inheritance by death duties, this does not go to the root of the matter. I prefer the principle of "withering capital," in accordance with which, as soon as interest paid on any investment is equal to the sum invested, the principal should be reduced by a specified amount each year until the claim of the investor to interest or divident was extinguished.

Those who accept the existing system naturally ask what compensation on the side of losses will be given to set off restrictions on the side of gains. But our whole contention is that the existing system is unjust and heavily weighted in favor of capital.

(C) It must be recognized that economic problems of the nation are bound up with problems of internation trade. It is quite unreasonable to make political and economic frontiers identical. We must learn to treat questions of commercial-policy as matters to be decided not by national governments but by international authority.

(D) Money is primarily an intermediary. This strongly suggests it would not be possible to make a living, let alone a fortune, out of its manipulation. When money or an effective substitute is created and lent by a book entry, as may be the case in the issue of credit, it seems that no more charge is ethically defensible than what will cover the cost of administration, perhaps one-half or two-thirds per cent. But no private person or group would find here any incentive to embark on it.

(E) Land legislation of the Old Testament rests on the principle that land in a special sense belong to God. There is good reason to insist more strongly on this principle. In the case of urban sites it will lead toward public ownership. There is no reason why we should pay certain citizens large sums of money for merely owning land on which our cities are built.

In the case of rural land, certainly the existing rights of landlords are excessive if the social function is taken as the justifying correlative of rights of ownership.

I have offered the suggestions in answer to the frequent challenge, What would you do?

Let no one quote this as my conception of a political program which Christians ought to support. There neither is nor can be any such program.

I offer it as a Christian program.

COL. EUGENE L. EUBANK, COMMANDER OF THE LADS WHO MANNED THE ARMY'S B-17'S IN THE FIRST THREE MONTHS OF WAR, TOLD REPORTERS THAT CRIMMINS DID AN EXCEPTIONAL JOB IN TAKING PLANES FROM BURNING HANGARS AT CLARK FIELD.

APR 3 1942

GETTING CRIMMINS TO DISCUSS HIS ACTIONS WAS SOMETHING ELSE AGAIN. A PERSONABLE, LOW-VOICED TEXAN WHO CONSIDERS THE PAST AS PAST AND PREFERS TO TALK ABOUT WHAT'S IN STORE FOR THE JAPANESE, HE DID--BRIEFLY AND UNEASILY--DISCUSS MANILA.

HE RECALLED THAT WORD SCARCELY HAD REACHED MANILA OF THE JAPANESE ATTACK ON PEARL HARBOR WHEN A CLOSE-FLYING FORMATION OF 54 PLANES APPEARED OVER CLARK FIELD.

"AT FIRST EVERYBODY SAID THEY MUST BE U.S. NAVY PLANES," SAID CRIMMINS, "BUT IN A FEW SECONDS THE BOMBS BEGAN TO FALL. THE JAPS EVIDENTLY HAD PLANNED THE RAID FOR THE NOON HOUR, BUT WERE LATE EITHER BECAUSE THEY FORGOT ABOUT DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME OR BECAUSE THEY HOPED TO CATCH OUR MEN LOUNGING AROUND AFTER LUNCH.

"THERE WAS NO MISTAKING THE FACT THEY WERE AIMING FOR THE MESS HALLS AND LIVING QUARTERS.

"I HAPPENED TO BE ON THE FIELD AND, WHEN I SAW A HANGAR BURNING, I RAN TO GET MY PLANE OUT. EXPLOSIVES WERE GOING OFF AT THE REAR OF THE HANGAR, BUT I GOT INTO THE PLANE AND, IN SPITE OF SOME DAMAGE, GOT A COUPLE OF THE ENGINES STARTED AND TAXIED HER OUT.

"THEN I HEARD STRANGE NOISES. I OPENED THE WINDOW AND STUCK OUT MY HEAD--AND HERE CAME A PLANE DIVING STRAIGHT AT ME, ITS NOSE SPOUTING A FIERY STREAM OF BULLETS.

"I TRIED TO TURN MY PLANE'S TAIL TOWARD THE ONCOMING ENEMY SO I COULD MAKE THE MOST OF ITS ARMOR PROTECTION. BUT JUST AS I GOT PARTLY TURNED, THERE CAME A PLANE FROM ANOTHER DIRECTION.

"I TAXIED TOWARD AN ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUN, HOPING TO GET SOME PROTECTION THERE. BUT THE JAPANESE CENTERED THEIR FIRE ON THE GUN AND STRAFED THE GUN CREW AND ME. WHEN AN INCENDIARY BOMB PARTICLE STRUCK MY CONTROL BOARD, I LEFT THE PLANE AND SCRAMBLED INTO A DITCH NEAR THE GUN EMPLACEMENT.

APR 3 1942

"EACH TIME A PLANE HAD PASSED OVER FAR ENOUGH SO THAT IT COULDN'T HIT ME I JUMPED OUT OF THE DITCH SO I COULD SEE WHAT DIRECTION THE OTHERS WERE COMING FROM AND WARN THE GUN CREW.

"THEY GOT ME IN THE HEAD, CHEST, ARM, HAND AND FOOT, AND SOME SHRAPNEL HIT MY LEG. I'VE FLOWN TWICE IN JAVA SINCE THEN, BUT MY LEFT HAND STILL ISN'T MUCH GOOD AND I HAVE TO CONTINUE TREATMENTS FOR IT. I'M STILL LOOKING FOR A CHANCE TO GET EVEN WITH THOSE JAPS."

CRIMMINS AND SEVERAL OTHERS RECEIVED THEIR MEDALS IN JAVA IN A CEREMONY WHICH TOOK PLACE JUST AFTER AN ENEMY AIR RAID.

TWO RECIPIENTS OF THE ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART WERE PRIVATE ROBERT CHOPPING OF GREELEY, COLO., AND SERGEANT W. L. GLFORD (NO ADDRESS GIVEN).

APR 3 1942

BLACK-HAIRED LIEUT. VICTOR PINCH, A WEST TEXAN WHO WAS CO-PILOT OF THE PLANE ON WHICH THEY WERE GUNNERS, SAID:

"I WAS TOO BUSY TO SEE WHAT THEY WERE DOING. BUT AFTERWARD I WAS TOLD THAT CHOPPING GOT HIT IN THE ARM AND WAS KNOCKED OUT OF THE GUN TURRET BY A FUSILLADE THAT ALSO DAMAGED ONE OF THE GUNS. CHOPPING REENTERED THE TURRET AND, WITH ONLY ONE ARM, MANNED THE REMAINING GUN UNTIL HE DROPPED UNCONSCIOUS.

APR 3 1942

"OLFORD, THE REAR GUNNER, WAS SHOT THROUGH THE CHEST, CLOSE TO THE LUNG, AND IN THE ARM. HE DRAGGED HIMSELF FORWARD IN THE PLANE TO GET ANOTHER MAN TO TAKE HIS PLACE.

"THIS ACTION WAS OVER CELEBES LATE IN JANUARY. OUR THREE PLANES FINALLY GOT AWAY FROM THE NINE ATTACKING JAPANESE PLANES. PRETTY BADLY BULLET-RIDDLED, WE MADE A CRASH LANDING ON CELEBES.

"THE DUTCH HELPED US TAKE THE WOUNDED TO A HOSPITAL. WHEN THEY DRAGGED CHOPPING AND OLFORD OUT OF THE PLANE THEY LOOKED CUT TO PIECES. BUT BOTH RECOVERED AND, WHAT'S MORE, CHOPPING ALREADY IS IN COMBAT AGAIN." #

HEROIC BATTLE BY PEARY CREW

Tanker Pecos Destroyed While Carrying Several Hundred Langley Survivors

APR 4 1942

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON, April 3.—(AP)—Destruction of three United States naval vessels by Japanese aerial bombardment with an estimated loss of more than 700 officers and men was disclosed by the Navy tonight in a tragic account of bitter battling against overwhelming enemy air superiority.

The ships were:

The historic, 11,050-ton aircraft tender Langley, once converted from a collier to become this country's pioneer aircraft carrier, and recently converted into a tender to serve sea as well as air planes; sunk off Java in late February.

The 1,190-ton destroyer Peary, oft-bombed unit of the Asiatic fleet which was attacked in harbor at Darwin, Australia, about Feb. 19, and fought by her men until her old-fashioned flush deck was awash. Loss of life was understood to be light.

The 5,400-ton tanker Pecos, which was heavily bombed and finally sunk early in March, a few days after the loss of the Langley, survivors of which she was carrying to port.

What made the loss of the Pecos doubly bitter was the fact that she was loaded with several hundred survivors of the Langley. The one-time aircraft carrier, converted to a tender so that she could fuel and service seaplanes, had gone down with the loss of only 14 men.

Transferred to Tanker

Destroyers picked up the hundreds of others, and, presumably having combat duties ahead, later transferred them to the Pecos and that vessel, normally employed in fueling fleet units in the southwestern Pacific, then was attacked and sunk. Personnel losses when the tanker went down were reported at two thirds of the total personnel of the Langley and Pecos.

Both the Peary and Langley were veterans of earlier engagements in the Pacific war. In fact, by mid-January, the Japanese had thrice boasted that they had sunk the Langley, but naval officials said that up to that time not a bomb had touched her.

The Peary had been bombed in Manila bay in the Philippines soon after war broke out, and had been repaired and given convoy duty and been bombed again. But not until the violent attack at Port Darwin did she finally go down and then, the Navy said, gun crews fought her "until they were forced by rising water to leave their stations."

The loss of these three ships raised to a total of 25 the number of naval losses during the war.

Two Commanders Rescued

Two of the commanders of the three ships were rescued. They were Commander Robert P. McConnell of the Langley, San Diego, Calif., and Commander Elmer P. Abernethy of the Pecos, Los Angeles, Calif. Lieut. Comdr. John Michael Bermingham of New York City, commander of the Peary, was killed.

The communique reporting the loss of the vessels was accompanied by a statement by Capt. Felix B. Stump who praised especially the heroic action of the Peary's crew and said that "no man abandoned ship until the ship sank completely from under them." A day or so ago Stump had told reporters how one man from the ship, not then identified, had fired his gun until the water lapped at his knees, then swam ashore through flaming oil and suffered such severe burns he died.

Text of Communique

The communique, No. 65:

"Southwest Pacific:

"1. The United States aircraft tender Langley, the naval tanker Pecos and the destroyer Peary were sunk by the enemy in the vicinity of northern Australia and waters south of Java in late February and early March.

"2. A number of survivors from these ships were rescued and reached port safely. The next of kin of all personnel lost in the Pecos have been notified. The next of kin of those lost in the Langley and Peary either already have been notified or will be notified as soon as information is available.

"3. Official reports from Tokyo claimed the sinking of the Langley at least three times during the first month of the war, during which period the Langley was not damaged. She was sunk after a prolonged attack by the enemy south of Java in late February. Except for about a dozen men, all Langley personnel survived the attack and were transferred to the Pecos which was itself sunk a few days later.

"4. The Pecos, a small tanker, employed in supplying fuel to units of our fleet in the Far East, was sunk in early March.

Peary Damaged Earlier

"5. The Peary, a World war destroyer which received minor damage in the Japanese bombing attacks on Cavite immediately after the outbreak of the war, was sunk in the harbor at Darwin about Feb. 19. The Peary had participated in many of the offensive actions of our destroyers in the Far East. Observers who witnessed the last engagement of the Peary described the conduct of her crew as beyond all praise. Gun crews remained at their battle stations continuing their fire until they were forced by rising water to leave their stations. No officer or man left the ship until it sank under him. A number of survivors were later rescued.

"6. War conditions in the southwest Pacific have greatly complicated and delayed reports of casualties, and the public is urged to refrain from initiating individual inquiries regarding casualties. The next of kin of all casualties are always notified by telegram as soon as possible.

"7. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Served as Collier

The Langley, displacing 11,050 tons, was formerly the fleet collier Jupiter. Launched in 1912, she served as a collier until March, 1920, when she was taken out of commission to be converted into an aircraft carrier. In 1937 she was further modified and reclassed as an aircraft tender.

The Pecos, a 5,400-ton craft, was launched in 1921. She was 475 feet overall, 56 feet in the beam, and was armed with four 5-inch and two 3-inch guns. She could carry 7,850 tons of oil, exclusive of her own fuel.

The destroyer Peary, with a standard displacement of 1,190 tons, was 314 feet four inches long, 30 feet 8-inches in the beam, and her main armament was four four-inch guns.

Converted in 1922

In 1922, when the Langley was converted to an aircraft carrier she was renamed the Langley in honor of Professor Samuel P. Langley, aviation pioneer. Five years later the already historic vessel became a seaplane tender and in that capacity she carried a normal complement of 64 officers and 648 enlisted men.

The tanker Pecos carried a normal complement of 15 officers and 302 enlisted men. The flush deck, four stacker Peary, named in honor of the Arctic explorer Robert E. Peary, normally carried nine officers and 118 enlisted men.

The normal complements of the ships did not mean that there were necessarily that number of men on board the vessels at the time of the sinkings but the numbers reflected approximately the actual personnel at those times.

In his graphic personal account of the losses of the vessels, Capt. Stump, who has just returned from the southwest Pacific area where he was attached to the Allied headquarters staff in Java, recalled that the Peary was bombed in Manila bay, the Philippines, soon after the war broke out.

"A number of her officers and enlisted personnel wounded then were transferred to the naval hospital and later evacuated to the south on a hospital ship that went in to take out badly wounded," Stump said.

"She later arrived in Darwin after being bombed several times en route. She was repaired and was again bombed while on convoy trip. She was finally sunk in a heavy bombing at Port Darwin.

Crew's Heroism Praised

"Three doctors who witnessed the bombing of the Peary at Darwin from a hospital ship anchored nearby have reported the heroic conduct of the Peary's crew during this terrific attack. They particularly commented on the heroism of the gun crew who remained at their stations firing their anti-aircraft guns until the water came up around them, and then swam away as the ship went down. No men abandoned ship until the ship sank completely from under them."

Taking up the cases of the Langley and Pecos, Capt. Stump said that "the Langley was reported from Tokyo as having been sunk three times prior to the middle of January. During this time the Langley was not hit by a single bomb."

"The Langley," Stump continued "was sunk by bombs south of Java with the loss of only 14 men after a prolonged attack.

"The survivors were picked up by two destroyers which later transferred them to the Pecos after which the Pecos was sunk in a heavy air bombing.

"After floating around in the water for four hours and a half the survivors were rescued by a destroyer and taken to an Australian port.

"Approximately two thirds of the combined crews of the two ships were lost."

Langley, Pecos Were Lost In 52-Hour Running Battle

Officers of Two Ships Describe Jap Dive-Bomber Attacks.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO, April 3.—The United States aircraft tender Langley and the fleet tanker Pecos went down while fighting a 52-hour running battle with enemy bombing planes in the Indian ocean south of Java between Feb. 27 and March 1, their commanding officers said today.

"The Langley was literally smothered with bombs," said Comdr. R. P. McConnell, who told the story upon his arrival in the United States.

The Pecos, which was sunk while carrying the survivors of the Langley to safety, was attacked by three formations of dive-bombers, her skipper, Comdr. E. P. Abernethy, reported. Abernethy arrived in San Francisco with McConnell.

Six Hours in Water

Having had two ships shot out from under them in a little more than two days, the survivors of the 16,500-ton Langley spent between four and six hours in the water. A few had lifeboats.

"We were carrying supplies in the combat zone," said tall, blond commander McConnell, "when we were sighted by a hostile observation plane on the morning of Feb. 27.

"About noon a formation of horizontal bombers were reported and we prepared for battle. They made a series of approaches, dropping bombs twice from formations of nine planes each and from about 15,000 feet altitude.

Smothered By Bombs

"The second run of bombs was very efefctive. The Langley, was practically smothered. We were in the midst of the salvo and the damage forced us to leave the ship.

"Our escort destroyers performed very commendably in the battle as well as in rescuing the Langley survivors. After the men had been picked up the destroyers hastened the sinking of the tender so that material would not fall into enemy hands."

The Langley before becoming a tender was an aircraft carrier, and originally was built to be a collier. She still carried sections of her flying deck but it was not usable as such. No planes were launched from her during the battle.

APR 4 1942

Had Plane Support

"We didn't get any of the enemy planes," McConnell said. He added that he had no aircraft support during the encounter.

The battle lasted a little more than two hours.

The next morning the destroyers attempted to transfer the Langley survivors to the 7,500-ton Pecos, which was about 30 miles distant at the beginning of the fight. But both ships still were subject to bombing attack and apparently were not far from an enemy submarine. The transfer was not carried out.

They kept moving and the transfer was carried out the next morning.

Taking up the story there, Commander Aberthethy said he was ordered to a small island south of Java to meet the destroyers carrying the Langley survivors but a formation of enemy bombers appeared and the destroyers moved away from the rendezvous.

Survivors Transferred

The next day, March 1, the Pecos lowered a motor launch and made eleven trips to the destroyers, picking up all the survivors without loss of men or materiel. The transfer started during the early morning and was completed about 8 a. m.

The tanker headed toward Australia. Soon enemy planes were sighted.

"I felt," said Abernethy, "that we were in for serious trouble.

"About noon, a formation of six dive bombers launched a round of bombs at us and our ship was hit. One explosion knocked the crew from a gun but another crew was able to take up action.

"These same six bombers then loosed another round at us. Then a second flight of six planes came over and cut loose but we remained afloat and kept shooting.

"On their third flight there were nine dive-bombers and some other planes. The damage to the Pecos was progressive and she finally sank by the bow a little over four hours after the start of battle.

50 Men Killed

"We estimated that about 50 men were killed and about 100 wounded by the dive bombers but the exact number never will be known.

"The last bomber strafed our men who were in the water and on the after-deck. Lieut. L. J. McPeake, my executive officer, manned the aft machine gun to the last and drove it off.

"During the battle one enemy plane was seen to be smoking and I believe several others were hit.

"Several of our lifeboats were damaged in the battle and were not usable but all our men had life belts.

"As we floated about, bombing planes were seen in the distance and later we heard bomb explosions indicating a ship was being attacked not far away.

Destroyer Appears

"A destroyer hove to, and it was a welcome sight. It picked us up. Soon thereafter a submarine was detected in the vicinity. The destroyer dropped depth charges and then proceeded to Australia."

Many acts of bravery besides that of Lieutenant McPeake were cited by the two skippers. Among them was Boatswain's Mate Robert J. Baunker of St. Louis, who had charge of the motor launch which transferred the Langley survivors to the Pecos.

"He did as fine a job of handling the launch as I have seen in many a day. Both he and Lieutenant McPeake are among the missing," said Abernethy.

Chief Storekeeper Saxton, gunnery control talker on the Pecos, refused to leave the bridge even when wounded in the arm by a bomb fragment. When the abandon ship order was given, Saxton insisted on getting the pay records of the crew, and dove over the side with them.

"He told me later," said Abernethy, "that while being hoisted aboard a destroyer the records were too heavy and he had to drop them."

Langley's Career Was Among Most Unusual in U. S. Navy

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP)—Possibly no other ship in the Navy had such an extraordinary history as that of the 29-year-old Langley, reported by the Navy tonight to have fallen victim to Japanese bombs.

Commissioned in 1913 the 11,050-ton vessel originally was built as a coal carrier, the Jupiter. She was equipped with electric drive, the Navy's first, and the intallation was so successful that its principles were later employed in standard propulsion machinery for capital ships.

The Jupiter was the first ship to pass through the Panama Canal from the Pacific to the Atlantic following the opening of the canal Aug. 15, 1914.

In 1919, when the question of carrying airplanes to sea as a fighting arm of the Navy was under discussion, the Langley was converted into the Nation's first aircraft carrier, and at that time given her last name in honor of the aviation pioneer, Prof. Samuel P. Langley.

She was used for carrier experiments, especially in working out the design of the later carriers, the Lexington and Saratoga. She was also in actual service as a carrier with the fleet, but never proved too practical in that respect.

In 1937 the Langley was converted to a seaplane tender, the only one of her kind. A portion of her flight deck was cut away and the remainder was used chiefly, if not entirely, for carrying land planes from point to point overseas but not for actual take-off and landing operations.

The Langley's seaplane tender function was to refuel and service hydroplanes landing on the water beside her. Thus she carried a sizeable service crew for making light repairs.

Ordinarily a seaplane tender is a comparative small vessel, capable of only fueling and servicing. An aircraft carrier, on the other hand, is any ship capable of operating with the fleet, landing and taking off land-type planes on its flight deck.

Comdr. McConnell Started as Seaman

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP) — Comdr. Robert P. McConnell, the rescued commanding officer of the seaplane tender Langley, entered the Navy as an enlisted man in World War I.

A native of Oakland, Cal., he is now 46 years old.

In 1917, he enrolled in the Naval Reserve force as a seaman, second class, and was assigned to training in aviation.

He was commissioned an ensign in the Naval Reserve force in October, 1918, and was ordered to San Diego for flying duty. He then had air duty with the Pacific Fleet from October, 1919, to June, 1922.

Service with the observation squadron of the battleship Arizona and as pilot and senior aviator on the battleship Omaha followed. In 1927, he began two years' duty in the office of chief of naval operations in Washington in the division of fleet training.

From July, 1932, until June, 1934, he was general inspector of naval aircraft, central district, and liaison officer with the Army Air Corps at Wright Field, Dayton, O.

After commanding the Naval Reserve aviation base at Miami, Fla., from 1937, he reported for duty on the Langley in July, 1940.

Peary's Commander Had Varied Career

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP) — Lt. Comdr. John Michael Bermingham, 36-years-old commanding officer who was lost with the destroyer Peary, had seen varied service with the Navy.

A native of New York City, he was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1929. He then served on the battleship Wyoming and received training at the naval air station at Pensacola, Fla.

Service on various destroyers followed and a tour of duty on the target ship Utah—since sunk at Pearl Harbor.

After post-graduate study at the Naval Academy in 1936, he reported for duty with the U.S.S. Augusta, flagship of the Asiatic Fleet. He served as executive officer of the U.S.S. Stewart prior to assignment to command of the Peary in 1941.

His home was 2058 Watson Avenue, New York.

Public Is Asked Not to Make Inquiries on Navy Casualties

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP)—In connection with announcement of the sinking of the aircraft tender Langley, the destroyer Peary and the tanker Pecos, the Navy asked tonight that the public "refrain from initiating individual inquiries regarding casualties."

APR 4 1942

The Navy's communique regarding the loss of those ships and the naval tanker Pecos said that the next of kin of all persons lost in the Pecos have been notified and "the next of kin of those lost in the Langley and Peary either already have been notified or will be notified as soon as information is available."

The communique contained this paragraph on the subject of casualties:

"War conditions in the Southwest Pacific have greatly complicated and delayed reports of casualties, and the public is urged to refrain from initiating individual inquiries regarding casualties. The next of kin of all casualties are always notified by telegram as soon as possible."

U. S. Destroyers Entered Convoy To Find Targets at Macassar

WASHINGTON, April 3—(AP) Commander Paul Talbot, who took part in the battle of Maccassar strait, told today how four American destroyers made three forays in pitch dark into the midst of a convoy of nearly 40 Japanese ships and fired torpedoes at 500 yards point-blank range.

Using only torpedoes to avoid revealing their position by gun flashes in the darkness, the American vessels went so close to the Jap ships, Talbot said, that his crew members told him they could hear Japanese soldiers crying from the water.

The action took place on the night of January 23-24, when Commander Talbot was leading destroyer division 59 of the Asiatic fleet. Telling of it at a press conference, Talbot related that on the morning of January 23 the four destroyers were cruising in the Flores sea when orders were received from Admiral Hart to be at Cape Mandar by 8 p. m. that night stripped for action.

"We started north at 25 knots in a heavy monsoon that drenched many of our men," he continued. "We entered Maccassar strait at 3 p. m. and stripped for action. Enemy air patrols were active and we expected an attack so to deceive them we headed into Mandar bay until darkness and then proceeded to Cape Mandar where we arrived at 8 p. m., on a dark night.

"At 8 p. m. we proceeded to launch an attack and headed into Balikpapan at 27 knots planning to escape an enemy escort of 12 destroyers convoying Jap ships.

"Bright flares on the horizon dead ahead worried us because we thought they were Jap searchlights or star shells but it developed that they were explosions aboard a burning Jap ship which the Dutch had bombed. It was drifting and sending out a lot of smoke.

"At 1 a. m. we sighted two more flares ahead which were coming from fires at Balikpapan where the Dutch were burning their oil.

"At 2:45 a.m. when we were nearing Balikpapan a division of four Japanese destroyers loomed up dead ahead of us only 1,000 yards away. We altered our courses to pass astern of the Jap destroyers, which, for some reason, failed to open fire on us although we were sure that they had seen us.

APR 4 1942

Penetrated Jap Convoy

"We were making 27 knots and they passed us quickly, but a few moments after passing them we found ourselves in the midst of a Jap convoy of transports, supply ships, and destroyers, numbering 30 or 40, which were all around us.

"We had the advantage because of low visibility due to smoke, darkness, and the fact that the Japs did not know whether we were friend or enemy. We were sailing in a straight line, following the leader. All four of us had orders to obey the flag ship.

"We were afraid of running aground or hitting Dutch mines but soon we were convinced that we were in the midst of the Jap convoy so we began firing torpedoes. Gun flashes would have given away our position in the darkness.

"As soon as we opened fire [illegible] of our torpedoes sailed into a [illegible] ship which broke in half and evaporated. We could see the silhouettes clearly before our eyes.

Made 3 Round Trips

"We made three round trips of approximately five miles each at 27 knots an hour firing torpedoes at the enemy ships as we passed. After about an hour some of our torpedoes were exhausted. Up to this time the Japs apparently had not identified us and did not know, it seemed, whether their ships were striking mines or being fired upon from vessels outside the convoy.

"During this time I saw two of their ships go down and one listing sharply to port.

"When our torpedoes ran low I directed that we open fire with our guns. As soon as we did so the Japs became aware of us and returned the fire for the first time, letting go at us from a range between 300 and 500 yards.

20 Salvos at Close Range

"We fired 15 or 20 salvos at broadside but we didn't stop to see how many Jap ships went down. At that close range it was impossible to miss.

"By this time it was 4 a.m. and the eastern sky was turning gray so we started south at full speed and if any Japs pursued us they never caught up with us. We expected their planes but they did not come. One of our ships was hit and four men wounded but none of us was killed. The engagement lasted an hour and fifteen minutes."

The Japanese are believed to have lost 30 to 40 ships of various categories, including an aircraft carrier, in the week-long air and sea battle of Macassar strait.

Talbot said he could not say positively how many were sunk by his destroyer division. "We were not waiting to check up," he commented dryly.

Talbot, who was 45 years old today, is a native of Willoughby, Ohio, and was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1918. At present he is on leave. The Navy did not disclose what assignment he would receive when his leave ends.

Japs Claim Bombings In China Kill Allied Air Offensive Plan

Tokio Paper Declares Construction of Bases Started Last June

By the Associated Press.

APR 4 1942

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 3.—A Tokio dispatch quoted the Japanese press today as asserting that the recent bombing of airfields at Lishui (Chuchow) and elsewhere in China had frustrated "another hope of Anglo-American enemies and Chungking" to bomb Japan from Chinese bases.

(Lishui, Chekiang Province, is about 235 miles from Formosa, Japanese colony island off the East China coast which is known to be a principal concentration point for Japan's invasion forces.)

The Tokio newspaper Asahi was quoted as saying plans had been drafted as far back as February, 1941, for construction of airports in the provinces of Chekiang, Fukien and Huan "which were to serve as bases for American bombers, including the so-called Flying Fortresses."

"The work of construction on the airports attacked by the Japanese started in June of last year. Meanwhile, they were fitted with hangars, petrol and ammunition depots," the German radio continued in its rendition of the Tokio dispatch.

"Moreover, information obtained with the help of Japanese reconnaissance pilots established that there was lively activity at these airports and on roads to the Chinese hinterland, but also that the enemy was preparing from there to attack Japan by air."

While there has been considerable speculation, with some official backing, on the prospect of an aerial offensive against the Japanese homeland via China, there has been nothing specific to bear out the report of facilities for attack in Chekiang and Fukien, on China's eastern seaboard, and inland Hunan.

The original Tokio report of the raids, given out by Japanese headquarters at Nanking Wednesday, said that besides the attack in Chekiang at Lishui, an air field at Hengyang, Central Hunan Province, also was raided. Fukien was not mentioned.

The communique said that, as a result, "Chungking's plans to reestablish air bases were smashed," but mentioned no collaboration at such bases by the United States and Britain.

The Japanese "completely destroyed the (Lishui) air field, as well as blasting and setting fire to carefully camouflaged and grounded airplanes, hangers, ammunition dumps, storehouses and fuel tanks," it was said.

Besides its strategic position north northwest of Formosa, Lishui is less than 600 miles from the nearest points of the Japanese home islands and the southernmost tip of Korea. The city lies 65 miles up river from Wenchow Bay on the East China Sea.

Japanese Cruiser Set Afire

Troopship Also in Flames After Bay of Bengal Raid By Flying Fortresses.

2 OTHER SHIPS BELIEVED HIT

British Give Up Prome and Move Into New Line to Defend Burma Oil Fields.

LONDON, Saturday, April 4. (AP)—Huge United States fortress bombers have spread their wings over the Burma front for the first time and, taking off from bases in India under the personal command of Major General Lewis H. Brereton, have set fire to one Japanese cruiser and a troopship and probably damaged two other ships in the Bay of Bengal.

The action—the first by this new outpost of American arms—took place at Port Blair in the Andaman Islands, recently occupied by the Japanese as a base from which to prey on the supply route to India and China.

No American Losses

The first communique issued by the New Delhi headquarters of Gen. Brereton, who is commander of the U. S. Air Forces in India, said one enemy fighter was encountered by the squadron of United States bombers and that enemy anti-aircraft fire was intense. But all the American ships returned safely and without damage, according to the communique as published today in the daily sketch here.

This first activity of American heavy bombers in this theatre came as the Japanese were pressing the British hard in Burma to the north.

Text of Communique

The text of the communique:

American flying fortresses of the United States Air Forces made their first attack from India today.

Led by Major General Lewis Brereton, commanding the United States Air Forces in India, a squadron of heavy bombers attacked the enemy's shipping at Port Blair (Andaman Islands) setting fire to one Japanese cruiser and one troopship and probably damaging two other ships.

An enemy fighter was encountered and intense anti-aircraft fire, but no damage was sustained. All our aircraft returned safely.

JAPS SEIZE MORE ISLANDS

Are said to have Completed Invasion Ring about Australia

London, April 3—(AP)—The Vichy radio, quoting Tokyo despatches, declared today that Japanese troops had made further landings on small islands surrounding the half-Dutch, half-Portuguese island of Timor.

The landings are of great strategic importance, the radio said, because they "complete the island front in Japanese hands facing Australia."

Listed among the islands said to have been occupied were Rotti Island, southwest of Timor, and Leti and Babar to the northeast.

Jap Pressure Forces British Withdrawal

NEW DELHI, India, April 3. (AP)—Extreme Japanese pressure in a night-long battle in the jungle country along the Irrawaddy river forced the British to withdraw northward today from Prome, heretofore the western strong point of the Burma defense lines.

British headquarters said the British Imperial "covering force in Prome" had pulled back northward to "the main defense" Thursday. This suggested that the rail and river city never had been counted upon as the place to make a decisive stand for the defense of the oil fields, 40 to 80 miles to the north.

Prome at the moment apparently was unoccupied, a military spokesman saying that the Japanese had advanced only to the outskirts, although holding the heights south of town.

The present British line was not identified, but probably was between Prome and the Maton river, 20 miles north.

Akyab Landing Denied

A spokesman denied reports from Chungking that the Japanese had landed at Akyab, a west Burma port scarcely 100 miles from India.

"General headquarters have been in direct contact with Akyab this morning," he said. "We were informed by authorities at Akyab that there was no sign of Japanese anywhere."

(A Chinese army spokesman at Chungking said that his report yesterday of a Japanese landing at Akyab March 27 was based on intelligence reports from American sources, but that the New Delhi announcement now showed this report was incorrect.)

The British also announced that on the Sittang front, on the east side of the Burma defenses, Japanese vanguards at Toungoo were advancing west of the railway and had reached a point southwest of Yedashe, town 15 miles north of Toungoo.

(A Chinese communique said the Chinese on April 1 attacked the Japanese south of Kyungon, which is 10 miles north of Toungoo, and captured a great deal of booty. Kyungon was recaptured by the Chinese on March 29.

The Chinese hold that section of the line and were declared to retain command of the railway from Yedashe to just north of Toungoo.

(With the Chinese out of Toungoo and the British having abandoned Prome, military quarters in London forecast the next Japanese steps in this fashion:

("The Japanese will continue to infiltrate around our flanks and establish road blocks at the rear. If they succeed, our troops and the Chinese will have to fight back through the blocks. Each of these blocks forces a further withdrawal because of our numerical inferiority."

(London sources were not particularly concerned over the tentative nature of British-Chinese contact, noting that both defense forces now held positions 2,000 feet high in heavily wooded hills through which a Japanese advance sould be more difficult than in the past.)

British Retreat North of Key Burma Town

Fresh Covering Positions Taken; Akyab Still Held

By the Associated Press.

NEW DELHI, April 3.—The British announced today that they had been forced to fall back to "fresh covering positions" north of Prome, hitherto western anchor of the Allied defense lines in Burma, but officially denied reports of a Japanese landing at the West Burma port of Akyab, barely 100 miles from the Bengal frontier, which would have been an even greater setback.

(In Chungking the Chinese Army spokesman said the official British denial showed his announcement yesterday that Japanese forces had landed at Akyab was incorrect. He said his statement was based on military intelligence reports from American sources.)

Although the wording of the communique seemed to indicate abandonment of Prome, a military spokesman said that so far the Japanese had moved up only to the outskirts of the town, 130 miles northwest of Rangoon and less than 100 miles south of the Yenangyaung oil fields.

The communique said the withdrawal was made under heavy Japanese attack in which the invaders penetrated to stragetic heights just south of Prome.

New Contract With Akyab.

The next main line of British resistance was not identified, but presumably is between Prome and the Maton tributary of the Irrawaddy some 20 miles north.

Denying Chungking reports of yesterday that Japanese forces covered by cruisers and destroyers had landed at Akyab, a military spokesman said British headquarters "had been in contact with Akyab this morning" and that there was no threat to the port at least up to midday.

British headquarters said there had been no landings in that area where a Japanese foothold would be a double-edged threat—a potential invasion menace to India and a peril on the flank of the British-held line in the Prome sector.

Hold Covering Position

Without giving the specific new position of its forces, the British command reported them holding "covering positions north of the town early yesterday morning" and "concentrated in new areas" after strong enemy forces had won hights south of it.

"On Wednesday evening," the communique said, "our covering force in Prome was attacked by the enemy in considerable strength.

"They penetrated the defense through jungle country east of the main road and secured high ground south of Prome.

"Fighting continued throughout the night and our forces moved back to fresh covering positions north of the town early yesterday morning. The rest of our forces are concentrated in new areas."

(A Vichy radio broadcast, heard by Reuters in London, quoted Japanese reports as saying the British had evacuated Prome.

It also was the source of a report that Chinese forces were retiring northward in the Sittang area, at the eastern end of the Burma line, pursued by Japanese advance guards which, it said, had pushed almost 45 miles north of Toungoo on the road to Mandalay.)

APR 4 1942

The British communique said Japanese spearheads were thrusting west of the railroad on the Sittang front and had reached a point southwest of Yedashe, which is 15 miles north of Toungoo.

It declared, however, that "Chinese forces are still in control of the railway between Yedashe and the point immediately north of Toungoo."

The communique reported two air raids aimed against British airfields Tuesday, one in Northern Burma and the other in Central Burma, but said no damage or casualties were inflicted on the R. A. F. in either one.

Chinese Suicide Squads.

San Francisco, April 3 (A. P.).—Chinese suicide squads are battling Jap tank units in Burma, the Chungking radio said today.

The Chinese-language broadcast, heard here by CBS, related that the suicide squads operated by moving swiftly upon enemy tanks and tossing hand grenades into their vitals. The Japanese losses from such attacks became so great, the announcer stated, that Jap sharpshooters, armed with light machine guns, were stationed atop the advancing tanks, in hope they could pick off the grenade throwers. Other Japanese were assigned to tree tops from which to protect their tanks from Chinese raiders.

But, the broadcast continued, the Chinese began to employ sharpshooters to pick off the tree-top gunmen, and the result was that "after one day the Japanese did not have soldiers in the trees any more."

3 Waves of Jap Planes Bomb Kiangsi Town

CHUNGKING, April 3 (AP).—The Chinese Central Daily News said today that 28 Japanese bombers, striking yesterday in three waves, bombed Yushan, in Northeastern Kiangsi Province, little more than 200 miles inland from the East China Sea coast.

The attack apparently was one of a series of raids which the Japanese have said was directed against air bases and potential bases from which Allied bombers might carry the war to the skies over Japan.

Chinese Cut North China Railway in 20 Places

NEW DELHI, April 3.—Chinese forces have destroyed sections of the North China railway in 20 places in Shansi Province in a series of raids designed to prevent the Japanese from sending reinforcements to the Yellow River battle area, a Chungking communique received here said today.

CHIANG PROLONGS INDIA CONFERENCE WITH SPECIAL PLEA

Asks Leaders to Reconsider Britain's Proposals for War Cooperation.

NEW DELHI, India, April 3. — (AP) Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, leader of free China, was understood today to have appealed to India's leaders to reconsider the formula by which Britain is seeking that sub-continent's full cooperation against the Axis in return for Indian independence after the war.

The precise nature of generalissimo's intervention was not known; specifically it was not disclosed whether he had urged India's acceptance of the most controversial point—Britain's insistance that she retain control of Indian defense for the emergency period.

Sends Note to Nehru

At all events, however, he was said to have sent a special messenger to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, former president of the All-India Congress and perhaps the most powerful figure on the Indian side of the table, and this alone threw the immense weight of his influence behind the hopes of the uncounted millions among the United Nations that the conference not be torpedoed.

Chiang acted at a critical moment, for the All-India Congress and certain lesser bodies already had rejected the British plan, although leaving the way open for further negotiations, and the British commander in chief for India, General Sir Archibald P. Wavell, also had entered the discussions.

Wavell, Cripps Confer

Gen. Wavell conferred with Sir Stafford Cripps, the British emissary, and arranged to talk also with Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, the president of the All-India Congress, and Nehru. This second projected conference raised intense interest, for in it the British commander would have opportunity both to outline the realities of the Indian defense problem and to determine whether some compromise toward giving the Indians partial responsibility could safely be made.

As to the Moslem minority, their leader, Mohammed Ali Jinnah, met with the Moslem league's working committee to draft its reply to Sir Stafford's proposals.

Jinnah stated that the position of his people would be explained in a speech tomorrow.

It was Chiang K. Shek who in a recent visit to Ind... prepared the way for Sir Stafford's mission, and at that time he publicly expressed the hope that "the people of China and their brethren people of India x x x give their united support to the principles embodied in the Atlantic charter and in the joint declaration of the 26 United Nations and ally themselves with the anti-aggression front."

Moslem Leader Rejects Plan

Mohammed Ali Jinnah, leader of the Moslem minority, declared today his followers would never accept any proposals that would prevent their achievement of an autonomous Moslem state.

Chiang Rushes Plea to India

Chinese Leader Reported Urging Nehru to Reach Accord With British.

APR 4 1942

New Delhi, India, April 3 (A. P.).—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, advocate of war collaboration between 400,000,000 Chinese and 390,000,000 Indians, was reported today to have intervened in British-Indian negotiations, urging acceptance of Britain's proposal of post-war Dominion status for India.

The Generalissimo was said to have conveyed his views through a special messenger to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, a former president of the All-India Congress party and a key leader in the Indian politics.

The contents of the message were not disclosed. Whether Chiang had committed himself on the specific point at special issue—Britain's proposal that she retain responsibility for Indian defense—was not known.

The Generalissimo on his February visit with Indian leaders expressed his hope to see "the people of China and their brethren people of India . . . give their united support to the principles embodied in the Atlantic Charter and in the joint declaration of the twenty-six United Nations and ally themselves with the anti-aggression front."

He voiced hope and belief then that Britain, "without waiting for any demand on the part of the Indian people, will as speedily as possible give them real political power . . . (a policy) which will redound to the credit of the British empire."

U. S. Minister Arrives.

Meanwhile Louis Johnson, former Assistant Secretary of War who holds the rank of Minister as Presient Roosevelt's personal representative in India, arrived here today.

He was accompanied by Lieut.-Col. Paul Griffiths and Arthur Harrington, a member of the American technical mission.

The Congress party's working committee, which replied to the British proposals yesterday with detailed objections, met for an hour and a half today and adjourned until tomorrow. The party president, Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, said no release time had been fixed for the resolution of reply already handed to the special British envoy, Sir Stafford Cripps.

In some quarters it was suggested that publication would be delayed until Azad has conferred with the British Commander for India, Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, and until Sir Stafford has had time to communicate the answer to the London War Cabinet and receive a reply. Gen. Wavell and Sir Stafford conferred at noon today. Sir Stafford, who was to have departed Monday, leaving the plan on a take-or-leave-it basis, has postponed his going, leaving the way open for further negotiations with the Congress and the chief minority political organization, the all-India Moselem League.

Mohammed Ali Jinnah, president of the Moselem League, and other members of the league's working committee, met at Allahabad today to draft their reply to Sir Stafford's plan.

"There is a great deal of harm being done by opening the floodgates in certain sections o newspapers and in statements issued by some leaders to the press," Jinnah said. "In view of these happenings I shall be compelled to explain the position to my people in my speech tomorrow."

India's 'Untouchables' Add Opposition to Offer

APR 4 1942

LONDON, April 3 (AP).—Leaders of India's 43,000,000 "untouchables" added their votes today to the chorus of opposition to British proposals for settlement of the Indian independence issue.

Dispatches from New Delhi quoted Dr. Bhimrao Ambdedkar and M. C. Raja, spokesmen for the "untouchables," as saying the proposals "are calculated to do great harm to the depressed classes and are sure to place them under an unmitigated system of Hindu rule."

"Such a catastrophe," they added, "will be resisted by all means at our command."

At the same time the standing committee of the All-India States' Peoples' Conference adopted a resolution characterizing the British plan as "utterly harmful and injurious to the cause of freedom, both in the States and in India as a while," and pledging resistance to the utmost.

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, former president of the powerful Congress Party, which already has rejected the plan, presided over the committee meeting.

Hopes Are Dimmed.

In London these developments dimmed hope for a satisfactory solution which had been raised when Sir Stafford Cripps, British government envoy, postponed his scheduled departure from New Delhi next Monday in order to talk further with Indian leaders.

An announcement, meanwhile, that Cripps had conferred at noon today with Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, British commander in chief in India, lent color to reports that Gen. Wavell might take a hand in future discussions with Congress Party leaders.

It was understood that one of the Congress Party's objections to the British proposals was that direction of India's defense would remain entirely in British hands.

Gen. Wavell's opinion as to whether he could properly di... the defense of India if Indian o... cials were given a share in the re... sponsibility undoubtedly would have a strong influence on the British war cabinet's disposition to modify this stipulation.

The Moslem League, second largest of India's political groups, was expected to frame its final reply to the British proposals this afternoon when its working committee will meet at Allahabad. It was deemed unlikely, however, that a statement would be forthcoming today.

Mohammed Ali Jinnah, leader of the Moslem League, was quoted as saying at Aliahabad:

"We have not yet come to any conclusion, but we hope that before the session is over we will, and by the time I return to New Delhi I may be in a position to give our reply to Sir Stafford."

Congress Group Meets.

The Congress Party Working Committee met for an hour and a half in New Delhi this morning and then adjourned until tomorrow, dispatches from India said.

Maulana Abdul Kalan Azad, president of the party, said no statement would be made today on behalf of the congress, and British sources speculated that any further announcement would be delayed pending a meeting between Azad and Gen. Wavell.

Azad said neither the time nor place for such a meeting had been arranged yet, but declared that Cripps and Ne... sit in on any t... certainly would he might have with Gen. Wavel...

Bataan Troops Repel More Attacks by Japs

'Considerable' Losses Reported Inflicted on Invader—Manila Bay Forts Bombed for Eleventh Consecutive Day.

APR 4 1942

WASHINGTON, April 3. (AP)—The defenders of Bataan Peninsula, after thwarting yesterday's major assaults by the Japanese, followed up their success by repelling subsequent light attacks with "considerable" loss to the foe, the War Department reported today.

Jap Artillery Active

A relative lull in the siege of Bataan and the Manila Bay forts followed the bloody repulse of yesterday's twin attacks, one of which temporarily breached the American-Filipino lines.

Several light attacks were launched last night by the invaders at various points along the front lines held by Lieutenant General Jonathan M. Wainwright's forces, but all were repelled, the communique said.

Bombing of front lines continued meanwhile and Corregidor and outlying island forts were subjected to air raids for the eleventh consecutive day and to shelling from enemy batteries on the south short of the bay. The air raids were described as light, and the forts' guns returned the Japanese artillery fire.

The lull was viewed by official observers as a familiar phase of the campaign of attrition waged for nearly two weeks by the invaders under their new commander, Lieutenant General Tomoyuki Yamashita, and likely to be followed shortly by another assault.

4 Major Attacks Repulsed

Four successive major attacks have been repulsed with heavy losses beginning with an onslaught March 28 which was checked completely by a counter-attack.

Good Friday, the War Department said, was marked by reports of a Japanese air attack on a church in the village of Miral, near Digos. The latter town is on the Gulf of Davao more than 50 miles south of Bataan on the southernmost island of Mindanao.

In this area, a springboard for the Japanese invasion of the Netherlands Indies, isolated American-Filipino detachments have been harassing the invaders to good effect recently, having turned 22 military warehouses at Digos two days ago.

Japs Again Halted on Bataan With Considerable Casualties

Several Night Attacks by Foe Repulsed—Manila Bay Forts Sustain Light Raids by Enemy Bombers.

Washington, April 3 (A. P.).—The defenders of the Bataan Peninsula in the Philippines repulsed several light Japanese attacks last night, the War Department said in a communique today, and inflicted "considerable enemy

United States forces were reported officially to be mopping up Japanese units which broke through the main defense line in two heavy attacks yesterday only to be pocketed by an American counter drive.

The War Department said that a considerable number of Japanese units were in the pocket indicating that whole platoons armed with grenade-throwers and machine guns, faced the encircling American troops.

Each Japanese infantry platoon of forty-two men has three rifle sections and a grenade thrower section. The rifle sections each have seven riflemen and a light machine gun. The grenade thrower (or tekidanto) sections have three grenade dischargers capable of throwing 50 mm. projectiles from sixty-five to 250 yards.

In addition, the Japanese riflemen themselves carry both hand grenades and stick grenades. The stick grenades, a favorite with Germans and Italians as well as with the Japanese, are iron pots of explosive on five-inch wooden handles. These grenades have the heft of claw hammers.

The Japanese lob them for considerable distances. The stick grenades depend mainly on heavy charges of lyddite for their effect, rather than on the fragmentation as in American and British types. Each grenade has two ounces of lyddite, giving it about half the explosive power of a stick of dynamite.

Officers familiar with Japanese tactics said that the encircled troops doubtless would dig in during the night in individual fox holes. These holes have space for only one man and in Japanese are called "Go."

Individuals may be able to hold on in their "gos" for several days. In a sack on his back each man carries one day's emergency rations and five days' supply of rice.

It was considered unlikely that the Japanese would try to aid their encircled units on Bataan by landing parachute troops.

Major T. K. McNair of Red Bank, N. J., says that Corregidor Island has undergone more than 120 air raids since December 29. The longest raid lasted more than six hours and came last week.

Navy Keeps Open Corregidor Lines

Men Work Under Fire to Repair Damage, AP Correspondent Says

APR 4 1942

By DEAN SCHEDLER

Corregidor, P. I., March 31 — (Delayed)—(AP)—A hard working organization which helps the Filipino-Americans to maintain their precious foothold in the Philippines is the navy communications.

Prior to the outbreak of war, the navy towers of the Cavite naval station wireless long had stood pointing skyward to mark a nerve center for communications in the Pacific area.

The Japanese air attack unleashed its fury at Cavite, and bounced the boys about a bit.

I have just visited with these same boys who now are working under different conditions but still carrying on night and day.

Some of the boys have served on battleships. Now they are fighting the battle of the air waves, without the rocking decks beneath them. Upon them depends the news from the outside.

Since there has been a slight disruption of shipping out this way, the communications men are keeping up their equipment with precious care.

Communications men who work outside sometimes have to carry on their work during air raids and shellings to repair transmitter and control lines, retape a line here and there to keep it going, and now and then jump to the shelter of a fox hole.

Gen. Bennett Completes Malayan Battle Report

MELBOURNE, April 3 (AP)—An official report by Lieut. Gen. Henry Gordon Bennett on the disastrous Malayan campaign, which is expected to provide valuable information for mapping Australia's defense, will be submitted to the cabinet and Advisory War Council this weekend.

War Minister Francis M. Forde, said tonight a copy of this report by the only senior Allied officer to escape from Singapore already has been forwarded to the War Office in London.

APR 4 1942

As a major-general, Bennett commanded Australian forces in the Malayan campaign and upon his return to Australia was promoted to lieutenant general and put in command of a newly formed corps. Forde said tonight his headquarters would be in western Australia, the area nearest potential Japanese invasion bases in the Dutch East Indies.

Two armies and three corps, including Bennett's, have been formed under Australia's army reorganization program and all these additional units have been placed under officers who saw active service overseas recently.

It will be the task of these generals to take advantage in the current lull to transform the commonwealth's land forces—now organized for the most part on a training basis—into fighting units prepared for frontline operations.

Allied forces in Australia have been bolstered, Air Minister A. S. Drakeford announced today, by arrival of practically all Australian, British and Dutch air force personnel evacuated from Malaya.

MACARTHUR TALKS WITH AUSTRALIAN

Gen. Bennett's War Diary From Malaya Helps.

U. S. Army Headquarters in Australia, April 3 (A. P.).—Gen. Douglas MacArthur, United Nations' commander in Australia, and Lieut.-Gen. Henry Gordon Bennett, Australian Army corps commander, hastened their campaign plans today with the aid of Gen. Bennett's diary containing details of the Japanese offensive against Malaya. Gen. Bennett's diary, with its day-by-day account of Malayan fighting, first was believed to have been lost, but it has been returned to him.

Military sources said that it would prove even more valuable than his official report on the fall of Singapore, prepared for the Australian War Office. Gen. Bennett's official report on the United Nations' defeat in Malaya and the fall of Singapore was handed today to Francis M. Forde, Australian Army Minister, for submission to the War Cabinet.

65 Japanese Planes Credited to One U. S. Squadron in Java

Diary Discloses Daring Feats of 'Hell-Benters'; Commander Lost in Fight

By CLARK LEE,
Associated Press War Correspondent.

U. S. ARMY HEADQUARTERS, Australia, April 3.—A single United States Army pursuit squadron, christened "The Hell-Benters," destroyed 39 Japanese planes for certain and 26 other "probables" in fighting over Java, it was disclosed today in the squadron's official diary.

The Hell-Benters, now in Australia, destroyed 20 Japanese Navy "Zero" fighters, 14 heavy bombers, four "97" dive bombers and one fighter of the German Messerschmitt type.

Fight Over The Sea

The other twenty-six, raising their bag to a total of sixty-five, were listed as probably destroyed only because positive confirmation had not been obtained—since much of the fighting was over the sea. In addition, many other Japanese planes — exact numbers undetermined—were listed as de... on the ground.

The squadron commander, Major Charles A. Sprague, was killed in one dog fight, but American losses were described as comparatively light.

"Another Doll Down"

The official historian employed terse, colorful phrase, rather than the restrained language of official reports.

"An... doll down," he wrote as a Japanese fighter was destroyed, and in another place, "we loosed a lot of 'ead poison at Charlie."

Declines To Take Credit

Lieut. Col. Lloyd Lehrbas, in reading extracts from the diary, remarked, "These men sure love to fight."

One ace of the squadron is Lieut. William J. Hennon, of Minnesota. In one engagement over Bali he shot down three Japanese and declined to take credit for destroying several others seen to fall.

In another action he helped to shoot down four or six enemy planes.

Others of the squadron credited with two or more kills each are Lieuts. J. E. Kesler, Joseph J. Kruzel, Nathaniel H. Blanton, G. Mahoney, Ben S. Irvine and James Moorehead.

On one flight Moorehead dived through a formation of seven Japanese and shot down two, including the leader.

Some Bail Out

Several Americans had been forced to bail out of bullet-torn planes but all landed safely and rejoined their unit.

The diary recorded that Lieut. Frank Adkins parachuted to a Java beach only 200 yards from where several hundred Japanese soldiers were landing from barges.

As the Japanese opened fire, Adkins sprinted across the beach and overtook a Javanese native on a bicycle. With bullets zinging about his ears, he hitch-hiked a ride on the handlebars, but the native couldn't pedal fast enough, so they changed places.

Loses The Native

Pumping breathlessly, Adkins reached safety only to note that the native was gone.

"I must have lost him somewhere on the way," the flyer explained.

The squadron's biggest action was in combating a massed air and sea invasion force heading for Soerabaja.

In this action sixty Japanese transports were listed as heavily damaged and another convoy of thirty ships and barges off Rembang was broken up.

Women-Flyer Story Scouted

It was after this that the American group was nick-named the Hell-Benters.

APR 4 1942

Several pilots said they had heard reports from natives that the Japanese were using women flyers but said they had found no such evidence in wrecked Japanese planes.

By Clark Lee

Associated Press Correspondent

United States Army Headquarters, Australia, April 3.—

A young Tennesseean, who has been shot down three times said air combats are not so bad, but that a plane on fire while in flight was his worst experience.

Lt. Gabriel Frumpkin of Memphis, co-pilot of one of the Army's big B-17 bombers, described a series of narrow escapes which he shared with Lt. P. B. Swanson of New York, his pilot.

Their first crackup was on a mission to Balikpapan, when 15 Japanese Zero fighters attacked three American planes off the southern tip of Borneo.

"The gunners in our plane shot down five fighters," Frumpkin said. "Our ship was hit by two explosive shells but managed to stay up. A hundred miles farther on our left engine caught fire from a broken oil line.

"We thought at first we might have to bail out into the ocean, but then we sighted a small island ahead. Under orders the five enlisted men in the crew jumped. Then Swanson and I made a crash landing on the beach and put out the fire.

"The natives spoke just enough English to ask 'You American, no Jap?' They helped us. We caught fish and stayed a week before a plane picked us up and returned us to Java.

"We were unable to fly our damaged plane off so we destroyed it to prevent the Japs from getting it."

Another time, while bombing shipping in Macassar Strait, the squadron saw a Japanese cruiser.

Attacked by Five Zeros.

"Returning from our mission, we became separated from our squadron," Frumpkin related. "Five Zeros attacked us and damaged our plane so that we had to land on an island off the north coast of Java.

"We landed safely, and none was hurt. We were there a week and repaired the plane. The natives helped us build a runway, and we flew back to our field.

On the third occasion, Japanese fighters shot Frumpkin's plane and forced him to land on an auxiliary field, where he got stuck in the mud.

He dug the plane out, but the Japanese made a surprise attack on the field. Frumpkin was wounded by shrapnel in the foot. He was taken to a Java hospital, from which he and his flying comrades were removed just before the Japanese arrived.

He flew to Australia, where he has recovered.

Frumpkin said he believed his squadron sank a Japanese aircraft carrier off Celebes during a night attack. He was trained at Maxwell and Turner Fields, while Swanson underwent his training at Kelly Field, San Antonio.

THREE HEROES ARE DECORATED

APR 4 1942

Captain and Two Master Sergeants Honored.

Melbourne, April 3 (A. P.).—Three newly decorated heroes of the war in the southwestern Pacific belittled their achievements today and said that they hoped to do better next time. Capt. Clarence McPherson of McCall, Idaho, received the Distinguished Flying Cross for removing his plane safely from an airport where he had just landed without knowing that the Japanese had occupied it.

"I dragged the field once," Capt. McPherson said, "and things did not look right, so I dragged it again. This time they let go at me.

"They wounded the gunner and shot us up badly, but I managed to get off. I still didn't think the Japanese could be there and I cussed those Dutchmen all the 150 miles back to Malang, where I learned it was a Japanese job instead of a Dutch error."

Among twelve recipients of the Distinguished Service Cross were two veterans from California, Master Sergt. Louis Silva of Rio Vista and Anton G. Holub of Coronado. Sergt. Silva distinguished himself in an air battle 150 miles from Singapore.

Colonel Hails Sergeant.

His commanding officer, Col. Eugene Eubank, said that Sergt. Silva volunteered in a call for gunners the day after his arrival in the battle zone.

"We claimed we shot down seven Japanese planes," Sergt. Silva said. "The Japs later admitted losing nine. In our particular fight it was our job to protect another of our planes which had been damaged. Those Japs like to pick on a cripple.

"Chasing after the damaged plane, the Japs kept coming into close range and so we got some good shots in. I was handling the side gun and was too busy to have time to tell the other gunners what to do. They were doing all right anyway.

"The Japs got my tail gunner. Finally, we fought them off and landed on a small field to refuel. Three Zero fighters attacked us there.

"The damaged plane couldn't take off and they strafed it. We got off and had a real battle close to the ground. We shot down two and drove the third away."

Hero of Manila Raid.

Sergt. Holub's award was the result of action in the Clark Field raid north of Manila on December 8.

"When the Japs bombed the plane I flew out from the States in, with some of my pals in it, I forgot everything else but getting even," Sergt. Holub said. "I ran out to another plane, jumped into the radio compartment and started firing the double guns there.

"When I ran out of ammunition, I ran and got some more and started shooting again. It must have done some good, because that plane was the only one on the field they didn't get."

Sergt. Holub said that he and an anti-aircraft gunner hit one plane simultaneously and saw it soar across a golf course, trailing smoke. Another pilot turned up sharply when he saw Sergt. Holub's tracer bullets "and I got him from underneath."

Most Airmen Now Safe.

Melbourne, April 3 (A. P.).—Most Australian and Dutch airmen who participated in the Malayan campaign have arrived in Australia, Air Minister A. S. Drakeford announced today. He said that the Netherlands airmen, who include both army and navy flyers, probably would reform their own units soon.

HURLEY ASSUMES OFFICE

U. S. Minister to New Zealand Meets War Cabinet

WELLINGTON, New Zealand, April 3 (AP)—Brig. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley formally assumed office as United States Minister to New Zealand today and, as one of his first acts, conferred with the Dominion War Cabinet.

Prime Minister Peter Fraser, expressing the government's pleasure over the appointment, declared that few persons were better qualified to judge the importance of New Zealand in the general United Nations strategy in the Pacific.

Curtin, Fadden Named Privy Council Members

LONDON, Saturday, April 4—(AP)—The appointment of Prime Minister John Curtin and former Prime Minister Arthur W. Fadden of Australia as members of the privy council was announced today from No. 10 Downing street.

The appointments were regarded as another gesture of solidarity with Australia. It is not unusual, however, for dominion statesmen to have places on the privy council, which advises the king. Membership is considered mainly an honorary position.

Masquerading Boy Gives Self Away

Australian Poses as Pilot for Gen. MacArthur

MELBOURNE, Australia, Saturday, April 4 (AP)—Australian police today ended a 16-years-old youngster's masquerade as the pilot of the plane which brought Gen. Douglas MacArthur out of the Philippines.

The youth, posing as a lieutenant in the U. S. Army Air Corps, toured Melbourne's residential district seeking accommodations for American troops. The lad was dressed in civilian clothes, but had an airman's wings sewn on his blue shirt and wore an Australian Navy League cap to which he had added an American Eagle badge.

In his leather shoulder-strap holster police found a toy water pistol.

The boy produced an excellently-printed American identification card which, police said, he had made himself. He finally gave himself away by his "American accent," which faltered and changed to his native Australian when he was being questioned.

Prisoners From Guam, Wake Treated Well, Says Red Cross

WASHINGTON, April 3.—(AP) The 366 United States prisoners of war, who were captured on Gilbert, Wake and Guam islands by the Japanese and interned at Zentsuji, island of Skikoku, are being well treated, the International Red Cross reported in a cablegram made public today by Rep. White (D-Idaho).

However, the men want more entertainment, fancier food and mail from folks back home.

Detailed Account

This was the most detailed account received through neutral sources to date on the welfare of men who fell into enemy hands.

Rep. White was chosen to release the report, presumably because many of the soldiers and civilians captured in the American outposts were residents of Idaho, Oregon and Washington. Civilians from these and other Western States were engaged in military construction work on the captured islands.

The cablegram from an agent of the International Red Cross was transmitted to the Navy department here and then turned over to White. He made it public as follows:

"Have visited camp for prisoners of war at Zentsuji March 12, accompanied by aid from the Information bureau and the Japanese Red Cross. Camp on large island of Skikoku in the north near inland sea on fertile plain between hills covered with pines; good climate; no endemical diseases.

"Market town of Zentsuji with 25,000 inhabitants nearby. Camp covers six acres surrounded by barbed wire and a wooden fence. Two army barracks, two stories high, well ventilated, 12,000 cubic meters in all. Capacity 500; present number 344, one Englishman from Shanghai, two Dutchmen, five Australians and rest Americans of whom eight are from Gilbert island, twenty from Wake and the rest from Guam. Forty-five officers, 10 doctors, two druggists, one dentist.

Heated By Stoves

"Barracks recently divided into rooms of from one to 14 camp beds, each having five blankets, a pillow and mattress for officers. Heating by modern stoves.

"Daily rations 300 grams of bread, 300 rice, 100 wheat plus potatoes, sweet potatoes, green vegetables, fish, eggs, etc. Total 3,200 calories. Meat, sugared food and in this season, fruits, are rather rare. Young and active prisoners are losing weight; old and idle prisoners gain weight.

"Cooks chosen from prisoners work in separate kitchens which are large and clean.

"Tobacco ration is 10 cigarettes per one to three days according to rank.

"Clothing sufficient for the moment but 120 pairs of shoes requested as soon as possible. Daily laundering; good hygiene; large hot Japanese bath daily for workers and weekly for others. Latrines clean and isolated.

"Infantry in barracks; military hospital nearby. Visits from Japanese doctors three times a week. Monthly inspection. Fifteen wounded in infirmary of whom seven wounded by bombs and one had leg amputated above the knee. All getting along well. No dead. American dentist wants to practice. We will procure instruments for him.

"Prisoners wish books, equipment for sports and games, piano, typewriters. Protecting power will take charge of that.

"Religious services conducted by a minister who is also a prisoner.

"Two hundred prisoners work voluntarily to clear nearby hill for potatoes, sweet potatoes, wheat. Satisfied with their work. Paid 60 to 90 yen a day according to rank. Necessity work in camp paid 15 to 35 yen a day. Preparing to organize paid work in the town. Officers receive same pay as that of corresponding rank in the Japanese army.

"Principal need is that of corresponding with families. Letters not sent in view of lack of communications. At beginning of March officers authorized to send personal messages to their families in America by radio but remain without any answer.

"Prisoners wish to receive financial assistance by cable from their families through the intermediary of the U. S. Navy department or the Red Cross. Have already asked by radio for packages of preserves, meat, fruits, sweets, American tobacco.

"No complaint on subject of treatment; discipline and cooperation are excellent. Commanding officer and officers competent and friendly. Prisoners sensible. General impression very good."

Queen Says Indies Dutch Will Fight in New Armies

Radio Speech to People Tells Plans for Escaped Troops

LONDON, April 3 (AP).—Queen Wilhelmina told the people of the Nazi-occupied Netherlands over Radio Orange tonight that Dutch East Indies forces which escaped from Java and Sumatra would be rearmed and formed into units "to take part again in the fight at the earliest opportunity."

She called for the abandonment of party politics, and announced the formation of an extraordinary advisory council to advise the Dutch government "as long as it has to exercise its powers outside the Netherlands."

The council will include Dutchmen compelled to flee their homeland and the colonies.

VATICAN CONSIDERS LINK WITH CHINA

Roosevelt Hears Emissary Exchange Is Planned.

Washington, April 3 (A. P.).—President Roosevelt told a press conference today he understood that the Vatican was discussing exchanging emissaries b[illegible]th Tokio and Chungking. He said he could not say whether the United States might establish a permanent representative at the Holy See, adding that there was quite a transportation problem involved.

The possibility that Japan might be accorded a representative at the Vatican has occasioned some concern among the United Nations lest it be taken as a friendly action by the Catholic Church toward an enemy Power.

The President was told that the British Radio had reported that Britain had expressed to the Vatican her concern and anxiety over the question. To an inquiry as to whether this country had made similar representations, the President replied in the negative.

Japanese Evacuees To Make Goods For U. S. Army

APR 4 1942

Four-Point Program Outlined for 100,000 In West Coast Zones

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 3.—Japanese evacues from the military zones along the Pacific Coast were given their first peep into the future—they will farm and make Army goods for the country which gave them substance for many years before the war.

The War Relocation Authority, handling the vast problem of resettling more than 100,000 Japanese, announced it was considering there four different types of work opportunities for the evacues:

1—Public work contributing to the war effort, such as development of land for irrigation.

2—Production of needed agricultural commodities for subsistence of evacues and for sale.

3—Manufacturing of articles such as camouflage nets, cartridge belts, wood products, etc., that are required by the military establishment.

4—Private employment, when and where possible.

Supervised Projects.

M. S. Eisenhower, director of the authority, emphasized that the immediate relocation and work opportunities would be on large supervised public projects.

The evacues will not take part in private pursuits for several months, at least not until after the evacuation from military areas has been completed and definite policies and procedures made regarding opportunities for and the conditions of private employment.

The whole evacuation problem will be discussed with State and Federal officials from 10 Western States at Salt Lake City, April 7.

Japanese farmers swamped Pacific Coast offices of the United States Employment Service with urgent requests that operators be found to take over their farm lands.

6,000 Farms Listed.

Field agents of the Farm Security Administration have listed about 6,000 farms, comprising 200,000 acres, for which new operators must be found. The agents said the administration had supervised the transfer of about 1,000 farms of some 50,000 acres to new operators in Washington, Oregon and California.

Several hundred Japanese, first evacues of the war, already have been settled in the Manzanar reception center in California's Owens Valley. They went from Los Angeles. More than 2,000 others, from San Francisco's water front and from San Diego, must be on their way there by next Tuesday.

These are the first segments of a continuing movement—the largest such wartime evacuation ever undertaken in the Nation.

300 Japs Lose State Jobs

Los Angeles, April 3. (AP)—Nearly 300 Japanese have been ousted from their state jobs.

State Department heads said many of those discharged had access to confidential information of military value.

Hawaiian War Projects Put on 48-Hour Week

By the Associated Press.

HONOLULU, April 3.—A 48-hour work week for all war projects, consisting of six days of eight hours each, was decreed yesterday by the military governor of the Hawaiian Islands.

Time and a half will be paid for overtime in excess of 44 hours weekly or eight hours daily. Work in excess of 56 hours a week was forbidden, except in emergencies.

It was explained the order does not apply to Federal, territorial or civil service employes.

SCIENCE DEVELOPS CAMPHOR SUPPLY

APR 4 1942

Synthetic Product Made from Turpentine, Says duPont Research Expert.

ATLANTA, April 3.—(AP) When Japan dried up this country's supply of versatile compound, camphor, American science promptly developed synthetic camphor from southern turpentine.

This story of research triumph was related tonight by Dr. J. W. Stillman of the duPont central test center, Wilmington, Del., to a joint session of the Southern Association of Science and Industry and the Georgia Academy of Science.

The aromatic compound which comes from a tree of the Laurel family, abundant on the Japanese war base of Formosa, is widely used in plastics and photographic film. The cinema industry consumes 600,000 pounds annually.

When the Japanese clamped down control on both price and supply, American scientists began their successful tests to bridge the gap. Months before Pearl Harbor, they had produced a camphor chemically identical with that from the tree. A plant is in operation now, using southern turpentine, turning out 80 per cent of the nation's needs, Stillman said.

RED GUERRILLAS HARASS GERMANS

Destroy 36 Bridges, Seize Army Supplies, Kill Troops Behind Lines.

LONDON, April 3—(AP) Russian guerrillas striking in the Smolensk sector 230 miles west of Moscow were declared officially tonight to have inflicted heavy losses on German troops, and to have destroyed 36 bridges and vital equipment stores needed for Adolf Hitler's spring push.

Soviet announcements in Moscow indicated that the sharpest fighting along the front still was in the northwest. A communique said one Red army detachment killed more than 450 Nazis in a single day's fighting in that area, presumably near Lake Ilmen.

APR 4 1942

Several Towns Regained

The Germans also were reported thrown out of several populated places along the front, but these were not identified by the Russians who early today reported a 13-day toll of more than 25,000 German dead.

Official announcements in Moscow and Berlin indicated only sharp patrol forays elsewhere along the vast front where both sides are gathering huge reserves for the supreme 1942 test.

The Russians said their guerrillas in the Smolensk sector killed 500 Nazis, captured 22, and destroyed three German tanks and 300 carts loaded with ammunition and other supplies.

"Exerting their control on a number of roads," the announcement said, "the guerrillas have compelled the Germans to move along these roads only in big detachments."

One case was cited where one of these organized bands delivered 250 tons of foodstuffs as "a present from collective farmers" working in supposedly German-conquered territory.

After days of reporting virtually unc easing Russian attacks, the German High Command said that although "heavy local thrusts" were necountered for, "on the whole a lessening enemy activity in the east is noticeable.'" The Germans said "a fairly large number of villages was taken."

A late German radio report indicated the heaviest fighting of the day was going on northeast of Lake Ilmen, where violent Russian attacks under artillery cover were said to have been repulsed, and on the central front, where German dive bombers attacked Red Army communications in waves, purportedly destroying six supply trains and damaging 18.

Front line Unchanged, Say Reds

The Russian communique spoke of attacks by "infantry freshly arrived from Germany" and said there was "no essential change" in front-line positions.

Although it seemed from this that the thousands of fresh units drained from every corner of Germany and her satellites had begun scattered attacks, observers in London regarded these as only preliminary activity to consolidate jumping off places for the big assault.

The Russians appeared to be centering their efforts on harassing these preparations as much as possible by raids to blow up ammunition dumps and knock out artillery batteries.

M[illegible] of this work, as well as d[illegible] communications and raiding supply lines, is the job of guerrillas who have operated for months deep in territory which the Germans otherwise could regard as conquered land.

A supplement to the Soviet communique, telling of the activities of one such band, said that it had killed 540 Nazi officers and men in a single month and had broken direct contact between the German headquarters and front line forces several times during March.

Putting a finger on what the Russians regard as a weakness of the German offensive plan, the communique supplement said the Nazi veterans who have suffered the tortures of Russian winter in the open and under unceasing combat conditions await the big Spring test with "dread and alarm."

It said that this, added to the fact that many non-German units have taken the place of picked troops who spearheaded the initial drive into Russia, may develop into a major obstacle to grandiose German plans for Spring and summer conquest.

Reds Report Slaying 25,000 Nazis in 13 Days on 2 Fronts

APR 4 1942

Large-Scale Fighting Declared Growing In Intensity

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, April 3.—More than 25,000 German troops have been slain and huge war supply stores captured by Red Army men on the neighboring Leningrad and Kalinin fronts in 13 days of large-scale fighting which is still growing in intensity, the Russians said today.

(Old military casualty ratio tables have been upset by quirks of 1939-1942 style warfare, but a death toll of 25,000 probably indicates a total of from 75,000 to 125,000 killed, wounded and captured. Russian concentration on northern offensives would be likely to drain Nazi reserves from the south, where observers expect Adolf Hitler to try to center his spring operations.)

Sharp fighting also was reported on the southern front, where the Soviet Information Bureau said the Germans had hurled fresh infantry reinforcements into unsuccessful counterattacks which cost them more than 200 killed. The Russians claimed local successes in various other sectors.

Special communiques announced that 10,000 German dead were counted between March 21 and April 1 on the Kalinin front northwest of Moscow, the scene of encirclement operations against the 16th German Army aboutStaraya Russa, and 12,000 in the Leningrad area between March 23 and 31.

This toll was reported following issuance of a regular communique at noon yesterday which stated 3,000 had been killed on the Leningrad front in the preceding 48 hours.

The combat tempo is rising "with every hour that passes" and a fortified settlement which served as a center for several villages occupied by the Germans has been captured, the Leningrad radio said. Tank-supported counterattacks were noted.

"The Germans," the announcer said, "managed to drive a wedge into our defense positions, but were unable to widen the gap."

Much Equipment Seized.

Kalinin-Leningrad front forces were officially credited with a tremendous levy on Nazi war stores since March 21, including 16 tanks captured and 39 destroyed; 62 field guns captured and 77 destroyed, and 165 trucks captured and 642 destroyed.

(The position of Leningrad was regarded by Swedish observers, however, as still difficult and they said the Germans might be able to take it this summer if they were willing to pay a heavy price in dead and wounded.)

The Soviet Information Bureau announced reoccupation of several communities yesterday, but did not identify them. Another U-boat was sunk by Red Navy units in the Barents Sea, it said.

A Russian cavalry outfit was declared to have killed more than 650 Germans in beating off an attack by numerically superior forces which were equipped with tanks.

Lessening of Activity Reported by Germans

BERLIN (from German broadcasts), April 3 (AP).—The German high command, which for days has reported the Soviet Army on the attack, said today that "despite heavy local enemy thrusts, on the whole a lessening of enemy activity in the East is noticeable."

German forces, in offensive operations of their own, were said to have taken "a fairly large number of villages."

The war bulletin said German bombers set fire to a large Russian tanker off the Caucasus coast of the Black Sea and said a medium-sized merchant ship was damaged by bombs off Kerch Peninsula o the Crimea.

Guerrillas Rout Nazis

MOSCOW, Saturday, April 4—(AP)—Russian guerrillas wiped out 300 Germans at a small railway station outside Bryansk, and penetrated into Bryansk itself where they destroyed all Nazi-operated locomotives there, it was reported today.

Croatian Troops Active

BERLIN (From German broadcasts) Saturday, April 4—(AP)—Axis-sponsored Croation troops killed 77 "communist partisans" operating in the mountains of eastern Slavonia, wounded 60 others and captured 32, an official announcement in Zagreb said last night.

Soviets Sink 12 Subs

MOSCOW, Saturday, April 4 (AP)—Soviet torpedo boats and motor launches operating in the Baltic since the beginning of the war have sunk at least 12 enemy submarines, it was announced today.

Berlin (From German broadcasts) Saturday, April 4—(AP)—the 257th Brandenburg infantry and the 97th upper Bavarian light infantry divisions have killed more than 15,700 Russians, captured 2,250, and destroyed or captured 60 tanks in repulsing 472 Soviet attacks during the past XXXXX few weeks, the Berlin radio said today.

Standley Flies Supply Route

New Envoy to Russia Is Surveying Flow of Arms on Way to Post

TEHERAN, Iran, April 3 (AP).—Admiral William H. Standley, flying over part of the American supply line to Russia, is surveying the flow of equipment for the Red Army while en route to his new post as Ambassador to the Soviet Union.

The admiral said today he would proceed soon to Kuybyshev, the supplementary Russian capital, and to Moscow.

APR 4 1942

One object of his mission, it is understood, is to expedite supplies to the Soviet fighting front.

Admiral Standley, however, declined to comment.

JAP ENVOYS TO TALK

Emissaries to Germany and Turkey to Confer.

Berlin (From German Broadcasts) April 3 (A. P.).—Japan's Ambassadors in Germany and Turkey, Lieut.-Gen. Hiroshi Oshima and Sho Kurihara, are to meet soon in Sofia, Bulgaria, for a conference, according to a German dispatch from Ankara quoting Japanese circles.

Such a conference might deal with Axis plans for spring operations in the eastern Mediterranean and Indian Ocean areas.

17 R. A. F. Planes Over Narvik

LONDON, April 3 (AP).—Reuters (a British news agency) relayed a Stockholm report today that seventeen British planes, possibly based on an aircraft carrier, flew over Narvik, Nazi-occupied port in northern Norway, yesterday. The report, published by the Swedish newspaper "Helgens Nyheter," said there was no word of bombs having been dropped.

London Believes Some Of Ships Eluded Nazis

London, April 3 (AP)—Some of the 11 Norwegian ships which made a break for freedom from Swedish ports two days ago may have eluded the German warship patrol, the Ministry of Information said today.

The ministry issued this statement:

"Following the attempt of certain Norwegian ships which had been detained in Swedish ports as the result of a legal dispute as to their ownership to sail to this country, many conflicting reports have been received from foreign sources.

APR 4 1942

"It now has been learned in London that these should be taken with reserve. Details are not yet available, but it is believed the attempt had been partially successful."

Overnight battle and bombardment in the light of an April moon brought the fiercest exchange of blows in months as the RAF delivered its third assault on the Matford truck plant in the Poissy suburb of Paris and the German air force gave a south coast British center one of its worst raids of the war.

A southeast English town also was hit. The English targets were identified by the Germans as Portland (south coast naval base adjacent to Weymouth), and Dover, southeast England's "Hell Corner" on the narrow strait across from France.

Portland is one of the bases from which the recent British Commando raids on St. Nazaire and Bruneval may have been launched, and a German attack there could mean the Germans are trying to stave off other such invasion stabs into France.

So closely locked were the opposing air forces that German bombers returning from England were engaged and damaged by British fighters hovering over airdromes in German-occupied territory. One RAF squadron leader reported hits on two Nazi planes which approached their base with landing lights ablaze.

RAF Loses But 2 Planes

Although they ranged from Belgium to Brittany, the RAF lost but two planes compared to Wednesday night's 15. Pilots reported heavy new damage to the Matford plant, which is producing trucks for the Germans. Vichy reports said one child was killed and six persons wounded at Poissy and that bombs also fell at Andresy and Marly in the Paris area.

Heavy Casualties in Britain

Casualties were heavy and civilian property considerably damaged in the British south coast town, authorized reports said. RAF night fighters prevented heavier casualties.

The raiders came in low under the balloon barrage protecting the English coast and dropped their bombs "hit or miss," residents said.

Rescue parties spent the early part of Good Friday digging for victims in the wreckage of buildings and houses. A family of five was killed in a public house demolished by a direct hit; a newspaper office was almost destroyed; two hospitals were damaged. One crowded public shelter was hit, with considerable casualties.

This afternoon the RAF shuttled across the channel, apparently blasting at Boulogne and Calais across from Dover and at other areas farther north.

Official announcement placed German losses since Thursday at four: One plane shot down over the south coast last night and two bombers and a German seaplane destroyed Thursday afternoon by Coastal Command Beaufighters.

British Guard Coast.

Britain will restore strict limitations on civilian movements along the so-called invasion coast of eastern and southeastern England on April 15. Restrictions were lifted during the winter on public travel between the Wash and the Thames and between Hastings and Littlehampton.

The German High Command identified the Nazi objectives as Dover and the naval base of Portland, the latter a logical take-off point for the recent Commando raids on the St. Nazaire U-boat base and the Bruneval aircraft detector station. Observers interpreted this claim as proof the Germans fear that further sorties against the French coast are being prepared at Portland and other southern coastal cities.

The Air Ministry said that bomber pilots returning from the Matford raid reported an effective bombardment of this key French industrial plant, part of the Air Ministry's plan to demolish Nazi and Nazi-controlled war industries.

Two British planes were lost, the Ministry said.

The Air Ministry reported that a number of Nazi bombers were damaged on their return from the attacks on England by British planes hovering over German airdromes. One squadron leader alone reported hits on two Nai planes which approached their base with their landing lights on.

The fury of the moonlit German assault, sudden and brief but of extraordinary intensity, suggested to some Britons that the tables may have been turned, and that the Nais fear invasion by the British. They speculated that the Nazis, afraid of a repetition of recent British hit-and-run landings in occupied France, might have been trying to break up any new preparations on this side.

The attack on the Matford works at Poissy, on the Seine River eight miles from Paris, was the third by the R. A. F. in a month's time and the second on successive nights.

Nazis Scatter Bombs.

Although the German planes were in unusual force, their bombs fell over a relatively broad area, and a communique indicated that damages and casualties were slight except for one place on the south coast and another one on the southeast coast where damage was caused and there were a number of casualties, some of which were fatal.

"It seemed like a spite raid," said one seasoned obeserver who has spent the whole war at a post on that hot shore. "The Nazis buzzed in like a swarm of Leave Flame and Ruin From Seine to Portland And Dover—300 Casualties Reported In Paris Suburb.

LONDON, April 3. (AP)—The reawakened fury of the western air war left flame and ruin tonight from the Seine to England's staunchly guarded southern coast.

Nazis Over Britain Again

The Germans were over the southeast coast, one of last night's targets, again tonight but in considerably less force, violent anti-aircraft fire kept them high and there were no immediate reports of bombings.

A dispatch from German-controlled Paris to Switzerland, however, claimed that there were 300 casualties in the Matford raid.

Docks at Le Havre again were raided and RAF fighters swept a number of Nazi airdromes.

In the fiercest exchange of air blows in many months, R. A. F. planes inflicted severe damage on the Matford truck plant outside Paris, raided docks at Le Havre, and sent fighters on sweeps over German air fields last night, while the Germans countered with terrific attacks on English south coast towns.

APR 4 1942

London, April 3 (A. P.).—The Royal Air Force in a daylight continuation of the most extensive two-sided aerial operations in many months, sent squadrons of fighters and bombers roaring across the English Channel late today in blasting attacks on Nazi bases at Boulogne and Calais and other enemy-occupied areas farther north.

Reverberations from their assault rocketed back across Dover Strait for some time and the entire area shook from the distant impact of the British bombs.

angry bees, dropped their bomb cargoes in hit or miss fashion, then beat it back quickly for the French coast. They came in unusually low with a roar heard for miles.

"At first we thought it was our own machines returning from French raids. Then the bombs started whistling down all around the town and the countryside. Many fell on open ground and caused no damage. The Germans made no attempt to concentrate on any objective."

Many homes were destroyed in one town which was a target of the Nazi raiders and a bomb which scored a direct hit on a crowded public shelter caused a considerable number of casualties. Nine bodies were removed from the shelter by dawn and rescue work was continuing.

Among those able to crawl from the wreckage were Mrs. Anna Dives and her son Peter, home for the Easter holidays. It was the third bombing for the mother, who was slightly injured. She lost an eye and her home in her first bombing experience. Her husband and a son were killed in a later bombing.

"But I've no intention of moving away from town," Mrs. Dives said today.

One family of five was killed outright.

Windows of one hospital were blown in and otherwise damaged when a nearby shelter was hit, and patients had to be removed.

Reporting considerable damage, the press association said that scores of families were trapped beneath their shattered homes, but that many had been saved by crawling into steel cage shelters kept under dining-room tables. Survivors were being dug out every hour.

Again to Restrict Civilian Movements

APR 4 1942

LONDON, April 3 (AP)—Britain will restore strict limitations on civilian movements along the entire "invasion coast" area of Eastern and Southeastern England on April 15.

Restrictions were lifted during the winter on public travel between the Wash and the Thames and between Hastings and Littlehampton.

One Killed, Six Wounded At Poissy, French Report

VICHY, April 3 (AP).—One child was killed and six persons were wounded in last night's R. A. F. raid on Poissy, site of the Matford motor truck plant 8 miles west of Paris, while two British planes were brought down, it was announced today, one at Conflans-Sainte Honorine, north of Poissy, and another in St. Germain Forest to the south.

Bombs also were said to have fallen at Andresy and Marly, where several houses were destroyed and a number of persons were injured.

The Paris region was held under an air alert from 10:45 p.m. last night until 12:30 a.m. today, advices from Paris said.

LUEBECK DAMAGE GERMANY'S WORST FIRST FILMS SHOW

Hundreds of Buildings Demolished, 200 Persons Killed in R.A.F. Raid.

BERN, April 3.—(AP) The first published photographs of the damage inflicted on Lusbeck by the R.A.F. last Saturday night show "without exaggeration that the effects were catastrophic," the Berlin correspondent of the Tribune de Geneve reported today.

"Some hundreds of properties were demolished like castles of cardboard and some streets were entirely blasted by explosions," the correspondent wrote. "One sees everywhere men and women looking over the remains of their furniture among the ruins."

The photographs confirmed earlier reports from Berlin that the raid was "the heaviest British air attack on German territory since the beginning of the war."

Over two hundred bodies have been recovered from the ruins, the correspondent said.

"One fact must be noted," the correspondent of the Tribune de Geneve said, "Only the city proper was affected, while the outer districts did not receive a single bomb."

"By moonlight the admirable Patrician homes of the Hanseatic city were easy objectives for the British pilots who, moreover, had to contend with a very feeble anti-aircraft defense," the dispatch said.

The Tribune said that the total losses were not yet known, but that women and children must be evacuated from Luebeck.

A Paris dispatch to the Tribune said last night's R.A.F. bombing of Poissy, Paris suburb where the Matford motor truck plant is located, caused 300 casualties including wounded. Heavy damage was caused, the dispatch said.

Berlin (from German broadcasts), April 3-(AP) Dover and Portland were the main targets of Nazi bombers which heavily attacked the British southeast coast last night, the German high command announced today.

AXIS RAIDS ON MALTA KILL 230 IN MONTH

VALLETTA, Malta, April 3. —(AP) Axis bombs killed 230 persons on the island of Malta during March, a British communique said tonight. It was the greatest number of casualties recorded here in any month of the war, but the raids were also the heaviest.

Three German bombers were destroyed by anti-aircraft fire today and four more damaged. The R. A. F. damaged four more planes and "probably" shot down a fifth without loss of its own planes.

Battle Over Mediterranean Isle Fiercer Than Any at Britain.

By WILLIAM McGAFFIN

AT A BRITISH AIRDROME SOMEWHERE IN THE DESERT, April 3—(AP) A squad of R.A.F. airmen who saw British fighter planes and anti-aircraft batteries take the heaviest toll of the enemy so far levied over Malta arrived today singing the praises of the bomb-battered island's defenses.

The men, including an American serving with the R.A.F., agreed the Germans must have been "definitely shaken" when 25 per cent of their bombers failed to return to their Sicilian bases from Wednesday's raids.

16 Nazis Destroyed

(In Cairo the R.A.F. announced today that 16 Axis raiders certainly were destroyed. A dispatch from Malta on Thursday said the defenders had to their credit 13 others probably destroyed or damaged heavily.)

The American gave voice to the general opinion when he said he had "never seen anything like the nerve of those fighter pilots." They're so persistent, he added, that they "dive right through their own defense barrage to get at the Axis raiders."

As for Malta's anti-aircraft guns —those he simply called "the world's best."

Fiercest of All Air Battles

The battle of Malta now is fiercer, in proportion, than the battle of Britain at its peak, in the opinion of the American, who saw them both. Because of Malta's size—the island base covers only 120 square miles—it is a much more concentrated target.

But the Maltese, like the English, are taking the pounding with unflinching morale, he said.

Malta's shelters in the solid rock are helping the people stand up to the ordeal. He called them "the world's best shelters." This correspondent, who visited Malta recently, agrees with him.

The American is a 39-year-old sergeant serving as a wireless operator and gunner. A mining engineer, he left his home in Butte, Mont., in 1936 to go to Spain to fight with the International Brigade. He says he gets no thrill out of flying and prefers to drive a fast car.

Unlike most Americans with the R.A.F., he is content to stay in the British force rather than shift to the American air force now that the United States is in the war.

Like the other returning airmen, he hailed Malta's pilots—all of them volunteers — as "wizard chaps" fighting against great odds. They are making Malta channel, between the tiny island and Sicily, as much a grave for Nazi fliers as the English channel has become.

BOMB SHELTERS HOUSE U-BOATS

London, April 3 (A. P.).—The Berlin radio reported today that U-boats for Atlantic operations were housed like cars in a garage in new drydocks built along the west coast of Europe by Todt engineering units.

The broadcast, quoting a Berlin newspaper, said that the drydocks were roofed with concrete to make them safe against air attacks.

Nazis Claim Sinking Of 36 Warships in Two-Month Period

APR 4 1942

One Cruiser, 8 Destroyers, 3 Corvettes Included in Navy's Reported Toll

(The following dispatch was sent by an enemy country, whose motive in releasing news is likely to be propaganda. Axis claims should be credited only when confirmed by American or Allied sources.)

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts).—The high command said today that during February and March the German Navy, operating against the fleets of the United States and Britain, sank 36 warcraft, including 1 cruiser, 8 destroyers, 3 corvettes, 4 torpedo boats, 12 motor torpedo boats and motor gunboats, 5 escort vessels and 3 submarine chasers.

In addition during the same period, a communique said, the German air force sank two motor gunboats and three escort vessels.

"Another 37 warships, including 10 cruisers, 11 destroyers and five submarines were damaged in offensive operations by German naval forces and in air attacks by the Luftwaffe," it added.

The high command said the cruiser listed among the ships sunk was British—a ship of the Leander class. The Germans had said recently that a ship of this class had been torpedoed and sunk in the Mediterranean.

None of the other ships was named in the communique.

London Acknowledges Loss Of Destroyer Heythrop

London, April 3 (AP)—The Admiralty announced today that the destroyer Heythrop had been sunk.

The Heythroy was one of the "Hunt" class, which were laid down in 1939 and completed in 1940. These ships displace 904 tons, and carry four 4-inch anti-aircraft and eight smaller guns.

British Sub, Destroyer Damaged, Italians Say

ROME (from Italian broadcasts), April 3 (AP).—Large squadrons of German and Italian planes again attacked Malta yesterday, raining bombs on factories and supply depots and damaging a British submarine and a destroyer in the harbor, the Italian high command declared today.

Nazi fighters escorting the bombers were said to have shot down four British planes, and two others were reported destroyed on the ground.

The daily war bulletin also said Axis planes had been active over Libya, attacking British troop concentrations and knocking out numerous motorized units.

Ground operations on the North African front, however, were limited to light patrol and artillery activity, the communique said.

Berlin Reports Victories

BERLIN (from German broadcasts), April 3 (AP).—German bombers scored bomb hits on two "enemy merchant ships" near the British-held Libyan port of Tobruk, the high command said today.

It reported that ten British planes were shot down in Mediterranean and North African air battles.

and said day and night air attacks on Malta continued.

PETAIN BLOCKS LAVAL RETURN

Berne Says Marshal Barred Cabinet Post to Him.

Berne, April 3 (A. P.).—Marshal Petain has declined to take Pierre Laval back into his Cabinet after talking to his former Foreign Minister and Vice-Premier in Vichy, reports reaching foreign diplomatic quarters here said today. Thus it appeared that Petain had avoided for the time being another step in the direction of collaboration with Germany—a policy championed by Laval.

The suggestion that Laval might be returned to the Vichy Cabinet was advanced first by Axis sources last week when it was disclosed that he had been in conference with Petain at Randan, near Vichy.

The secrecy surrounding a series of recent conferences between Petain and Laval was dispelled partially today by an official announcement at Vichy, indicating they had been reviewing the question of collaboration with Germany.

It was written by Laval and issued last night with the approval of the Vichy information secretariat. It said:

"As initiator of the Montoire policy (when Marshal Petain met Adolf Hitler for his first collaboration talk), and considering that the external situation of France is growing worse daily, I thought it my duty to have an interview with Marshal Petain.

"Conversations have taken place between the Chief of State and myself. They ended today with the last interview at Pavillon Sevigne."

Vichy Cabinet Fails to Act On Position for Laval

By the Associated Press.

VICHY, Unoccupied France, April 3.—The French cabinet heard a first-hand report from Air Minister Gen. Jean Marie Bergeret on his inspection of African air bases today, but failed to take action on Axis-sponsored proposals that Pierre Laval, former vice premier, return to an official position.

Laval ended his negotiations with Marshal Petain and Vice Premier Admiral Jean Darlan last night in a communique announcing they had been prompted by his belief that the "external situation of France is growing worse daily."

German sources in Vichy were reported only "normally interested" in Laval's failure. Meanwhile, Laval was lunching with German Consul General Krug von Nidda and Spanish Ambassador Jose Lequerica at Clermont-Ferrand, near Vichy.

Nazis and French Mark Birth of Charlemagne

APR 4 1942

VICHY, April 3 (AP).—Simultaneous celebrations were held yesterday in Germany and occupied France commemorating the 1,200th anniversary of the birth of Charlemagne, the last monarch under whom France and Germany were one country. (Charlemagne was born on April 2, 742.)

The German festival was held at Aachen (Aix la Chapelle) and the French celebration at St. Denis, northern Paris suburb, where Charlemagne was crowned.

REALISM HAS PART IN ARMY TRAINING

British Troops Go Through Ireland Maneuvers with Live Ammunition.

By RICE YAHNER

WITH THE UNITED STATES ARMY IN NORTHERN IRELAND, April 3.—(AP) British troops, trained to a new peak even though many are veterans of the Norwegian campaign early in 1940, have given the U. S. troops in Northern Ireland combat practice records to shoot at by staging a mountain battle that could have been no more realistic without actually having men killed.

APR 4 1942

While U. S. staff officers watched, thousands of soldiers of famous British regiments carried out a full day's battle problem. They assaulted a simulated enemy position on a bleak mountain range with all their armament, firing live ammunition over the heads of advancing troops.

With complete confidence in their gunners and their equipment, the drivers of Bren gun carriers raced up the mountain roads with high explosive bursting on both sides and in front of them. Smoke shells threw fragments behind them, but every soldier plugged right on.

To simulate enemy fire special men within each section dropped time charges of dynamite and giant firecrackers which made the following troops alert to take cover.

It was a dawn to dark demonstration of the training peak the British soldier must reach before he is regarded as full fit for action. That is the objective which has been set for United States troops, whether they are in Northern Ireland or in U. S. camps.

With artillery shells whistling overhead and mines exploding so close that at times pieces of turf fell almost at their feet, observers watched the battle throughout the day. Heading them was Maj. Gen. Russell P. Hartle, the U. S. Commander in Northern Ireland, and special staff officers.

The goal of the American training program is at least equal in thoroughness. However, every man stationed in the six Ulster Counties has received a definite assignment in th British-American war strategy. Guards and lookouts are on post twenty-four hours a day.

Alerts designed to test facility and promptness in assembling a full fighting force are frequent, and neither soldiers nor commanders know when such a call will be a real one to repel a real enemy.

Gen. Hartle, in unannounced inspection trips almost daily throughout his command, stressed that his force must be able to move at any minute.

"You can't have one excess piece of baggage or one pound of rations of equipment that you won't need when you go on the battle field," is his standing order. "You've got to be mobile and stay mobile."

First Canadian Overseas Army

LONDON, April 3 (AP).—Formation of the first Canadian army overseas probably will be announced within the next few days, informed quarters said tonight. Complete plans for this army were believed brought by Lieutenant General A. G. L. McNaughton, commander of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, upon his recent return from home.

Britons Spend Easter Preparing for Future

APR 4 1942

Wonder What's Ahead—Financial Dealings Dull as Prices Drift Lower—Dockers To Run Ports on Own.

By EDWARD ROBINSON

LONDON, April 3. (Wide World)—Britain associated Easter time with warnings of still more "fortress" economies to follow a hectic year during which statisticians figure the nation spent $605 a second paying for World War II.

War Savings 265 Millions

The majority of the people, which has half its 40-odd millions mobilized in national service, used their holiday time at home preparing and planting vegetable plots.

Vague shadows of the situation in India, the uncertainty of the Pacific and Burma outlook and forecasts of spring offensives here or there kept financial dealings the dullest in a long time. Prices on the whole drifted downward without especially substantial losses.

Astronomical figures in the reports of the financial year just ended meant little to the man-in-the street but he listened when told the average man, woman or child "spent" $406 on war during the year by paying $176 in taxes and lending $232 more to the state.

War savings for the week were reported as $265,000,000 pushing the war's aggregate to $8,122,800,000.

The first national agreement for 40,000 of England's barbers starts June 1. Assistants in men's and women's shops will start at $3.20 a week at the age of 15, receive $10 when they're 21 and $13 at age 24 —plus tips if any.

Also in the field of labor: after Easter, dockers in northwest England are going to run the ports on their own for a week, handling everything including discipline. Port authorities and employers will step aside to watch the industrial experiment. Being absent or unpunctual in essential work may cost the offender a $400 fine or three months sentence. One girl who refused to take up work of national importance was given the alternatives of $100 fine or a month's sentence. She was told by the magistrate she was putting "dignity before country." A London magistrate went to bat for a group of boys who complained a railroad company wouldn't let a boy take another job. The jurist commented: "They should pay boys more money if they want to keep them."

The new drive against food thefts has been so successful none was reported during the past week. One reason was the appeal to the people to "dial 999"—the police alarm—as soon as they suspected an illicit deal or spotted possible "black market" dumps.

Another food development was a report the food ministry would cut down food allocations to hotels and restaurants in an attempt to end luxury prices. Meals in such places are difficult subjects for price control.

Convicts who already have turned out around $2,000,000 worth of war goods in prison shops may get a chance to hike that total if a scheme now underfoot goes through. It would turn all prison training shops to war production.

The coal-labor picture: Durham coal miners ended a 16-day dispute over a difference of 20 cents a week in the weighing system and 8,000 north Wales miners gave 14 days notice of intent to strike if owners of a certain colliery failed to talk over trade union conditions.

A strike cheered by some was in full swing in north London, where 70 boys employed as delivery truck helpers walked out because, they said, their weekly wage of $4.80 was less than half what was paid women for doing practically the same work.

From here and there: Tobacco consumption in 1941 was estimated at 222,000,000 pounds against 192,000,000 in 1940 and 31 per cent of it was Empire-grown. The war department has been swamped by 140,000 claims against army drivers during the last 10 months. The newsprint industry has been reduced to a basic rate of about 17 1-2 per cent of prewar production at prices of $112 a ton against a prewar $44.50. Directors of the Channel Tunnel Co. have been trying to earn their yearly $160 fee by getting together enough shareholders to form a quorum and hear the usual report: "No change in our affairs." A tunnel under the channel to France is a paper project, for the company can't do anything without the British government's consent, which has been refused for the past 40 years.

British Clocks 2 Hours Ahead

LONDON, Saturday, April 4 (AP) —Great Britain will go on double Summertime, two hours ahead of Greenwich Meantime, at 2 A. M. tomorrow until Aug. 9, four weeks longer than last year. British clocks have been one hour ahead of Greenwich time since the war began.

Britain on double summer time will be six hours ahead of New York, on Eastern war time. The normal time difference between London and New York is five hours.

FIRST WEDDING IN A. E. F. NEAR

Belfast, Northern Ireland, April 3 (A. P.).—Private Herbert W. Cooke, 20 years old, of the United States forces in Northern Ireland, said today that he hopes to be the first American trooper married here. His fiancee is Thelma Smith, 18, a Belfast waitress.

"My father, who lives at Dercum Road, Cleveland, Ohio, has cabled his consent and we're going right ahead," Cooke said.

"My commanding officer has told me he has no power to prevent me taking this step. I'd be a very disappointed young man if anything happened to spoil things. We're both very much in love."

Canal Zone Aliens En Route to U. S. For Internment

APR 4 1942

Most of Group of 700 Have Been Held by Panama Government

By CHANDLER DIEHL,
Associated Press War Correspondent.

A CANAL ZONE PORT, April 3. Approximately 700 Axis aliens, their families and suspected aliens from Axis-occupied countries are en route from this important Atlantic-Pacific lifeline to the United States for internment.

The aliens, most of whom have been held in custody by the Panamanian government since the first week of the war to insure fullest protection of the vital Panama Canal Zone, include more than 100 from Costa Rica and Guatemala.

Most arresting among the group who embarked from this port yesterday aboard a United States-bound liner was a section composed of 184 Japanese men, all of military age and fitness and with a strikingly large number wearing Japanese military field caps.

United States officials said the Panamanian police reported the caps were found among the men's belongings when they were taken into custody and added that internment camp routine disclosed many indications that the Japanese had completed military classes in their native land.

Before the war these Japanese in Panama listed their professions principally as barbers, fishermen and peddlers.

APR 4 1942

The group contributed by Panama alone to the shipload for the United States included, besides the 184 Japanese, 98 Germans, 14 Italians, 27 from Axis-occupied countries, 196 dependents and two United States citizens.

One of the Americans was taken into custody in Panama when a soldier reported an offer of a bribe for disclosure of military information; the other was held for investigation in the Canal Zone after it had been reported that he participated in the civilian aviation program in Germany.

Soldiers with bayonets supervised the loading of the group aboard a train which later moved from a barricaded camp to the dockside. Train windows were blacked out so that the passengers were unable to see any of the Canal's newest defenses.

While strictly guarded, the travelers were given the best attention. Toys and musical instruments were among permitted articles in their heavy baggage.

Women and children were placed in staterooms and the men in troop space. The Red Cross donated winter clothes.

MILITARY LIFE IN MEXICO IS BEGUN EARLY

APR 4 1942

Close Order Drill Held in First Grade; Million Boys Being Trained

By [illegible]

MEXICO CITY, April 3 (Wide World) — Mexican school children are practically in the army now, with close order drill in the first grade and hand grenade practice starting in the fourth.

Advanced Training

High school, which comes after the sixth grade here, will bring machine gun and antigas training.

There's even a provision for coast defense gunnery instruction in school.

It all started last year when the country made provision for adult compulsory military training. This plan, however, was quietly sidetracked after Pearl Harbor. President Avila Camacho said Mexico was all for the United States but could do her more good for the present "in the fields and factories."

Unofficially, officials figured compulsory adult training would take too many men out of productive work, which is Mexico's big need now.

Instead, the plan to put military training in the schools was brought out. It is part of a plan to give training to as many people as possible without dislocating the economic life of the country. The Federal Labor Department has issued instructions for voluntary military training for workers and promised rifles — .22 caliber, to the disgust of many workmen—for practice.

For Nearly Million

School training won't produce as many soldiers as fast, but it will provide basic military training for approximately a million boys.

Furthermore, school authorities figure that physical training will be good for the pupils and a larger percentage of the million will be able to serve in the field.

The general staff drafted the plans for military training in schools and assigned a number of officers as instructors.

Military education starts in kindergarten but little Jose won't be expected to do any drilling here. He'll play with models and figures and games "related to the army, navy and air force." Also he'll learn respect for the flag and "habits of order and discipline."

From the first to the third grades he'll be busy in school and out. In school he'll learn the insignia of the various branches and ranks of the army as well as the appearance of the weapons used by each one—how to tell a 37 mm. antitank gun from a 37 mm. antiaircraft gun, for instance.

Drill Without Guns

After school he'll follow the regular infantry drill regulations, learning close order drill without guns.

Starting in the fourth grade he'll get guns, made entirely of wood in case he wants to advance to the firing stage too soon. This drill also will follow infantry regulations.

In school he'll be taught the parts of the hand grenade (Mexico seems to set great store by hand grenades) and after school he'll be taught how to throw it. Also what precautions to take with it.

In high school he'll get regular infantry guns (Mexican-made Mausers, the standard infantry arm here) and tactical instruction. Here he also will be introduced to the Mendoza machine gun, individual and collective protection against gas and antiaircraft defense.

In high school also he will go on regular campaigns, to get accustomed to marching with the regulation infantry pack and to learn how to take care of himself while sleeping out in the fields overnight.

APR 4 1942

First Target Practice

Marching practice also will continue into college, where the first target practice will come. On college marches Jose, practically a grown man by now, will learn how to protect himself en route against aerial and land attacks and how to protect his encampment.

He'll learn to look at the countryside with a military eye in case he has to fight over it. He'll learn to hide himself from enemy fire, to build field fortifications, to cross rivers ("by wading, swimming, on rafts or in general with the means at hand"). Also, he'll be taught the general principles of embarking and disembarking.

From there he can go on as he pleases—the general staff instructions are to let him begin to specialize then. He can choose between artillery, fortifications, communications, military engineering, chemical warfare and aviation.

Chile Puts Off Break With Axis

Santiago, Chile, April 3—(AP)—The possibility of an immediate Chilean break with the Axis powers faded today in the wake of an inaugural address by President Juan Antonio Rios indicating he planned no radical change in foreign policy.

Rios, who was sworn in for a six-year term at colorful ceremonies last evening, promised that Chile would "carry out faithfully the duties of continental solidarity," but declared also his government would "cultivate the cordial relations being maintained with all other countries."

Chile and Argentina are the only South American nations maintaining relations with the Axis powers.

ARGENTINA GETS SHIP

Transfer of a U. S. Tanker Made Under Pledges.

Washington, April 3 (A. P.).—The War Shipping Board disclosed today that it had approved transfer of the tanker Ulysses, converted from a whaling ship, to the Petroleum Syndicate, an Argentine Government dominated concern, to be used in the transportation of oil products between the Americas.

Officials said the Argentine Government officially gave assurances that there would be no future change in the ship's registry, that Argentina would not transfer any other tankers under its flag, and that the Ulysses would be used only in the transportation of petroleum products between the Americas.

The ship formerly was owned by the Western Operating Company, 26 Broadway, New York city, officials said.

GERMAN RADIO SOUGHT ON CUBA'S NORTH COAST

HAVANA, April 3.—(AP) Cuban authorities began a search of the north coast today for a secret radio station believed to have been giving information to German submarines which have been preying on ships carrying sugar and minerals to the U. S.

The government also ordered seizure of all radio transmission devices not in official use.

NAVY DISCLOSES MORE SHIPS LOST

APR 4 1942

Washington, April 3 (AP)—Torpedoing of two United States merchant vessel in the Caribbean Sea and the shelling and sinking of a small tug off the Atlantic Coast were announced today by the Navy.

The Navy said that the merchant vessels were of medium size and the torpedo attacks on them occurred several weeks ago.

"In addition," the Navy added, "a small U. S. tug was shelled and sunk recently off the Atlantic Coast."

16 MEN MISSING AS U-BOAT SHELLS TUG, THREE BARGES

Raider So Close Crew Could Hear Officer Commanding Deck Gun.

APR 4 1942

NORFOLK, Va., April 3.—(AP) Sixteen members were missing today from the crew of a tugboat which—with its three-barge tow—was attacked Tuesday morning by an Axis submarine off the Atlantic coast.

In announcing the sinking today the Fifth Naval district reported that survivors, including the tug's master and chief engineer and nine crewmen aboard the barges, said they believed it was possible some of the 16 persons had been able to board a raft which had been thrown overboard.

While newsmen were not permitted to interview the survivors, barge men told Ensign James Geddes of the Fifth Naval district public relations office, a vivid story of what occurred during the attack, which resulted in the sinking of the tug and two of the barges.

The barge men told Geddes that the submersible was within hearing distance and that they heard orders given for the loading and firing of the raider's deck gun. The survivors related that the Axis vessel hurled a large number of shells at them at a rapid fire rate.

Survivors declared the tug was headed north when the sub appeared off the port side of the craft. After the raider had fired at the tug and drifted past the barges, circled the end of the string and fired from the starboard side, the tug crew cut the tow line and made a desperate effort to escape.

The vessel was sunk about five miles from the scene of the initial attack. Later, the submarine returned for an attack on the barges, later drifting away in the darkness. The third barge remained afloat.

Leslie Haynie and H. R. Bateman, of Norfolk, the tug's master and chief engineer, respectively, were rescued by a northbound merchant ship and landed at the Coast Guard station at Lewes, Del. Coast Guardsmen rescued the nine bargemen and let them off at Norfolk.

Radioman Credited

APR 4 1942

(By the Associated Press)

New York, April 3—Survivors of an American ship torpedoed in West Indies waters last February 22 told today how the radio operator remained aboard the sinking vessel to send the ship's position and then leaped into the water holding a baby African bush monkey in his mouth.

The radio operator was Ignace Shoinacki, 24, of Brooklyn, N. Y. He said, "My job was to stay until I had sent SOS reports."

Shoinacki said he sent six calls which were heard in a British port. A plane was sent out, spotted the two lifeboats and sent another ship to rescue the entire crew of thirty-five fourteen hours after two torpedoes struck the ship.

Forced To Give Up Pet

The radioman said that he was pulled into one of the boats only because he kept a flashlight with him to signal. Some of the men were reluctant to row toward him, thinking the light was from a submarine.

Shoinacki said he held his pet monkey in his mouth but had to let it go because "I kept taking mouthfuls of water."

"I was about fifty feet away in the water when the second torpedo hit. The concussion made my body vibrate like a bowl of jelly," he said.

33 Survivors Reach Port

(By the Associated Press)

New York, April 3—Thirty-three survivors of a crew of a "good-sized" American freighter reached New York after three torpedoes fired by a submarine sank the ship in fifteen minutes in the Atlantic March 3, the Third Naval District announced today.

One man was killed. Others, after six days in two open boats, were rescued by another vessel.

The captain, whose name the navy withheld, said in an interview that the ship was struck, without warning, by three torpedoes. The crew clambered into the lifeboats and the U-boat surfaced within ten feet of the boats.

Four crew members of the sub looked on from the conning tower and one asked the captain for the ship's name, cargo and destination.

The captain said that the submarine trailed his lifeboat until a rescue ship picked up the survivors, dropping them off at Port of Spain, Trinidad.

ports." His six calls for help were heard in a British port and the entire crew of 35 was rescued 14 hours after two torpedoes struck their ship.

APR 4 1942

The attack came at night and Shoinacki was pulled aboard one of the boats only because he took with him a flashlight to signal his companions from the water. The monkey died shortly before.

6 Days in Open Boats

Survivors of the second freighter said in New York interviews that they spent six days in open boats and sailed 545 miles in shark-infested waters before they were rescued. One man was missing from the crew of 34.

They said that a U-boat, her

17 Men Missing as Result of U-boat Attacks —Havana Reports American Freighter Torpedoed and Sunk Off Cuba.

APR 4 1942

By The Associated Press

Three new ship sinkings in the Axis submarine campaign against American shipping were announced today by the Navy. Seventeen men were missing from their crew.

Tug Attacked

Maritime sources in Havana said a fourth United States ship, a freighter, had been torpedoed and sunk somewhere north of Cuba.

The lost ships announced by the Navy included two medium-sized merchant vessels sunk several weeks ago in the Caribbean and a small tug, towing three barges, sunk with two of its train off the Atlantic coast.

Survivors of one of the freighters told in New York how the radio operator, Ignace Shoinacki, 24, of Brooklyn, N. Y., remained alone aboard his sinking vessel to send the ship's position. Then he leaped into the water holding his pet baby African bush monkey in his mouth.

name in black letters on the bow, surfaced within 10 feet of their boats and four crew members climbed out of the conning tower to question them. They said the submarine trailed lifeboats until shortly before they were picked up by a rescue vessel.

Sixteen men were missing from the attack upon the tug, but at Norfolk, Va., it was announced that the tug's master and engineer and nine members of the barge crews were rescued.

Navy officials said the barge men reported the submarine was so near they could hear orders given for loading and firing the raider's deck gun.

Cuba Mail Line Curtails Service

HAVANA, April 3 (AP).—C. H. C. Pearsall, vice-president of the Atlantic Gulf West Indies Lines, announced today that the subsidiary Cuba Mail Line has taken all ships out of its Cuba trade and is closing its offices here and in Mexico. Discontinuance of service to Mexico was announced recently.

Shipping Insurance Rates Boosted

APR 4 1942

London, April 3 (A. P.).—London underwriters announced today sharp increases in war risk insurance rates for shipping in line with the recent intensification of the war at sea.

The following new rates were listed:

Ten per cent (former rate 6 per cent—to and from ports in North, Central and South America, Australia south of 25 degrees latitude, and New Zealand (excluding Pacific ports via Pacific Ocean routes); 7 per cent (formerly 6 per cent)—Pacific ports via the Pacific; 15 per cent (formerly 1½)—Australia north of 25 degrees latitude, the Pacific islands, India and the Persian Gulf.

United States

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 3—The Navy Department issued the following communiqué tonight:

Southwest Pacific:

1. The United States aircraft tender Langley, the naval tanker Pecos and the destroyer Peary were sunk by the enemy in the vicinity of Northern Australia and in waters south of Java in late February and early March.

2. A number of survivors from these ships were rescued and reached port safely. The next of kin of all personnel lost in the Pecos have been notified. The next of kin of those lost in the Langley and Peary either already have been notified or will be notified as soon as information is available.

3. Official reports from Tokyo claimed the sinking of the Langley at least three times during the first month of the war, during which period the Langley was not damaged. She was sunk after a prolonged attack by the enemy south of Java in late February. Except for about a dozen men, all Langley personnel survived the attack and were transferred to the Pecos, which was itself sunk a few days later.

4. The Pecos, a small tanker employed in supplying fuel to units of our fleet in the Far East, was sunk in early March.

5. The Peary, a World War destroyer which received minor damage in the Japanese bombing attacks on Cavite immediately after the outbreak of the war, was sunk in the harbor at Darwin about Feb. 19. The Peary had participated in many of the offensive actions of our destroyers in the Far East. Observers who witnessed the last engagement of the Peary described the conduct of her crew as beyond all praise. Gun crews remained at their battle stations continuing the fire until they were forced by rising water to leave their stations. No officer or man left the ship until it sank under him. A number of survivors were later rescued.

6. War conditions in the Southwest Pacific have greatly complicated and delayed reports of casualties, and the public is urged to refrain from initiating individual inquiries regarding casualties. The next of kin of all casualties are always notified by telegram as soon as possible.

7. There is nothing to report from other areas.

A War Department communiqué, based on reports received up to 4 P. M., said:

1. Philippine Theatre—During the night of April 2 there were several light attacks by the enemy at various points along our front line. All of these assaults were repelled by our troops with considerable enemy losses. Bombing of our front lines by the Japanese continued today.

There were several light air attacks on our harbor defenses today. These were accompanied by shelling from enemy batteries on the Cavite shore. Our forts returned the fire.

Good Friday was marked by a report of a Japanese air attack on a church at Miral, near Digos, on the island of Mindanao.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

LONDON, April 3 (AP)—An American communiqué issued in New Delhi, India, tonight follows:

American Flying Fortresses of the United States Air Forces made their first attack from India today.

Led by Major Gen. Lewis Brereton, commanding the United States Air Forces in India, a squadron of heavy bombers attacked the enemy's shipping at at Port Blair [Andaman Islands], setting fire to one Japanese cruiser and one troopship and probably damaging two other ships.

An enemy fighter was encountered and intense arti-aircraft fire, but no damage was sustained. All our aircraft returned safely.

British

NEW DELHI, India, April 3 (AP)—A British General Headquarters communiqué on the Burma fighting said today:

APR 4 1942

Owing to pressure on the Prome front our forces have withdrawn from their advanced positions around Prome back to the main defense.

On Wednesday evening our covering force in Prome was attacked by the enemy in considerable strength. They penetrated the defense through jungle country east of the main road and secured the high ground south of Prome. Fighting continued throughout the night and our forces moved back to fresh covering positions north of the town early yesterday morning. The rest of our forces are concentrated in new areas.

On the Sittang front, Japanese vanguards at Toungoo are reported to be advancing west of the railway. They have reached a point southwest of Yedashe, which is fifteen miles north of Toungoo. Chinese forces are still in command of the railway between Yedashe and a point immediately north of Toungoo.

Air operations—A town in Northern Burma was bombed on Tuesday afternoon in two waves. The first wave dropped bombs near the railway station, causing some damage to coolie barracks and a few civilian casualties. The second was aimed at the airdrome. All bombs fell outside, causing no R. A. F. damage or casualties.

A landing ground in Central Burma was bombed on the same day, first by bombers and later by fighters, but no material damage was done to R. A. F. buildings and no casualties were reported in either raid.

LONDON, April 3 (AP)—The Air Ministry issued this communiqué today:

Yesterday afternoon Beaufighters of the Coastal Command on patrol over the North Sea destroyed two enemy bombers and a seaplane, without loss to themselves.

Another Air Ministry communiqué said:

Our bombers again attacked the Matford Works at Poissy near Paris last night. Preliminary reports indicate this important objective has been heavily damaged.

The docks at Havre also were bombed. Fighter Command aircraft attacked enemy airfields and targets in occupied territory.

From all these operations two of our aircraft are missing.

The Ministries of Air and Home Security issued this joint communiqué:

There was some activity by enemy aircraft last night, mainly over the coastal districts of South and Southeast England. At one place on the South coast and another on the Southeast coast damage was caused and there were a number of casualties, some of which were fatal. Elsewhere little damage was done and no one was seriously injured. One enemy aircraft was destroyed during the night.

An Admiralty communiqué said:

The Board of the Admiralty regrets to announce that the destroyer H. M. S. Heythrop [Lieut. Comdr. R. S. Stafford, R. N.] has been sunk. Next of kin of casualties have been informed.

CAIRO, Egypt, April 3 (AP)—British General Headquarters issued this communiqué today:

One of our columns of all arms April 2 met an enemy column including tanks and medium artillery, in the area east of Mersa Matruh. On being engaged, the enemy withdrew.

During the night of April 1-2 one of our fighting patrols attacked with hand grenades an enemy outpost south of Tmimi and inflicted casualties. Our losses were nil.

An R. A. F. Headquarters communiqué said:

Throughout April 2 our fighter aircraft were in action in the forward area of Cyrenaica. A mixed formation of German and Italian aircraft was intercepted in the Tobruk region. One Junkers-88 and two enemy fighters were shot down. Other enemy fighters and bombers were damaged.

Targets at Benghazi and objectives in the Martuba, Derna and Tmimi areas were attacked during the night of April 1-2.

It now is known that in the course of air raids on Malta during April 1 the enemy sustained further casualties in addition to those announced in yesterday's communiqué. In all, sixteen enemy aircraft were destroyed. Our fighters shot down three Messerschmitt 109's, two Junkers-88's and two Junkers 87's, while anti-aircraft guns accounted for six Junkers-87's, one Junkers-88 and two Messerschmitt-109's. Many other enemy aircraft were damaged severely.

Raids were continued during the night of April 1-2, when anti-aircraft fire destroyed one Junkers-88.

From all operations eight of our aircraft are missing. One pilot is known to be safe.

Russian

MOSCOW, April 3 (AP)—The Soviet Information Bureau broadcast this communiqué today:

During the night of April 2-3 no essential changes took place at the front.

The Nazis counter-attacked on one southwest front sector with infantry freshly arrived from Germany, losing more than 200 killed.

On the Western Front a Soviet unit killed 350 Germans in a sudden attack, and in another sector of the same front beat off a Nazi attack, capturing six guns, three mortars and seven machine guns.

The Soviet Information Bureau tonight issued the following:

On April 3 in several sectors of the front our troops waged offensive battles against the German Fascist troops and occupied several populated places.

On April 2, twenty-three German planes were destroyed. Our losses were six planes.

APR 4 1942

German

BERLIN, April 3 (From German broadcast recorded by The Associated Press)—The German High Command communiqué said today:

Despite heavy local enemy thrusts, on the whole a lessening of enemy activity in the East is noticeable. During our own offensive operations a fairly large number of villages was taken. German bombers set fire to a large Soviet tanker off the Caucasian coast. A medium-sized merchant ship was damaged by bomb hits in the waters of Kerch.

In North Africa German bombers scored bomb hits on two enemy merchant ships near Tobruk. Six British planes were shot down in air battles.

Air attacks on military installations at Valletta and airdromes on the island [Malta] continued day and night. German fighters shot down four British planes in air battles.

German bombers last night attacked important war objectives and port installations at Dover and Portland. Fierce fires and explosions were observed.

In the months of February and March the German Navy, besides conducting their fight against enemy supply shipping, also carried out successful operations against the naval forces of Great Britain and the United States.

During these two months the German Navy sank one cruiser of the Leander class, eight destroyers, three corvettes, four torpedo boats, twelve motor torpedo boats and motor gunboats, five escort vessels and three submarine chasers.

In addition, the Luftwaffe sank two motor gunboats and three escort vessels.

Further, thirty-seven enemy warships, including ten cruisers, eleven destroyers and five submarines, were damaged in offensive operations by German naval forces and in air attacks by the Luftwaffe.

APR 4 1942

Italian

ROME, April 3 (From Italian broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press)—The Italian High Command issued this communiqué today:

In Cyrenaica there has been limited patrol and artillery activity. Our air formations effectively machine-gunned enemy concentrations. Several motorized units were set on fire and many others were rendered useless.

Strong detachments of the Italian-German air forces carried out very vigorous attacks against naval and air bases at Malta. Bombs of every size were dropped. Factories and depots were hit. An enemy submarine and an enemy destroyer were damaged at Valletta.

Two enemy planes were hit on the ground, and extensive destruction and many fires were observed. German fighters destroyed three Spitfires and one Curtiss plane.

Standard Rejected Plea To Stop Oil Sales to Axis

APR 4 1942

WASHINGTON, April 3. (AP)—Government officials testified today that a subsidiary of Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) provided the necessary gasoline for maintaining the principal channel of Axis propaganda to the Western Hemisphere in 1941 and rejected a State Department request that the sales cease.

Finally Compelled to Stop

Not until the Department took steps to blacklist the Brazilian subsidiary of the company last October, a witness said, did the company agree to stop selling petroleum to "Lati", a German-sponsored Italian-operated airline running from Rome to South America, and the German-controlled Condor Line, operating in Brazil.

(It was made plain later that the Brazilian subsidiary never actually was placed on the blacklist, officials stating that since the October incident Standard Oil had cooperated 100 per cent with the State Department.)

The testimony was given to the Senate Defense Investigating Committee by A. A. Berle, Jr., assistant secretary of State, and William La Varre, chief of the American Republic Office for the Department of Commerce.

Over Lati and through the British blockade, La Varre told the committee, there travelled between 1939 and 1941 a steady stream of Axis propaganda and propagandists, bound for South American countries and the United States, as well as valuable war materials for Germany on the line's eastward trips.

La Varre supplied the committee with a list showing what he termed "the most notorious record of enemies that ever travelled on any line."

Westward from Europe, he said, usually free of charge, went books, films, propagandists, Gestapo agents, spies, loot from occupied countries, and even German medals for Brazilian sympathizers.

Eastward, he testified, the line carried diamonds, platinum, mica and other South American valuables.

Berle said the State Department requested Standard Oil to stop supplying fuel to the Axis lines before taking steps to blacklist the subsidiary, but the company pleaded that it would be liable to a damage suit if it breached a contract with the airlines.

Plea Termed Subterfuge

La Varre, however, asserted that there was no contract for supplying the fuel and termed this plea a "subterfuge."

W. S. Farish, Standard president, had testified earlier that "no delivery was made except in conformity with the policy of the (State) Department" and that deliveries to the airlines were discussed with the State Department and with the American embassy at Rio de Janeiro.

Farish issued a statement tonight which said:

APR 4 1942

"While I have not seen Mr. Berle's statement made to the Senate committee this morning, if I am correctly advised concerning its contents, I have no quarrel with what he said. I have been informed that this afternoon he denied that our Brazilian company had been put on the black list. We wished to be under some actual compulsion by the State Department before breaching the Condor contract. This compulsion was provided by the black list threat in October, 1941, mentioned by Mr. Berle. In fact, limited deliveries to Condor continued under the instructions of Ambassador Caffery in Rio until stopped by his direction some time later."

Berle told the committee, "In fairness to Standard Oil," that the company had cooperated wholeheartedly with the State Department since last October.

The assistant secretary testified that on April 14 the State Department had a conference with Standard Oil officials.

"The upshot of it," he related, "was that they would supply Lati and Condor, if at all, only through their Brazilian subsidiary, but the subsidiary would make no deliveries unless and until they had been approved by the American ambassador at Rio."

Berle said that so far as the State Department knew the arrangement was kept until October, 1941, when "Mr. Michler of the Standard Oil Company" notified the department that the company was under contract and feared a lawsuit if it did not deliver gasoline and oil.

"You mean they were placing contracts above the interests of the United States?" inquired Senator Burton (R-O).

"Yes," Berle replied.

On Oct. 21, Berle continued, a Standard attorney named Palmer notified him that the board of directors could not accede to the department's request that no further deliveries be made.

"I became a little irritated," the witness related, "and told him that this was a waste of time, that the department would have to take steps."

Torrent Effective

The next day, Berle said, he initiated steps to have the company's Brazilian subsidiary placed on the black list.

Observing that "the news of this traveled fast," he testified that on Oct. 23 Palmer notified him by telephone that Farish had authorized him to say the company would "cooperate in every respect wholeheartedly" and asked that Palmer's previous position be "disregarded."

Immediately after the attack on Pearl Harbor, Berle said, Condor was forced to suspend operations for lack of fuel and the Brazilian government took over Lati.

Berle expressed the opinion that Standard's position grew out of the fact that the company faced possibility of a large financial loss and may have wished to be in the position of being forced to terminate its sales.

La Varre testified that gasoline reached the airlines' South American bases in "tremendous quantities," taken there by tankers flying the German flag and manned by German crews but owned by Standard Oil.

"The Commerce Department couldn't do anything about it," he said. "We just had to sit by and watch it go on."

Asked by Burton if Standard took the position that it could make contracts that were against the interest of the United States, Berle replied that they took the position that they had to fulfill contracts already made, "irrespective of the interests of the United States."

Winding up a week of testimony on Standard's relationships with I. G. Farben of Germany prior to Pearl Harbor, the committee heard Edward H. Foley, Jr., Treasury general counsel, tell why the treasury blocked a proposal for the sale of Standard's Hungarian oil properties to Farben in 1941 for $24,000,000 in gold, delivered at Portugal.

To have approved the sale, he said, would have involved this government in a breach of the British blockade, would have given Germany the power to make concessions to one American company and not others, would have involved government purchase of gold stolen by the Nazis "and would not merely have facilitated Germany's program of economic domination of Europe but would have been tantamount to an approval of German's economic new order in Europe."

HAYES NOMINATED AS ENVOY TO SPAIN

Columbia Professor Picked by Roosevelt.

Washington, April 3 (A. P.).—Carlton J. H. Hayes, a professor at Columbia University, was nominated by President Roosevelt today to be Ambassador to Spain.

He would succeed Alexander Weddell, whose application for retirement was accepted by the President yesterday.

Prof. Hayes, 59 years old, is well known as the author of many works of historical and political context. He served in the last world war as a captain of infantry assigned to the Intelligence Service.

APR 4—1942

Dr. Carlton Joseph Huntley Hayes is an historian of outstanding reputation and a prominent Catholic layman. He has been an uncompromising foe of totalitarianism. In 1936 his latest "Nationalismus" was barred from Germany.

In 1930 another book, "Modern History," which Dr. Hayes wrote with Dr. Parker T. Moon, was taken from the list of textbooks for New York schools, where it had been used for seven years after protests had been made that it was non-American and pro-Catholic. These charges were vigorously denied by Dr. Hayes and Dr. Moon.

He received his higher education at Columbia University and also earned a variety of scholastic degrees at other universities and colleges. He has taught since 1907 at Columbia, Johns Hopkins, the University of Chicago and the University of California. In the first world war he served as captain in the military intelligence division of the general staff. At Columbia he is Seth Low professor of history.

He is a member of the American Catholic Historical Association, a trustee of the New York State Historical Society, and a member of the American Philosophical Society, the Academy of Political Sciences and the board of the National Catholic Service School, the College of New Rochelle and the Canterbury School.

Dr. Hayes is the author of many books, pamphlets and magazine articles on history. His home is at 427 West 117th street and he has a country place at Afton, N. Y., where he was born in 1882.

President May Group Information Agencies

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP)—President Roosevelt said today he was considering the question of consolidating governmental information agencies but that it presented an awfully difficult technical problem an dthat he had reached no decisions.

He said he had not decided whether a single individual would head a consolidated information service.

Roosevelt Seeking Name for the War

Isn't Satisfied to Call It Second World Conflict

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP)—President Roosevelt asked for a little help today in picking a name for the war.

He said that several governmental agencies wanted a name selected for use in official correspondence but that he preferred that the choice come from below rather than from the top.

We have been calling it the second world war, Mr. Roosevelt told a press conference, but he thought that some term should be concocted which would be more descriptive of the war as one for the preservation of democracies and the smaller peoples of the world. But, he asked, how could you put that into one adjective?

GRATTAN RESIGNS AS WAR ECONOMIST

Accuses Rep. Voorhis of Libel in Statements Made to Congress.

APR 4 1942

WASHINGTON, April 3. — (AP) C. Hartley Grattan, saying that "libelous statements" made about him on the floor of the House by Rep. Voorhis (D-Calif) had ended his usefulness to the government, resigned today from his position as an economic analyst for the Board of Economic warfare.

The implication left by Voorhis, Grattan said, "is that I am a Nazi sympathizer." Denying this flatly, he added:

APR 4 1942

"I challenge Mr. Voorhis to come out from behind his congressional immunity and repeat the charges made in The Congressional Record. I shall then take suitable legal action so that the issue may be settled in the courts of law. My record as an opponent to Fascism is crystal clear and I shall vindicate that record."

Grattan said Voorhis' speech "contained a flagrant untruth with regard to the contents of my foreword to a book published in 1940 by Howell, Soskin and company of New York."

"The untruth is found in Mr. Voorhis' charge that 'this foreword consists all the way through of a vigorous denunciation of this country's foreign policy of support of England and France.'"

Voorhis charged that Grattan had written the foreword to a 1940 German "white paper" which document attempted "to lay the blame for the invasion of Poland on certain American officials." The representative noted that Grattan was one of the men mentioned by Rep. Dies (D-Tex.) in charging that 35 officials or employes of the Board of Economic Warfare had been linked with Communist-front organizations.

Today's Axis Lie

WASHINGTON, April 3. (AP)—Under the heading "Today's Axis Lie," the Office of Facts and Figures released without comment this item from the Berlin shortwave radio:

"Further reports from Lisbon state that four to five million old cars in the United States will be turned into scrap iron. The total number of cars taken out of traffic on account of tire and gasoline shortages is estimated at twelve million."

Axis Diplomats Shifted To Asheville, N. C.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., April 3—(AP)—Two special trains of 11 cars each brought Axis diplomats and their retinues here from White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., today and they were interned at Grove Park Inn, swank resort hotel, here for the duration of the war or until an exchange can be arranged.

The party of 242 included Italian, Bulgarian and Rumanian officials and their families and servants.

They were met at the station by buses which took them immediately to the hotel. Baggage followed in trucks. Only a handful of spectators was on hand when the trains arrived.

The U. S. marshal's office here and railway police aided federal officials who brought the foreigners here in getting them transferred and established in their quarters. No interviews were allowed newsmen.

FORMER CZECH PREMIER RESTS AT HOT SPRINGS

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., April 3—(AP) Attaches at St. Joseph's infirmary here disclosed today that Dr. Milan Hodza, former premier of Czechoslovakia, was a patient there for treatment of a respiratory ailment. His attending physician said Hodza had shown much improvement.

APR 4 1942

Oscar Stern, former Prague banker who knew Hodza before the Nazis forced his retirement as premier, was permitted to visit him today. Stern declared that it was through Hodza the Czechs were able to "get the fortifications that were erected."

Hodza, premier under Presidents T. G. Maseryk and Edward Benes, fled to France with the fall of the Benes government, went later to England and thence to this country.

Magnesium Plant Official Still Held

APR 4 1942

Hansgirg's Future Will Be Decided Soon

SAN FRANCISCO, April 3 (AP) — Dr. Fritz Hansgirg, Austrian-born scientist whose technical skill is important to the Permanente Magnesium Plant, must remain at the Sharp Park enemy alien camp until the Justice Department decides his future.

Dr. Hansgirg until recently had been permitted to visit the nearby Permanente works to help direct the magnesium producing process he invented.

APR 4 1942

The Civilian Exclusion Board said the scientist's confinement was routine, pending decision from Washington whether he should be freed or interned.

Lindbergh Wears Badge, Begins Ford-Plant Work

Inspects Bomber Factory and Has Talk With Ford

DETROIT, April 3 (AP).—Wearing on his coat lapel a badge bearing his picture, like all other war-plant workers in the Detroit area, Charles A. Lindbergh went to work at the Ford bomber plant at Willow Run today.

"I want to contribute as effectively as I can to the war effort," he said. "Now that we are in the war it is everybody's duty to do what he can to help."

The flyer, a long-time friend of Henry Ford, will devote his time at the bomber plant to aeronautical and engineering research, working in close co-operation with Charles E. Sorensen, general manager of the Ford Motor Company.

Mr. Lindbergh was taken through the bomber plant today by Harry H. Bennett, personnel director of the Ford Company, and later conferred with Mr. Ford.

People Are Asked To Be Detectives

Treasury Seeks Violators of Axis Fund Orders

APR 4 1942

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP)—The Treasury issued today an official invitation to the people to appoint themselves detectives and search out any violations of Treasury orders freezing the funds of Axis interests.

The department urged banks, businessmen and others to report any suspected violations to the nearest Federal Reserve Bank or Treasury foreign funds investigators.

The invitation also included a request for tips on American citizens whose funds might be tied up if they should prove to be Axis agents.

Wants Her Sons To Fight for U. S.

APR 4 1942

Woman Seeks Their Release From Free French Navy

NEW YORK, April 3 (AP)—Saying, "I want them to fight for America when their time comes to fight, but they are too young now to be in a war," a mother today turned to police for help in getting her two sons back from the Free French Navy.

American-born Mrs. Mary Lacloche said she believed a desire to emulate their father, a French war hero, led her sons, Jean, 17, and Francois, 15, to flee from Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H., to Halifax, Nova Scotia, to enlist.

The United States State Department had declined to intervene, she said, and Admiral Muselier, former commander of the Free French naval forces, had refused to compel her boys to return home.

"Come home at once," she cabled them, when she got a letter in February from the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. Back came the reply: "We are determined to fight to free France."

So today the routine alarm went out from the missing persons bureau at police headquarters: "Missing: two boys, Jean and Francois Lacloche. . . ."

U. S. TO DEVELOP WEATHER SYSTEM TO HELP WIN WAR

Long-Range Forecasts Will Match Secret Methods, Say Experts.

WASHINGTON, April 3. — (AP) The United States is developing a long range weather forecast system for its fighting forces that is expected to match the efficiency of Hitler's secret system, a weather bureau staff expert said today.

Addressing a meeting of the American geophysical union at Georgetown University, Charles F. Sarles, assistant chief of the bureau's technical services, told of the setting up of the new system, but, for military reasons, disclosed little of its method.

He did, however, refer to the fact that the Weather bureau now prepares daily a five-day forecast for the entire North American continent and the north Atlantic. Weather, Sarles said, can be broken into five-day types by analyzing weather records for many years back.

APR 4 1942

The establishment of secret means of making long and accurate predictions of weather, Sarles said, is the only explanation for the ideal weather conditions attending many of Hitler's chief military moves, including the clear dry weather for the mechanized push into Poland, the low countries and France, low visibility when the Nazis surged into Norway and the heavy fog through which Nazi warships escaped from a French port recently.

In no other war, Sarles said, had military success depended so much on accurate forecasts.

Older Men and Women Face Call to War Jobs

Hershey Says Even Children Will Be Needed

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., April 3 (AP).—Brigadier General Lewis B. Hershey, director of the selective service act, said in a public address here tonight that men and women more than forty-five years old—and even children—would be sent to production lines to replace younger men capable of serving in the armed forces when the nation reached all-out war effort.

Until national surveys conducted by the Selective Service Administration have been completed, it will be necessary to defer temporarily the younger men who are essential to production of the tools of war, he said.

He estimated that 15,000,000 workers would be engaged in war industries before the end of 1942—that number would be necessary to supply the armed forces—as compared wiht 5,000,000 thus engaged on Jan. 1 and his definition of war industry, he said, did not include agriculture and supporting industries.

"We must see that no machine stands idle," he said. "Men will have to go where their skill is needed, wherever that may be."

NATION TO HONOR ITS ARMED FORCES

U. S. Proud of Its Soldiers, War Secretary Stimson Declares.

WASHINGTON, April 3—(AP) Secretary of War Stimson and other leaders of the war effort today told the armed forces on the eve of a three-day observance of Army day that the nation was proud of the American soldier.

APR 4 1942

The War secretary said in a statement that the annual occasion possessed particular significance this year and would permit an expression of "the respect and the affection which we all feel for our armed forces, and the pride which we all share in the Army of the United States."

To this, General George C. Marshall, chief of staff, added that the Army held a "sacred trust" to justify the national confidence.

Army day, observed annually on April 6 with parades, "open house," displays, and various patriotic exercises, occurs this year exactly a quarter century from the entrance of the United States into the first World war.

To prevent interruption to war production, the observance will be held on Saturday in many communities. Others, notably Jefferson barracks, Mo., where a parade of approximately 12,000 troops has been arranged, will observe Sunday.

In numerous large cities the Army, with the sanction of President Roosevelt, is to take time off from war preparations on Monday to stage large scale reviews. A detachment of West Point cadets is to march with other Army units down Fifth avenue in New York city, and in Baltimore the entire 29th division, including tanks and combat cars, will parade.

Army Probes Killing of Trio At Fort Dix

Gun Battle Termed 'Merely A Brawl' Without Racial Significance.

FORT DIX, N. J., April 3 (AP) — Authorities of this military post said that the killing of a White military policeman and two Negro soldiers, and the wounding of five Negro soldiers, during a gun battle was "merely a brawl" without racial significance.

Col. C. M. Dowel, post commandant, stated after an investigation of the bloody 15-minute clash between M. P.'s and occupants of a Negro barracks that there had not been "the slightest antagonism between white and colored soldiers here at any time. Last night's incident was merely a brawl, which, if it had to happen, might just as well have occurred between members of the same race."

The fusillade of bullets on the darkened plains ended when Negro and White officers ordered both sides to halt firing.

The incident, as reconstructed by Major Aage Woldike, post public relations officer, occurred after a score of military police hastened to lay siege to the barracks from which gunfire answered a bullet "fired over the head" of a Negro soldier.

The Negro had fled from the Waldron Sports Palace, in nearby Pointville, Woldike said, after grappling with an M. P. who intervened during an argument among soldiers waiting to use a telephone.

Sports Palace Ruled 'Off Limits'

The sports palace was ruled today as "off limits," or barred henceforth to soldiers of the post. Located across a highway from the Negro barracks on the edge of the post, it had a bar, bowling alleys, and lunch counter.

The dead:

Private Manie W. Strough, White, of Honeycamp, Va.

Private Isaac W. Brown, Negro, of 102 Carolina street, Henderson, Tenn.

Corporal W. E. Hall, Negro, of Route 2, Conyers, Ga.

The wounded, none in serious condition and all in the post hospital:

Corporal Mil Otte E. Hammond, no address listed; Private I. T. Martin, 609 Broad street, Greenwood, Miss.; Private John T. Robinson, Route 3, Augusta, Ga.; Private Wilbur Evans, Route 3, Summit, Miss.

A military board of inquiry opened an investigation. There were no arrests.

THREE FORT DIX DEATHS BY GUNS UNDER INQUIRY

Military Policeman and Two Negroes Fatally Shot in Furious Fight.

BULLETS FELL FIVE OTHERS

APR 4 1942

First Sign of Race Feeling at Post Started Over 'Next' at Phone in Community Center.

Fort Dix, N. J., April 3 (A. P.). —Col. Herbert E. Forest, post executive officer at Fort Dix, started an investigation today of a bloody fifteen-minute battle fought here last night by white and Negro soldiers. Three men were shot to death and five others felled in a furious exchange of bullets.

The sudden outburst ended when Negro and white officers appeared on the scene and ordered the white military police and Negro enlisted men to cease firing.

A score of military police had been hastened to lay siege to barracks housing Negro troops from which, Major Aage Woldike said, a fusillade of shots had answered a bullet fired over the head of a fleeing Negro soldier.

Trouble Over Phone.

The battle, termed by Major Wolike, post public relations officer, the "first manifestation of any ill-feeling among different races at the post," flared from a dispute in a nearby amusement center over a "next" on a telephone.

Col. C. M. Dowell, post commandant, said in a statement issued later, that he was convinced the battle was merely a brawl and not a race riot.

He said there had not been the slightest antagonism between white and colored soldiers here at any time. "Last night's incident," he continued, "was merely a brawl which, if it had to happen, might just as well have occurred between members of the same race."

Negro and white soldiers had gathered as before in the Waldron Sports Palace, in the community of Pointville on the edge of the post, Major Woldike recounted, when a scuffle occurred among soldiers waiting in line to use the phone. The place contains a bar, a lunch counter amusement and bowling alleys.

Major Woldike described the ensuing events.

An M. P. stationed at the place attempted to halt the argument and had words with a Negro soldier who lunged for the M. P.'s pistol, ripping the holster, but failing to grasp the weapon. The Negro ran outside and the M. P. fired a shot after ordering him to halt.

This brought forth a fusillade from the barracks across the roadway from the amusement center. The Negro troops had been on the firing range in the afternoon and, although regulations require all troops to be searched upon leaving, some must have salvaged ammunition and taken it with them, Major Woldike said.

The summoned military police deployed on the open spaces fronting the barracks. More than fifty bullets were fired before the shooting ended.

The Dead.

STROUGH, MANIE W., private, white, of Honeycamp, Va., a military policeman.
BROWN, ISAAC, W., private, Negro, of 102 Carolina street, Henderson, Tenn.
HALL, W. E., corporal, Negro, Route 2, Conyers, Ga.

The wounded, none seriously, were Corporal Millotte E. Hammond, no address given; and Privates Evans Webber, Pinkley Reed, John T. Robinson, no addresses given, and I. V. Martin, 609 Broad street, Greenwood, Miss., all Negroes.

Major Woldike said that some of the shooting was indiscriminate as indicated by the fact two of the wounded men evidently were hit by stray bullets. One was wounded as he lay under a table in the sports place and another as he was taking a shower in the barracks.

Major Woldike expressed the opinion the tragedy stemmed from the telephone argument with some persons with a little too much race-consciousness getting off the track.

OPA Weighs Sweeping Plan To Peg Prices

APR 4 1942

May Embrace All Consumer Goods—Ceilings Imposed on Appliances.

WASHINGTON, April 3 (AP) — Price ceilings were imposed on 44 household electrical appliances tonight, while office of price administration officials disclosed they had under discussion a sweeping price-freezing plan to apply to all consumer goods not already under ceiling orders.

The electrical appliance ceiling applies to retail, wholesale and manufacturers' prices, and freezes them at the levels of March 30.

It covers electric toasters, waffle irons, shavers, curling irons, and virtually all other commonly used household electrical equipment.

Acting Price Administrator John E. Hamm said rationing of the articles was not contemplated, there being sufficient stocks on hand or in process of manufacture to last through most of this year.

"This action has been taken to prevent runaway prices in view of the War Production Board's order of March 30 halting production of these and other electrical appliances on May 31," Hamm stated.

The price order is effective April 7, Hamm said, and will remain in force until June 5 unless superceded earlier by a permanent schedule of maximum prices.

This action came as OPA officials confirmed that a proposal for a vertical price ceiling on all consumer goods, at both retail and wholesale levels, was being studied. They emphasized, however, that no such action had been decided upon finally and that several other plans to sharpen OPA's assault on inflation were under discussion also.

Behind all the schemes is a general intent of attaining more effective control than the present technique of clamping price lids on each commodity, one by one, as each soars beyond reasonable levels. One suggestion calls for imposition of price ceilings by entire groups of commodities, instead of by single items; another proposes arbitrary limitations on dealers' mark-ups.

If a decision finally is made in favor of the over-all ceiling, an OPA spokesman said, it would be a permanent one with maximum prices pegged at the level of some arbitrarily chosen date in the past prior to the sharply accelerated price movement of recent weeks.

30.24-15777

OPA Officials Differ

Opinion on whether this or some other method was the proper approach was divided within OPA, it was said, and the view of price administrator Leon Henderson, who returned to Washington from a vacation trip only yesterday, could not be ascertained immediately.

J. K. Galbreith, staff deputy administrator of OPA, said the over-all ceiling proposal was being studied, along with two other proposals of what he called the "shelf-drawer" type—the licensing of all businesses and a system of general rationing. No decision has been reached on the matter, he said, but discussions are continuing.

(By the "shelf-drawer" type he meant that the proposals were in the drawer for possible future use if necessary.)

The growing concern of price officials over present price trends and an indication that sterner action might be in the offing was contained in the recent remark of assistant price administrator Dexter M. Keezer that "we are losing the battle against inflation."

Keezer told a group of business paper editors here last week that while many retailers have "been fighting a good fight to keep prices down, they must have allies if the war against the terror of inflation is to be won."

Henderson has staunchly supported heretofore the piece-meal price control method, arguing that restraint on the prices of raw materials and certain key commodities would serve to stabilize the entire price structure.

Abandonment of that technique for something closer to the Canadian system of a general retail price freeze is permitted, however, under the emergency price control act.

Special provision, it was conceded, would have to be made for farm products, because of special provisions applied to them in the Price Control Act.

Electrical Appliances Affected

The price order on electrical appliances applies to the following items having a rated electrical capacity up to 2500 watts, or powered by an electrical vibrator or electrical fractional horsepower motor:

Biscuit and muffin makers, bottle warmers, bread toasters, broilers, casseroles, chafing dishes, cigar and cigarette lighters, clothes dryers, coffee makers, corn poppers, curling irons, deep fat fryers, double boilers, dry shavers, egg cookers, fan type heaters, fans, flat irons, food and plate warmers, food mixers, grilles, hair clippers, hair dryers, hot plates and disc stoves, immersion heaters, juice extractors, massage vibrators, neckware and trouser pressers, ovens, pads and blankets, percolators, portable air heaters, roasters, sandwich toasters, smoothing irons, tablestoves, tea tables, unit radiator heaters, urns, vaporizers, waffle irons, water heaters, and whippers.

The price order applies also to parts and accessories for the named items.

Hitler Due to Intensify Campaign Against Allied Sea Communications

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

APR 4 1942

With the swelling of the bloody battle along the great Russo-German front and intensification of Hitler's preparations for offensive operations which may cut in several directions, we are told by reliable sources in Washington to expect the all-out Nazi U-boat drive which this column forecast many weeks ago.

It's estimated that the Nazis will let loose in the Atlantic a submarine pack of anything up to 400, maybe more. The purpose of this assault is to prevent the United States from transporting to Europe, and especially to Russia, the equipment which is sorely needed to meet Hitler's land and air operations.

Ships Now Bottleneck.

The unwelcome fact is that we now are piling up equipment which we cannot move because of the immediate lack of ships. Hitler is sinking them.

Already the depredations of the Fuehrer's sea-wolves have been heavy. Official details naturally are meager because of the necessity of keeping vital information from the enemy. Washington announcements generally employ the blunt, succinct language which was used yesterday when it was stated merely that a medium-sized Norwegian merchant vessel had been torpedoed off the Atlantic coast.

These little statements remind of those we used to get in London during the last war: "A man was shot in the Tower of London this morning." Just that and nothing more to confirm one's belief that another spy had paid the price.

From the time of Pearl Harbor to March 28, the sinkings officially announced on this side of the Atlantic were: Off the United States coast, 49; off Canada, 21; in the Caribbean, 23; off South America, 1; total, 94.

Loss Is Large.

That's a lot of good ships gone to the bottom. The anxious work of a host of good men on tanks, airplanes and what not presumably has been lost, not overlooking the precious oil tankers and their cargoes which are the life-blood of war. Still, we can get some satisfaction from the fact that, as was remarked Wednesday by Rear-Admiral Simon, commandant of the Fifth Naval District, the Axis has paid a terrible price in both submarines and men.

With the Allied necessity of rushing war material to the Soviet for the spring fighting, the route to the Russian port of Murmansk has become of vital importance to the Allies. This arctic rail-head is the hopper through which supplies are fed into the great Red mill which has been grinding out victory. Upon this route the Nazis are concentrating heavy attacks.

Greater naval protection is being furnished the convoys for Russia, placing a further strain on the already overworked American and British navies, and Red warships are jumping into the breach. Soviet fighting ships joined with the British in the recent victory over the Nazis who attacked a convoy on the Murmansk route. That battle probably was the prelude to a hot fight over this all-important sea passage.

Fleets in Many Seas.

This clash provided a welcome reminder that, while the Muscovite Navy rather hides its light under a bushel in the matter of publicity, it is very much on the job in numerous waters. Exact figures for the Red Navy are known only to the Russians. However, as long ago as November, 1940, Moscow said that Russia had the biggest submarine fleet in existence.

The Bolshevist Navy is widely distributed, for it has many seas to protect. For instance, London last October estimated that the Russians had in the Black Sea one battleship, twelve destroyers, fifty submarines and fifty motor torpedo boats. This fleet has played an important part in the battle of the Crimea, and forms a mighty barrier against the further efforts of Hitler to break into the Caucasus, or yet to drive across the Dardanelles into Turkey.

Berlin has credited the Russians with having in the Baltic two battleships, six cruisers, thirty destroyers, 100 submarines and many other ships of various categories. The Reds also have a fleet at Vladivostok in the Far East, including maybe 100 submarines.

The size of the arctic fleet isn't known, but the Russians have shown in several operations that they have considerable strength there. That will be invaluable to the Allies in the battle of the sea.

An Additional 40 Have Been Damaged, Navy Announces

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 4 — Hard-hitting American submarines have sunk or damaged four Japanese warships in recent days.

The navy announced today that the submersibles had:

Sunk a Japanese light cruiser near Christmas Island, south of Java.

Damaged another light cruiser with two torpedo hits in the same vicinity. After scoring its first hit, the submarine trailed its victim and scored with the second on the following day.

Damaged two seaplane tenders near Bali.

Besides these successes, the navy also reported the subs had damaged a Japanese naval supply ship near Lombok Island, not far from Bali, and a large transport and one unidentified ship in addition.

29 Warships In All Sunk

In all, the army and navy have classified twenty-nine Japanese warships as sunk, seven as "sunk or probably sunk," four "believed sunk" and two "possibly sunk." In addition, forty have been damaged.

These figures are confined to losses inflicted by the American army and navy, and thus take no account of Japanese ships sunk by the British, Dutch and Australians nor of their losses to the Japanese.

All New Losses

With naval officers emphasizing that the Japanese ship losses announced today had not been included in any previous announcements, the navy issued the following communique:

"Southwest Pacific area:

"1. Recent reports indicate that the following damage has been inflicted on enemy ships by United States submarines operating in waters of the Java Sea and the Indian Ocean.

(a) One light cruiser was sunk in the vicinity of Christmas Island, south of Java.

Another Damaged

(b) One light cruiser was damaged in the vicinity of Christmas Island by a direct torpedo hit and on the following day another direct hit was scored which is believed to have resulted in her sinking.

(c) Two seaplane tenders were damaged near the island of Bali.

(d) One supply ship was damaged in waters near Lombok Island.

(e) In the vicinity of Bali, one large transport and one unidentified ship were damaged by one torpedo hit each.

2. The above damage to the enemy had not been reported in any previous Navy Department communique."

700 Lost When Japs Sank Langley and Rescue Ship

APR 5 1942

Lack of Air Defense Blamed for Loss of Aircraft Tender and Naval Tanker which Went Down Later in Battle near Java

By The Associated Press

Washington, April 4.—The Navy has announced that virtually unopposed Japanese bombers sank the U. S. aircraft tender Langley in the battle of Java, but the southwest Pacific air tide was believed today to be turning, and Navy shipbuilding is far ahead of losses.

About 700 officers and men were lost when the Langley was sunk off Java February 27 and the Navy tanker Pecos was sent to the bottom nearby on March 1. The Pecos had been carrying the Langley survivors, and only about one-third of the crews of the two ships were saved, the Navy announced last night.

Official announcement also was made that the old fashioned, flush deck destroyer Peary was bombed and sunk about February 19 at Darwin, Australia.

Destroyers' Feat Revealed

Meanwhile, fuller details of an earlier engagement came to light. It was disclosed that Destroyer Division 59 of the U. S. Asiatic Fleet steamed back and forth through a Japanese convoy in a Macassar Strait night attack late in January, sent a number of enemy ships to the bottom with torpedoes and point-blank gunfire, and escaped with only minor damage to one ship.

Naval observers pointed out that when the battle of Java was fought U. S. vessels were handicapped by lack of air support. Now, however, the growing strength of American land-based units in northern Australia may reverse the picture. Both fighters and bombers of General MacArthur's forces sweep regularly over waters north of Australia.

The new sinkings brought to 25 the number of U. S. naval losses in the war. Thus far ten destroyers, one battleship, three submarines, one cruiser, one aircraft tender, two Coast Guard vessels, two tankers, one target ship, one cargo ship, one gunboat, and two miscellaneous type vessels have been officially listed as sunk.

But the launching of 16 destroyers, a battleship, two cruisers, two aircraft tenders and a number of other naval craft since Pearl Harbor dwarfs these losses. And tragic as they are, the losses became insignificant when compared with the official published list of naval vessels under construction as of June 30 last year—topped by 17 battleships, 12 aircraft carriers and 35 cruisers.

The Japanese, on the other hand, have lost at least 30 warships including a battleship, six cruisers and two airplane carriers. Their rate of new building is believed to be only a fraction of that of the United States.

From official and eye-witness accounts of the new sinkings came tales of individual heroism which matched anything in Naval history.

When one gun crew was knocked out by the blast of a bomb, another took over immediately. An officer stayed on a sinking ship to fight off a Japanese bomber's strafing attack on helpless men in the water.

the same six bombers struck at the Pecos again. Then a second flight of six planes dived at the tanker and loosed the third salvo of bombs. The ship was hit again, but the crew kept shooting.

Wouldn't Leave Bridge

Chief Storekeeper Saxton, gunnery control talker, was wounded in the arm but refused to leave the bridge.

Next, nine bombers attacked, and new hits were scored. The Pecos began to settle. The order was given to abandon ship. Saxton got the pay records of the crew and dived over the side with them.

Several lifeboats had been bombed out of commission, and about 50 men were killed and 50 wounded by the bombs. Dozens dropped overside with life belts.

Before the Pecos sank, a Japanese plane swooped low to bomb and machine-gun survivors in the water. Lieut. L. J. McPeake stayed with the Pecos to the last, manned the aft machine-gun and drove off the Japanese plane. He is missing.

Four hours after the attack began the Pecos sank. The men floated about for another four hours. Once they saw planes in the distance and heard bomb explosions, indicating that another ship was being attacked. Finally a destroyer appeared and picked up the survivors. Two-thirds of the officers and men of the Langley and the Pecos had been lost.

The Peary

Soon after the war began the Peary was bombed in Manila bay and a number of her officers and men were wounded. She escaped with other Asiatic Fleet units before Cavite was abandoned to the Japanese.

On the way to Australia she was bombed again while on a convoy trip.

Back at Port Darwin after this adventure, the Peary was sunk in a heavy bombing attack. Gun crews remained at their stations, firing their anti-aircraft guns until the water came up around them. Then they swam away as the ship went down. No men abandoned ship until it sank completely from under them. A number of survivors were rescued.

An enlisted man "gunnery control talker" refused to leave the bridge when he was wounded, and later risked his life in an attempt to save the ship's pay records.

The Langley, converted from a collier to become America's first aircraft carrier and later turned into a tender to serve both seaplanes and airplanes, had been reported sunk by the Japanese at least three times during the first month of the war. During this time the historic vessel, know to Bluejackets as the "old covered wagon," had gone undamaged.

Commander Robert P. McConnell, who commanded the Langley, and Lieutenant-Commander Elmer P. Abernethy of the Pecos gave details of the Java battles at San Francisco last night. Lieutenant-Commander John M. Bermingham of the Peary was killed in action.

The story of the convoy attack by Destroyer Division 59 was told by Commander Paul Talbot, who led the division.

Here are the stories:

The Langley

Early on the morning of February 27 a Japanese observation plane sighted the Langley and her escorting destroyers in the combat zone of the Indian Ocean north of Australia and south of Java. The Langley was carrying supplies.

About noon, Japanese bombers appeared and the Langley prepared for battle. The bombers made a series of approaches, then flew twice over the Langley in formations of nine planes each, dropping their bombs in clusters.

The planes were level bombers

30.24-15781

30.24-15781

and flew at a height of abou feet, mere specks themselves a sky freckled with dark p bursting anti-aircraft shells.

The first salvo came close.
second practically smothered th
Langley, exploding with terrific red and yellow blasts that battered the vessel so her crew was forced to abandon ship, to await rescue by the escorting destroyers.

Soon the destroyers had picked up the survivors, all but 14 of the crew.
The U. S. destroyers then blasted at the Langley, hastening her sinking so she would not fall into Japanese hands.

In her role as aircraft tender the Langley still carried sections of the flight deck she had as a carrier, but it was no longer usable as such for combat purposes. Thus the American vessels were unable to put planes in the air and had no fighter support during the battle.

The Pecos

The Pecos had been about 30 miles distant when the battle began. As soon as it was over, the destroyers hastened in her direction to transfer the survivors to the tanker and resume combat duties.

The destroyers and tanker made contact the next day near a small island south of Java, but a formation of Japanese bombers appeared, and a Japanese submarine was known to be lurking somewhere in the vicinity. This made it too dangerous for the American vessels to halt for the transfer.

At dawn the next day, March 1, they made contact again. The Pecos lowered a motor launch. Eleven trips were made to the destroyers and back. By 8 A. M. the transfer of survivors was completed and the Pecos headed for Australia.

Soon enemy planes were sighted.
The Pecos made ready for action.

About noon, a formation of six dive bombers whined down on the Pecos, dropping six projectiles. The ship was hit. One explosion knocked the crew from a gun. Another crew took over.

Survivors Tell How Men Fought on Although Wounded

April 4—

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Navy petty officers, most of them veterans of many a tour with the Asiatic fleet, brought home yesterday first-hand accounts of escape from the Langley and Pecos as these ships sank beneath them in a rain of Japanese bombs.

They told a vivid story of men dying at their battle stations, of wounded struggling for hours in choppy seas as enemy submarines kept rescue craft at bay.

S. D. Ashcroft of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, chief pharmacist's mate aboard the naval tanker Pecos, recalled how "Jughead" Crider, a gun captain from Kentucky, came down to the dressing station shortly after the enemy's five-hour attack on the vessel began.

"Jughead" was wounded then, carried pieces of shrapnel in his back," Ashcroft said. "I dressed him and he insisted on going back to his gun. About an hour later he was brought down again, with fresh wounds. We couldn't save him."

APR 5 1942

Hours Afloat

Chief Petty Officer R. D. Gross of Belmont, Cal., chief storekeeper aboard the Langley, like the rest of the tender's crew, was bombed off that ship one day and off the Pecos the next.

He remembers that the survivors of the second sinking fought through the seas from about 4 P. M. until long after dark before help arrived.

"Then the moon came up, and we could see the silhouette of the rescue vessel," he said, "those of us grouped together managed to reach her side and were hauled up.

"The word 'shipmate' has always meant a lot to Navy men, but never has there been a bunch of shipmates like that going aboard the rescue ship. They did everything for us."

There was J. M. Black of Lancaster, Pa., boatswain's mate first class and a gun captain on the Langley. In the thick of all the fighting, he saw ship's officers man the smaller guns as the bullets and bombs of the diving enemy aircraft decimated the regular crews.

Captain Uses Gun

There was Claude J. Hinds Jr., Fullerton, Cal., radioman first class aboard the Langley. He told how the Langley's doom had been staved off long enough to permit the rescue of all crew members not mortally wounded.

"Captain (R. P.) McConnell had given orders to prepare to abandon ship," the youngster said. "He was standing there on the bridge, instructing his men to take cover from the strafing Jap dive bombers, but peppering away at them himself with a machine gun, just as if he were potting ducks on a lake."

Then, quite unexpectedly, friendly shore-based fighter planes came over and drove off the Japanese squadron.

"This gave us a breathing spell," Hinds continued. "The wounded men were placed in one of the few remaining lifeboats and lowered away.

"But the boat had been damaged by shrapnel and the hull gave way as it was being lowered, dumping the wounded into the water and then falling over them.

"Lines were tossed down immediately, and some of those still on board leaped into the water to help pull their mates from under the lifeboat wreckage. None was lost."

Hinds said the appearance of the fighter planes afforded Captain McConnell the opportunity to destroy all information of value to the enemy and to have all floatable equipment cast overboard.

Shot Tail Off Enemy

Among the last to leave the ship was the executive officer, Lieut. Comdr. L. J. McPeake. He stood by a gun in the stern and shot the tail off the first Japanese plane to venture back.

Hinds reflected on the sometimes strange conduct of man under stress—in this case the choice of articles to carry with them the members of the Langley's crew made in leaving the vessel.

Hinds himself took along two oranges. He had not been long in the water before he noticed a Filipino messboy swimming with a Ouija board on his head.

"As the Langley drifted away, somebody looked back at the sinking ship and said, 'Old girl, you've had a long, hard life. Just take it easy now'."

Each man, following his particular line of duty, emerged from the engagement with one or more dramatic individual experience to relate, but Black, from his continual vantage point, got perhaps the most inclusive view.

Spotted by Enemy

"Shortly after 10 o'clock the morning of February 27 we sighted a single plane," he said. "It was a two-motored job and came over the Langley at moderately high altitude. It circled the ship and disappeared.

"At about 11.45 its 'big brothers' arrived—nine heavy bombers. Their bombs dropped on the port side amidships, striking the water right outboard.

"Then came the second wave. They saw the first bunch's mistake, had a better range on us and more time. Some bombs hit the ship. They must have been heavy, for the noise was terrific and the Langley shivered. There was some damage.

"Then another run. No bombs.

"Then the dive bombers, diving at the gun crews fore and aft and dropping bombs, some hitting, some missing.

APR 5 1942

"At first their aim was good, but after a time they seemed to get excited. They strafed as they glided in, and we had some killed and some wounded. Fires started, but were quickly put out.

Capsizing Feared

"Up forward officers manned the smaller guns as the sailors were wounded. By now the ship was listing badly and we started throwing things over that would float. All the men fought bravely."

When it looked as if the Langley might capsize the order came to abandon ship, Black said, and shortly afterward an escort vessel picked up the survivors.

"The enemy did not sink our ship," he continued. "A rescue ship fired broadsides into her to keep the enemy from getting her."

When the Pecos, to which the Langley crew was transferred, in turn was attacked the next day, the Navy really got its dander up, Black said.

"Men who had been wounded came back from the dressing stations fighting mad, shaking their fists and cussing the Japs."

Depth Charges Dropped

But the battle for the Pecos was a hopeless cause, and once again the order to abandon ship was issued.

"The wounded were taken care of first, being put on boats in the water or held up by their shipmates," Black recounted. "A lot who had given up were told by their shipmates to 'hold on,' and a lot were saved that way.

"While we were still in the water, we heard firing in the distance. Then the rescue ship came into sight. We got in groups and hollered as loud as possible so the lookout could get our direction.

"As the rescue ship was picking up the men, submarines came around and fired two torpedoes and the ship had to leave. Twice it came back, but again had to leave.

"When it was well distant from the men in the water, it dropped depth charges. That caused great concussion in the water and may have weakened some of the men who drowned later on."

Oranges And A Ouija Board

[By the Associated Press]

San Francisco, April 4—Claude J. Hines, Jr., radioman, first class, aboard the Langley, reflected today on the sometimes strange conduct of men under stress.

When the Langley was sunk, he related, there were some odd choices of articles which the men carried from the stricken aircraft tender.

APR 5 1942

Hines himself took along two oranges. He had not been in the water long before he noticed a Filipino mess boy swimming with a ouija board on his head.

As the Langley drifted away, he said, somebody looked back and said: "Old girl, you've had a long, hard life. Just take it easy now."

Langley Was Jack of All Trades in Its 29 Years of Service

By The Associated Press

Washington, April 4.—Possibly no other ship in the Navy had such an extraordinary history as that of the 29-year-old Langley, lost in the Java Sea.

Commissioned in 1913, the 11,050-ton vessel originally was a coal carrier, the Jupiter. She was equipped with electric drive, the Navy's first, and the installation was so successful that its principles were later employed in standard propulsion machinery for capital ships.

As the Jupiter, she was the first ship to pass through the Panama Canal from the Pacific to the Atlantic following the opening of the canal on August 15, 1914.

In 1919, when the question of carrying planes to sea as a fighting arm of the Navy was under discussion, the Langley was converted into the Nation's first aircraft carrier, and at that time given her first name in honor of the aviation pioneer, Professor Samuel P. Langley.

Used for Experiments

She was used for carrier experiments, especially in working out the design of the later carriers, the Lexington and Saratoga. She also was in actual service as a carrier with the fleet, but never proved too practical in that respect.

In 1937, the Langley was converted into a seaplane tender, the only one of her kind. A portion of her flight deck was cut away and the remainder was used chiefly, if not entirely, for carrying land planes from point to point overseas but not for actual takeoff and landing operations.

The Langley's seaplane tender function was to refuel and service planes landing on the water beside her. Thus she carried a sizable service crew for making light repairs.

Commanding Officer

Commander Robert P. McConnell, the rescued commanding officer of the Langley, entered the Navy as an enlisted man in the first World War.

A native of Oakland, Calif., he is now 46.

In 1917, he enrolled in the Naval Reserve as a seaman, second class, and was assigned to training in aviation.

He was commissioned an ensign in October, 1918, and ordered to San Diego for flying duty. He then had air duty with the Pacific Fleet from October, 1919, to June, 1922.

Service with the observation squadron of the battleship Arizona and as pilot and senior aviator on the cruiser Omaha followed. In 1927, he began two years' duty in the office of Chief of Naval Operations in Washington in the Division of Fleet Training.

From July, 1932, until June, 1934, he was general inspector of naval aircraft, central district, and liaison officer with the Army Air Corps at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio.

After commanding the Naval Reserve aviation base at Miami, from 1937, he reported for duty on the Langley in July, 1940.

Destroyer's Skipper

Lieutenant Commander John Michael Bermingham, 36-year-old commanding officer who was lost with the destroyer Peary, had seen varied service with the Navy.

A native of New York city, he was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1929. He then served on the battleship Wyoming and received training at the Naval Air Station at Pensacola, Fla.

Service on various destroyers followed and a tour of duty on the target ship Utah—since sunk at Pearl Harbor.

After post-graduate study at the Naval Academy in 1936, he reported for duty with the U. S. S. Augusta, flagship of the Asiatic Fleet. He served as executive officer on the U. S. S. Stewart before assignment to command of the Peary in 1941.

2 JAP PLANES SHOT DOWN BY ISLAND FORT

APR 5 1942

Missiles Bursting With Huge Flames Explode Without Damage

Heavier Weapon Used By Foe To Pound Lines On Bataan

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 4—Corregidor's gunners parried a new Japanese air weapon—exploding incendiary bombs—by shooting down two enemy planes over the Philippine island fortress and probably damaging two others, the War Department reported today.

Frustrated in twelve days of intensive aerial attacks with usual-type bombs, the Japanese raiders dropped bombs which burst in the air with huge flames. The new tactics failed, Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright advising that no damage resulted.

By downing two additional bombers, the anti-aircraft gunners swelled their score to seventeen officially reported to have been destroyed since the latest phase of the hammering of the Manila Bay forts opened on March 24.

Brace For New Attack

On the nearby Bataan peninsula, the American-Filipino forces braced for a renewal of the Japanese offensive amid signs that another savage attack was imminent.

[A Berlin broadcast of Japanese reports claimed the lines on Bataan had been pierced by Japanese tanks and predicted fall of Corregidor soon, declaring the water reservoir had been smashed by bombs and that food supplies have run short.]

For three hours Friday afternoon, a communique said, Japanese light and medium artillery laid down an intense barrage which appeared to be preliminary to a new major assault, but the attack failed to develop.

The heavy fire led to the belief that the enemy had shifted from the south shore of Manila Bay a number of medium-caliber siege guns, which had fired for weeks on the bay forts without decisive effect. Official observers thought the guns were probably of 155-millimeter and 240-millimeter caliber, firing shells of about six and nine inches in diameter, respectively.

Planes Raid Defense Lines

The artillery barrage was accompanied by several sharp encounters between skirmishing patrols, while enemy dive bombers and attack planes raided front and rear lines of the defenders.

The new-type bombs were believed by officials to be probably oil-laden and exploded by mechanism timed to set off the charge just before striking the earth, in the same manner as a conventional fragmentation missile.

The report that some exploded high above Corregidor suggested that the timing was faulty, or that intense anti-aircraft fire forced the raiders to fly so high their calculations were upset.

To the invaders, incendiary weapons presumably appear particularly promising just now near the start of the driest and hottest season of the Philippines, which normally precedes several months of rainy weather.

Berlin Report on Philippines.

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), April 4 (A. P.).—The German radio, quoting Japanese front reports from the Philippines, said the American line on Bataan Peninsula has been pierced by the Japanese and Gen. Wainwright's troops are being hard pressed by Japanese tanks.

The German announcer went on to say that the fall of Corregidor fortress was expected at any moment since the water reservoir has been smashed by direct bomb hits and food supplies have run short.

German and Italian radio stations have frequently made claims regarding Japanese military activity far in excess of those made by Tokio itself.

Unsilenced By Japs

San Francisco, April 4 (AP)—Despite attempts by Japanese invaders to smash it, the Freedom radio still is operating in the Philippines, along with two other stations run by the United States Army, the Melbourne radio said today in a broadcast heard here by CBS.

The Freedom radio, the Australian announcer said, recently broadcast a message from President Manuel Quezon of the Philippines, after his arrival in Australia. The Japanese failed in attempts to jam the broadcast, heard in Australia.

Jap Officials Moved To West Virginia Resort

Diplomatic And Consular Staffs To Be Quartered At White Sulphur Springs

Washington, April 4 (AP)—The State Department announced today that Japanese diplomatic and consular staffs who have been held at Hot Springs, Va., have been moved to White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., pending exchange for American foreign service personnel held by the Japanese.

APR 5 1942

The announcement said the approximately 300 Japanese officials will be assembled at the Greenbrier Hotel. They will join the German officials already at White Sulphur.

Yesterday the State Department announced that Italian, Hungarian and Bulgarian diplomatic officials had been transferred from White Sulphur to Asheville, N. C.

Interned Japs Are Moved to West Virginia

By the Associated Press.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., April 4.—About 300 Japanese internees, exchanging their temporary home in Virginia for one in the West Virginia mountains, came to the Greenbrier Hotel today to replace 242 other aliens who went to North Carolina.

A 13-coach train brought the Japanese from Hot Springs, Va., where they have been held since early in the war awaiting exchange for American diplomatic and consular officials in their homeland.

Uniformed West Virginia State troopers and Federal agents clustered about the little white railroad station as the aliens stepped out. Taxis carried some of them to the big hotel a half mile away while 150 or more walked the short distance.

Quarters for the Japanese were made available through the transfer yesterday of Bulgarian, Rumanian, Hungarian and Italian aliens to Asheville, N. C. Remaining behind were Germans variously estimated to number between 300 and 500. The hotel has a maximum capacity under normal conditions of about 1000 in the main building and surrounding cottages.

Motorists traveling U. S. Highway 60, which runs between the railroad station and the spacious hotel grounds, were halted by officers until the Japanese had passed through. Several hundred persons in all watched the transfer from train to hotel, which passed without incident.

Within a half hour after the train stopped all were inside and porters began the work of removing baggage from a half dozen cars.

Canada to Move 450 Jap Families Inland

Lethbridge, Alberta, April 4 (AP). Movement of approximately 450 Japanese families from Pacific Coast defense areas to southern Alberta will begin next week, William Andrews, of Lethbridge, supervisor of Japanese labor in southern Alberta, said in an interview today.

About 30 families will comprise the first group to be moved. Andrews expects the 450 families to be settled in this region by the first of May.

The families will be placed on farms.

Japanese Fanatical In Determination to Seize Washington

Lt. Comdr. Thach Tells Of Pacific Air Battle in Which O'Hare Starred

By the Associated Press.

APR 5 1942

SAN DIEGO, Calif., April 4.—The Japanese have a fanatical determination to stop nowhere short of Washington, Lt. Comdr. John S. Thach related in a letter describing the destruction of 18 out of 20 attacking enemy planes. The air battle occurred February 20 as the Japanese attempted to attack a task force of the United States fleet on Pacific patrol.

Comdr. Thach is commanding officer of the crack Navy squadron of which Lt. Edward (Butch) O'Hare, hero of the engagement, is a member. The letter was written to Mrs. Thach and her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Leland Jones.

Shot Down First Plane.

"I was fortunate enough to meet and shoot down the first plane," the officer wrote. "It was a huge four-engined patrol bomber. I was beginning to feel sorry for them (it seemed a shame to shoot down this beautiful plane so majestically sweeping the sky) when they opened up on me with everything they had.

"After a clean, sharp attack at a vital spot they went down in flames and crashed into the water.

"As you can see by the papers, the Japanese are moving eastward with everything they have. And they have a fanatical determination to stop nowhere short of Washington, D. C. We could hardly agree to anything like that, could we?"

O'Hare Faced Nine Japs Alone.

Comdr. Thach wrote that "Buch O'Hare was the lucky one, and, incidentally, in my opinion, the outstanding hero of the battle."

"He wasn't in on the first wave and his wing man had trouble and couldn't attack. That left Butch alone facing nine of the Mikado's best.

"Before I could finish off the remainder of the first wave and take my section off to help him, Butch had shot down five Jap planes out of the formation in quick succession."

M'Arthur Asks Divine Aid

[By the Associated Press]

General MacArthur's Headquarters in Australia, April 4—In an Easter message, General Douglas MacArthur today asked divine guidance for his leadership in the forthcoming struggle in the southwest Pacific.

The Allied commander, meanwhile, continued conferences with Australian and American civil and military leaders in his vast organization task. He planned to work through Easter, which will be a particularly sober holiday throughout Australia this year.

Receives Greeting

MacArthur, an Episcopalian, native of Little Rock, Ark., received this message from W. P. Witsell, director of Little Rock's Christ Church:

"The church of your baptism sends Easter greetings and expression of faith and loving pride in you."

Asks Divine Guidance

MacArthur replied:

"At the altar where I first joined the sanctuary of God, I ask that you seek divine guidance for me in the great struggle that looms ahead."

A headquarters spokesman disclosed that President Manuel Quezon, soon after arriving in Australia from the Philippines, sent his people a message of inspiration and hope for broadcast through the army's Voice of Freedom Radio Station which blankets the Philippines.

To Comply, Rector Says

In Little Rock, Dr. Witsell said he would comply gladly with General MacArthur's request for a special prayer at tomorrow's Easter services and also would touch on the Pacific hero in his sermon, "A Message of Easter for our Times."

The rector determined only recently that MacArthur was baptized in his native city.

Acting on a hunch, he thumbed through the parish register and found the baptismal record of Douglas and his elder brother, Malcolm.

Replies to Message From Church Where He Was Baptized

By the Associated Press

United States Army Headquarters in Australia, April 4.—Gen. Douglas MacArthur bespoke Easter-tide divine guidance "in the great struggle that looms ahead" today as confidence mounted in Allied quarters that the United Nations would be able to defend this Australian springboard for an eventual offensive in the Southwest Pacific.

Much of this confidence, it was disclosed, sprang from steady aerial reinforcements now making possible an air patrol of Australia's approaches so comprehensive that it should give three or four days advance warning of the appearance of Japanese invasion forces.

Allied aviation continued to dominate the skies, shooting down at least ten Japanese planes, and probably 12.

Six were destroyed in a raid on Koepang, Dutch Timor, and four others—bombers—were shot down in breaking up a raid on Darwin, where antiaircraft bagged two fighting planes. Two Japanese fighting planes also were listed as probably destroyed.

The few bombs dropped at Darwin killed two civilians but caused no damage, said a communique.

Message From Home Church

Gen. MacArthur, an Episcopalian from Little Rock, Ark., introduced the religious note in his military preparations in reply to a radiogram from W. P. Witsell, director of Little Rock's Christ Church, who said:

"The church of your baptism sends Easter greetings and expression of faith and loving pride in you."

In answer, Gen. MacArthur messaged:

"At the altar where I first joined the sanctuary of God, I ask that you seek divine guidance for me in the great struggle that looms ahead."

For the Allied generalissimo, however, Easter Sunday promised to be a day of feverish work. He continued his conference with American and Australian leaders, mapping strategy and organization.

Fresh from a visit to American encampments, Australian Army Minister Francis Forde declared Unitde States and Australian troops "are being welded together into one great army which will adopt an offensive, not a defensive, policy that will sweep to the sea any enemy daring to set foot on Australian soil."

Praises American Troops

The Americans "are like our own boys—very fine troops, of high physical standard. From their great leader down to the privates, they are men of whom any nation could feel justifiably proud."

Lieut. Gov. Hubertus J. van Mook of the Dutch East Indies expressed doubt, however, that the Japanese ever would attempt a full-scale invasion of Australia.

Noting that the Japanese drive already had been slowed down, either because they are not prepared to advance farther in this direction in the first place, or because of Allied blows, he said Japan might as a base by occupying some northern points.

Burma is the real danger spot, he declared.

Some quarters said clouds of corrosive dust from Matupi Volcano, usual at this time of year, may be hampering Japanese aerial operations from their base at Rabaul in attempt only to neutralize Australia New Britain.

Degree For MacArthur

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 4—National University announced today that Gen. Douglas MacArthur had cabled acceptance of a doctor of laws degree. The degree will be conferred in absentia on June 12, the fifty-first anniversary of the assumption of chancellorship of the university by the general's grandfather, Arthur MacArthur, who was head of the institution from 1891 to 1896.

Van Mook Confident Allied Strength Can Hold Australia

Indies Official Believes Burma Is 'Real Danger Spot' in Pacific

By the Associated Press.

MELBOURNE, April 4.—Voicing confidence in the growing strength of Australia's defenses, bolstered by men and equipment from the United States, Lt. Gov. Hubertus J. Van Mook of the Netherlands Indies declared today that any attempt to invade this continent would be "very risky" for the Japanese.

Dr. Van Mook, who sought refuge here when the Japanese overran Java, said in an interview that an all-out assault on Australia would involve vast transportation problems and extended lines of communication.

"I do not think the Japanese will attempt a full occupation of Australia," declared Dr. Van Mook, expressing belief that Burma was the "real danger spot" in the Pacific war theater.

United States and Australian troops "are being welded together into one great army which will adopt an offensive, not a defensive, policy that will sweep to the sea an enemy daring to set foot on Australian soil," Army Minister Francis M. Forde declared today after a visit to American encampments.

Might "Neutralize" Australia.

Dr. Van Mook said he thought it likely that the Japanese would try merely to "neutralize Australia as a base" for potential offensive operations by the United Nations forces.

"Their progress southward has been slowed down lately," Dr. Van Mook declared. "Perhaps they never were prepared to advance farther in this direction. Moreover, reinforcements are arriving here more quickly."

Dr. Van Mook's views on the possibility of an invasion attempt were not shared in all quarters, despite a lull in Japanese activity. Some observers interpreted the lull as merely the prelude to a major assault, while others expressed belief that the Japanese had overreached themselves and been compelled to slow down.

May Be Hampered by Winds.

There was general agreement, however, that continued heavy attacks on Japanese bases nearest Australia by United Nations bombers had affected the enemy's ability to continue his earlier offensive policy.

It was believed the Japanese also might be experiencing difficulty in operating from their air base at Rabaul, New Britain, because of the winds which at this season of the year usually spread vast clouds of corrosive dust from Matupi Volcano over the surrounding countryside.

Allied reconnaissance planes, meanwhile, maintained a ceaseless vigil against surprise attack. Military experts said these patrols should give Australia three or four days' warning of an impending invasion attempt from any base under Japanese control—except, perhaps, Timor, because of its nearness.

United Nations Air Force Evacuated From Malaya

Now Being Distributed In Australia Among Training And Combat Stations

San Francisco, April 4 (AP). United Nations air personnel were evacuated from Malaya with scant loss, the Sydney radio reported today, and now are being redistributed in Australia among training and combat stations.

The broadcast, recorded here by CBS, quoted Australian Air Minister Drakeford as saying the rescued airmen included units of the RAAF, the RAF and the Dutch air force.

"He said that some of the men after a brief period of leave would be portioned to training schools in Australia," the radio continued. "Others would go to operation stations to stiffen with high battle experience the air crews operating in our north."

Guerrillas Active in Indies

Java Fights Japanese With Munitions Hid Away Last Year

SYDNEY, Australia, April 4 (AP).—Dutch circles said today that guerrillas were active against the Japanese in many parts of overrun Java and Sumatra. Munitions and food, hidden in western Java last year, now are being drawn on by the guerrillas, the Dutch said.

The irregulars were said to be taking a heavy toll of Japanese north of Tjilatjap, in Java, and to be interfering with the invaders' plans for using the harbor for an offensive against Australia.

10 More Jap Planes Bagged

Darwin, Australia, April 4 (AP)—United Nations' air forces shot down six Japanese planes over Koepang, Dutch Timor, yesterday, and four more over Darwin, it was announced today.

Two additional Japanese planes probably were shot down in the Darwin aerial fighting, it was added.

Of the four definite Japanese losses over Darwin, two were shot down by fighters and two by anti-aircraft batteries.

The announcement said the attacking force was intercepted before reaching the target area and only a few bombs were dropped. Two civilians were killed at Darwin but there was no property damage.

Guns Added Improved Flying Forts Jolt Japs

APR 5 1942

By Clark Lee

Associated Press Staff Writer

Somewhere in Northern Australia, April 4.—Those Japanese Zero fighters are not any too eager to tackle Flying Fortresses any more.

Second Lieut. Robert Meyer of Birmingham, Ala., told me about it. I spotted him as a Princeton boy by his haircut and sure enough he was a classmate of "Butch" Konoye, son of Prince Fumuaro Konoye, the former Japanese premier and once captain of the Princeton golf team.

Meyer is copilot of a Flying Fortress now flying from a north Australian base after fighting in the Philippines and Java.

During the battles in the Philippines and Java the crews of the fortresses had tough going. The ships were older models without that stinger of twin 50-caliber machine guns in the tail.

The Japanese quickly found the blind spot and would fly in directly behind the fin, shooting from an angle on which the fortress' guns could not bear.

When the newer fortresses arrived it was a different story. The first encounter was disastrous.

Ensnare Zeros

"Our gunners held their fire until the Zeros climbed confidently into position about 100 yards behind the tail, then squeezed the trigger grips," Meyer said.

"One of our fortresses alone got five and perhaps six Zeros within a few minutes. Since then the Zeros will not attack unless they get above the fortresses.

"It used to be that we couldn't see what was going on," Meyer continued, "but now the pilots have a ringside seat and usually sight the Nips first.

"It happens like this. The leader takes the air and circles, we climb in behind and start grabbing altitude heading toward the target.

"My former chief pilot who can't be named since he is now a major was the sleepiest guy in the world and used to catnap all the way to the target area. Once he was there he was wide awake like the rest of us.

"We observe radio silence until we are near the target and then switch on the inter-plane phones.

Japs Climb Fast

"Those Zeros sure get upstairs fast in one big circle and they have been flying about our altitude. The pilots keep strict watch for the attackers and soon someone will call 'Oh, oh, there's half a dozen at 3 o'clock.'

"Then we turn in their direction, bank slightly and open fire. The Japs usually take only one pass, diving down fast and giving us a burst as they pass, but they do not return for more.

"Some Zeros refrain from attacking but have developed a new trick of flying at the same height as the fortresses about a mile away and radioing to ground antiaircraft the fortress' speed, altitude and directing the fire from below.

"After Bataan, where I've been accustomed to see nothing in the air but what our troops call 'J-40,' which is any Japanese aircraft, it was a wonderful experience to arrive in Australia and witness friendly planes flying to meet American pilots.

"Contrary to those on Bataan, these pilots have no complaints about certain of our pursuit ships, saying its heavier armament, protective features, level and diving speeds compensate for its inability to climb as fast as a Zero.

"Once a pursuit gets atop a Zero, it's one less Zero."

'Hell-Benters' Leader Missing

United States Army Headquarters, Australia, April 4 (AP)—The commander of a United States Army "hell-benters" pursuit squadron, Major Charles A. Sprague, is listed as missing in action—not as dead, as was erroneously stated in an Associated Press dispatch of April 3.

Authorities say it is possible that Sprague may still be alive at some remote spot.

U. S. Bombers Based In India Batter Jap Ships in Andamans

Flying Fortresses Flown Under Personal Direction Of Maj. Gen. Brereton

By the Associated Press.

NEW DELHI, India, April 4.—Japanese ships moored in their newly won lair in the Bay of Bengal, from which Japan presumably hopes to prey on the United Nations supply route to India and China, have taken a heavy pounding from United States flying fortresses operating for the first time from bases in India.

The first communique issued by the New Delhi headquarters of the United States Air Forces in India announced that the huge bombers, flown under the personal direction of the United States Air Commander in India, Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton, yesterday set fire to one Japanese cruiser and a troopship and probably damaged two other ships.

Gen. Brereton, who flew with the American Expeditionary Forces in France during the First World War and was commander of the Army Air Force in the Philippines before going to India, was said to have led his bombers into action at Port Blair in the Andaman Islands. The Japanese occupied the islands last week.

The communique said:

"American flying fortresses of the United States Air Forces made their first attack from India today.

"Led by Maj. Gen. Lewis Brereton, commanding the United States Air Forces in India, a squadron of heavy bombers attacked the enemy's shipping at Port Blair, setting fire to one Japanese cruiser and one troopship and probably damaging two other ships.

"An enemy fighter was encountered and intense antiaircraft fire but no damage was sustained. All our aircraft returned safely."

British Units Complete Prome Withdrawal Under Air Attack

APR 5 1942

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 4.—Mandalay, storied city in Eastern Burma toward which the Japanese have pointed an invasion army, was heavily bombed yesterday by the Japanese Air Force, but no military damage was done, the British reported today.

A communique said a hospital caught fire and the patients had to be moved to safety during the bombing. It also reported two other towns in Central Burma were bombed yesterday, but said damage was slight.

Japanese bombs have fallen on Mandalay before. On February 19, the Japanese reported, they scored direct hits on military installations and inflicted heavy damage.

The communique said British troops had completed their withdrawal from Prome in Western Burma, despite "hard" infantry attacks by the Japanese and "severe air attacks."

The communique, issued in London this morning, follows:

"The withdrawal of our covering force from Prome proceeded satisfactorily yesterday. The enemy followed up hard, but was successfully dealt with. During the withdrawal our troops were subjected to severe air attacks causing some casualties.

"Mandalay was heavily bombed yesterday morning. No military damage was caused, though the hospital caught on fire and patients had been moved to safety. Two other towns in Central Burma were bombed yesterday. Damage was slight."

TOKIO (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 4 (AP).—Japanese headquarters announced today that Japanese Army planes destroyed 103 enemy planes in Burma from March 21 to March 30. "Enemy air forces in Burma have thus been nearly annihilated," the announcement said.

Calcutta, India, April 4 (AP)—A Bengal Government communique said an alert was sounded in the Calcutta area yesterday, but no air raid occurred.

New Lines Above Prome And Toungoo Still Guard Oil Fields

Reports From Battle Front Stress Lack Of Air Support

[By the Associated Press]

Columbo, Ceylon, April 4—Air-raid sirens sounded here briefly this afternoon and British fighter planes took off on patrol duty, but there were no reports of bombs being dropped.

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 4—Outnumbered British and Chinese troops took up st onger new positions north of fallen Prome and Toungoo tonight in a grim effort to halt fierce Japanese drives toward the Burma oil fields and toward Mandalay, already under heavy fire from enemy bombers.

Military men said there was no doubt that the Japanese would continue without pause their thrusts t the rich prizes north of the battlefields before the monsoon—due within three weeks—bogs down the Nipponese war machine and restricts Japanese warplanes which now pour down death unopposed from the skies.

Scant Information Given

Beyond the cryptic announcement that the Japanese who followed up the British withdrawal from Prome had "been successfully dealt with," there was scant information about the progress of fighting since the key towns were given up.

The battle lines still were some 200 or more miles south of Mandalay, but only forty to eighty miles from the rich oil fields which feed the Allied battle planes and their mechanized equipment.

Mandalay, on the main railroad from Rangoon to the Lashio terminus of the Burma road, was blasted heavily Friday by Japanese bombers which apparently met no effective opposition. The British said a hospital was hit but that no military damage was done. Mandalay had been bombed before. Heavy damage was inflicted on military and civilian property February 19.

Control Air For Ten Days

The Japanese, who have controlled the Burma air for ten days following knockout blows on RAF and American Volunteer Group airports in central Burma, raided two other central Burma towns which the military did not name.

The oppressing weight of Japanese air superiority was underlined once more in the British communique which said British troops quitting Prome were "subjected to severe air attacks causing some damage." Enemy infantry tried to exploit the confusion created by the planes but were beaten back.

Only Break In News

For many days the only break in the depressing aerial news has been last night's first United States communique from New Delhi, relating how United States Flying Fortresses under the personal leadership of Maj. Gen. Lewis Brereton had found and fired a Japanese cruiser and damaged other ships at Port Blair in the enemy-occupied Andaman Islands, 750 miles from Calcutta.

The communique came as unexpected and warming news to the British.

A communique from the Chinese armies under the command of United States General Joseph W. Stilwell said there was no report from the Toungoo front in eastern Burma. Minor patrol engagements along the Thai border were fought yesterday.

Japs Report Lishui Raids

TOKIO (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 4 (AP).—Heavy formation of Japanese planes bombed airfields at Lishui (Chuchow), Chekiang Province, 235 miles from Formosa yestreday, causing considerable damage to installations and military equipment, the Japanese expeditionary forces in China announced today.

Planes To Take Aid To China

Chungking, April 4—Large American-built transport planes will soon be carrying war materials from India to China and it is expected that they will be able to handle a substantial portion of the tonnage which formerly flowed over the Burma road, an official announcement said today.

Work, meanwhile, was reported progressing on construction of two overland supply routes from India to China, one of which, it was said, may be ready within a month. Though both traverse regions which have a long rainy season, the roads will be "weatherproof," authorities said.

Jap Demands On Reds Reported

[By the Associated Press]

Chungking, April 4—The Chinese press today displayed what it called British reports that Japan had demanded withdrawal of the Russian army from Siberia's Manchoukuoan frontier and evacuation of certain airfields and other strategic points considered vital to Japanese security.

The newspaper Ta Kung Pao said that if such demands actually were presented Russia's reply would be a flat rejection.

"With the Nazis sharpening their swords for a spring offensive against Moscow," this newspaper went on, "the time is becoming ripe for a Japanese attack on Siberia. . . . War between Russia and Japan is unavoidable. When the time comes Chinese troops will move swiftly to Russia's support."

Moslems Hint Cripps Plan Rejection

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, India, April 4—Declaring that Britain's plan for post-war Indian dominion status would "keep Moslems tied to the chariot wheels of Hinduism," Mohammed Ali Jinnah indicated today that the autonomy proposal already rejected by the powerful all-India Congress party also was unsatisfactory to the Moslem League.

Jinnah, leader of India's second largest party, expressed deep disappointment that the "entity and integrity of the Moslem nation was not expressly recognized" in the offer outlined by Sir Stafford Cripps in an effort to bring the Indians whole-heartedly into the war effort.

Hindus Discuss War

The All-India Congress working committee, representing the most powerful of the factions to which proposals have been addressed by Cripps, met for about two hours today.

Dr. Maulana Abdul Kalan Azad, Congress president, said the meeting considered the situation in Bengal and Assam in view of the warfare nearing from Burma and discussed what lead the organization should give the country.

Gandhi Advises Group

He added that Mohandas K. Gandhi, revered Nationalist leader, had delayed his departure from the capital for a day to give the committee the benefit of his advice.

Cripps today called upon Louis Johnson, personal representative of President Roosevelt in India.

Earlier Jinnah declared in Allahabad that the Moslems would never accept any British plan that would prevent their achievement of a separate state.

Addressing the Moslem League he referred to the current plan as "a bare skeleton of proposals which would obviously require a lot of filling in and adjusting before it can be made acceptable."

"It is obviously one of those cases," he said, "where details are and will become more vital than a bare statement of certain principles."

Chiang Move Denied

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, who as a past president of the Congress Party is one of the ranking Indian nationalist leaders, denied a report widely circulated yesterday that he had received a message from the Chinese Generalissimo, Chiang Kai-shek, urging acceptance of the British plan in general.

He received a letter a few days ago from Madame Chiang, he said, but this was a personal note dealing, among other things, with the prospective marriage of his daughter, Indira.

Fear Develops That Religious Strife Impends If Parley Fails

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, April 4—The chances of favorable reception to Britain's freedom proposals were kept alive today by the entry of Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell into the negotiations, and by evidences that the two major political elements, the Moslem League and Congress Party, were giving careful second thought to their decisions.

Weighing heavily with dominant Congress party leaders, informed sources believed, was the realization that it would be catastrophic if Sir Stafford Cripps, the British special envoy, left India without a solution and the country were left to face possible religious war at a time when Japanese invasion is threatened.

Renewed Consideration

Some evidences that the powerful Congress party was giving renewed consideration to the Brit-

Mohandas K. Gandhi, inspirer of the nationalist movement, who had delayed his departure to give the committee his advice, told newspaper correspondents that he still was observing "strict silence," but when asked if he would advise Bengal to follow his policy of non-violence, replied:

"I would advise the whole world to do so—not only Bengal."

Confers With Nehru

General Wavell, British commander in chief in India, conferred with Cripps, then received Azad and Pandit Nawaharlal Nehru, past president of the Congress party.

Wavall is expected to see Mohammed Ali Jinnah, president of the Moslem League, next week.

It was presumed that Wavell told the Indian leaders how far Britain was prepared to go in compromising on the all-important issue of defense, the direction of which Britain originally insisted should be left solely to her.

Chances Believed Good

If the British were willing to appoint an Indian to the executive council to take charge of recruiting and morale, leaving direction of strategy to Wavell, informed quarters believed the chances of agreement was fairly good.

A memorandum presented by Sir Tej Bahadar Sapru and Dr. Mukund Ramrao Jayakar, non-party spokesmen, outlined such a compromise formula and said it should not be difficult to define the sphere of the Indian representative and that of Wavell.

Jinnah's truculent speech at Allahabad today, where he declared India's 77,000,000 Moslem minority never would accept a British plan that would prevent their achievement of a separate state, was believed in informed quarters to be a bargaining effort.

Demands Partially Met

Britain's proposal of self-determination for the individual states at least partially guaranteed the league's great demand—freedom from Hindu electoral domination—but Jinnah said it would "keep Moslems tied to the chariot wheels of Hinduism."

APR 5 1942

However, the league has not formally committed itself.

Although Congress party leaders do not like it, they find it difficult to oppose the clause allowing provincial secession since it gives the Moslems the same right of self-determination which the party so long has demanded for India as a whole.

Few intelligent Congressmen deny, moreover, that since 1937, when their party took office in seven of the eleven provinces of British India, antagonism between the 240,000,000 Hindus and the Moslems has begen widespread.

Seen As A Symptom

Jinnah's ardent reception yesterday, when he arrived at Allahabad to shape the final answer to Cripps, appeared to be a symptom of Moslem determination not to submit to Hindu domination.

A factor strongly influencing Congress party deliberations was the conviction that if the Congress party finally rejected the plan, Jinnah would be in a position to tell his followers that the Congress thus had shown itself unwillingly to allow India's Moslems to decide their future.

Congress leaders realize such a situation opened the grave possibility of internal religious war.

Gandhi Silent On Proposal

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, India, April 4—Mohandas K. Gandhi, spiritual leader of the Indian millions, made this comment today when asked for his views on the British independence proposals:

"I am convinced that I serve the country's cause by observing strict silence and you should respect my wish."

Asked just before he left New Delhi if he would advise Bengal to follow non-violence at present, Gandhi replied:

"I would advise the whole world to do so—not just Bengal."

Roosevelt Message To India

Washington, April 4 (AP)—The White House said today that Louis Johnson, President Roosevelt's personal minister to India, who arrived at New Delhi yesterday, carried a letter from the President to an unnamed India leader. The contents were not disclosed here.

India Builds Ships

New York, April 4 (AP)—A British broadcast heard by CBS said today more than 300 ships including naval corvettes, trawlers and minesweepers, are under construction in Indian yards where more than 30,000 men are employed in shipbuilding and repairing.

Cripps Wins Praise Of Trans-Jordan

April 4—

CAIRO (AP)—Tewfik El Huda Pasha, Premier of Trans-Jordan now visiting Cairo, said yesterday he was "delighted at the step taken by Great Britain in India which indicates the sincerity of the United Nations' desire for self-determination and the maintenance of the rights of small nations."

The Premier, who presumably speaks for millions of Moslems in the east Mediterranean area, made his statement in an interview.

While Sir Stafford Cripps is in India endeavoring to obtain Indian unity, the leaders of the eastern Mediterranean area are aware that their countries lie between the aggressors and they are now strengthening their common bonds to aid the democracies.

Ancient feuds are being buried to clear away barriers to unity. Notably, Trans-Jordan's Emir Abdullah recently agreed to accept the conquest of Hedjaz by the Saudi Arabian King, Ibn Saud. This has been a longstanding source of trouble.

Efforts also are being made to bring Yemen into the Arab bloc, it is understood. Thus far Yemen's aged Imam Yehia has maintained strict isolation, but informed quarters here believe Ibn Saud may be able to influence him.

SHUTTLE BOMBING WAGED ON FRANCE

R. A. F. Planes Strike at Wide Nazi Territory.

Southeast Coast of England, April 4 (A. P.).—British fighters, some so high they were nearly out of sight and others skimming the housetops, flew in waves tonight from the Kentish coast toward the German-occupied continental coast. As the first formations returned from their offensive sweeps, others set out for occupied France and other Nazi territory in shuttle bombing service.

Off for France.

London, April 4 (A. P.).—British bombers escorted by fighter planes thundered across the channel this morning, apparently headed for Boulogne, in German-occupied France.

Eleven British fighter planes were lost today in offensive sweeps against northern France in which five German craft were shot down, the Air Ministry announced. Railways near St. Omer were attacked by R. A. F. bombers which the fighters protected.

A British fighter-bomber swooped on a German airfield in northern France last night and destroyed a Heinkel 111 just returning from a raid against England, the British said. The Air Ministry announced other British craft attacked airdromes and a railway junction in the same area.

Several enemy bombers dropped explosives on a west England town this afternoon, causing some casualties and damage.

A German aircraft caused slight bomb damage in southwest England on a solo attack last night, a communique reported.

The German-controlled Paris radio reported that the R. A. F. caused a number of casualties in a raid during the night on Brugge, Belgium.

RAF AND NAZIS BATTLE OVER FRENCH COAST

British Report 11 Planes Lost And Claim 5 Of Enemy

Report All Of Bombers Reached Objectives And Dropped Loads

APR 5 1942

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 4—The most violent daylight air fighting of the spring raged over the continental coast today as row upon row of high-flying British battle planes swept over the Channel and returned with eleven of their number missing from a bloody encounter with Nazi defenders.

German radio accounts of the action said their new type Focke-Wulf fighting planes and heavy calibre anti-aircraft guns smashed up strong formations of British fighters protecting a dozen twin-motored bombers along the French and Belgian coasts.

List Five Nazis Destroyed

This account claimed twelve of the British planes were downed and that all the German planes were safe, but the British said they destroyed at least five of the Germans.

The British communique described railways in the region of St. Omer as the objective. The Germans said most of the raiders were driven off from their target and only a few bombs dropped.

Observers along the southeast British coast said some waves of RAF fighters flew to the attack so high they could hardly be seen, while others barely skimmed the waves.

Linked To Nazi Attacks

Linked with the heavy German attacks Thursday night along the southeast coast in which the Nazis may have been attempting to forestall any commando raids similar to those on St. Nazaire and Bruneval, today's action suggested that both sides were girding for furious spring warfare across the Channel.

All the bombers reached their objectives and unloaded their lethal cargoes and all were escorted safely home across the channel, the Air Ministry said. Spitfires of the fighter command fended off the German attackers in fierce dogfights.

One wing of fighters encountered forty enemy aircraft endeavoring to attack the British formation from above and beneath. In the ensuing combats many of the enemy were hit and damaged but the Air Ministry said it was impossible to observe the full results.

Many fights were at 25,000 feet.

One wing destroyed four Nazi planes. The wing commander got one with his first burst and then destroyed another with his second round.

A squadron leader, returning today from daylight assaults on the enemy-held French coast that kept a stream of RAF planes shuttling across the English channel, said, "This is just a starter."

ENGLISH TOWN BOMBED

LONDON, April 4 (AP).—Several enemy bombers dropped explosives on a West England town this afternoon, causing some casualties and damage.

A 24-Year Time Bomb

APR 5 1942

London, April 4 (AP)—British time-bomb disposal experts figure the time element at twenty-four years or more in the case of their newest find.

It's a dud weighing fifteen to twenty pounds, a featherweight by 1942 standards, of a type which Zeppelins dropped on London in the World War.

Bomb-squad men—skilled in digging up the new delayed-action explosives — nonchalantly wrested it from the City Printing Works chimney, near the Associated Press office, which was damaged in the big fire raid of 1941.

British Bomber Crew Interned

Lisbon, April 4 (AP)—A British bomber made a forced landing tonight on the beach at Costa Dacaparica, ten miles southwest of Lisbon. The four-man crew fired the craft, dined at a nearby hotel, then surrendered for internment.

Attacks on Malta Cost 59 Airplanes

April 5—

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — British fighters and ground defenses destroyed or damaged 176 Axis planes over Malta during March, it was announced last night as they added six and possible 12 German more bombers to the toll.

The British announced that 59 enemy craft certainly were shot down in March, 23 others probably destroyed and 94 damaged.

The Germans continued incessant day and night bombings of the bomb-pocked Mediterranean base yesterday, dropping many explosives.

It was announced yesterday that 230 persons were killed last month by Axis bombers in the heaviest monthly death toll since the war started.

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts) (AP) — The German radio broadcast last night that a mass formation of dive bombers made heavy raids on Malta yesterday after the airdromes at Halfa and Lavenezzia had been raided the night before.

"The attacks were mainly directed against the harbor installations at Valleta and military objectives in the por," the German account said. "One cruiser in the docks received a direct hit on the bow with bombs of the heaviest caliber."

British Planes Raid Airdrome On Libya Front

Shoot Down Nazi Fighter at Derna; Defenders of Malta Fell Four Bombers

CAIRO, April 4 (AP).—The Royal Air Force announced today that the Axis airdrome at Derna was bombed yesterday for the second successive day, and said that one German fighter plane was shot down and others were damaged.

In Axis raids on Malta Thursday and yesterday British fighter planes shot down one German bomber and anti-aircraft guns three others, the communique said.

Berlin Reports Raids

BERLIN (From German broadcasts), April 4 (AP).—The German radio said tonight that mass formation of dive-bombers made heavy raids on Malta today after the airdromes at Haifa and Lavenezzia had been raided the night before.

"The attacks were mainly directed against the harbor installations at Valletta and military objectives in the port," the German account said. "One cruiser in the docks received a direct hit on the bow with bombs of the heaviest caliber."

Italians Report Air Attack On Egyptian Railway

By the Associated Press.

ROME (From Italian Broadcasts), April 4.—Axis aerial attacks have hit the Alexandria-Mersa Matruh railway effectively at several points and a medium-sized tanker bound for Malta has been torpedoed and sunk by an Italian submarine, the high command said today.

Several dozen vehicles were reported set afire or heavily damaged by air force action against a British motorized column.

"On the Cirenaica (Eastern Libya) front enemy reconnaissance patrols clashed with our armored units which repulsed the enemy attacks with losses on armored vehicles and men," the high command said.

Air fights with German and Italian formations were said to have cost the British 17 planes.

"One of our planes has failed to return to its base," it was reported.

The British general headquarters communique issued in Cairo was confined to a statement that "patrol activity was on a restricted scale in Libya yesterday."

The R. A. F. announced that the Axis airdrome at Derna was bombed yesterday for the second successive day and said one German fighter plane was shot down and others were damaged badly.

Waning Moon Cuts Fear In Syria of Nazi Attack

Provides Greater Protection During Blackouts

BEIRUT, Syria, April 4 (AP).—Fear of a direct German attack on Syria this month has diminished as a waning moon provided this country with greater night-time protection.

A full moon this week was so bright one could easily read a newspaper in the streets, and the city and its harbor, although blacked out, were sharply silhouetted against the background of mountains which rise just behind.

By the next moon, it is felt, it will be too late for Fuehrer Adolf Hitler to throw a force against this area with any hope of having the operation cleaned up by the time he opens his expected drive against Russia.

One of the difficulties of a direct attack on Syria is that the nearest hopping-off place, the Dodecanese Islands, is too distant to permit the Germans the fighter protection in the air they had in Crete. To achieve this, they must first take some half-way place, such as Cyprus.

Meanwhile, defense preparations are continuing. The New Zealand force, including veterans of Greece, Crete and last winter's campaign in the western desert, has joined Australian, Free French and British units. Work on fortifications is being pushed and more man-power and materials are scheduled to arrive.

War Fails To Interfere With Jerusalem Rites

APR 5 1942

Ancient Ceremony At Church Of Holy Sepulchre Marks Eve Of Easter

Jerusalem, April 4 (AP)—The worries of the world at war failed to interfere today with the ancient ceremony at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre marking Holy Saturday.

All of Holy Week was devoted to worship and solemn rituals at this birthplace of the Christian religion.

A Latin Patriarch led a procession of worshippers through the doors of the church and lighted an ornate lamp with a blow against a stone, symbolizing the body of Christ. Candles of the worshippers were lighted from the lamp and the devotional procession moved through the length of the church. The service ended with a Litany mass.

Exchange of Wounded Is Begun Between Britain and Italy

Ships Carrying Prisoners Meet for Transfer At Smyrna, Turkey

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 4.—Britain and Italy started exchanging their sick and wounded prisoners of war today when ships carrying the broken captives met at the Western Turkish port of Smyrna, also known as Izmir.

Negotiations conducted through a third country—identified only as "a protecting power"—set in motion the machinery for the exchange, the Foreign Office said.

"In view of the nature of the operation, further details cannot be given at this stage, but a full statement, including the names of those repatriated, will be issued when it is completed," the Foreign Office declared.

Italians More Numerous.

A British spokesman said the Italians to be repatriated "will be far more numerous" than the British from "the inevitable fact that the British Empire holds far more prisoners than Italy."

The ratio of Italian to British prisoners is believed to be not less than 5 to 1, it was said.

The exchange will be made from hospital ships and it has been suggested that each side send one ship to Izmir to make the swap.

The spokesman insisted that the British side of the negotiations were conducted on the lines of the Geneva and International Red Cross conventions on prisoners of war that the "obligation to repatriate is absolute and takes no account of the relative numbers on either side."

Independent medical commissions reviewed cases on both sides, he added.

Second Repatriation Effort.

The British-Italian plan is the second effort to repatriate sick and wounded prisoners since the start of this war. A previous attempt negotiated between Great Britain and Germany failed last October because, the British said, the Germans refused to release entire prisoner groups, irrespective of their numbers.

The Germans asked for a "prisoner for prioner" exchange which the British refused. The British War Secretary H. D. R. Margesson, told the House of Commons the British had intended to release about 150 Germans for 1,200 Britons held in Reich territory.

British And Italian Prisoners Exchanged

Hospital Ships Effect Transfer Of Sick And Wounded At Turkish Port

London, April 4 (AP)—Britain and Italy began today the first exchange of sick and wounded prisoners between major belligerents since this war began.

Hospital ships, one carrying Italians from Africa and the other bringing British from Italy, met at Smyrna, West Turkish port, for the transfer.

The exchange was negotiated after six months' work and was made without regard for relative numbers of prisoners.

An earlier transfer, planned between Britain and Germany, fell through at the last minute because of a dispute over numbers to be exchanged.

De Gaulle Given American Recognition In West Africa

U. S. Consulate General Set Up At Brazzaville. Free French Cameroons Control Approved

APR 5 1942

(By the Associated Press)

Washington, April 4—The United States gave formal recognition today to Gen. Charles de Gaulle's control over French Equatorial West Africa and the French Cameroons, strategic territory along the supply route to the Middle East and India.

The action, bringing closer ties between this country and the Free French, came in the announcement of the establishment of a consulate general in Brazzaville, capital of the French possession directly across the Atlantic from Natal, Brazil, and taken "in view of the importance of French Equatorial Africa in the united war effort."

Statement Of U. S. Policy

Recognition of the African Free French territory came a month after similar approval of de Gaulle authority over New Caledonia, strategic island off the western coast of Australia, valuable also for its large deposits of nickel.

In recognizing Free French authority in the Pacific islands, the United States said its policy would be governed "by the manifest effectiveness with which those authorities endeavor to protect their territories from domination and control by the common enemy."

Similarly, today's announcement stressing "the importance of French Equatorial Africa in the united war effort," declared that "this Government has treated with the French authorities in effective control of French territories in Africa and will continue to treat with them on the basis of their actual administration of the territories involved."

Under London Committee

"The French territories of Equatorial Africa and the French Cameroons are under the effective control of the French National Committee established in London," the announcement continued, "and the United States authorities are cooperating on matters relating to these territories with the authorities established by the French National Committee."

There was no official indication of what effect this extension of recognition of General de Gaulle might have on United States-Vichy relations, recently reported on the mend.

General de Gaulle in a speech Wednesday in London declared that "Free France has only one justification for being in the camp of freedom—that of being the true France and of being treated as such by her co-belligerents."

Area And Resources

In the heart of Africa with a seacoast on the South Atlantic, French Equatorial Africa has an area of 959,256 square miles and a population (1931) of 3,418,066, including 4,949 Europeans. Its resources include wild rubber, copper, lead and zinc. The Cameroons, obtained by France from Germany in the first World War, has an area of 166,489 square miles and a population (1938) of 2,516,623, including 3,106 Europeans.

Maynard Barnes, American foreign service officer recently stationed in Iceland, was named consul-general at Brazzaville. Barnes is now on leave and Lawrence Taylor, another State Department official, has been dispatched to open the office. Barnes will go to Africa after his leave of absence expires.

Reich "Disappointed" With Vichy, Doriot Says

Vichy, April 4 (AP)—Jacques Doriot, pro-Fascist collaborationist, returning to Paris from a visit to his anti-Soviet French unit in the German army, said today that Germany was "disappointed" because France is not accepting the chances offered her for reconciliation.

Germany had trusted that the RAF's bombing of factories in the Paris suburbs would lead Vichy to "take a decisive step in the direction of the nations struggling against Bolshevism and Anglo-Saxon plutocracy," he said.

Moreover, there was "surprise provoked in Germany," by "democratic and pro-British reminiscences which show themselves in the Riom trial," he added.

A number of Paris newspapers came out with renewed attacks against the Vichy Government after several days of moderation pending the outcome of discussions between Pierre Laval and Marshal Petain.

Vichy Air Force Stronger Than France's in '39

Totals About 1,000 Planes; Was Permitted to Parry British, Bergeret Says

VICHY, April 4 (AP).—General Jean-Marie Bergeret, French Secretary of Aviation, revealed today that the Vichy government has received "special permission,' presumably from the Germans, to increase its air force and now has approximately 1,000 modern war planes, or more than France had at the beginning of the war.

"Each British attack earned us authorization to put some units into service," the general said, speaking at the inauguration of a French aviation exhbiition.

"In addition, a big effort has been made to reconstitute the lines of empire interest — a reconstitution which aided powerfully in upholding France's sovereignty over her colonial territories. Thus, the air link between the mother country and Djibuti (in French Somaliland) plays a big part in the magnificent resistance of that colony to British pressure."

When he said the air force now contained 1,000 modern warplanes, General Bergeret added: "That is to say, more than in September, 1939."

He said the special permission to put units into service was granted with a view to meeting British attacks.

Breadless Weeks Ahead

MARSEILLES, France, April 4 (AP).—Max Bonnafous, Provincial Prefect in the Marseilles region, called an emergency meeting of all Mayors of the region today to deal with the wheat crisis, and announced that France is threatened with six breadless weeks.

He said a drive has been launched to force farmers and bakers to turn over wheat withheld from government control, estimating the amount illegally withheld at approximately 1,400,000 tons.

"Last January," Bonnafous said, "the shortage reached 2,000,000 quintals (about 200,000 tons) of wheat, taking into account the agricultural situation. On March 1 the shortage was at 5,000,000 quintals (500,000 tons). This shortage, if it is not made up, will mean six breadless weeks for the people."

In the face of the bread crisis, the German occupation authorities have lowered their demand for 5,000,000 quintals of wheat to feed French prisoners of war in Germany to 4,000,000 quintals.

Bonnafous said thirty-seven bakers already had been arrested for withholding wheat from government control and were interned for from one to six months.

"Recently," he added, "two conferences of prefects were held in Vichy at which the Ministers of the Interior, Agriculture and Foods informed them of France's situation in regard to her wheat supply. That this situation is grave was not concealed from the public."

Some Districts Penalized

LYONS, Unoccupied France, April 4 (AP).—Reductions of as much as 20 per cent in daily bread rations were ordered in some districts of the Lyons region today in reprisal for farmers' refusal to turn over their wheat to government distributing agencies.

The Prefect of the Lyons region said areas in the Ain and Saone-et-Loire Departments, "where deliveries of wheat have been inadequate," would be affected by the order.

A warning of "pitiless penalties" for failure to submit to government control was given a week ago by the Cabinet and was followed, a day later, by a plea from Chief of State Marshal Henri Petain to farmers to realize the gravity of the food situation.

Faux Pas In Vichy

(By the Associated Press)

Vichy, April 4—Americans were more than slightly puzzled today when an air force band paraded through the streets blaring, "Marching Through Georgia" to open "French aviation week."

A band member explained that musicians thought the Georgia of the song was the province in Russia.

OUSTED BY QUISLING

Swedish Writer Is Expelled for Norse Reports.

Stockholm, April 4 (A. P.).—Karl Axel Tunberger, correspondent for the Stokholm newspaper Dagens Nyheter, has been expelled from Norway because, he said, Major Vidkun Quisling, Premier of the German-sponsored Government, objected to his stories on conditions there.

Tunberger declared the situation in Norway was daily growing more strained, with opposition to Quisling increasing, and that the Germans themselves were not altogether satisfied with his administration.

APR 5 1942

The British radio said today that Quisling has announced a new decree that any Norwegian hostile to Quisling or any one heard criticizing the pro-German clique will in future have his property confiscated. CBS heard the broadcast, which added that there will be no right to appeal to any law court. Instead the confiscated property will be sold and the money will go to the Germans.

It was stated further that there have recently been advertisements in the Norwegian papers calling for volunteers to strengthen Quisling's personal bodyguard.

So successful has the opposition of Norwegian teachers been that the Quisling teachers union has now sent an appeal to those school masters who have not been arrested, stating that there is no longer any compulsion to join their union and begging them to carry on their work.

VON PAPEN RETURNS

Flies to Ankara and Says Relations Are Excellent.

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), April 4 (A. P.).—Dispatches from Sofia said Ambassador Franz von Papen returned to Ankara today by plane from Berlin.

The Bulgarian telegraph agency quoted him:

"German-Turkish relations are excellent and will remain so forever. I am returning from Germany greatly satisfied."

Croats Report 77 'Reds' Slain

BERLIN, April 4 (From German broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press) — Axis-sponsored Croatian troops killed seventy-seven "Communist partisans" operating in the mountains of Eastern Slavonia, wounded sixty and captured thirty-two, an official announcement in Zagreb said last night.

Skoda Slowdown Reduces Output

Apr 11 5

MOSCOW (AP)—The Moscow radio said last night that sabotage had reduced the output of the great Skoda munitions works in Czecho-Slovakia by 40 per cent and that the Germans had been forced to guard the works with machine-gun troops.

Czech patriots were said to have destroyed one of the largest power stations in their country and an explosives factory.

Yugoslav guerrillas, the Moscow account said, had killed 12,000 Germans in six weeks, blown up 200 bridges and burned more than 500 fuel, provision and munition depots. The Germans were said to have been attacked by one guerrilla detachment of 12,000 men.

He said in Russia the "question of life or death for the Slav people is being decided."

Reds Moving Up 'Millions'

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 4—The Russians were reported moving the first of "several million" freshly trained reserves into the thawing battle fronts from Leningrad to the Black Sea today in a fierce effort to throttle the German spring offensive before it can be developed

The Russians say the reserves will give them an army of 7,000,000 along the Western front. They were described as "coming from all parts of the USSR" under a universal military-training program.

Red Initiative Stressed

One Russian source said "there has been much talk about a Fascist spring offensive. I think you'll find the reinforced Red army will have something to say about whether they relinquish the initiative."

The Germans again are making "very hard" counter-attacks on various parts of the Russian front, a military commentator said today.

Russia Moving Millions of New Men Into Lines

Reserves to Bring Strength to 7,000,000 to Meet Nazis' Spring Offensive

LONDON, April 4 (AP).—The first of several million freshly trained Red Army reserves, brought from every part of the Soviet Union, were moving tonight into the battle lines from Leningrad to the Black Sea as part of a plan designed to throttle the German spring offensive with a total force of 7,000,000 Russians.

Russians here said the reinforced Red Army had no intention of relinquishing the initiative which has carried it westward since early December, although it was apparent the Soviet counter-offensive had lost momentum in recent weeks.

The midnight communique, as heard here over the Moscow radio, again said there had been "no substantial changes" in the land fighting, but it reported destruction of twenty-three Nazi planes on Friday to Russian losses of only three, and the sinking of two enemy transports, one of 7,000 tons, by Soviet warships in the Barents Sea.

Soviet dispatches reaching London said reinforcements had been moved to the Leningrad garrison over a double-track railroad laid on the ice of Lake Ladoga.

Steady Drive Continues

Besides capturing another populated center in this area, the Russians were described as steadily advancing in the Kalinin region northwest of Moscow, making continued cavalry sorties that cost the Germans dearly. One cavalry unit, in two days of fighting on this front, was said to have put out of action 1,630 Nazi officers and troops, while artillery fire destroyed six enemy tanks and thirty-seven trucks.

On the Leningrad front, said a supplement to the midnight war bulletin, 3,400 German officers and men were killed in the last three days.

[The British radio, broadcasting a report from Kuybyshev, said the Russians had taken a strategic town in the Leningrad sector and gained control over the enemy's main supply routes. The broadcast was heard by the Columbia Broadcasting System.]

On the central front, the Germans were counter-attacked near Bryansk with tanks, infantry and artillery. In one narrow sector where the Germans used two regiments of infantry and twenty-five tanks, the Russians said the counter-thrust was beaten off, with more than 1,000 German bodies left on the battlefield and eighteen tanks damaged.

Russian guerrilla bands were reported operating within the German-occupied city of Bryansk itself. One group got into a railroad depot, wrecking all the locomotives there.

Reports from the Taganrog area, on the Black Sea, said the Soviet Army was fighting hard in an attempt to smash the strengthened German claw stretched out toward the Caucasus.

THAW PUTS RUSSIA INTO SEA OF SLUSH

Writer Describes Result As More Formidable Than Mined Fort

Declares Tank Or Auto Has No Chance In Swamp Of Mud And Snow

By EDDY GILMORE
Associated Press Correspondent

Kuibyshev, Russia, April 4—The great Russian thaw has started, turning millions of acres of snow into one tremendous sea of slush.

After living in and riding through the thaw for six days I know what the mechanized German army is up against.

The slush looks and acts far more formidable than a mined fort or a moated citadel.

Weather Smiles On Russians

Imagine all the swamps you ever saw. Imagine all the muddy ditches your automobile has whizzed past. Imagine millions and millions of mud baths. Into this mixture dump billions of tons of grayish snow and stir thoroughly.

Now you've got something—you've got a Russian thaw.

General Weather certainly smiled on the Russian army this winter and if that was smiling, this slush is actually beaming.

A tank or automobile would have the same chance in this slush as a flea in a bathtub full of mud mixed with molasses.

The Russian slush is not the kind you put your foot in and then take out and kick away. It clings.

Riding through one section of the country I saw a man who had jumped off the track to let a train go past. He was buried to his waist in slush that gripped him like quicksand. His comrades came along and threw out a rope. As we went around a long bend they were trying to pull him out.

In this slush the dogs even keep to the safe going along the sidewalk. The Russians say the chickens keep to dry roosts while the thaw is on.

Sweden Says Bombs Bore Russian Markings

Stockholm, April 4 (A. P.).—A Swedish Government communique said today that fragments of eight bombs dropped Thursday night on the town of Haparanda, near the bridge connecting Sweden and Finland, bore "Russian markings."

The announcement said a foreign plane dropped six high explosive and two incendiary bombs, causing "only slight damage."

Reds Get Food Of Nazi Zone

[By the Associated Press]

Moscow, April 4—Delivery to the Red army of 250 tons of foodstuffs assembled by collective farmers working in German-occupied territory was announced here today among dramatic guerrilla contributions to the Soviet war effort.

Organized patriots, working behind and within the invasion lines, have killed 800 Germans and hampered road and railway communications in two sectors, Russian authorities said.

Guerrillas Kill 500

Irregulars operating about Smolensk, Dnieper river stronghold 230 miles west of Moscow, were said to have killed 500 Germans, captured twenty-two, and destroyed thirty-six bridges, three tanks and 300 Nazi munitions carts.

"Exerting their control on a number of roads," the announcement said, "the guerrillas have compelled the Germans to move over these roads only in big detachments."

APR 5 1942

Locomotives Disabled

In the Bryansk sector south of Smolensk 300 Germans surprised at the railway station of Poluzhy were reported wiped out to a man. Raiding guerrillas also were credited with disabling all Nazi-operated locomotives they found at a Bryansk depot.

Red navy torpedo boats and motor launches were said to have sunk at least twelve enemy submarines since the beginning of the German-Russian war in the Baltic.

The Russians said one cavalry unit operating on the Kalinin front in two days of fierce fighting annihilated 1,600 German men and officers, and destroyed several tanks and thirty trucks.

Nazis Say Rains Are On

BERLIN (From German broadcasts), April 4 (AP).—Military spokesmen said today that temperatures have risen above freezing along the main Russian battlefront and that the first heavy rains of spring have started in some places.

GERMANS REPORT 1942 GAINS

Say Foe Lost Heavily in Men and Materiel in Three Months

BERLIN, April 4 (From German broadcasts resorded by The Associated Press)—The German High Command announced today that the Russians, during the first three months of this year, had suffered "very heavy losses in men and matériel in an unsuccessful attempt to shatter the German Eastern Front and during German offensive operations."

The Germans reported that many Russians had been killed and that 104,128 had been captured. The Russians, it was added, lost 2,167 tanks, 2,519 guns, 1,765 planes destroyed in air combats, 250 planes destroyed by anti-aircraft fire, 595 planes destroyed on the ground and 110 planes "shot down by army formations."

The High Command also announced that the German air force had raided military installations in Murmansk, Russia, and damaged a merchant ship in the harbor there.

According to the German communiqué, activity increased in the northern area of the Eastern Front and the Russians carried out isolated attacks in the central sector and the Donets region. The Germans declared that their own offensive operations had been successful. In one sector fifteen Soviet tanks were destroyed, it was said.

Ships In Channel Hit, Nazis Claim

London, April 4 (AP)—The German radio at Hilversum, the Netherlands, was heard broadcasting a report today that long-range batteries on the occupied coast opened fire on a British convoy in the English Channel last night. Several ships were hit, the radio said.

Reports 2 Norwegian Ships Reached England

London, April 4 (AP)—The Vichy radio, heard here by Reuters, said today that two of ten Norwegian ships which made a dash for England from Goteborg, Sweden, Thursday had reached an English port.

Two others returned to Goteborg and two were sunk, the Vichy radio said, adding that there was no [illegible] from the other four.

U-Boats Sink 3 More Allied Freighters

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 4—The navy announced today that a medium sized United States merchant vessel, a medium sized Latvian merchantman and a small Canadian merchant vessel had been torpedoed and sunk.

The United States merchantman was torpedoed off the Atlantic coast and the other two in the Caribbean area several weeks ago. No further details were disclosed.

41 Survivors Reach Norfolk

[By the Associated Press]

Norfolk, Va., April 4—Forty-one men were landed here Wednesday by a rescue vessel which picked them up from three lifeboats in which they had drifted two hours after their medium-sized American merchant ship was torpedoed by a submarine.

One sailor, a fireman named Gardner, of Dover, N. J., was missing and presumed lost, the Fifth Naval district said today in announcing the attack, which occurred late on the night of March 31 so near the coast that crewmen could see lights ashore. Gardner's shipmates said they believed he was trapped in the engine room.

Able Seaman John Penny, of Tampa, Fla., told newsmen the ship was still afloat when he last saw her. The survivors sent up four flares which attracted the rescue ship to their position. Several crew members said they saw the submarine and described it as a large one.

Penny, who was at the wheel when the attack came, said the sub fired only one torpedo which struck the ship on her starboard side forward of amidship.

The survivors who were landed here included six men who had survived the torpedoing of another ship in the Caribbean and who had boarded the second vessel at Aruba, N. W. I.

3 More Ships Are Torpedoed

U.S. Loses Tanker, Norse and Latvians Small Freighters

~~April 4~~—

NEW YORK (AP)—The torpedoing of three merchant ships by Axis submarines—one in the Atlantic and two in the Caribbean—was announced yesterday by the Navy, bringing to 20 the official score of ships sunk off the American East coast in the week of March 29 through April 4. Losses since Pearl Harbor in that area total 114.

The latest ships reported lost were a United States tanker, a small Norwegian freighter and a medium-sized Latvian vessel.

Announcing the arrival in Norfolk, Va., Wednesday of 41 survivors of the American vessel, the Fifth Naval district said the attack occurred the night of March 31. Shore lights were visible to the crew, who told of sending up four flares and drifting for two hours before being picked up. One man was lost.

Among the 41 rescued were six men who had survived the torpedoing of another ship in the Caribbean and who had boarded the second ship at Aruba, N. W. I.

All of the 46-man crew of the Norwegian merchantman were saved. Details on survivors of the Latvian freighter were lacking. Both foreign ships were torpedoed in the Caribbean.

Whole Crew Of Norwegian Craft Saved—41 From U. S. Vessel Rescued

Sinking of four merchant ships by Axis torpedoes in the Atlantic and Caribbean was announced yesterday by the navy. A medium-sized American merchant vessel, a small Canadian ship, a Latvian and a Norwegian freighter made up the list.

[By the Associated Press]

New Orleans, April 4 — The Eighth Naval District announced today the sinking of a small Norwegian cargo ship in the Atlantic March 6, at approximately the same point the Norwegian freighter Gunny was sunk four days earlier.

Strom Jorgensen, the master, and the entire crew of twenty-nine Norwegians, one Englishman and three Chinese were saved.

Hit By Two Torpedoes

The vessel was attacked during the night by a submarine, while making about eleven knots an hour, the district said. The U-boat pumped two torpedoes, one striking the engine room and the other exploding slightly aft of that point.

The submarine was not seen until the crew had abandoned the attacked vessel and, from lifeboats, they watched the U-boat rise to the surface and shell the crippled ship with a deck gun.

The crewmen reported the U-boat fired about one shell a minute from a distance of only sixty yards.

Six Survive Torpedoing

Norfolk, Va., April 4 (AP)—Six men who had survived the torpedoing of another ship in the Caribbean were among the forty-one survivors landed at Norfolk Wednesday after an Axis submarine torpedoed their medium-sized American merchant ship off the Atlantic Coast.

CRUISER LAUNCHING

The Denver to Leave Ways at Camden Yards.

Camden, April 4 (A. P.).—The cruiser Denver was to be launched today at the New York Shipbuilding Corporation's yards.

Ranking navy officers and Colorado State officials came here for the launching and the presentation of the navy's "E"—for excellence—pennant to the shipyard employees.

Secretary of the Navy Knox selected Miss Lois Jane Stapleton, daughter of Mayor Ben F. Stapleton of Denver, to sponsor the cruiser.

Rome Says Submarines Are Back From Americas

Reports Craft Fly 11 Flags for 11 Allied Ships Sunk

Dispatches from enemy countries are published with the warning that they frequently contain misleading information intended for propaganda purposes.

ROME (From Italian broadcasts), April 4 (AP).—The first Italian submarines which have been operating along the American coast have returned to "an Atlantic base" with eleven small red flags tied to their periscopes indicating that they sank eleven ships, a correspondent of the newspaper, "Il Giornale d'Italia," reported today. Italian and German officers welcomed the craft and sailors, he said, and a German band played the Italian anthem.

Italian commanders said the first ship attacked was the Scottish Star, with a cargo of meat consigned to England. [The 7,224-ton Scottish Star, a British ship, was torpedoed on Feb. 19, 650 miles east of Barbadoes, in the British West Indies.]

Among the other ships torpedoed, the officers reported, was a 10,500-ton tanker loaded with gasoline en route to the Cape of Good Hope.

Report 16,274,000 Tons Sunk

BERLIN (From German broadcasts), April 4 (AP).—Military quarters said today that sinkings in March brought to 16,274,000 tons the total of British, American and other Allied shipping destroyed by the German Navy and air force since Sept 3, 1939. Of this total, these quarters said, submarines sank 9,032,000 tons and the air force accounted for 4,106,000 tons.

War Communiques

American

WASHINGTON, April 4 (AP).—Navy Department communique No. 66:

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC AREA:

1. Recent reports indicate that the following damage has been inflicted on enemy ships by United States submarines operating in waters of the Java Sea and the Indian Ocean:

(a) One light cruiser was sunk in the vicinity of Christmas Island, South of Java.

(b) One light cruiser was damaged in the vicinity of Christmas Island by a direct torpedo hit, and on the following day another direct hit was scored which is believed to have resulted in her sinking.

(c) Two seaplane tenders were damaged near the Island of Bali.

(d) One supply ship was damaged in waters near Lombok Island.

(e) In the vicinity of Bali, one large transport and one unidentified ship were damaged by one torpedo hit each.

2. The above damage to the enemy had not been reported in any previous Navy Department communique.

3. There is nothing to report from other areas.

War Department communique No. 175, based on reports received up to 9:30 a. m.:

1. PHILIPPINE THEATER:

Air raids on Corregidor continue, but the frequency and intensity of the attacks have somewhat diminished. The bombs dropped during the afternoon of April 3 were different from those of previous days. They burst in the air with huge flames, some of them exploding high above the island. No damage resulted from these attacks. Our anti-aircraft artillery shot down two heavy Japanese bombers and probably damaged two others.

In Bataan, the enemy laid down a heavy artillery fire for three hours during the afternoon of April 3, using light and medium guns. From the intensity of the fire it was assumed that it was preliminary to a ground attack. However, no attack developed. Indications are that the enemy has moved some medium artillery from the Cavite shore to Bataan.

Patrols were active on both sides, with several sharp encounters. Japanese dive-bombers and attack aircraft raided our front lines and rear areas frequently during the last twenty-four hours in a futile effort to disrupt our forces.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

British

LONDON, April 4 (AP).—A British communique on Burma:

The withdrawal of our covering force from Prome proceeded satisfactorily yesterday. The enemy followed up hard, but was successfully dealt with. During the withdrawal our troops were subjected to severe air attacks, causing some casualties.

Mandalay was heavily bombed yesterday morning. No military damage was caused, although the hospital caught on fire, and patients had been moved to safety. Two other towns in central Burma were bombed yesterday. Damage was slight.

An Air Ministry communique:

A sweep by squadrons of fighters and a small force of bombers was made over northern France today. Railways near St. Omer were attacked by the bombers.

Our fighters had many combats with enemy fighters, five of which were known to have been destroyed and many more damaged.

Eleven of our fighters are missing.

An Air and Home Security Ministries communique:

An enemy aircraft last night dropped bombs in southwest England, causing slight damage. No casualties have been reported.

A later Air and Home Security Ministries communique:

A few single enemy aircraft flew inland over the south coast this afternoon and bombs were dropped at points in the west of England.

There were a number of casualties, of which some were fatal, and some damage was done.

CAIRO, April 4 (AP).—A British Middle East headquarters communique:

Patrol activity was on a restricted scale in Libya yesterday.

A Royal Air Force communique:

A landing ground at Derna, as well as the harbor and shipping at Bengasi, were raided by our bomber aircraft during Thursday night.

Enemy ground forces in the forward areas of Cyrenaica were attacked.

During yesterday the landing ground at Derna again was bombed. In the course of this operation one ME-109 was shot down and other enemy fighters were severely damaged.

Enemy raids on Malta were continued Thursday and yesterday. On Thursday our forces shot down one JU-87 and the anti-aircraft barrage destroyed two German dive-bombers. Yesterday one JU-88 was shot down by anti-aircraft fire.

None of our aircraft is missing.

Chinese

NEW DELHI, India, April 4 (AP).—A Chinese Army communique on Burma:

There were minor patrol engagements along the Thai border yesterday. Nothing of consequence was reported, however, and there was no report from the Toungoo front.

Russian

MOSCOW, April 4 (AP).—A communique broadcast by the Soviet Bureau of Information:

During the night of April 3-4 no significant changes took place at the front.

A Soviet cavalry unit, operating on one sector of the Kalinin front, in two days of fierce fighting annihilated 1,600 German officers and men and destroyed several tanks and trucks.

Several inhabited localities on the western (central) front were occupied by Soviet troops.

A later Russian communique:

During April 4, there were no substantial changes at the front.

During yesterday, twenty-three German planes were destroyed, against the loss of three of our own.

Naval units of the Red fleet sank one enemy transport of 7,000 tons and another of 3,500 tons in the Barents Sea.

German

BERLIN (From German broadcasts), April 4 (AP).—A German high command communique:

In the Donetz region and in the central sectors of the eastern front the Russians made isolated attacks. They were repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy.

Our own offensive operations were successful.

In the northern sector there has been an increase in activity. In the sector of one army corps alone, fifteen enemy tanks were destroyed.

Bomber and fighter formations successfully attacked military installations in Murmansk. One merchant ship in the harbor was damaged.

Storm Troop Detachment 197 has shot up 200 enemy tanks since the beginning of the eastern campaign.

In the first three months in this year the Soviets suffered very heavy losses in men and material in an unsuccessful attempt to shatter the German eastern front and during German offensive operations.

Apart from high losses in dead, the enemy lost during the period from Jan. 1 to March 31 104,128 prisoners, 2,167 tanks and 2,519 guns. The Soviet air force lost during the same period 1,765 planes in air combats, 250 anti-aircraft fire, 595 destroyed on the ground and 110 shot down by army formations.

Finnish

HELSINKI, April 4 (AP).—A Finnish communique:

On the Karelian Isthmus our artillery has subjected enemy positions to harassing fire and dispersed enemy detachments, inflicting casualties.

Patrols which tried to approach our positions were driven off. Two enemy machine-gun nests were destroyed by direct hits scored by our artillery, and several others were damaged.

APR 5 1942

On the Aunus Isthmus there were local exchanges of fire and patrol activity. Enemy fortification work and detachments observed moving in the enemy lines were disturbed by our artillery fire.

On the Eastern front there was slight fire and patrol activity. Our artillery scored hits on enemy bunkers and nests and on several buildings housing troops.

In the air, while patrolling over the Gulf of Finland, our fighters twice came into contact with enemy fighters yesterday afternoon. In the ensuing air fights, altogether seven enemy fighters were shot down. In addition, our airmen successfully took under their fire enemy columns and scattered detachments moving in the gulf, inflicting heavy casualties on them. One of our aircraft failed to return to its base after yesterday's air fights.

In the night, the movements of a few enemy aircraft extended to near the Finnish south coast, occasioning air alarms in a few localities. No bombs were dropped.

Italian

ROME (From Italian broadcasts), April 4 (AP).—An Italian high command communique:

On the Cyrenaican front enemy reconnaissance patrols clashed without advanced units which repulsed the enemy attacks with losses of armored vehicles and men.

The air force was particularly active and has reported considerable successes. In a daring action against a British motorized column in the region of Tengeder, several dozens of enemy vehicles were set ablaze or heavily damaged.

Our fighter planes have encountered greatly superior British air formations. In a series of aerial combats in which our pilots audaciously engaged the enemy six Curtiss planes were destroyed by German pilots. One of our planes has failed to return to its base.

The Alexandria-Matruh railroad was effectively hit and interrupted at several points by our bombers.

Violent air attacks against military objectives on the Island of Malta were continued by Axis air formations. German fighters shot down six British planes in the skies over Malta.

In the eastern Mediterranean one of our submarines, commanded by Lieutenant Commander Paolo Monetti, succeeded, after long and victorious pursuit, in torpedoing and sinking a medium-sized tanker which was en route to Malta.

BRITAIN JUMPS 2D HOUR

Will go on Double Summer Time at 9 P.M., E.W.T.

London, April 4—(AP)—Britain will go on double summer time—two hours ahead of Greenwich mean time—at 2 A. M. tomorrow (9 P. M. tonight, Eastern War Time), until August 9, four weeks longer than last year.

British clocks have been one hour ahead of Greenwich time since the war began.

Britain on double summer time will be six hours ahead of New York. The normal time difference between London and New York is five hours.

Says British Demand "Offensive Action"

APR 5 1942

New York, April 4 (AP)—Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, Cleveland rabbi and chairman of the United Palestine Appeal, returning from Europe today, said Gen. Douglas MacArthur was the most popular man in England today.

He added that the American military leader "seems to be a kind of symbol of the democratic action for which the English people are asking." He said the British were becoming impatient with their own leaders and demanding "offensive action."

Dr. Silver arrived on the Pan American Clipper, which also brought Sir Hubert Young, retiring Governor of Trinidad, and Phillip Holland, United States consul general at Liverpool, England, and sixteen other passengers.

Terms Churchill 'Most Arrogant'

By the Associated Press.

MORCAMBE, Lancashire, April 4.—A British government committed to ending the war as quickly as possible was advocated today by John McGovern, member of Parliament and president of the Independent Labor Party.

In a speech prepared for delivery at the party's annual conference, McGovern characterized Prime Minister Churchill as "the most arrogant and intolerant politician of today," and described Sir Stafford Cripps, Lord Privy Seal, as "the salvage officer of British Imperialism."

The Independent Labor party is a relatively minor political group with about ten members in the House of Commons.

Two Belfast Policemen Shot In Clash With IRA

Belfast, April 4 (AP)—Two policemen were wounded today when they attempted to break up an Irish Republic Army parade at Duncannon, Tyrone county.

Searching in the darkness for members of the parading group, who defied an official order prohibiting the demonstration, police surprised four men hiding in a back yard. The two forces fought a running battle with tommy guns and revolvers. The IRA band escaped.

U. S. Marines Parade In Grosvenor Square

London, April 4 (AP)—Londoners watched American Marines parade today in Grosvenor Square, opposite the United States Embassy, where they mount guard.

The detachment was inspected by Vice-Admiral Robert Lee Ghormley, United States assistant chief of naval operations, and Gen. Sir A. G. B. Bourne, adjutant general of Britain's Royal Marines.

NELSON IS PLEASED

Says Airplane Production Is Up to Schedule.

Washington, April 4 (A. P.).—Donald Nelson, director of the War Production Board, said after a White House visit today that the general war supply output was good, with plane production "up to schedule."

He reviewed the production outlook at a lengthy luncheon conference with President Roosevelt. Afterward he told reporters:

"Production is going very well. We are striking rough spots here and there. Of course, things get temporarily out of balance and have to be brought up. If the demand were not so great we would say the picture was very good."

the people who have places in our war production lines for that added bit of personal effort that can spell the difference between success and failure."

However, he conceded that "America's industrial plants is really beginning to roll," and he visualized a new era of management-labor cooperation as developing, "which will prove of immense value of the entire nation."

Although he admonished that "this is no time for easy optimism," Nelson asserted that "we have not yet done the impossible—but we are doing it."

In a detailed review of the progress of the nation's war effort, Nelson stressed that its relative success thus far was still dwarfed by the fact that "it is the biggest job, bar none, that this or

One Plane Now May Be Worth Ten Next Year, Nelson Says

WPB Chief Calls On Everyone In War Production For Added Bit Of Effort

APR 5 1942

[By the Associated Press]

New York, April 4—"One gun, one plane, one tank or one ship finished this spring may be worth ten finished a year from now," Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board tonight told an audience at an Army Day banquet of the Military Order of the World War.

"The time is short," he added. "Never were we under such pressure to do a big job quickly. Because the pressureis so great, our immediate success—our ability to get out more war goods now, instead of a few months from now—depends in no small measure on the willingness of executives and workers in our war plants to make the job a matter of individual, personal responsibility."

Because of the immediate need, Nelson said, "we are calling on all any other country ever tackled at an time in history. It is so huge that we can break every record we ever made and still fall short of the need."

Hails Achievements

Then he called the roll of achievement since Pearl Harbor:

"The airplane production program adopted after Pearl Harbor was presumed by practically everyone to be bigger than could possibly be attained. It was 'impossible' program if there ever was one.

"We met our schedules in January and we made twenty-three per cent more planes than we had made in December. We exceeded our schedules in February which, of course, called for an increase over January. In March again we met the schedule . . ."

With regard to tanks: "We are ahead of schedule on tank production."

Ships: 'Our production of merchant shipping is rising rapidly—we should meet this year's schedule."

Anti-aircraft and tnti-tank guns: 'The same is true."

Lauds Weapons

He declared that no American need fear that the nation's soldiers were going into battle with inferior weapons, asserting:

"Our planes have turned in outstanding performance records all over the world—in the Far East, in North Africa with the British, and on all other battle fronts. . . . Every American can be proud, not only of the heroic men who are flying those planes, but also of the men in the army and in our aviation industry who designed and built them."

APR 5 1942

Nelson asked that more credit be given the army's ordnance department for its steady development of better weapons from 1920 to 1940, when the emergency defense program got under way.

"That the weapons now being produced are such excellent ones is largely due to the work that was done between 1920 and 1940," Nelson said.

No Labor Shortage Is Knudsen's Word

Says Heavy Overtime Pay Hinders War Work

April 4—

WASHINGTON (AP)—Lieut. Gen. William S. Knudsen, Army production director, entered the controversy over the 40-hour week yesterday with a statement that while it had caused little delay to the war production program, heavy payments for overtime work had proved a hindrance.

But, where the latter were concerned, he noted, in a letter to Representative Robertson (Dem., Va.) that "labor leaders have publicly offered to remedy this and if they do, it will be constructive.

"If and when actual labor shortages occur, the work week should be extended," he added.

In the Background

Meanwhile, with Congress in a virtual Easter recess and no action on the labor question in sight for more than a week, the administration was authoritatively reported to be sounding out labor leaders on the possibility of a voluntary agreement to make 44 or 48 hours the basic work week, to be worked without overtime pay.

Vice President Wallace was understood to be active in this effort bent upon quieting the agitation which has surrounded the controversy. Whether a 44-hour week would satisfy Congress was a question, however, and whether 48 would suit labor was another.

In making the correspondence public, Robertson said that "in reading General Knudsen's letter, I felt that if I were permitted to read between the lines, I could see something to the effect of 'I would like to say more.'"

Economic Warfare Board And Its Role Explained

APR 5 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 4—Eleven experts on finance and foreign trade, including Henry S. Morgan, 41-year-old son of J. P. Morgan, are helping Uncle Sam prosecute the war in a big way—but without ballyhoo.

All are Government officials in various capacities, and they meet five days a week to do the spade work and make the recommendations for one of the largest and most important war agencies—the Board of Economic Warfare. They comprise the board's little-heard of policy committee.

Board Formed Last Fall

The board itself has met only a few times since it was organized last fall as the Economic Defense Board. Its name was changed after the United States entered the war. Vice-President Wallace is its chairman. Eight Cabinet officers are members, as well as Nelson Rockefeller, coordinator of inter-American affairs. Milo Perkins is executive director.

The hard-working policy committee maps plans to keep important materials away from enemy countries by means of rigid export licenses, blacklisting of foreign firms that do business with the Axis and preclusive buying of foreign products. It also originates financial projects to help friendly countries produce scarce commodities needed by the United States.

Examples Of Its Acts

One day it may recommend aid in rehabilitating a railroad in a South American country in order to facilitate the movement of a raw material wanted here. The next meeting may bring forth a recommendation to improve dock facilities in Africa or to buy up in advance the entire copper output of Chile.

Col. J. E. Butterworth, 46-year-old Philadelphia textile machinery manufacturer, is chairman of the policy committee. Although in the army, he is attached to the BEW and devotes all his time to its work. Some of the other members spend only part of their time on the committee as liaison men representing other war agencies.

Morgan's Advice Often Sought

Morgan, known to his banking associates as "Harry," is a lieutenant commander and represents the navy on the committee. London-born, a former partner in J. P. Morgan & Co. and former treasurer of Morgan, Stanley & Co., he was brought here several months ago by Artemus L. Gates, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air and former president of the New York Trust Company.

Morgan's advice on financial matters is said to be sought frequently by the committee, as is that of Maurice Wertheim, another New York, is the committee's vice-chairman, and Howard Newark, another New York attorney, is executive secretary.

Other Members

Other members are Edgar B. Stern, former president of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, representing the War Production Board; Kelso Peck, a Californian formerly with the General Motors Acceptance Corporation in Latin America, representing Rockefeller's agency; Charles W. Yost, special assistant to Under Secretary of State Welles, representing the State Department.

Dr. S. E. Harris, former Harvard professor, representing the Office of Price Administration; Harold H. Neff, formerly with the SEC in London, representing the War Department, and James C. Buckley, assistant to the deputy administration of lend-lease, representing the Lend-Lease Office.

York investment banker who attends the meetings as a consultant for Leon Henderson's Office of Civilian Supply.

U.S. May Drop Sugar Rationing Plan; Big Supply Found

APR 5 1942

[By the Associated Press]

New York, April 4—The long-heralded sugar-rationing program may be scrapped, the Herald-Tribune said today in a dispatch from Washington.

The paper said the setup, now tentatively set to get under way with a nation-wide registration May 4-7, might be dropped if estimates of current sugar supplies compiled by the War Production Board prevail over the insistence of the Office of Price Administration.

Million Tons Found

Approximately 1,000,000 tons more of Cuban sugar will be available for United States consumption than originally estimated, according to WPB information, because of a speedup in the production of industrial alcohol from grain in the Middle West. This production replaces and augments the stocks of alcohol usually produced on the Atlantic seaboard from black strap molasses, a by-product of the manufacture of raw sugar.

The paper said the matter of transportation was the big difficulty in making the newly found surplus in Cuban sugar available for United States consumption.

Final Decision Pending

A final decision was predicted after week-end conferences in New York and Washington on the shipping situation.

Representative Harry Coffee (Dem., Neb.) was quoted as saying "Not more than 200,000 tons of Cuban sugar will have to be used di-

In Hawaii One Speaks Softly To the Grocer

Honolulu, April 4 (Wide World).—The grocer and the butcher and the waiter are kingpins in civilian Hawaii now.

No longer does the housewife say brusquely, "I would like a pound of butter, two dozen oranges, a dozen eggs and two thick steaks."

She is much more likely—if she has the money to meet greatly increased prices—to ask humbly, "When you get any butter or eggs or meat, I wish you'd let me know and save me some."

She's long since learned it does no good to ask for oranges or other citrus fruits.

The waiter, too, isn't told any more to bring the best steak in the house, or a plate of ham and eggs, or "make it heavy on the butter."

Rather, he's asked gently whether there's any meat available, whether he could dig up a couple of eggs, or whether there is a bit of butter to go with the bread and jelly.

A recent tour of four representative eating places in Honolulu showed none had steaks, one had eggs, another one had bacon, and two had butter substitutes in limited quantity. Green vegetables were scarce.

One general store had a window sign saying, "No meat for sale."

There are few complaints, however, and Hawaii isn't starving. It seems generally agreed that the war effort is far more important than a variety of food.

BARRY WARNS HOUSE

Declares Nazis Here Seek Jewish-Gentile Split.

Washington, April 4 (A. P.).—Hitler's agents are secretly preaching anti-Semitism throughout the country, Representative William B. Barry, Democrat, of New York, says, in an effort to separate "the Gentiles of America from their fellow American Jews by a gulf of hate."

"The trend of his recent propaganda," the New Yorker told the House, "is to create the impression in the minds of American Gentiles that the Jews are not patriotic and are not assuming their responsibilities for winning this war.

"Whenever and wherever this malicious propaganda rears its ugly head we must fight it with the weapons of truth. We must remind the spreaders that Jews are conscripted for military service on an equal basis with their fellow citizens of other races and religions. We must remind them that Jews have been prominent in American life since Colonial days and are not newcomers to the American scene."

Pelley Seized On Sedition Charge

APR 5 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 4—William Dudley Pelley, goateed leader of the Silver Shirts, was arrested today on charges of distributing false statements intended to hurt the United States and "promote the success of our enemies."

FBI agents picked him up in Darien, Conn., the Justice Department announced, under a direct order from Attorney General Biddle.

Seditious activities under the Espionage Act of 1917 was the formal charge.

$15,000 Bond Set

Pelley was immediately taken to New Haven for questioning and arraignment.

There United States Commissioner Herbert S. MacDonald bound him over to the Federal District Court for the Southern District of Indiana at Indianapolis under $15,000 bond after Pelley waived examination.

Pelley was arrested at the Darien home of George B. Fisher, who testified before the Dies committee in 1940 that he had donated $20,000 to the Silver Shirts over a period of eighteen months.

Fisher, a resident of Darien since 1929, said he was a native of Canada, but had become a naturalized citizen of the United States after eighteen months' service with the army overseas in the World War.

He and Pelley arrived in Darien last night from Buffalo, N. Y., where he had picked the Silver Shirt leader up while returning from Florida, Fisher said.

Edited Suspended Paper

The department said Pelley had lately been editor of the Galilean, published by the Friendship Press of Indianapolis until it "suspended publication when recent issues were declared non-mailable" by the Postoffice Department.

Since the United States declared war, the department charged, Pelley has "made and caused to be distributed, in the Galilean, false statements intended to interfere with the success of the military and naval forces of the United States and intended to promote the success of our enemies."

Under Sentence Now

An acknowledged anti-Semitic publicist, Pelley has divided his time between publishing activities in Asheville, N. C., where he has his Silver Shirt headquarters, and in Noblesville.

Between times he has been involved in prosecution by North Carolina authorities on charges of violating the State Blue Sky law, and in appearances as a witness at congressional committee hearings. He is at present appealing, the Justice Department said, from a prison sentence in North Carolina.

Two years ago Pelley told a House committee that he "probably" would have been running the Government then if his Silver Shirt organization had succeeded in its efforts to enlist sufficient support to wipe out subversive elements.

"The White King" His Aim

If he had taken over the Government, Pelly testified, he probably would have put into effect something resembling Hitler's policies with respect to Jews, although he did not indorse Hitler's exact methods.

Early in 1940 Dorothy Waring, of New York, a secret agent for a former House investigating committee, testified that Pelley had told her he planned to lead a march on Washington and become "the white king" of the country.

Silver Shirts Leader Nabbed

W. D. Pelley Held in Jail on Charges of Sedition

April 4—

NEW HAVEN (AP)—William Dudley Pelley, anti-Semitic publicist and advocate of totalitarianism for America, was arrested by FBI agents yesterday on charges of sedition. He waived examination and was held for trial in the U. S. District Court at Indianapolis.

The gray-goateed leader of the Silver Shirts, who left here yesterday afternoon for the Midwestern city in the custody of U. S. Marshal Fitch, was charged under the Espionage act of 1917, with distributing false statements intended to harm the United States and "promote the success of our enemies." If convicted, he faces a possible sentence of 20 years in prison, a fine of $10,000, or both.

Pelley was arrested at the Darien home of George B. Fisher, a self-described "old friend" who told the Dies committee in 1940 that he had contributed $20,000 over a period of 18 months to the Silver Shirts. Four "very gentlemanly" FBI agents, said Fisher, routed them out of bed, notified Pelley he was under arrest and confiscated manuscripts and magazines in his possession.

Bail of $15,000

The Silver Shirts leader, dapper in a double-breasted blue suit, was brought here immediately for arraignment before U. S. Commissioner MacDonald, who set his bail at $15,000 and then turned him over for delivery to Indianapolis.

At Indianapolis, U. S. District Attorney B. Howard Caughran asserted that Pelley, former editor of "The Galilean," recently suspended Indianapolis publication, was charged with three counts.

The first alleged he attempted to aid enemies of the United States through publication of "The Galilean," and the second and third that on two occasions he "knowingly and feloniously did attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States."

Before a House committee two years ago, Pelley expressed approval of Hitler's anti-Semitism. He testified he probably would have been running the government then if his Silver Shirts had succeeded in enlisting sufficient support.

Lower Californians Assail Annexation Reports

Ensenada, Lower California, April 4 (AP)—What is branded here as fifth-column agitation in the United States for buying, occupying or conquering this peninsula in the interests of American security has aroused resentment to the point that many Mexicans are countering with demands for the return of upper California, lost to the United States in the war of 1846-48.

The local civilian defense committee has started a campaign to put things right. In barber shops, stores, busses and public offices the following brilliantly colored placard, posted by the committee, is visible:

"The most despicable fifth-columnists are those who sow distrust and confusion among our peoples by talking in the United States of the conquest or purchase of Lower California, or, in Mexico, of the return of upper California.

"As either of these things is impossible, both countries should publicly brand such Axis propagandists for what they are."

U. S. Officer Heads All Dutch Forces In Curacao And Aruba

Willemstad, Curacao, April 4 (AP). All Netherlands forces in and about Curacao and Aruba, Dutch Caribbean islands, have been placed under the command of Rear Admiral J. B. Oldendorf, of the United States Navy, the governor of Curacao, G. J. J. Wouters, announced in a proclamation today.

Aneta, Dutch news agency, circulated the announcement.

The proclamation explained that the move was "for the purpose of exercising full strategical and tactical control of the military—naval, undersea, air, land and water—above and around Curacao and Aruba."

The Netherlands military commander will remain chief of all the Dutch forces, but was placed under the direct command of Admiral Oldendorf as chief of staff. Admiral Oldendorf's new duties are in addition to his regular American command.

U. S. Seeks Trade Pacts With Mexico And Bolivia

Reciprocal Agreement Program Already Extends To Twelve American Republics

Washington, April 4 (AP)—Moving to extend the reciprocal trade agreement program in the Western Hemisphere, the State Department announced today that pacts would be sought with Mexico and Bolivia.

Already agreements are in force with twelve of the other American republics. Treaties are in various stages of negotiation with two others, Uruguay and Peru, and only Panama, Paraguay and Chile remain completely outside the program.

The list of more than one hundred commodities on which the United States has agreed to consider tariff reduction in Mexico's favor includes cattle, sheep, lambs, horses, mules, petroleum and fuel oil.

The list of products on which this country will consider granting concessions to Bolivia include tungsten, lead and zinc ores and hides and skins.

Gas Consumption Cut Fifty Per Cent. In Cuba

Armed Forces, Public Service Companies And Industries Exempted

Havana, April 4 (AP)—Cuba tonight clamped a fifty per cent. restriction on gasoline consumption throughout the country to cope with a threatened shortage of fuel due to the war shipping situation.

In a sweeping decree, President Batista ordered petroleum importers and refiners to reduce their deliveries to distributors and gas stations by fully fifty per cent. of their normal consumption.

Distributors and gas stations, on the other hand, must cut their sales to their regular customers by fifty per cent. also.

The decree provides exemption for the Cuban armed forces, public service companies and business and industrial concerns.

Two Brothers Couldn't Enlist and Now Are Missing.

Ottawa, April 4 (A. P.).—Col. H. P. Pierrene, representative in Canada of Gen. Charles De Gaulle, leader of the Free French, said today that Jean and Francois La Cloche, whose mother lives in New York, are not in the Free French forces.

Mrs. La Cloche, American-born wife of a French war hero, appealed to New York police yesterday to help get back her two sons. She said that Jean, 17 years old, and Francois, 15, fled from Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H., two months ago to enlist with the Free French in Halifax.

Officials discovered that the boys were under military age and discharged them, Col. Pierrene said. They received tickets for their journey home, but later the tickets were found in their hotel room.

Now the whereabouts of the boys is not known.

Norse Crown Prince Plans Lecture Tour

Washington, April 4 (A. P.).—Crown Prince Olav of Norway will make a three-week cross-country lecture tour this month, starting at New York city on April 11, the Norwegian legation announced today.

A spokesman said the Crown Prince would speak on Norway's contribution to the Allied cause. The exact itinerary has not been worked out, but the spokesman said it would include appearances in major West Coast and Middle-Western cities.

Russian Successes and MacArthur Appointment Bring Optimism but Tough Task Ahead

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

Very considerable optimism appears throughout the Allied countries, due largely to the amazing successes of the Russians and the appointment of the world's latest hero, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, to supreme command in the western Pacific.

It is right that we should take encouragement from these events. Indeed, a certain amount of prideful optimism is a good thing, for it breeds confidence. At the same time many observers have the uneasy feeling that our wings of hope have carried us too high, and that if we encounter harsh adversity we are going to get a nasty fall.

While it is true that the Russians have given Adolf Hitler a terrific lacing this past winter, it is equally true that he seems a long way from being knocked out. He is still powerful—still the master of one of the most nearly perfect fighting machines ever created.

Because of that, and because the holocaust of the next six months or so in eastern Europe and the Middle East is likely to determine the course of the whole war, the Nazi chief is going to strike some mighty blows. It will be strange if some of those blows don't hurt the Allies badly. When a man is desperate he is the most dangerous, and Der Fuehrer is desperate.

Chinese Rely on Burma.

The Russo-German conflict isn't the only one in which the Allies can get hurt. For instance, we are winning the battle of production but at the moment are having a hard struggle in the battle of transportation, because of the U-boat depredations. War material which ought to be in Russia or other theaters is delayed because of lack of ships. And we appear to be on the verge of a great Nazi submarine offensive which may make anything thus far seem like kindergarten stuff.

It's possible that Hitler may lash out at Sweden, and if he does he may be expected to take that country over. Militarily he is set for this adventure, the purpose of which would be (1) to put him geographically beside his Finnish ally and thus improve his strategic position, and (2) to profit by the food and other supplies in Sweden.

Another possibility is that the Japs may attack Siberia and thus weaken the Russians by making them fight on two fronts at once. Certainly we may expect more bad news from the Orient, for while Gen. MacArthur is taking the initiative, he can't pull rabbits out of a hat and we needn't expect any grand offensive in the near future.

Take Burma. The advancing Japs are threatening the great oil field from which China draws its supplies. Loss of that field would be a terrible blow to Chinese arms. China has been depending on this one field.

Then there are the threats to Australia, India, the Allied supply lines in the Indian Ocean, Libya and the Suez Canal. We are not out of the woods by a long shot.

As British Premier Churchill said the other day, "It would be foolish for us not to be prepared for further heavy blows." However, he did add that the Allies can't lose this war except through their own fault—and we have every reason to believe that to be true.

London Dailies Appear Gaunt

APR 5 1942

No Comics, Few Sports and Food's Rarely Mentioned

By DON WHITEHEAD

NEW YORK (Wide World)—London's wartime newspapers are as lean and gaunt looking as battle-toughened soldiers, stripped to the barest essentials of news and advertising.

Beside American papers — fat with news, comic strips, sports, assorted features, columns from Broadway, Washington and Hollywood, and advertisements — the London dailies have the emaciated look of a journalistic thin man.

There is nothing anemic in the way the British handle the war news and comment on their government's conduct of the war, however, even though the stories lack the detail and completeness of American news coverage.

The appearance of some of the papers is confusing to the American, accustomed to having the top news on page one, followed by an orderly procession of features, columns, editorials, sports, comics and pages of advertising, including tempting food displays.

News Starts on Page Two

Take a look at London's "Old Thunderer," the Times:

Instead of black headlines on the front page there is a solid gray mass of want ads, personal and legal notices and announcements of births, deaths and marriages.

The news begins on page two with the major war dispatches, editorials and home news on pages three and four—only eight or 10 pages compared to the 24 or 36 in the week-day metropolitan papers in this country.

Like most London papers, the Times has no comic strips and scant sports news. The ads are small, running largely to patent medicines, and food is rarely mentioned. Rationed, you know.

Since the London papers serve the entire island, their circulation is tremendous and accounts for the principal revenue rather than advertising.

The greatest similarity between the English and American papers lies in the free discussions of their government's war effort and the publication of important news, whether good or bad.

AP Story Has Smash Play

While each country's press gives the most space and prominence to news directly affecting its own people, this doesn't mean they do not give smash play to the same stories, regardless of the source.

British papers followed the pattern of American papers in giving top play to the sensational "Last Story From Singapore" by C. Yates McDaniel, correspondent for the Associated Press and Wide World.

The London Evening Standard headlined McDaniel's story "Salute the Brave!"

It devoted more than a column of its restricted news space to this description of Singapore's heroic but outmanned defenders.

The adventure of the American reporter stirred such interest in England that the Standard ran another page one feature a few days later reporting McDaniel was missing. He later turned up safely in Java and is now in Australia.

Roosevelt's fireside chat February 23 was printed in full in the London Times, although there was no mention of the fact a Japanese submarine had shelled the California coast during the broadcast.

The Daily Express barely mentioned the President's speech in its news columns next day, but printed an editorial column of comment.

Differing News Appraisals

The difference in American and British news appraisal was illustrated sharply on February 19 when the big news to Americans was the fact that U. S. troops and planes had gone into action in Java, and that a German U-boat had torpedoed a Panama-registered tanker off the Dutch island of Aruba in the Caribbean.

To the British, the major interest was in a story that the home guard forces had been completely reorganized, the first bombs had fallen on Australia, and the Chinese troops had scored a victory over Thai troops in an encounter in northern Burma.

With the arrival of spring, American newspapers are featuring spring fashions in full-page advertisements—but in the London Times of a recent date, the entire paper carried only one small women's clothing ad. Spring styles don't mean so much to a nation in uniform.

Bride's Gown Ignored

In contrast, the marriage of the Earl of Warwick was a social event that would have had American society writers beating out columns of descriptive. The Evening Standard merely recorded:

"The Earl of Warwick was married to Mrs. Kathleen Bell at midday today. The bride and bridegroom sprinted 50 yards after the wedding to escape press photographers."

And that was all. Not even a line on what the bride wore.

Just as society writers put the trimmings on a wedding of social significance, American sports writers turn loose in full cry on a boxing championship, well . . .

When Jock McAvoy and Freddie Mills battled for the British middleweight title February 23, the Daily Express was not so much interested in the fight as in learning why 4,500 spectators had put aside war work to watch a sports event.

Almost as an afterthought, it was added that McAvoy suddenly stopped fighting in the first round without being hit, explaining he had wrenched his spine in some mysterious way. Mills was the winner.

And if the British press doesn't follow the American news pattern, at least the British boxing sometimes has a quaint American touch.

Bombers Flow Daily to England Under Accurate Piloting System

APR 5 1942

Many American Fliers at Controls as 15 Planes Hop Every 24 Hours

By STEPHEN J. McDONOUGH

WASHINGTON (Wide World) — More than 15 American bombers are roaring across the Atlantic ocean to England every day, according to information released through the British Embassy here.

This news has reached the United States from the receiving end of the record-breaking flights.

British sources, reporting through the British Library of Information to the British Embassy here, have declared that on some occasions as many as 25 American-built planes set their wheels down on English soil within 24 hours.

The flights are considered routine by the United States and British crews who take the planes across. The smaller twin-engine bombers carry a captain, navigator and radio operator. The four-engine bombers carry a captain, co-pilot, navigator, radio operator and flight engineer.

Many of the men in the Ferry Command of the Royal Air Force, under Air Chief Marshal Sir Frederick Bowhill, are American pilots. Some are former Army and Navy pilots jettisoned for "disability," former airline pilots, men who flew the U. S. Weather Bureau's observation planes, pilots of crop-dusting planes, and soldiers of fortune who have flown in Spain, China and other countries.

Strenuous Training Course

All of them, however, undergo a strenuous course of training at Canadian airfields in meteorology, navigation, flight command, blind flying and firing of machine guns and light cannon.

With almost clocklike regularity, they haul off 15 tons of airplane and cargo from an unnamed airport and head out across the ocean. Every plane is crammed to the hatch covers with spare airplane parts, medical supplies, concentrated foods, mail and perhaps a diplomat or a newspaper correspondent in a hurry to get abroad.

They often fly in weather so severe that the runways must be blown clear of snow to make a takeoff possible and the crews must eat well before they start, because at 20,000 feet their sandwiches and fruit are frozen to the consistency of wood and their hot coffee in flasks is turning to ice before they can get it into a cup.

Most of the crews are teams which work together, eat together, sleep in the same barracks and go out on parties together, sergeants and captains mingling without regard to rank. Some are superstitious about having a member of the crew transferred to other duty.

The flights sound simple. After tearing his plane off the ground with the help of 4,000 horsepower in his engines, the pilot fixes on his course, turns over the controls to the Sperry automatic gyro pilot and apparently relaxes.

But it could hardly be called relaxation. He and his crew members are constantly scanning their instruments, measuring air, speed altitude, gasoline consumption, drift of the plane off its true course, engine temperatures and making regular checks on the sun or stars to check their compasses.

They are aiming for a small point of land 2,000 miles away and unless two men making observations agree within a small fraction of error they go back and calculate over again. One degree of miscalculation means the difference between death and hot coffee plus 12 hours in bed.

The ferry pilots used to fly in formation across the Atlantic, but not any more. A few close calls taught them better and now each plane takes off according to prearranged agreements and gives the plane ahead and the one behind him at least a thousand feet altitude of elbow room.

To date there never has been a collision accident in the air.

During the summer most of them return by air, and some crews have made the round trip three times in a month.

On the trips to England they carry an unofficial cargo of American and Canadian tobacco, sugar, tea, novelties and other presents for their friends.

On the return trip one of the principal items is the watch of a friend being carried to an American or Canadian shop for repairs. It is not uncommon for a ferry crew member to be wearing four wrist watches with a couple or more in his pockets.

To date only one plane out of hundreds has been officially listed as missing. The ferrying crews maintain that this must have been due to a "mishap"—a faulty carburetor, a clogged gas line, or the weather. These men don't make mistakes—at least not more than once.

The German radio has claimed than not even half of the American-built planes ever reach England, but there is no record of any ferry plane ever having been fired on.

Magnified Peril Is Faced Today

Program of Production and Money Cost Top Wildest '17 Fancy

By CLARKE BEACH

WASHINGTON (Wide World)—Old perils, old enemies and old friends will be on hand tomorrow for the 25th anniversary of the United States' entry into the World War.

APR 5 1942

Formidable as 1942 perils and enemies were on April 6, 1917, however, they are far more menacing now. Everything, in fact, has been magnified. Today's production program and the money cost are beyond the wildest fancies of the Americans of 1917. Looking back on those days, one must conclude it was a small war, after all.

Take the submarine menace. Prime Minister Churchill revealed some days ago that the battle of the Atlantic was worsening; and the same could have been said in April, 1917, when the U-boats reached the peak of their destructiveness. So fast were they sinking Allied ships that the German High Command was counting on bringing Britain to her knees in August. Admiral Jellicoe told fellow Britishers they were "heading straight for disaster."

Ship Sinkings Closer

But those sinkings were occurring almost entirely in the northeast Atlantic. Now a ship's captain might expect a torpedo or a bomb in almost any waters. There were no sinkings off the American coast in 1917, but this March about 70 ships were lost on this side. That was almost half the number of British vessels sunk in that dark April a quarter of a century ago.

Take the production program. When Woodrow Wilson's administration proposed a $5,000,000,000 bond issue as the first step in financing the war, the commentators referred to it as "a huge sum." Today Franklin D. Roosevelt's lieutenants can ask for $18,000,000,000 without anyone blinking an eye.

The total cost of that other war was $21,850,000,000; and already the appropriations, authorizations and requests for this war exceed $163,000,000,000. The plan now is to spend $50,000,000,000 to $60,000,000,000 a year.

Wall Street sages in April, 1917, were pondering the government's financial outlook. Gravely they pointed out that the public debt already was a little over $1,000,000,000 (compared to $60,000,000,000 this April). Asked how much the nation might be able to borrow before it went bankrupt, they replied, "$40,000,000,000."

Industry, Then and Now

Industry in that April was exulting in its fine state of preparation to produce war materials. The Allies' $2,500,000,000 in war orders had enabled them to get their plants set up. The manufacturers pointed out what great quantities of powder, shells and fuses and rifles they could produce.

Tanks and airplanes, the chief needs today, were not mentioned. And in fact the American doughboys who went to France fought almost entirely with the Allies' airplanes, tanks and big guns.

There are many superficial parallels between the situations this April and then. The Russians were a great comfort then as now. A few weeks before America went to war the Russians had overthrown the Czar and set up a revolutionary government which many persons on this side of the Atlantic expected to develop into a republic on the American model.

Said President Wilson to Congress in this speech on April 2 when he asked for a declaration of war:

"Does not every American feel that assurance has been added to our hope for the future peace of the world by the wonderful and heartening things that have been happening within the last few weeks in Russia? * * * The great, generous Russian people have been added, in all their native majesty and might, to forces that are fighting for freedom in the world, for justice and for peace. Here is a fit partner for a legion of honor."

Democracy Again Issue

In the 1917 war, the enemy was autocracy - crowned dictatorship which was bent on world conquest. As President Wilson explained it in his speech. "The world must be made safe for democracy. * * * We shall fight * * * for the rights and liberties of small nations. For a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free."

In Berlin the government's mouthpieces aimed their attacks then as now at the American President and democracy. They called Woodrow Wilson "this Anglo-Saxon fanatic." They countered his attack on autocracy by asserting that democracy had failed, that the peoples of democracies "have been degraded to mere tools on the chessboard of political intrigue."

Today's rumors of German internal weakness sound like echoes of the stories which came out of neutral European capitals in April, 1917. The people were ready to rise, overthrow the Kaiser, set up a republic and make peace, they said. And then, as now, cautious voices warned that this was all German propaganda designed to weaken the Allied war effort.

Out of London came a yarn that German bankers in the United States were saying the Kaiser was ill of Bright's disease and that his death was expected momentarily. (Wilhelm lived until last June).

Striking Contrasts, Too

The contrasts between the two Aprils are as striking as the parallels:

Instead of the swift, almost unanimous declaration of war that came this time, in 1917 Congress haggled for three days. Six senators and 50 representatives opposed it, claiming it was a business-men's war and that it didn't concern the United States. Among the representatives who voted "no" was Miss Jeannette Rankin, first woman member of the House, and the only member of Congress to oppose the present war declaration.

There were more flags in those days. When President Wilson signed the declaration at 1.18 P. M. on April 6, patriots all over the land broke out the bunting. Jess Willard, heavyweight champion of the world, wired the President he was ready to enlist. Cuba was the first Latin-American nation to declare war. Sixty German spy ringleaders were rounded up. Ninety-one German ships were seized. Hasty marriages took place all over the land.

In that pre-good neighbor era, Mexico was a doubtful quantity. Former President Taft predicted that if an invasion of the United States were attempted it would be through the southern republic. He accused Mexico of being "an international nuisance."

Looking Back

Can Holland remain neutral? was a big question of the moment. The unrestricted submarine warfare was threatening to starve her out.

On April 6 the situation on the battlefronts was considered generally favorable. The British and French were edging the Germans back slightly on the Western Front; and in the Near East the Russians and British had the Turks in full retreat.

The day after war was declared, the papers announced that "the greatest aerial battle of all history" had taken place over France. British flying machines accompanied by fighting airplanes had flown over the German lines to take photographs and had been attacked by enemy fliers. The British lost 28 planes; the Germans lost 15 planes and 10 balloons, but 31 more of their planes had been driven to the ground and probably destroyed.

The losses may not sound very impressive today but one can appreciate them when one remembers that the United States Army had only 55 planes when we entered that war.

Americans Held Axis Prisoners Getting Aid Through Red Cross

Information, Gifts and Mail for Captives Are Handled by Geneva Office

APR 5 1942

By RUTH COWAN

WASHINGTON (Wide World) — Recently workers in the headquarters of the International Red Cross Committee had an unusually big job to do.

The list from the United States government of interned German, Italian and Japanese civilians had come in—the longest list of internees yet received in World War II.

It was a cable of 267 pages, and it contained 13,000 words, including the names, information about the places of internment. It was filed in accordance with the treaty signed at Geneva in 1929 relating to treatment of prisoners of war. And in accordance with their usual procedure, the staff of the International Red Cross Committee in Geneva, Switzerland, card-indexed and copied these lists preparatory to transmitting them to the home governments of the civilians involved.

The staff were preparing similar lists for the United States government. This is one of the big jobs of the International Red Cross Committee when the world is at war.

International P. O.

This International Red Cross Committee is the last neutral link between America and the enemy countries. It serves as an exchange for lists of interned civilians and prisoners of war. Through its offices safe conduct is arranged for Red Cross "mercy ships." It is a clearing house for food boxes for interned civilians and prisoners of war. It is an international post-office—and fast becoming a sort of international registration bureau.

In the middle of the last century a Swiss, Henri Dunant, dreamed of an organization that could cross battle lines to help ease the sufferings of war—a mutually beneficial organization that all nations could support and respect. He started the International Red Cross Committee in 1863 with five fellow Swiss citizens as members. The next year representatives of 13 European nations and the United States met and drew up the first treaty of Geneva.

But the United States Senate did not ratify it until 1882, the year after Clara Barton had organized the American Red Cross at her home in Washington.

The international committee now has 24 members, all Swiss citizens, and is headed by Dr. Max Huber, former president of the Permanent Court of International Justice. The headquarters were retained at Geneva, and the official Red Cross symbol—red cross on a white background—is the Swiss flag in reverse.

Humanitarian Agency

The International Red Cross Committee is the agency which seeks to carry out the principles of International humanitarian conventions, particularly those known as the Geneva conventions.

Of the latter, the one of great importance in this war is the 1929 Geneva convention, which, attended by representatives of the United States and 46 other countries drew up a revised treaty governing treatment of prisoners of war. It grew out of experiences of 1914-18. The United States representatives signed the treaty in Geneva in 1929, and the United States Senate ratified it in 1932. The names of Japan's three representatives are on the treaty, but the Japanese government never ratified it.

When war began between the United States and Japan, however, the American Red Cross inquired of the International Red Cross Committee if the Japanese would abide by the 1929 convention.

Norman Davis, chairman of the American Red Cross, received word from the International Red Cross Committee that on December 27 the Japanese government, by decree, had established a prisoners of war information bureau in Tokyo in accordance with the treaty.

The Japanese government agreed to transmit through the Geneva headquarters information concerning prisoners of war "on a basis of reciprocity," and it also stated its willingness to exchange information on that basis regarding interned non-combatants "as far as possible."

Seek to Aid Civilians

The 1929 treaty does not cover treatment of interned civilians, but one of the objectives of the International Red Cross Committee is to secure application of the treaty's provisions to civilians as well as service men.

Prior to the United States' entrance into the war the International Red Cross Committee was already functioning in the other belligerent countries with the exception of the Soviet Union, which carried on its own relief work. However, to facilitate exchange of information regarding prisoners of war—mainly Russians and Germans—it is expected that shortly the Soviet, which did not participate in the 1929 convention, will accept a delegate from the International Red Cross Committee.

The international committee operates through these delegates, always Swiss citizens. For example, recently the delegate in Germany, Georges Broeder, visited 300 American civilians interned in a prison camp in a former chateau near Salsburg. His report to the International Red Cross Committee that the internees needed clothing was forwarded here, and the American Red Cross cabled $5,000—the first relief by Americans for Americans since the war began—to Geneva to buy shoes and clothes. The American Red Cross also arranged to have prisoner of war food boxes sent from its stocks maintained in Geneva.

Represented in Tokyo

In Tokyo, the international delegate is Dr. Fritz Paravicini, a Swiss surgeon, who has been in Japan since 1904 and practices medicine in diplomatic circles. He has often represented the International Red Cross Committee in negotiations with Japan.

The first detailed reports from Japan relating to treatment of American prisoners of war and interned civilians were received by the American Red Cross through Geneva in February. The 1929 treaty provides that the prisoners of war food ration shall be equal in quality and quantity to that of troops at base camps.

The message the American Red Cross received through Geneva was that "Japanese soldiers' rations provided to prisoners of war and treatment good—only request, more tobacco and toilet articles." Later the American Red Cross said it was informed that the Japanese were attempting to feed the white soldiers white men's food.

The international delegate in the United States is Marc Peter, who until 1939 for 20 years was the Swiss minister here. He is a lawyer and was a member of the Swiss Parliament for 10 years. He began his services as international delegate about a year ago.

Under the 1929 treaty the belligerents send to the Geneva headquarters lists of prisoners and the dead behind the lines as soon as possible. Delegates have the right to interview prisoners without witnesses and, in particular, the chosen representatives of the prisoners themselves. A copy of the delegate's report to Geneva is sent to the detaining power.

At the Geneva headquarters the incoming lists, together with the names of relatives and others who write in for information, are card-indexed—and the names in these files run into the millions. There were 1,000,000 names of French prisoners alone.

There are about 4,000 persons, mostly Swiss and many of them volunteers, working in the international committee's activities. Last year's operating expenses were about $40,000 a month. Contributions are made by the Red Cross societies of the various nations and by the Swiss government and people.

Anyone wishing to write for information about a prisoner of war or to a resident in an enemy country, or send a food package, c[an] get the necessary forms at their l[o]cal Red Cross chapters.

Dust Clouds Swirl From Tanks to Form Axis Storm Clouds

APR 5 1942

By JOHN LEAR

WASHINGTON (Wide World)—Dust clouds rolling from behind sand dunes in the deserts of the Southwest are storm clouds for the Axis.

The clouds are swirling from tanks and other fighting machines manned by units of the United States Army. Battle practice under desert conditions was announced recently by the Army High Command. Which way will these storm clouds blow?

There are desert areas in Australia where MacArthur's American and Australian fighters are preparing to meet any Japanese invasion thrust.

There are deserts in Africa and the Middle East, likely spots for a German spring offensive.

Closer home there are the deserts of the Pacific coast of South America—a coast which Japan has boasted she would control one day through victory in the South Pacific.

Control of these desert coastal plains would be a necessary prelude to the Japanese's great dream—smashing the Panama canal.

Japs 'Nerve War' Campaign

These Latin deserts run from Lcwer Ecuador through Peru deep into Chile, between the Andes and the sea. From them come nitrates which play a vital role in New World defense. To the republics having sovereignty over them, the Japanese now are directing a "nerve war" campaign of predictions that Japanese convoys before long will be carrying food and finished products to South America and buying the raw materials South America has to offer.

These raw materials are the sinews of war which this country needs to keep war production going. Japan was outbidding the United States for them not too many months ago.

Japan's desire to maintain convoys eastward cannot be doubted. South America before the war was an expanding market for cheap Japanese goods, and an increasingly productive source of raw materials. Prestige, the most important commodity in Tokyo, would be tremendously enhanced if Jap ships could steal United States trade on the hemisphere's home grounds.

Australian leaders have argued that if Australia should fall the road to South America would be impeded only by a few small islands.

Any realistic approach to the question must recognize that, no matter how much they want us to win, Chile and Peru would have to trade with Japan if Nipponese control of the seas extended to the South American coasts—unless the Pan-American highway should be opened, and there is no immediate promise of that, although work is proceeding. South America must export or starve.

Pledge by Welles

Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles pledged at the Rio de Janeiro conference that American warships would smash any attempted Oriental convoys. He repeated the pledge in Washington after the Japs made their boasts to Chile. Soldiers trained to fight in deserts could be used to buttress that pledge if necessary.

Congress has been told that Japanese plans set the destruction of Panama as the next Jap blow against this country. Many strategists believe these plans are still the Tokyo timetable. They expect that the first move would be a thrust at the Galapagos islands, 800 miles west of Ecuador and 1,000 miles southwest of the canal. The government of Ecuador is co-operating with the United States in preparing defenses on the islands.

What have the Galapagos to do with desert fighting?

Island defenses are of little value unless supply lines can keep the islands on a fighting footing. And the logical source of supply lines to the Galapagos is the peninsula of Salinas, which is desert.

Building U. S. Naval Base

Ecuador's President, Carlos Arroyo Del Rio, announced on March 2 that Salinas was being built into an American naval base. Runways already are down for the air end of this base. They lie beside a magnificent harbor, guarded by a rock which looks like a miniature Gibraltar. Salinas is the westernmost point on South America, and dominates the coastline all the way north to Panama. It is its own fuel depot, since oil fields lie in the middle of it. It is connected by narrow-gauge railroad to the port of Guayaquil.

This is the region the Spanish Conquistadores picked as the natural route for the first invasion of South America four centuries ago. Pizzaro and his men entered through Tumbez and crossed the deserts to the Andes on their way to conquer the Incas.

The Nazis are well aware of the strategic importance of Salinas. They were first to run airlines to it, and from it along the coast. They were first to make survey flights from it to the Galapagos. They used the Salinas fishing village as a hangout, and, with the Italians, bought control of the few hotels there. They mapped the area thoroughly.

The Salinas desert could be a foothold for more than the west coast. It could be the beginning of an invasion all the way to the Atlantic ocean. In Ecuador are some of the headwaters of the Amazon. From Ecuador the first exploration of the Amazon was made. The Amazon spreads over six of the 10 South American nations: Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela. In all those countries its steaming jungle shores are bordered by rice fields, sown by Japanese settlers.

A Deadly Place

Salinas forms roughly the northern edge of the South American deserts. Except for oases here and there, where river valleys push green fingers down from the mountains through the arid gray, the sand is continuous through Peru into Chile. I was lost in part of this desert, Peru's Sechura, last year, and can testify that no matter how inconsequential it may look on the map, this is a deadly place.

In three nights of walking from a stranded airplane to get to the sea, and in two days on a burro with itinerant fishermen who found me on the beach, I saw dunes taller than houses and sometimes as high as low mountain ridges. The only road through the place is a pair of deep ruts, marked with dead sticks stuck upright. The vegetation consists of wind-gnarled trees half-buried in the dunes and vines bearing a bitter tasting bean.

North of these deserts in Ecuador and Colombia, Jap farmers have flat fields near the coast, suspected of being potential air fields. Along the deserts themselves, in Peru, Japs are thickly settled. South of the deserts, in lower Chile, are communities strongly dominated by Germans. On these Germans the Nazis depend to make lower Chile and Argentina's Patagonia, which together control the vital Magellan straits, into a separate Nazi state.

The chief worry of South America's west coast nations is not Fifth Columnists, however, but the long exposed coastline, and the crucial part it plays in the Latin economy.

And training fighters for desert war is one way of telling the neighbors we are not going to let them be taken over.

A BRITISH AIRDROME IN THE LIBYAN DESERT, APRIL 4-(AP)-WITH THE APPROACH OF THE SPRING CAMPAIGN SEASON THE RAF IS WORKING UP A NEW FIGHTING UNIT CALLED EMERGENCY ATTACK PATROLS WHOSE JOB WILL BE TO HELP GUARD BRITISH AIRDROMES AGAINST GROUND ATTACKS BY PARACHUTE TROOPS OR SABOTEURS.

APR 5 1942

THESE PATROLS ARE FORMED OF MECHANICS AND OTHERS OF THE SQUADRON PERSONNEL WHO IN THE PAST RELIED ON ARMY AND SPECIAL RAF ORGANIZATIONS FOR DEFENSE.

THE PATROLS ARE INTENDED TO COOPERATE WITH REGULAR ARMY DEFENSE FORCES OR TO FIGHT OFF THE ENEMY ALONE IN THE EVENT THE REGULAR DEFENSE IS CUT OFF.

AT THIS AIRDROME BEHIND THE LINES I WATCHED MEN SIMULATING AN ATTACK THEY MAY ONE DAY MEET IN THE FORWARD AREAS. HERETOFORE NON-FIGHTING PERSONNEL, THE MEN ARE PRACTICING FIRING ON MOVING GARGETS AND STALKING TACTICS AND DEVELOPING AN ALL AROUND AGGRESSIVE, SELF-RELIANT PSYCHOLOGY.

THESE PATROLS WILL FIGHT WITH TOMMY GUNS, RIFLES, GRENADES AND LEWIS GUNS. INSTEAD OF TRYING TO HIDE THEIR GROUNDED PLANES THEY WILL POINT THEM AT THE ENEMY, TOO, AND OPEN UP WITH THE EIGHT MACHINEGUNS BUILT INTO THE WINGS.

Folo London Aerial
Berlin (from Germa roadcasts), April 4-(AP)-The German radio said today that violent air les had been fought over Belgium and the French coast when about a doze in-motored British bombers swept in under the protection of a st_rong ghter formation.
"German anti-aircr and fighter defenses went immediately into action and the enmy planes either were intercepted and engaged in violent air battles or taken under heavy anti-aircraft fire of heavy calibres," the German radio said.

"Within a short time the British formation was dispersed or diverted from its target. Some isolated bombs were dropped when however caused no damage.

APR 5 1942

"According to the report so far received 12 British planes were shot down and the remainder of the planes were forced back. German fighter planes of the Focke-Wulfe type were used in this action with great success. All German planes returned undamaged to their bases."

LONDON, APRIL 4-(AP)-THE VICHY RADIO, QUOTING GERMAN SOURCES, SAID TODAY THAT NAZI DIVEBOMBERS YESTERDAY ATTACKED SHIPPING IN KOLA BAY, ON WHICH THE RUSSIAN ARCTIC PORT OF MURMANSK IS SITUATED, SETTING A 2,000-TON VESSEL AFIRE.

New York, April 4-(AP)-A speaker at an All-Slav meeting in Moscow today said that five million persons had been killed by the Germans in Slav lands, the BBC reported.

The speaker urged Slavs in occupied territories to sabotage the German war effort and, if forced into the German army, to go over to the Russian army. He added the Red Army and the Slav people would deal a mortal blow against the Germans this year.

The broadcast was heard here by CBS.

Alertness Of Defending Flyers And Anti-Aircraft Batteries Foils Surprise Onslaught On Vital Naval Base And Harbor Installations

APR 6 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Colombo, Ceylon, April 5—Twenty-seven Japanese planes—and probably five more—crashed to destruction today from the fiery backlash of British aerial and anti-aircraft defense in Ceylon's first raid of the war.

Still another twenty-five enemy craft were damaged in the protective screen of steel which met the raiders on their early Sunday morning bombing flight, a communique said.

Fighters Shoot Down 25

Twenty-five of the Japanese aircraft were shot down by British fighter planes which roared into action at the first blast of the sirens, it was announced. The other two were downed by anti-aircraft gunners during low-flying machine-gun attacks.

In a broadcast tonight, Vice-Admiral Sir Geoffrey Layton, commander in chief of armed forces on Ceylon, said about seventy-five Japanese aircraft bombed the harbor area, Ratmalana railway and the airdrome.

He confirmed earlier suggestions that the planes operated from an aircraft carrier, adding that it was doubtful whether the damaged craft could have gotten back to their ship.

Half Of Dead Were Patients

He said half of the civilian dead were patients at a medical establishment.

The Ceylon commander called the losses inflicted on the Japanese by the RAF "a great piece of work" and extended congratulations on the flyers' success. He also praised the people's behavior which, he said, "set an example for courage and calmness second to none, rivaling that of the people of Great Britain."

"It was not a matter of luck that we got off so lightly," he said, "but entirely due to the manner in which we prepared ourselves."

[Military sources in London likened the Japanese surprise attack on Colombo to the Pearl Harbor raid, and said probably one hundred or more Japanese bombers had been concentrated in the assault as a prelude to an attempt to knock out the British naval base in Trincomalee Bay, on the eastern shore of the island.

[The ultimate objective of the Japanese appeared to be an effort to clear the Indian Ocean of its last remaining barrier to westward aggression toward India and the Ceylon-Calcutta Allied supply route since the occupation of the Andaman Islands, 850 miles to the northeast, on March 25.]

The Japanese opened their attack at 8 A. M. (10.30 P. M., Saturday, Eastern War Time) with dive-bombing and machine-gun raids aimed principally at Colombo's harbor district.

British Act Quickly

There was no immediate indication that either the Trincomalee base or the harbor at Galle Point had been bombed.

As the air-raid sirens sounded and the civilian population hastened to prepared shelters, British fighter planes took to the air to intercept the low-flying Japanese.

British reports said a few bombs were dropped in Colombo proper and caused damage to residences. Some civilian casualties were reported.

APR 6 1942

Heavy Toll Taken

But the terrific fire from air and ground slowed up the Japanese attack, at the same time taking heavy toll among the close-flying bomber squadrons surrounded by their escort fighters.

The raid found Colombo ready, after a series of alerts, the most recent of which was only yesterday.

For more than a month, British authorities have been preparing actively for such an attack. Fire lanes had been cut through the city of Colombo to prevent the spread of flames from incendiary bombs and many blocks of flimsy dwellings had been demolished.

Several new airdromes had been laid out on the island, 270 miles long and 140 miles wide. The docks had also been reinforced.

A complete civilian air-raid defense organization had been formed and shelters for the population constructed.

During this period, new troop reinforcements arrived on the island.

The breakwaters of Colombo, a city of 244,163 population, provide anchorage for ships of any size in any weather, and there are good harbors at Trincomalt and Point De Galle. Ceylon also has powerful radio transmitting stations which assumed greater importance to empire communications after the fall of Singapore.

JAPANESE TROOPS MASSING IN BURMA

British Shell Enemy Units on West Bank of Irrawaddy River.

NEW DELHI, April 5.—(AP)—Japanese troops and motor transport are massing on the west bank of the Irrawaddy river on the Burma front and British artillery units are shelling them effectively, the British Burma command announced today.

The enemy apparently is concentrating for an attempted renewal of his drive northward toward the rich Burmese oil fields.

The defenders on the Irrawaddy front, a communiqus said, "have been withdrawn successfully to prearranged positions," and are under heavy Japanese air attack, both by dive-bombing and machine-gunning.

Location of the new line was not indicated. The withdrawing British forces are those which evacuated Prome two days ago.

U. S. PLANES BLAST DOCKS AT RANGOON

Flying Fortresses Based in India Return Undamaged from Second Foray.

LONDON, Monday, April 6—(AP) American Fortress bombers, pouncing on the Japanese for the second time from newly-established bases in India, set huge fires to roaring in docks at Rangoon, Burma, last Friday night.

A communique from Major Gen. Lewis H. Brereton's headquarters at New Delhi said that three fires were started at Rangoon and that despite challenging Japanese fighters, all the attacking force returned safely to their base.

This night attack followed one during daylight hours on the same day in which the Americans, led by General Brereton himself, set fire to a Japanese cruiser and probably damaged two other ships at Port Blair, in the Andaman islands. A communique from General Brereton's headquarters published here today by The Daily Herald, said:

"Heavy bombardment planes of the American air force attacked docks in the Rangoon area the night of April 3.

"Three large fires were started. Fighter action was encountered. All personnel returned safely."

Allied Flyers Bag 18 More Planes On Australian Front

By VERN HAUGLAND

Associated Press Correspondent

United Nations Headquarters in Australia, April 5—American and Australian airmen, smashing devastating blows into Japanese bases on Australia's outer island defenses and decisively fending off enemy attacks on their own bases, were officially credited today with destroying at least eighteen Japanese planes and damaging twenty others in two days of fierce air battle.

In the exchange of blows, seven Japanese bombers, escorted by a fleet of fighters, attacked Darwin, on Australia's northwest coast, for the thirteenth time today.

Port Moresby Attacked

Seven other enemy bombers with fighter company delivered the twenty-second attack on Port Moresby, New Guinea outpost.

In turn, the Americans and Australians attacked Koepang in Dutch Timor, 500 miles northwest of Darwin, on Saturday, and twice struck surprise blows at Lae, on the northeast coast of New Guinea, 400 miles from the Australian mainland.

Both at Darwin and Port Moresby the enemy attack was described as weak and the damage small.

APR 6 1942

Saturday's Score

When the smoke and flame from this series of actions had blown away, the score stood as follows, according to Australian communiques and reports from the flyers:

Darwin (Saturday)—At least four, probably five, Japanese bombers shot down; at least two, probably three, Japanese fighters destroyed. A fourth fighter possibly destroyed. Two Allied planes shot down, with the pilot of one safe.

Lae (Saturday)—At least three Japanese bombers badly damaged when a lone Australian airman on reconnaissance machine-gunned the airport; in a second surprise attack the same day, Allied airmen left four bombers and a fighter burning. Unofficial reports from the flyers said ten other planes were damaged.

Koepang (Saturday)—At least six Japanese planes destroyed on the ground and six big fires started in a long-range, low-level assault which started from Darwin. Unofficial reports said at least four more planes were damaged by machine-gunning.

Port Moresby (Saturday)—One Zero fighter was shot down during a weak Japanese attack.

The climax of this furious exchange came Saturday afternoon when seven heavy, twin-motored Mitsubishi bombers with their fighter escort drove over Darwin and met with hornet-like defenders who fought a furious battle for fifteen minutes 18,000 feet up in the blue sky. This raiding party was practically annihilated.

The defending fighters got their opposing numbers in the enemy fighter formation and then the anti-aircraft guns opened up.

The first volley from a four-gun battery hit one of the bombers and as it spiraled earthward it exploded, simply disappearing from before the gunners' eyes.

The second burst hit two bombers, and one of them was seen trailing smoke into the sea. The other was flying low, too, and appeared about to crash.

2 Others Sent Crashing

The fighters then dived in from above and sent the fourth and fifth bombers crashing, and tore into the zero fighting again.

The remaining two bombers jettisoned twenty-five bombs, including some 500-pounders and some light anti-personnel explosives, killing a civilian and damaging several houses.

Said the commander of the battery:

"They'll probably come back for revenge, but we'll be ready for them. My boys are getting better with practice, and if the Japanese come within gunshot on a clear day they had better look out."

One of the crashed planes fell on West Point, across Darwin harbor, where it burned for hours.

Jap Victims Sought

Landing parties went in search of three Japanese seen floating down in parachutes and the navy started to look for two more reported afloat at sea.

Yet another Japanese airman's parachute was seen burning as he plummeted into the sea.

The search was made difficult by a heavy all-night rain, and today six dead Japanese flyers, whose bodies were found on the beach, were given burial. They were the only ones that could be found.

Each grave was fenced off, marked by a rough sapling cross, and a metal inscription which read: "Unknown Japanese airman shot down April 4, 1942."

One Allied Flyer Dies

The one Allied flyer was killed when he crashed and his plane burned. His companions said he was wounded and his plane badly damaged, but that he remained in the battle until the Japanese fled and that he probably lost consciousness just before landing.

The first of the two raids on Lae was made by a lone Australian reconnaissance flyer who flew across New Guinea Saturday morning and decided to do a little gunning—"it was too good to miss"—when he surprised the Japanese and found a number of bombers on the ground.

Putting his machine into a dive, he swept across the field, at less than 500 feet, with his machine-guns chattering, while Japanese mechanics and pilots ran in every direction. He zoomed into the clouds before he could fully observe the damage, but he said at least three of the planes were damaged.

APR 6 1942

Japs Again Surprised

The second raid was made a few hours later when low-flying planes again surprised the Japanese, setting fire to five more planes, damaging ten and scattering personnel by their low-level attack.

Port Moresby dispatches reported that the commanding officer, Maj. Gen. B. M. Morris, had charged every Australian officer and soldier with the task of killing at least two Japanese.

Addressing his forces Saturday, he said:

"The Australian soldier must have the killer spirit—the desire to go and find the enemy and kill him.

"Every man here must decide to kill two Japanese, whether they attack us or we attack them. If the man next to you misses, add his total to yourself. There is no reason at all why Australians should not be able to smash the Japanese and push them back home."

CHURCHMAN PRAYS FOR MACARTHUR

Rector of Parish in Which General Was Baptised Asks Blessing for Him.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 5—(AP) The congregation of Christ Episcopal church knelt today on the scene where General Douglas MacArthur was christened almost 62 years ago and asked divine guidance for the Allied commander.

Answering an Easter-eve request from MacArthur for supplication "at the altar where I first joined the sanctuary of God," Dr. W. P. Witsell, rector, implored with these words:

"And now, O God, do we especially remember before Thee, Thy servant, Douglas MacArthur, dedicated to Thee in holy baptism in the church of this parish. Grant unto him, O Lord, the living consciousness of Thy presence within him and about him.

"And we beseech Thee so to preserve him in his body, guide him in his mind, sustain him in his heart, and bless and strengthen him in his soul, that he may in all things serve Thee and our country wisely, faithfully and effectually."

The prayer, delivered at the close of the hour and a half service before a capacity attendance, was drawn from passages in the Episcopal prayer book.

The 67-year-old rector preceded the prayer with a reading of the two-line message which he received from MacArthur yesterday by cable:

"At the altar where I first joined the sanctuary of God, I ask that you seek divine guidance for me in the great struggle that looms ahead."

MacArthur's request came in answer to a cable which Dr. Witsell dispatched Thursday: "The church of your baptism sends Easter greeting and an expression of faith and loving pride in you."

MacArthur Continues War Work After Church

Australians Accept Holiday Reduction Cheerfully

UNITED STATES ARMY HEADQUARTERS IN AUSTRALIA, April 5 (AP).—General Douglas MacArthur and his staff devoted Easter morning to attending church services, but war-time conferences continued later today.

President Manuel Quezon of the Philippine Commonwealth, who recently arrived in Australia, made one of his few public appearances in the company of an American major. They lunched together at a hotel frequented by Americans.

Quezon was bundled to the ears in a heavy brown coat and muffler, which he kept on during his meal in the chilly dining room where the heat had not yet been turned on.

Australians, who are accustomed to four or five days off at Easter took the war-time holiday reduction cheerfully.

Planes For MacArthur

"Celestiating" The Pacific

APR 6 1942

By CLARK LEE

Associated Press Correspondent

Somewhere in Northern Australia, April 5—It was at Balbuena airport at Mexico City six years ago that I had last seen Charles Baughan, an airman who navigated then, as he said, "by guess and by God." Just the other night we met again, here at the same dinner table, and now he has learned to "celestiate" (navigate by the stars).

He is a captain in the RAF ferry command and has just flown a big ship across the Pacific for General MacArthur's forces to use in checking Japan's drive southward.

We did a lot of flying around Mexico in Charley's old crate, having to seek a landing field every few hours to tie a wing together or patch up the motor.

His old planes were bargains at a couple of thousand Mexican pesos. The one he just brought here—and it didn't fly alone—is one of the world's finest bombers.

Charley could always fly anything with wings, but he navigated, as airmen say, "by the seat of his pants," and I couldn't picture him covering the vast distances in the Pacific without getting lost.

"Well," he told me, "I figured the boys doing the fighting needed planes, so I checked up and found I would have to celestiate. So I got me a book and learned to celestiate, and I am real good now. But luck helped as much as celestiating on this trip."

Baughan, 40 years old, from Kingsport, Tenn., flew as copilot with Capt. Stanley Klusek, an American, with Radioman Al McMann, a Canadian, and Navigator H. C. Rowell, an Australian.

Near Oahu they hit a tropical storm extending to 8,000 feet.

"In the storm, we flew right over the island and missed it completely," Baughan said. "Finally we found a hole and got down but there was nothing but water and, believe me, there's lots of it between the United States and Australia. We were having a spot of trouble with the radio, otherwise we could have located ourselves okay.

Completely Lost

"I couldn't celestiate, as the clouds were almost down to the water, night was approaching and we didn't have enough gas to chance climbing back through the clouds. We were completely lost.

"I told myself: 'Charley, this is it. You've been through a lot of them before but here it is, finally.'

"I was dead sure the airplane was gone and I knew the chances of being picked up were the slimmest. I had already told Mac to open his rear escape hatch and get ready to get out fast.

APR 6 1942

"We had three tons of airplane to set down on the water at 120 miles an hour and she'd probably go down in a hurry. Then I got to thinking maybe this wasn't it and maybe there was some way to get out of it.

Got It Ticking

"I went back to where Mac was lying on his belly, sweating and working to repair the radio, and finally we got it ticking and got through to a certain station in the Hawaiian Islands.

"The station wouldn't give us a position because our signals were so weak they might have told us wrong. They instructed us to change our course, fly an hour and try to contact them again.

"In the meantime, day went, darkness came and the gas gauge clicked lower. After an hour we contacted them again and they advised us to fly another course one hour more when we would hit land—if the gas held out.

Navigator Sees Light

"Exactly an hour later the navigator shouted that he saw a light. We told him he was crazy, but he insisted. We went closer and sure enough there were the lights of a certain runway.

"I was at the control and banked the ship sharply to waste no time in sitting down. As we rolled to a standstill our engines coughed and quit. We did not have enough gasoline to taxi off the runway."

With Baughan here is Capt. Ted A. Smith, formerly Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's pilot. He kept popping up from his seat at our table to shake hands with a succession of good-looking American youngsters, obviously proud of the wings on their blouses. They had been his pupils at Calaero Field, outside Los Angeles.

Indian's Story

One of them was Lieut. Leo (Squaw) Alverson, a full-blooded Indian from Norman, Okla., with a scar over his eye. He recounted how he landed a wrecked fighter in Java and crashed between the trees with the entire plane wrecked except the cockpit.

Other well-known American pilots now ferrying the trans-pacific route include Speed Pilot Earl Ortman and Clyde Pangborn.

Post Script: After dinner Baughan flew to another city and a few hours later telephoned long distance and said he was in a hospital with a broken ankle. He had flown halfway around the world safely and then was injured in "wrongway traffic" in Australia, where automobiles and streetcars go down the left side of the street. He had been hit by a streetcar.

Nipponese War Equipment Spirited Away Or Destroyed In Hit-Run Sortie

[By the Associated Press]

New York, April 5—Australian sailors and airmen conducted a Commando-like raid on an unidentified Netherlands Indies port held by the Japanese recently, spirited away war equipment and destroyed other materiel, the Sydney radio said today.

The sortie probably was in western Java or southeastern Sumatra, "under the very noses of the Japanese," because the account told of the raiders returning through the Sunda Strait—the narrow water that separates the two overrun islands.

Equipment Evacuated

"Valuable equipment had been left on the wharf when the port was evacuated," the radio account, heard by CBS, said.

"The enemy was only a few miles off, but corvettes were sent at full speed to get the equipment away. They landed airmen armed with tommy guns and naval ratings watched the jungle paths.

Dump Destroyed

"While the equipment was loaded, gasoline was poured over trucks and cars and the munition dump was destroyed."

The corvettes picked up more than 200 survivors from a torpedoed merchant ship while returning home through Sunda Strait.

But Keeps Silent On Roosevelt Letter To Some Native Leader

Deals Over Dominion Plan Remain In Reconsideration Stage

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 5—A Reuters dispatch from New Delhi said today the "final outcome of the Cripps mission is expected to become known tomorrow evening or Tuesday morning."

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, April 5—The advent of Louis Johnson, special White House envoy to India, bearing a letter from President Roosevelt to some as yet unidentified Indian leader, has instilled a new sense of urgency into bargaining over independence for India.

Persons who have met the former Assistant Secretary of War since his arrival Friday at New Delhi speak of the impression produced of a determination to infuse a new sense of power and authority in Indian affairs.

Contents Not Disclosed

130.24 15797 30.24 15797

A Washington dispatch said the White House disclosed yesterday that the President's personal minister to India bore a letter to some Indian leader, but the contents were not disclosed.

There is no indication thus far that this letter has been delivered. Yesterday Johnson returned a call by Sir Stafford Cripps, special British emissary.

Johnson also met Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, British commander for India.

In Reconsideration Stage

Negotiations now are in the reconsideration stage following formal rejection of the British plan by the dominant All-India Congress party and indications of rejection by the Moslem League, representing India's largest minority.

[In a dispatch from Allahabad, Reuters said the Moslem League had authorized its leader, Mohammed Ali Jinnah, to take until the next league session any steps he deemed proper in furtherance of its objects, "provided such steps are consistent with principles and policies of the league."]

Cripps talked today with Madhad Shrihari Aney, a member representing Indians overseas in the Viceroy's Council, and Sir Reginald Maxwell and Sir Jeremy Raisman, home and finance members respectively, in the council.

Wavell, conferring yesterday with Congress leaders Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, president of the party, and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, past president, is supposed to have tried for a compromise on the main point at issue between the British and the Congress party—the question of how much responsibility Indians shall bear in the direction of defense.

Unfavorable Sign

One unfavorable sign was that the Congress party's working committee, having submitted its reply to the British, had devoted the last two days to discussion of domestic measures regarded as necessary in event of a complete breakdown of the negotiations.

Mohandas K. Gandhi, clinging more or less to a policy of public silence, had returned to Wardha after a thorough discussion of all proposals and alternatives.

In today's issue of his weekly newspaper Harijan, Gandhi wrote that "if I have any influence over her (India's) policies, foreigners will be welcomed provided their presence is beneficial to the country."

India Reported Talking Of Wavell As Viceroy

London, Monday, April 6 (AP)—The News Chronicle said today speculation has risen in India over the possibility that Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell would become viceroy to insure full control of all defense measures and with an Indian becoming defense member of the executive council.

Confirmation was lacking here, but the newspaper said "authoritative quarters emphasized that every reasonable proposal will be sympathetically considered."

JAPS SCORE 'SMALL' GAIN IN LAND STAB

APR 7 1942

Several Invasion Barges Sunk; Enemy Losses Believed Heavy

Defense Line Pounded By Shock Troops In All-Day Battle

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 5—A furious Japanese land-and-sea assault on the defenses of the Bataan peninsula was reported today by the War Department, which said the sea attack was repulsed with "probably heavy" enemy losses.

"Some small gains" were reported, however, for the Japanese "shock troops" in the right center of Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright's lines.

Fighting Rages All Day

The fighting raged all day yesterday, a communique said, and presumably was continuing. It was the fifth major assault by the invaders in less than two weeks and appeared to be the most intense thus far.

The sea attack was made on the eastern shore of the peninsula, from Manila Bay, which enemy warships may not enter because of the island fortifications at the entrance.

Barges were used and several were sunk by American-Filipino artillery before the rest turned back, the communique said.

Lull Over Corregidor

For the first time since March 24, the Corregidor fortress meantime was free from air attacks. Guns of the fort exchanged fire, however, with Japanese sea batteries on the bay's south shore.

The communique said:

"1. Philippine theater:

"Furious fighting raged along the right center of our line in Bataan all through April 4. The enemy launched a heavy infantry assault supported by an intense artillery concentration. Large numbers of shock troops were massed opposite our positions and succeeded in making some small gains. Heavy casualties are believed to have been inflicted on the enemy.

Landing Attempted

"A landing by hostile troops was attempted during the night on the eastern shore of Bataan. A considerable number of Japanese barges, mounting 75-millimeter guns and carrying troops, approached the coast.

"Guns on the barges shelled our beach defenses, but our artillery succeeding in sinking several barges and turning back the others. No landing was effected. Enemy losses were probably heavy.

"During the last twenty-four hours Corregidor was free from air attacks for the first time since March 24.

"The guns of our harbor defenses exchanged fire with enemy batteries on the south shore of Manila bay."

TANK FORCE OF JAPAN IS MINIMIZED

Nippon Called Weakest Of All Major Powers In Mechanization

Lacks Big, Organized Units, Says U. S. Cavalry Journal

APR 7 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 5—Japan was reported today in an authoritative military survey to be much the weakest in tank forces of all the major warring powers.

An analysis of Japanese mechanized strength by the semi-official Cavalry Journal says, "no formally organized large mechanized units (brigades or division) are known to exist in the Japanese army; however, improvised mechanized units have been used on the continent (against China) repeatedly with considerable success."

Other Tank Forces

By contrast, the United States Army already has eight armored divisions in service or process of organization, Britain is credited with comparable forces, and Nazi Germany and Russia are far stronger.

Moreover, lacking a well-developed automotive industry, Japan is believed unable to develop strong armored forces, a weakness which might be fatal in the event of a clash between the Japanese and Russians in Siberia.

In contrast to the smashing break-through tactics dramatized by the Nazis, the Japanese mostly employ their limited forces of tanks to support infantry attacks against the relatively weak opposition they have thus far encountered.

Rated Low As Weapons

By European and American standards, the Japanese tanks are rated low as weapons. The fifteen known types include a number that foreign armies have virtually discarded. Against the Chinese particularly, two-man tankettes of three tons, armed only with a light machine gun, have been used.

The Japanese medium tank, the Journal reported, weighs fourteen tons, about the same as the American light tank. Its armament may include a 47-millimeter gun, however, compared to the United States light tank's 37-millimeter.

Two models of so-called heavy tanks, each weighing about thirty-five tons and armed with either 75-millimeter or 37-millimeter weapons, were described as copies of Russian vehicles.

Independence Pledge To Orientals Advised

Washington, April 5 (AP)—The Foreign Policy Association said today that the "scorched-earth" method of impeding Japan's war effort can be effective only if the cooperation of the peoples of southeast Asia is secured by guarantee of the independence they seek.

In an analysis of Japan's economic resources, the association had this to say:

"It is some times suggested that the scorched-earth policy will prevent Japan from securing significant quantities of raw materials from southeast Asia, but it must be remembered that a scorched-earth policy can be truly effective only if the people of the territory wage guerrilla warfare following the initial destruction.

"Guerrilla warfare can be conducted successfully only by people who are deeply convinced that they are fighting for themselves.

"In southeast Asia such warfare would require a clear-cut pledge of independence to the inhabitants of areas already acquired, combined with important immediate concessions and future guarantees to populations still outside Japanese control."

JAP MAJOR WARNS OF 'PERIL' IN NORTH

APR 7 1942

BERLIN, April 5 (from German broadcasts) (A. P.).—Major Nakajima of Japanese Imperial Headquarters was quoted in dispatches from Tokio today as declaring that "from the standpoint of national defense, nothing would be more dangerous than concentrating all our energies in the south and neglecting the north."

"Despite our great successes in the south, the Japanese people must never forget that the centre of our national defense is situated in the Japanese-Manchurian-Chinese sector," he said in an article in the periodical Diamond.

"It is necessary to go on with our program in the south, but it is likewise necessary to strengthen the foundations of the Japanese-Manchurian-Chinese sector of defense."

ADMITS HIGH RED MORALE

TOKIO, April 5 (from Japanese broadcasts) (A. P.).—Lieutenant General Yoshitsugu Tatekawa, retiring Japanese ambassador to the Soviet Union, said today on his arrival at Manchouli, Manchukuo, that he believed Japan and Russia would adhere strictly to the Soviet-Japanese neutrality pact.

He added that the Soviets were continuing the war with Germany with "high morale" under the leadership of Josef Stalin.

JAPANESE AMBASSADOR IS ENROUTE TO MOSCOW

KUIBYSHEV, Russia, April 5.—(AP) The Japanese ambassador, Naotake Sato, left Kuibyshev for Moscow today to present his credentials to Michael Kalinin, president of the U. S. S. R.

Sato was accompanied by Goro Morishima, special Japanese minister to Russia, the embassy counsellor and naval and military attaches. He recently replaced Yoshitsugo Tatekawa who was recalled by Tokyo.

NAZIS LOSE 102 PLANES IN ONE DAY, REDS SAY

APR 7 1942

18 Reported Downed In Leningrad Raid; Moscow Front Flames Anew

40,000 Of Foe Killed There Since March 23, Russians Claim

[By the Associated Press]

Moscow, April 5—The Russian air force destroyed 102 German planes in aerial fighting over the front or on the ground yesterday, the midnight Russian communique said tonight.

Of the Nazi planes, eighteen were reported downed during a night raid on Leningrad. The besieged city's anti-aircraft batteries accounted for thirteen and Soviet night-fighter planes the other five, the communique said. Only a few of the raiders penetrated to the metropolis proper.

40,000 More Nazi Casualties

As further evidence of a resumption of large-scale warfare, the Soviet Information Bureau announced that on the Central front before Moscow 40,000 Germans were killed between March 23 and April 4 and 161 inhabited localities were reoccupied by the Russians.

Although the midnight communique kept to the secretive tone maintained for weeks and reported "no essential changes" on the front, other dispatches indicated a determined Russian offensive was developing west and southwest of Moscow.

Reds Drive Across River

Red Star reported that the Russian drive carried them across a river on the Smolensk sector, behind which the Germans had set up their line of resistance.

Other sources said Bryansk, 220 miles southwest of Moscow and 140 miles southeast of Smolensk, was now virtually besieged by Russian guerrillas. All inhabitants have been removed from the eastern outskirts of the city, and in some districts houses have been razed to give the German garrison wider fields of fire, the paper said.

[A dispatch to the London News Chronicle from Stockholm said Russian artillery has started to shell Bryansk.]

The Soviet Information Bureau also reported the capture of large quantities of German materiel on the Central front during the week ended Friday.

A Separate Front

The Soviet press has begun to refer to the Bryansk region as a separate front, indicating the importance of the Soviet advance in this direction. Russian dispatches tell of guerrilla activity within the city itself, and say the German commandant there has ordered the burning of a number of neighboring villages.

One report told of an incident in a Bryansk theater in which leaflets fluttered down from the balcony announcing the Red army was coming while the Germans were presenting a play to a small Russian audience. The play demonstrated what happens to Russian guerrillas.

90 New Red Divisions

The new activity on the central front came as the Ankara radio broadcast that the Russians had concentrated ninety new Soviet divisions on the southern front between Kharkov and Taganrog to meet an expected German drive there.

Rumanian and Italian troops were reported being massed beside the German divisions on this front in preparation for the drive. These reports said, however, that the German offensive could not start before May because of the long, severe winter.

Meanwhile, ceaseless Russian pressure was reported dissolving the long-trapped German Sixteenth Army at Staraya Russa.

Position Deteriorating

The Moscow radio said the surrounded German force was making "desperate attempts to counter-attack" but that its position was deteriorating daily.

The Soviet air force, a dispatch from the northwest front said, shot down twenty-four huge Junkers transport planes and twenty-one others seeking to take war material and supplies to their encircled comrades.

In a mechanized battle on the southwestern front, the Russians said officially they had destroyed fourteen German tanks.

Reports that Adolf Hitler was pouring new war material onto that front—possibly to initiate his much-talked-of spring offensive against the Caucausus—found credence in the Russian communique, which said "three tanks of the 1942 model were captured."

Fresh Troops Move Toward Soviet Front

LONDON, April 5 — (AP) Both Germany and Russia poured fresh divisions into the front lines tonight and the Ankara radio broadcast that the "Soviet troop movements indicate the first German drive is expected in south Russia."

Russian reports said some 90 new Soviet divisions, or some 1,350,000 men, had been concentrated in the 250 miles of defenses between Kharkov and Taganrog. The Soviet high command was reported marching up fresh troops to the more advanced sectors of the thawing and boggy front lines.

The Ankara radio said these troops completed their training during the winter on the banks of the Volga.

Expect Battle In South

Most experts have expected the first and main German thrust would be in the warmer Ukraine and Donets regions of the south and directed at the oil treasures of the Caucasus.

Other Russian dispatches quoted by the Ankara broadcast said "the German spring offensive cannot start before May or thereabouts."

"The unusually long and severe winter has retarded movements of troops to points of concentrations," the account added. "A shortage of rolling stock is another source of delay."

Rumanian troops are now being massed on the Russian frontier, other reports said, and a fresh Italian force consisting of infantry divisions and four armored divisions was reported on its way to the eastern front. Italian aircraft were said to be flying toward Russia in small formations.

"Fresh German armies are being brought toward the eastern front by the Hungarian and Polish railways," the Ankara radio added.

Soviet Transport Head Replaced By Army Man

Gen. Alexander Khrulev, Aide To Stalin, Named As Commissar For Railroads

Kuibyshev, April 5 (AP)—Lazarus M. Kaganovich, Soviet Commissar for Railroad Transport has been replaced by Lieut. Gen Alexander Khrulev, formerly chief quartermaster of the Red army and one of Premier Stalin's assistants in the Commissariat of Defense.

Kaganovich was named vice-chairman of the transport committee for coordination of railroad, sea and river transport and retained his positions as member of the State Defense Council and other Soviet bodies.

REPORT JEWS SLAIN

KUIBYSHEV, U.S.S.R., April 5—(AP) The Anti-Fascist Jewish committee reported today the Germans have killed 80,000 Jews in and around Minsk, 25,000 at Odessa and "tens of thousands" in Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia. In Estonia, the report said, the entire Jewish population numbering 4,500 was wiped out.

Says Bombs On Sweden Were Not From Russia

News Agency Terms Assertions Following Attack "A Malicious Fabrication"

Moscow, April 5 (AP)—Tass denied today that bombs dropped last Thursday on Haparanda, Swedish town on the Finnish border, were of Russian origin.

"Tass is authorized to state that these assertions are a malicious fabrication," the agency said.

An official Swedish communique issued yesterday said bomb fragments found near Haparanda after the attack "bore Russian markings."

PLANES OVER BULGARIA

SOFIA, Bulgaria (From German Broadcasts), April 5.—(AP) Hostile planes appeared over several Bulgarian towns late Saturday causing alarms to be sounded, the Bulgarian high command announced today. No bombs were reported dropped and the identity of the planes apparently was not established.

Convoys Get Through To Reds Despite Perils, British Told

Alexander Reports That Steady Stream Of Allied Supplies Has Defied Rigors Of Winter

[By the Associated Press]

APR 7 1942

London, April 5—All winter long, "convoy after convoy" has plowed through the icy waters of the Arctic with Allied war supplies for the Soviet Union, A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty, told a Cooperative party conference here today.

"Do let us remember that I have in the Admiralty thousands of men who are doing their best to help them (the Russians)," Alexander said, emphasizing that Russia's "epic struggle" is being backed with enormous British aid.

Says Much Is Being Done

"Right through the winter, convoy after convoy has been taken through the stormy, dark and ice-bound Arctic, with enemy attacks being fought off. Do not let us get it into our minds that we are doing nothing. We are doing a great deal."

Another speaker before the conference, Laborite Arthur Greenwood, who was dropped from the Cabinet as Minister without portfolio in the February 23 shakeup, assailed Prime Minister Churchill for lauding the Conservative party as "the main part of the rock on which salvation of Britain is founded."

"Churchill is not only the leader of the Conservative party," Greenwood said. "He is Prime Minister of a nation united in a great purpose. . . . To make major claims for his party in its share of victory—before victory is won—may shake the belief of our dominions, our Allies and neutral nations in our fundamental unity and give comfort to the enemy."

Won't Tolerate Losses

Alfred Barnes, member of Parliament and conference president, declared, "The British will not tolerate loss of India and Australia."

"If the Government cannot quickly satisfy Parliament and the people that the Japs can be met and defeated and that we can also play our part in an offensive against Germany either in Europe or in the Middle East," Barnes added, "then I doubt whether even this Government could survive public and parliamentary indignation."

HITS CLAIMED ON RED FLEET

2 Battleships And 2 Heavy Cruisers Bombed In Bases, Berlin Asserts

News Agency Says That Raid 'Should Have Sealed Fate' Of Sea Power

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, April 5—The Associated Press records the following Berlin broadcast:

"Hitler's high command said today that Nazi warplanes had bombed 'the remnants of the Soviet Baltic fleet' in the Russian bases of Leningrad and Kronstadt, hitting two battleships and two heavy cruisers with heavy-caliber explosives.

"The news agency DNB said the four vessels were the 23,256-ton battleship October Revolution, the 23,606-ton battleship Marat and the modern heavy cruisers Maxim Gorki and Kirov.

Says Fate Is Sealed

"DNB observed that 'this raid should have sealed the fate of the Soviet Baltic fleet'."

[Last September the Germans reported that both the October Revolution and the Marat had been hit then, and one authorized Berlin spokesman said it was his understanding that the former "already was out of the fight." In October "additional hits" were claimed on "the already damaged" October Revolution.]

APR 7 1942

"Army artillery was said to have supported the Luftwaffe effectively by shelling Russian anti-aircraft batteries. The Germans said a 'mining cruiser' also probably was damaged.

"The communique stressed the fighting in the northern area, where Stuka dive bombers and chaser planes were credited with effectively supporting land troops. The Germans said they inflicted appreciable losses in men and materials.

Claim 3,000 Killed

"On the Central front, between Smolensk and Moscow, the Germans said they annihilated 3,000 Red guerrillas and repulsed isolated Russsian attacks.

"The German communique made no mention of fighting in the Crimea which they have stressed recently, nor did it say anything of offensive operations.

"At the cost of one German plane, forty-seven Russian aircraft were said by the high command to have been destroyed. The Berlin radio said twenty-six planes were shot down.

Attacks On Supply Lines

"Continuing attacks on the supply lines leading from the United States and Britain to the ice-free Arctic port of Murmansk, the Germans said their planes had sunk a 1,200-ton merchant ship and damaged five others. Nazi planes guarding western Germany and anti-aircraft batteries were credited with shooting down fourteen British raiders, strongly protected by pursuit planes.

"The virtually non-stop attacks on the British fortress of Malta in the central Mediterranean continued, with German bombers concentrating on the Valletta port and military airdromes. A British cruiser in the docks was said to have been hit."

[The Italian communique said harbors and airdromes at Lavennezia, Halfar and Luca were "intensely attacked" in the Malta raids and that numerous grounded aircraft were destroyed, the account added.

[The Rome radio said that between March 25 and April 2 the Italians had destroyed thirty-seven British planes, sunk two British ships and damaged a cruiser, three destroyers, a submarine and three merchant ships.]

1,000th Raid Reported

"The Germans said a long-distance reconnaissance squadron operating from the Norwegian port of Narvik had conducted its one-thousandth raid. Most of its flights were against the British Isles and surrounding waters and aimed at keeping the high command informed on British fleet movements in Arctic waters.

"In North Africa, the high command said British patrols were repelled and airports and motorized columns in Marmarica were bombed effectively. The Germans added that, despite violent sandstorms, German and Italian detachments had made repeated attacks against British positions, inflicting heavy losses."

Nazi Tale of 'Lost' Ship Recalls Battle Mystery

By Associated Press

A GERMAN war reporter's story broadcast from Berlin yesterday said the formidably armed Nazi surface raider, Kormoran, which the German High Command once admitted had been lost in the Indian Ocean, was loose on a mission in the Atlantic in the company of other powerfully armored naval forces.

Describing a casual rendezvous of the Kormoran with German submarines, the war reporter, Fritz List, said "some time ago we were lying side by side with a German heavily armored giant"—phraseology which might be used to describe the 35,000-ton battleship Tirpitz or some of Adolf Hitler's other battleships, pocket battleships or heavy cruisers.

The 9400-ton Kormoran figured in one of the most tantalizingly mysterious episodes of the war last November when it fought a blazing duel with the gallant Australian cruiser Sydney in which each apparently was sunk by the broadsides of the other.

The war reporter's account of the Kormoran's activities in the Atlantic was given in the following broadcast:

APR 7 1942

"SOME time ago we were lying side by side with a German heavily armored giant which likewise had done most serious harm to British shipping. And now we met some submarine. The sea was rough but nevertheless we managed to get within hail.

"The submarine commander asked us to loan him a few torpedoes since he had already fired all his ammunition and did not not want to leave this good hunting ground.

"The rough sea, however, prevented this for the time being. Therefore, we sailed on for a long while, side by side waiting for better weather. All we could do now, although with great difficulty, was to supply the submarine comrades with fresh rolls.

"The next morning the sea was still very rough. We did them another good treat by inviting the duty-free men aboard our ship. This was gladly accepted. In a long rubber boat they came across. The use of our swimming bath was point No. 1 on their program. Point No. 2 was a shower bath and the use of soap, followed by an inspection of the auxiliary cruiser and by a big dinner.

"But soon the weather improved and we could replenish the empty ammunition chamber of the U-boat with our torpedoes. Our two crews were able to catch a big shark, but the submarine crew was unable to wait until our cook had sharkfin soup ready which we had to eat without our comrades."

A GERMAN auxiliary might well be ranging the Atlantic with the Tirpitz, sister-ship of the ill-fated Bismarck, as suggested by List.

The Tirpitz was last reported March 20 at Trondheim, a huge steel net spread over her anchorage against a high cliff so British bombers could not get at her. This was after her sally along the Norwegian coast March 9 in an effort to cut Russia's Arctic supply line when she was unsuccessfully attacked by British Torpedo planes.

Known to the British and Australians as the Steiermark and also as raider No. 41, the Kormoran had used yet other names, flags and disguises from time to time.

Said by British naval authorities to be armed with six 5.9-inch guns, equipped with two aircraft and torpedo tubes both on deck and under water, manned by a crew of about 400 and capable of 18 knots, she was the most successful German surface raider of the war.

She was admitted to have sunk at least nine ships totaling 51,479 tons near the Cape Verde Islands, in the Eastern Atlantic, South Atlantic, and the Indian Ocean, before supposedly being brought to book Nov. 19 by the Sydney 300 miles west of Australia.

SHIP LOSSES IN ATLANTIC LISTED

APR 7 1942

115 Allied Vessels Officially Reported Lost Since Pearl Harbor.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ship losses in the Atlantic officially announced in the week March 29 through April 5 totalled 21, bringing losses since Pearl Harbor to 115.

The tabulation:

	Week March 29 April 5	Since Pearl Harbor
Off the U.S.	10	59
Off Canada	2	23
In the Caribbean	6	29
Off South America	3	4
	21	115

Ten of the vessels sunk were United States ships, three were British, three Norwegian and the others one each Latvian, Panamanian, Canadian, Greek and a vessel identified only as "allied."

SHIP FLEES 4 SUBS, BUT 5TH SINKS HER

29 Survivors Reach New York, Tell Of U-Boat Attacks Off East Coast

APR 7 1942

Victims Picked Up After Battling High Seas For Fifty-Four Hours

[By the Associated Press]

New York, April 5—The shelling and sinking of their ship by one U-boat after it had outrun four others was described here by twenty-nine survivors of a medium-sized American freighter.

They arrived aboard a Pan-American Airways clipper from Bermuda Wednesday night, and the story of their experiences was released today by the Third Naval district.

30 Men In Lifeboat

One of the survivors, Erlo Pearson, 18-year-old oiler, of Galveston, Texas, said the freighter was sunk March 20 off the United States Eastern coast. Thirty men in a lifeboat spent fifty-four hours battling high seas before being picked up by a neutral ship and taken to Bermuda.

"Every time a sub would get near us the captain would order full speed ahead," Pearson said. "We got away four times, but this time we didn't make it."

Pearson declared the boat containing the captain and three other men had not been reported, and that two others of the cew of thirty-five had leaped over the ship's side and had been lost.

Smashed When Lowered

James Stickney, 32, oiler, of Maybrook, N. Y., said the side of the lifeboat holding twenty-nine crewmen and a passenger, Herbert Jernigan, was smashed while the boat was being lowered.

"We found pieces of wood and some tools in the boat," Stickney said. 'We salvaged timber from the sea and pulled nails from drifting planks, and fixed up our boat."

William Teffner, 27, an oiler, of Lansdowne, Md., declared that "some of the fellows in the boat didn't even have their pants. They just had life preservers and pajamas."

Treated In Bermuda

One of the thirty men in the life boat remained in a hospital at Bermuda for treatment.

The crewmen said they did not know Jernigan's home address, but that he had been working his way back to the United States from Calcutta, India.

Says British Attacked Four French Trawlers

Vichy Declares Two Are Presumed Lost After Raid On St. Nazaire

Vichy, April 5 (AP)—Four French trawlers, two of which are "presumed lost," were attacked by British gunboats after the raid on St. Nazaire dockyards March 28, French naval authorities said today.

APR 7 1942

The Alice Anne and the Slack are believed lost, a communique reported, while the Ile de France and Marie Gilbert were subjected to shelling without damage.

"Nothing can justify such acts of savagery which bereave, without the slightest military need, numerous French families of fishermen and maritime workers," the official French news agency commented.

NORWEGIAN FREIGHTERS REACH BRITISH PORTS

LONDON, April 5.—(AP) "Certain" of the 10 Norwegian ships which made a dash Thursday for England from Goteborg, Sweden, have arrived in British ports, the Ministry of Information disclosed today.

"Recent sailings from Goteborg to the United Kingdom of a number of Norwegian merchant ships under charter to His Majesty's government have now been completed," an official statement said.

"While complete success was not achieved, certain ships have arrived safely in this country."

37 BRITISH SEAMEN INJURED ON TWO SHIPS

LONDON, April 5.—(AP) The Admiralty announced tonight there were 37 casualties aboard the cruiser Trinidad and destroyer Eclipse which were damaged in a German sea and air attack upon a Murmansk-bound convoy in the Barents sea.

The casualties included 32 killed or died of wounds and five wounded. The British ships made port after the running fight in which one German destroyer was sunk, another damaged and three U-boats were sunk or damaged.

An announcement on March 29 which told of the damage to the two British warships said the attacking German forces were beaten off and that the convoy later reached its destination.

Narvik Raided By Commandos

NEW YORK, April 5 (A. P.).—A special dispatch to the New York Times tonight from Stockholm said British Commandos raided Narvik, northern Norwegian port, early today and inflicted many casualties and considerable damage to shipping in the German-held harbor.

The Stockholm dispatch quoted advices reaching the Swedish newspaper Aftontidningen. Details were lacking, but it said that according to one source the raid might have been carried out in conjunction with Russian Air Force bombers, which have been particularly active over the northern front for the past 24 hours.

The Times dispatch said Moscow reported bombers had been over Navvik Saturday night.

Nazis Reported Curious On 'Second Front' Plans

Grigg Says Allies' Secrets Are Well Kept

CARDIFF, England, April 5 (AP).—The British may be curious about possible creation of a "second front" in Europe, but their curiosity is "nothing to that of the German high command," Sir James Grigg, Secretary for War, said today.

Discussing the possibility of establishing a second front by invading territory now occupied by Germany, he declared:

"Democracy demands free discussion, but it does not demand public discussion of strategic plans in advance. Why tell the enemy everything?

"I know there is a great deal of curiosity in this country on the subject but I will wager their curiosity is nothing to that of the German high command. I am afraid both curiosities will have to remain unsatisfied for the time being."

BRITISH POUND FOE IN DESERT

Force Axis Column Out of Spot Near El Mechili

APR 7 1942

CAIRO, Egypt, April 5.—(AP)—Patrols skirmished in the Libyan desert yesterday and British bombers continued to pound the main Axis positions in the Tmimi-Martuba-Derna area, British communiques said today.

An Axis column with supporting tanks and guns was forced out of Bir El Hamarin, a desert spot 15 miles southwest of El Mechili. Whether this meant the army of Gen. Sir Claude Auchinleck was again in control of the key point south of the Gebel El Akdar mountains was not made clear.

The main armies have been drawn up some 60 miles apart for more than six weeks and both have been receiving reinforcements in men and material. The British are based near Tobruk. An offensive by either the British or Germans appeared likely at any time.

Harbor installations and shipping at Bengasi were pounded again by the British. Four German bombers were shot down over Malta yesterday.

Reports Heavy British Losses

BERLIN, (From German broadcasts), April 5 (AP).—The high command said today British patrols were repelled in the Libyan Desert and airports and motorized colums were bombed effectively.

Virtually non-stop attacks on the British fortress of Malta continued, with German bombers concentrating on Valletta and military airdromes. A British cruiser at dock was said to have been hit.

6 AXIS BOMBERS LOST IN ATTACKS ON MALTA

VALLETTA, Malta, April 5 — (AP) Six Axis bombers were destroyed, one Messerschmitt fighter was probably destroyed and six other planes were damaged seriously in raids on Malta in the last 24 hours, a communique announced tonight.

For the third successive day the harbor area was the main point of attack by waves of Junkers 88 bombers and Junkers 87 dive-bombers.

The first alarm was followed by three waves, and the Axis planes returned to the attack two hours later. The third, and largest, raid came after lunch and was ending just as the communique was issued. R. A. F. fighters bagged three JU-88s, ack-ack fire downed the others.

LONDON, April 5 (A. P.).—A German bomber was destroyed over the east coast of England tonight, it was learned.

BERLIN, April 5 (From German broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press)—The German Army bulletin today said that fourteen British bombers were shot out of a formation that attacked western occupied regions yesterday under the protection of a strong fighter squadron.

Prayers In Holy Land Rise In Many Tongues

Jerusalem, April 5 (AP)—Prayers for victory rose in many tongues today as the Holy Land celebrated Easter with its customary centuries-old ceremonies.

APR 7 1942

King George II of Greece participated in the Greek services along with hundreds of his soldiers.

Greek fighting men with strong, serious faces gathered in the tiny Catholic church in the old city of Jerusalem, singing the liturgy and lighting long white candles. The priest ended the Greek service with "Zito Hellas"—long live Greece—which the soldiers repeated.

Services Before Tomb

Patriarchs of the Armenian, Latin and Orthodox faiths held services in front of the tomb of the Holy Sepulchre. Armenians had a further impressive vespers in their church, with a great procession in the central courtyard of the convent.

The high point of the procession was the ceremony blessing the four corners of the earth.

Facing east, the patriarch prayed for the Armenian hierarchy. Turning westward, he prayed for the world and all Christian realms, following with prayer to the south for the fields and fruits of the earth and to the north for convents, hermitages, cities, villages and their inhabitants.

Broadcast By BBC

At St. George's Anglican Cathedral men and women in uniform assisted in the services which were broadcast to the world by the British Broadcasting Corporation.

One of the most colorful ceremonies was the divine service of the holy fire in the Holy Sepulchre, symbolizing the resurrection.

After reciting many chants the Armenian patriarch entered the tomb chamber and prayed while the crowd waited in hushed silence. Then he reappeared on his balcony holding out the torch of the holy fire and the great bells in the tower pealed.

APR 7 1942

Runners Carry Flame

In the church, light traveled from candle to candle amid cries of joy. Then the flame was borne to the waiting crowd outside, from where runners sped with it to homes and churches as far away as Bethlehem.

The Greek King witnessed this ceremony and he also led the Maundy Thursday procession when the Greek Orthodox patriarch entered the garden of the Orthodox Convent of Jerusalem to celebrate high mass and the ceremony of the washing of the feet.

Most Britons Give Up Long Easter Holiday

LONDON, April 5 (A. P.).—Britons for the most part gave up this year one of their most cherished holidays—the long Easter week-end which in peace-time many stretched to a five-day rest period.

At the suggestion of Labor Minister Ernest Bevin that war workers could get along with just one extra holiday, some factories gave Saturday off, but everything is due to be running full blast tomorrow.

U.S. AND BRITISH TROOPS ESCAPE BELFAST BOMBS

Time Explosives Go Off After Men Leave

Theatre: Police and I.R.A. in Gun Battle

APR 7 1942

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, April 5 (A. P.).—The harmless explosion of three incendiary time bombs and discovery of others hidden like Easter eggs in a movie theatre used by United States and British troops, and a subsequent running gun battle between police and an armed band shattered Belfast's Easter quiet.

There was no ostensible connection between the two incidents save that 26 Easters ago Irish Republicans started their so-called Easter Rebellion against the British.

FOLLOWS ARRESTS

The outbreaks followed a recent series of arrests among alleged members of the Irish Republican Army in Northern Ireland. Hundreds of extra police had been turned out here today in anticipation of just such incidents to commemorate the 1916 Dublin Rebellion.

Examination of four unexploded bombs found in the theatre showed them to be incendiaries similar, officials said, to one type used by the Germans.

After a thorough search of the place a special guard was posted until tonight, when 1500 troops and members of women's auxiliary services attended a concert.

The timed incendiaries started exploding shortly after midnight and after the theatre had been emptied of its Saturday night audience of soldiers; the gun battle came in broad daylight when gunmen, hidden in an air raid shelter, blazed away at a police patrol car containing four men.

ONE POLICEMAN KILLED

The gunmen fled to a nearby house with the policemen in hot pursuit. One policeman was killed and a member of the armed band was seriously wounded. Five other men and two women were arrested.

(The British Press Association said the gunmen were members of the outlawed Irish Republican Army.)

The area of this Northern Ireland capital where the battle was fought is known as a centre of Irish Nationalist sympathizers. Northern Ireland is part of the United Kingdom and the Irish Republican Army is violently in favor of its union with neighboring Eire.

THEATRE REQUISITIONED

The movie theatre had been requisitioned for a series of shows for the American and British troops in Northern Ireland. The first show was last night.

The first explosion caused a fire which damaged a few seats before it was extinguished.

The second explosion came shortly afterward and the third followed two hours later when police were searching the theatre.

No one was injured in any one of the three explosions.

OTHER BOMBS FOUND

Additional bombs planted inside the movie house were found by police searchers.

Although several parts of the theatre were damaged, the Sunday show for the troops went on as scheduled.

War Communiques

American

WASHINGTON, April 5 (AP).—War Department communique No. 176, based on reports up to noon:

APR 7 1942

1. Philippine theater:

Furious fighting raged along the right center of our line in Bataan all through April 4. The enemy launched a heavy infantry assault supported by an intense artillery concentration. Large numbers of shock troops were massed opposite our positions and succeeded in making some small gains. Heavy casualties are believed to have been inflicted on the enemy.

A landing by hostile troops was attempted during the night on the eastern shore of Bataan. A considerable number of Japanese barges mounting 75 millimeter guns and carrying troops, approached the coast. Guns on the barges shelled our beach defenses, but our artillery succeeding in sinking several barges and turning back the others. No landing was effected. Enemy losses were probably heavy.

During the last twenty-four hours Corregidor was free from air attacks for the first time since March 24.

The guns of our harbor defenses exchanged fire with enemy batteries on the south shore of Manila Bay.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

British

COLOMBO, Ceylon, April 5 (AP).—A British headquarters communique:

Colombo was attacked by a large force of Japanese aircraft at 8 a. m., local time.

Dive-bombing and low-flying machine-gun attacks were made on the harbor and Ratmalana areas.

British fighters intercepted the raiders and destroyed a number of aircraft.

A later communique:

Twenty-five enemy aircraft were shot down for certain by our fighters, while five more were probably shot down and twenty-five more damaged.

Light anti-aircraft fire accounted for two more in a low flying attack. Our losses were slight.

NEW DELHI, India, April 5 (AP).—A British communique on Burma:

There has been no substantial change in the situation on the Irrawaddy front since yesterday. Our forces have been withdrawn successfully to prearranged positions.

Enemy air activity was heavy throughout the day. Our troops were subjected to dive-bombing and machine-gunning.

From reports, it appears that the enemy is concentrating troops and motor transport on the west bank of the Irrawaddy. Our artillery was active in this direction, and enemy troops on the west bank were effectively shelled.

CAIRO, April 5 (AP).—A British headquarters communique:

Fighting patrol activity continued yesterday in Libya. An enemy column, including tanks and guns, was forced to withdraw from Bir el Hamarin, about fifteen miles southwest of Mechili.

A Royal Air Force communique:

Bomber aircraft of the Middle East command raided the harbor installations and shipping at Bengasi during the night of April 3.

Further attacks were made on enemy positions in the Tmimi-Martuba-Derna area. During enemy raids on Malta April 4, three Junkers 87's and one Junkers 88 were shot down by anti-aircraft fire.

It is now known that a second enemy aircraft, a Junkers 87, was shot down by anti-aircraft gunfire during the raid on Malta April 3. One of our aircraft is missing.

LONDON, April 5 (AP).—An Air and Home Security Ministries communique:

This morning a few enemy aircraft made a brief appearance over a town on the south coast of England.

Bombs which were dropped caused only slight damage, and no one was hurt.

Apart from this, up to 8 p. m. there has been nothing to report.

Australian

MELBOURNE, Australia, April 5 (AP).—An Australian communique:

In various engagements on Saturday, the Royal Australian Air Force destroyed eighteen enemy aircraft and damaged at least ten. Two of our own planes were lost, but one pilot is safe.

At Lae, four enemy bombers and one fighter were left burning, and ten others were damaged.

At Koepang, six Japanese aircraft were destroyed on the ground.

At Darwin, the enemy probably lost four of seven raiding bombers and two fighters.

One Zero fighter was shot down over Port Moresby. The damage caused at Darwin and Moresby is very slight.

Another Australian communique:

Darwin experienced its thirteenth raid Sunday. Seven bombers with fighter escort came over soon after noon. The raid was light and of short duration. Damage was negligible, and there were no casualties reported.

A supplementary communique:

Port Moresby was raided for the twenty-second time this morning by seven Japanese bombers escorted by fighters. The material damage was small. One Japanese Zero fighter was shot down. We lost no aircraft.

Russian

APR 7 1942

MOSCOW, April 5 (AP).—A Soviet Information Bureau special communique:

During the period of March 24 to April 3, Soviet troops operating on the central front captured 28 tanks, 122 guns, 69 mortars and 541 machine guns.

Soviet troops on this front also captured 334 automatic rifles, 3,234 rifles, 12,968 shells, 10,020 mines of various kinds, 8,132 hand grenades, 1,200,000 rounds of ammunition, nine wireless transmitters, 60 miles of telephone cable, 163 vehicles, 54 wagons, three locomotives, 220 trucks and 350 parachutes.

During this period the enemy lost about 40,000 officers and men killed.

One hundred and sixty-one inhabited localities have been freed of the enemy by forces of the western front.

An earlier Soviet Information Bureau communique:

During the night of April 4-5, there were no substantial change at the front.

In a tank battle on the southwestern front, fourteen German tanks were destroyed and three tanks of the 1942 model were captured by Soviet troops.

A Soviet rifle detachment was ordered to penetrate behind a German punitive detachment in one of the areas of the Smolensk region.

The Red Army men concerned carried out the order with exceptional ability, the German punitive detachment being surrounded and annihilated. The Germans lost more than 200 officers and men killed.

Our gunners operating in one sector of the western front destroyed eleven German guns, blew up a fuel dump and provision store and silenced two artillery points and three mortar batteries.

German

APR 7 1942

BERLIN (From German broadcasts), April 5 (AP).—A German high command communique:

In the southern and central sectors of the Eastern Front, isolated attacks of the enemy were repulsed. In the course of mopping-up operations in the rear of the central sector, a group of 3,000 partisans (guerrillas) was annihilated.

Strong squadrons of fighter, dive-bomber and chaser airplanes effectively supported the fighting troops in the northern sector. The Soviets suffered appreciable losses in men and material. In air fights and by anti-aircraft fire, forty-seven enemy airplanes were destroyed, while we had one machine lost.

Units of the same air force attacked remnants of the Soviet Baltic fleet in the ports of Leningrad and Kronstadt. Two battleships and two heavy cruisers were hit by bombs of the heaviest and heavy caliber. It is probable that one mining cruiser was damaged.

Heaviest artillery of the army supported the attacks of our air force by shelling the enemy's anti-aircraft batteries.

In the region of Rybachi Peninsula and off the Murmansk coast, fighter airplanes have sunk by bombs a merchant ship of 1,200 tons and seriously damaged five more ships.

In North Africa, attacks by British reconnaissance forces were repelled. Airports and motor car columns in Mamarica were bombed with good effect. Attacks an military objectives and port establishments of Valetta, as well as British airports of Malta, were continued day and night with strong effect. A British cruiser in the docks was hit by bombs.

On the English southwest coast, German fighter airplanes bombed workshops of the British airplane industry. Of a British bomber squadron which, on Saturday afternoon, under the strong protection of pursuit airplanes, tried to fly into the occupied western region, fourteen machines were shot down by German pursuit airmen and anti-aircraft artillery without losses of our own.

The pursuit squadron under Major Trautloft obtained its 2,000th air victory yesterday.

Finnish

HELSINKI, April 5 (AP).—A Finnish high command communique:

Fighting activity in all sectors of the land front was comparatively insignificant. Our guns and trench mortars have kept up successful fire, shelling enemy positions and encampments. Direct hits have been scored on a great number of enemy firing posts and dugouts, causing their destruction. Buildings used as billets have been set on fire.

Heavy losses were inflicted on the enemy when his attempts at reconnaissance were frustrated, and his activity in shifting and reorganizing his positions was disturbed by our concentrated fire.

Our air force has heavily and successfully bombed an enemy air base near the Murmansk railway, scoring damaging hits on rows of parked planes and buildings.

In the Gulf of Finland, our airmen continued machine-gunning camps and columns.

East of Lake Onega, our fighters set fire to an enemy bomber on the ground. As enemy air activity over the Gulf of Finland was extended to within the near proximity of our coasts, alerts were sounded in several places last night.

Italian

ROME (From Italian broadcasts), April 5 (AP).—An Italian high command communique:

There was artillery and patrol activity on the Cyrenaican front. The enemy carried out air raids on Bengasi and Derna, but no objectives of military importance were hit. There were some wounded among the native population.

An enemy aircraft was shot down by anti-aircraft artillery over Bengasi. Three other planes were brought down by German fighter planes in air combats.

A strong German bomber formation carried out violent day and night raids over Malta. Harbor installations and airdromes at Lavennezia, Halfar and Luca were intensely attacked, and numerous aircraft on the ground were damaged. Many artillery and searchlight positions were destroyed.

500 Refugees Reach Bermuda From France

Hamilton, Bermuda, April 5 (AP)

A small Portuguese passenger freight vessel, the 2,600-ton Guine, crammed with 500 refugees from various parts of occupied Europe, has arrived here after a round about trip from France which took about a month.

Most of the refugees had escaped from concentration camps for Jews established by the Germans. There were many French Jews who said "life is a terrific hell" in most of France. One man who had been very wealthy said Jews who paid "fabulous sums" to the Germans were permitted to stay at boarding houses or hotels in occupied France.

The Guine sailed from Marseille, going to Lisbon, Cadiz and Casablanca, and is scheduled to proceed to Cuba before sailing to an undisclosed United States port.

HITLER EXTENDING SLAVE LABOR PLAN, SAYS U. S. REPORT

APR 7 1942

Farm Workers Recruited In Subjugated Europe Taken to Germany.

WASHINGTON, April 5—(AP)—Hitler is hastening to extend his "system of slave labor throughout subjugated Europe," the Office of Facts and Figures said today.

"Nazi propagandists," the OFF said, "are boasting of the pace attained in putting millions of free men and women under the yoke of labor in the Reich."

The office based its conclusions on foreign broadcasts picked up by the listening posts of the Federal Communications Commission.

"A Berlin broadcast boasted recently that Germany will increase the number of foreign workers in the Reich to more than 4,000,000," OFF said.

Goering Explains Need

Field Marshal Goering told German farmers that "the crushing need, the pressing need, for necessary labor forces for agriculture will be met by the application of usuable auxiliary laborers from occupied eastern territories, and by the use of foreigners and prisoners of war."

The Berlin radio, the OFF said, reported that "four special trains leave France weekly with French volunteers to Germany" and that 150,000 such workers now were in Germany.

"This," the OFF quoted Berlin as saying, "is another proof of the fact that France is taking an active part in the construction of the new Europe."

Italy to Increase Number

Mussolini—the OFF said he was "once the bellicose, but now the pliant, partner of Hitler"—is sending manpower, as well as food to Germany. In 1941, according to a Berlin broadcast, Italy sent 300,000 workers to Germany, 8 per cent of them women, and Berlin predicted the number would be increased to 400,000 soon.

The German-controlled Polish radio reported 1,100,000 Poles were working in Germany, including prisoners of war. Two hundred and fifty thousand Polish women are in Germany and Latvia, "liberated" from Russia, is sending girls from 16 to 25 years old to work as farm and industrial hands in northern Germany, the OFF said.

"The German labor front will care for the girls by controlling their working conditions and organizing their leisure time," the Berlin radio said of the Latvian girls.

The office said Belgium had 250,000 in Germany in February, with other Belgians going to France for farm work and Holland had supplied 200,000. Lithuanians and Esthonians also were reported working in the Reich, but their numbers were not given.

"Immigrants from Poland and the Balkans who came to France before the war are being conscripted by the Nazis for labor in Germany," OFF said. "The clandestine 'European revolution' station said that Russian peasants are being shipped by the thousands to Germany in freight cars."

LABOR CAUTIONED BY FIRST LADY TO GUARD INDUSTRY

APR 7 1942

U. S. System of Enterprise Must be Preserved, Says Mrs. Roosevelt.

NEW YORK, April 5—(AP) Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt tonight urged retention of "the machinery by which labor can bargain with the employer," declaring that "there are abuses in organized labor which msut be changed, but changes can only be made in an organization which exists so we must be careful not to destroy it."

Making her final broadcast of a sponsored series, the first lady said:

Will Match Army's Sacrifice

"I am sure that labor and management as a whole are ready to match sacrifices of youth in the armed forces, by working such hours as will give us the greatest production, by limiting pay when the cost of living is stabilized, and when profits are controlled.

"These things must be done, but neither the men in the armed forces nor the men and women here at home must forget that the machinery by which labor can bargain with the employer was won by the combined efforts of men of good will in both labor and management, but the sacrifices and the main fight have been made by unionized labor.

"This fight has benefitted labor as a whole, because unorganized labor is better paid when organized labor obtains better pay and more desirable working conditions. It will mean more security in peace-time occupations to those who return from the war as well as those who have worked to the limit of their ability during the war, if this machinery is not destroyed under the guise of a false patriotism which insists that production depends upon giving up not just limitations on hours and wages, but the destruction of the machinery by which agreements are made between labor and management."

Must Look to Future

The President's wife added that unless U. S. soldiers "come back to a country where they feel that their interests have been safeguarded and that they have full opportunity to build their normal lives, we must face the probability that we will have a dangerous group in our midst."

Counseling the nation to look ahead, Mrs. Roosevelt said the people should see "that we adjust our economic system so that opportunity is open to them according to their abilities along the lines which they wish to develop on their return."

The first lady's broadcasts were sponsored by the Pan-American Coffee bureau, representing interests in Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Mexico and Venezuela. She made no announcement of future plans other than to remark: "I am sure that every now and then I shall have the opportunity to renew contacts both over the air and in person with friends throughout the country."

SHIPWORKERS IDLE AFTER CUT IN PAY

Trouble Stops Production in Two Canadian Yards—3,800 Men Involved.

QUEBEC, April 5 — (Canadian Press) Two shipbuilding companies halted work in their yards yesterday, making approximately 3,800 workers idle, when workmen complained against enforcement of a new wage scale.

Three dominion labor conciliators are scheduled to confer with union leaders and company officials tomorrow.

About 3,000 employes of the Davie Shipbuilding Co., and 800 of the Morton Engineering Co., were involved in the dispute. Workers said some pay checks were decreased as much as seven cents an hour while others were increased as much as 21 cents an hour.

The workers said they made their complaint when a telegram from the dominion department of labor told them the new wage scale should contain no wage reductions. The telegram, they claimed, also said the yards should remain open pending settlement of the matter. The workers said the companies decided nevertheless to close down temporarily.

British Air Official Arrives On Clipper

Marshal MacNeece Foster To Be Deputy Head Of RAF Delegation In Washington.

New York, April 5 (AP)—Air Vice-Marshal William Foster MacNeece Foster, of Great Britain, arrived today by clipper to assume his duties in Washington as deputy head of the Royal Air Force delegation there.

Formerly the British air delegate to the League of Nations, Marshal MacNeece Foster declined to comment on the war. He was greeted by his wife and two daughters, who have been living at Stamford, Conn., the past twenty months.

Included among the eleven European passengers aboard the clipper were three other British officials: R. C. Geddes, of the Ministry of Transportation; R. D. Hall, of the Ministry of Supplies, and Paul D. Butler, of the British Foreign Office.

PLASTIC AIRPLANE DELIVERED TO NAVY

APR 7 1942

First of New Type Training Craft to Undergo Tests at Washington

WASHINGTON, April 5. — (AP) Delivery of the first experimental plastic-plywood training plane ordered by the Navy was announced today.

A low-wing monoplane, 90 per cent wood and plastic glue, the plane will undergo tests at the naval air station here. If the experimental model is satisfactory, it may be one of several types to be put into mass production to provide training ships for naval air cadets. The test plane was built by the Timm Aircraft corporation, Los Angeles.

British, Italians and Russians are reported to be using some planes of wooden construction, the Navy said. Beginning about 1930, most American military and commercial planes were constructed of metal.

Advocates of plastic-plywood construction contend that it is stronger than steel, and claim a number of other advantages for the materials.

PELLEY IN JAIL, UNABLE TO RAISE BOND IN INDIANA

Friend of Silver Shirt Leader Appears But Second Bondsman Is Required.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 5 (AP)—William Dudley Pelley gray-goateed leader of the Silver Shirts and publisher of anti-Semitic magazines, was placed in the Marion county jail here tonight on charges of sedition in connection with articles that appeared in his publication.

U.S. Marshal Julius Wichseh of the southern Indiana district took custody of Pelley late today from Bernard Fitch, marshall who brought the prisoner from New Haven, Conn.

Unable to Arrange Bond

Pelley was unable to make satisfactory arrangements for bond and must remain in jail at least overnight.

Waiting from him in the marshal's office before Wichser took him to jail were Mr. and Mrs. Lee Finehout of Indianapolis, who said they were long time friends of Pelley. Mrs. Finehout signed the bond for Pelley and the Silver Shirt leader was allowed to remain in the marshal's office while Finehout attempted to locate another bondsman as required in this Federal district. He was not sucessful tonight.

Pelley's bond is $15,000 and where a U. S. commissioner is not present regulations here provide there must be two bondsmen each having unencumbered property equal to twice the bond.

Arrested in Darien

Pelley was arested yesterday at Darien, Conn., and charged under the 1917 espionage act with distributing false statements intended to harm the United States and "Promote the success of our enemies."

"The Galilean", has been printed at Noblesville, Ind., and Pelley gave his home address to Wichser as 155 Pleasant St., Noblesville.

"I don't know a thing about this," Pelley said as he sat chain-smoking cigarets in the marshal's office. "There hasn't been a damn thing that Boake Carter, 'Iron Pants' Johnson, father Coughlin and many others haven't also said."

He asserted he would plead innocent to the charges if indicted. He said he had been unable as yet to locate George Henry, his attorney here.

U.S. District Attorney B. Howard Caughran who prepared the complaint and the affidavit, and Judge Robert C. Baltzell both were out of the city today and there was no indication whether a special grand jury would be summoned to consider the case or whether it would await the regular session in June.

MEXICO NAMES MINISTER

MEXICO CITY, April 5 (AP)—Ramon Beteta, assistant Mexican minister of finance now in Washington on a special mission with Foreign Minister Ezequiel Padilla, was named minister to Washington today. The move indicates the closer economic ties between Mexico and the United States.

Beteta, one of Mexico's leading economists, will handle all economic affairs between the two countries, leaving ambassador Francisco Castillo Najera free for the general supervision of relations.

What's Behind The War News

By EDWARD E. BOMAR
(Wide World War Analyst)

Army day emphasizes that the Yanks are coming again.

They have come far already. With probably two million or more men under arms in the ground and air forces, they have doubled their strength of last Army day. It is easy to forget that a year earlier, on the eve of the battle of France, there were fewer than half that many in uniform.

By next Army day, the process of doubling and redoubling calls for four millions or more, an Army larger than Japan's and including an air force calculated to challenge Germany's.

From Lieutenant General Leslie J. McNair, chief of the ground forces, comes a timely assurance that "the troops going overseas are better led and trained than in 1917, and the new units coming along behind them will be better and better."

If any testimony is needed as to their valor and fighting qualities it is provided eloquently by the battle of Bataan.

Further reassurance is provided by Donald Nelson's report of the progress made since Pearl Harbor in speeding the production of guns, planes and tanks.

Altogether, as the troops parade a feeling of guarded confidence is justified as well as a surge of pride over the manner in which the country is reaching its fighting stride.

Every day makes it more obvious, nevertheless, that further severe tests are ahead for the Army and the United Nations before American might can make itself fully felt.

Laborious as is the process of building a war machine, the Army is being trained and equipped faster than it can be transported to foreign fighting fronts by transports and supply vessels harassed by U-boats.

U. S. Army Dispersed

A glaring contrast with the conflict which the United States entered a quarter of a century ago is the present necessity for dispersing American armed strength among a score or more Atlantic and Pacific outposts. This time no single, great expeditionary force will suffice.

Too, the army that appears impressive in the day's parades is still an army in the making. Almost all its trained divisions are being obliged to surrender groups of officers and men to serve as the nuclei for other divisions.

For the time being, the American contribution to victory promises to continue to be chiefly at sea, in the air, and in arming the Allies. The doughboys may have to await another Army day for their full opportunity.

Gains Against U. S. Defenses Costly to Foe

Wave After Wave of Assault Troops Hurled at Gen. Wainwright's Men.

DRIVE SUPPORTED BY ARTILLERY, PLANES

American Anti-aircraft Gunners Down One Dive Bomber.

APR 7 1942

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP)—The Japanese hurled wave upon wave of assault troops at Lieutenant General Jonathan Wainwright's American-Filipino forces today, and gained ground in the third day of fierce fighting on the Bataan Peninsula.

A late day communique from the War Department said the attacks were supported by heavy artillery fire and dive bombers, and, for the second time in three days, reported that "the enemy made some gains," although paying heavily in casualties. Anti-aircraft gunners shot down one of the dive bombers, the second they have bagged in two days.

Artillery Fires From Barges

On the east coast of the peninsula, where the Japanese have been repulsed twice in the last 72 hours in attempts to land troops for a flank attack, enemy artillery harassed the defenses, firing from barges in Manila Bay. Most of the shells fell short of their targets, the communique said.

The action reported today was the seventh massed drive against the Bataan defenses in less than two weeks. Since Saturday the hammering at the right center of Wainwright's line has been almost continuous.

There was no mention in department communiques today of the extent of casualties among the defending forces in the savage fighting of the last three days, but it was believed likely that they have been much lighter than the Japanese losses.

Landing Attempt Broken Up

A morning communique, covering the fighting of yesterday, had reported the Japanese unable to gain and related the frustration of the second attempt to land troops from barges on the peninsula shore.

Light artillery fire from the beach defenses broke up the landing attempt, a department communique said, and the Japanese, despite the tremendous power of the attack on the Bataan line, were unable in several hours of savage fighting to extend the slight gains they had made in a similar attack the day before.

The anti-aircraft fire of the defending American-Filipino forces knocked down one of the attacking dive bombers.

The repeated heavy Japanese drives at the American-Filipino line were taken by observers in Washington as meaning that Lieutenant General Tomoyuki, the Japanese commander, was determined to force his way through the line at that point, regardless of the cost in men and equipment.

This grim view of the situation was accompanied by predictions that, if Yamashita was willing to disregard casualties, he probably would be able eventually to crush the stout opposition and force a general withdrawal by the defenders to new positions farther down the Peninsula, possibly even to a last-ditch stand at Corregidor. Wainwright's line now extends across Bataan from a point above Abucay on the Manila Bay shore, southwestward to the China Sea, with about half the peninsula in the possession of the defenders.

Corregidor Gets Respite

Corregidor itself was free of aerial bombardment for the second successive day, but the smaller forts of Frank and Drum, near the Cavite shore of Manila Bay, were subjected to light attack by enemy dive bombers which inflicted neither casualties nor damage.

Confirmation of previous reports from New Delhi that American bombers had carried out a successful attack on Japanese shipping in the Bay of Bengal also was contained in the communique.

A formation of heavy bombers led by Major General Lewis H. Brereton, commanding the American Army Air Forces in India, scored direct hits on an enemy cruiser and a transport at the Andaman Islands April 2, the department said. Both were left in flames, and heavy explosions were seen.

Americans And Filipinos Kneel In Easter Services Under Fire

Chaplains Conduct Rites For As Many Of Troops As Possible, Although Attacks Do Not Let Up

APR 6 1942

By DEAN SCHEDLER
Associated Press Correspondent

With the United States forces at Corregidor, April 5 (Delayed). This is Easter Sunday in the Philippines.

War has trampled roughshod over this glorious day but Filipinos and Americans are to be found kneeling side by side, their hearts turned toward God amid the roar of high-flying bombers and the screaming of artillery shells.

Therein, one of the paramount purposes for which the United Nations are fighting—freedom of religion—is personified in army observance of the occasion.

Services Thoughout Day

Throughout the day's pounding by the enemy—for he never lets up for a moment—army chaplains of Catholic or Protestant faith have been conducting brief services, trying to reach as many men as possible. Under the tall, friendly trees the men huddled, always ready to duck into a fox hole at the whine of an approaching shell, the chatter of machine-gun fire or the roar of an enemy bomber.

For several days the enemy has been making hard sharp thrusts at our lines, with heavy artillery pounding our positions into the night as he endeavored to advance during the moonlight period. In the heavens his bombers have been active, harassed from the ground fire thrown up by our accurate gunners.

Last evening—Easter eve—the fighting was particularly heavy. Bombers hovered over the outer edge of Corregidor, ever careful of anti-aircraft fire that has brought so many of them down. Late in the evening another of them felt the sting of our gunnery and crashed into the China Sea.

Air Activity Lightened

A lightening of aerial activity was noticed thereafter, leading some to believe there might be a temporary peace and quiet for the morrow.

But under the hot sun on this Easter Sunday there was no letup. Not only our front lines but the rear areas on Bataan peninsula were strafed throughout the day. And high over Corregidor, mighty symbol of power, enemy observation planes droned back and forth. Filipinos who rose mightily to defend their country, however, joined with Americans to observe the day. In other places saber-rattling war lords and generals of the Axis powers may have forced soldiers not only to fight but to worship according to predesigned dictates. Here men worshiped according to the freedom of their conscience.

3 More Jap Ships Sunk by U.S. Subs

APR 6 1942

2 Heavily Ladened Tankers Destroyed Near Caroline Islands—Freighter Also Sent To Bottom in Japanese Waters.

WASHINGTON, April 6. (AP)—American submarines battering steadily at Japan's long supply lines in the Western Pacific have sunk three more enemy merchant ships, two of them heavily laden tankers, the Navy reported today.

Total For U. S. Subs Now 51

Destruction of these vessels raised to a total of 51 the Japanese ships blasted by far-roving U. S. undersea raiders—a total made up of 30 sinkings, 10 probable sinkings and the damaging of 11 other ships. The over-all score of Japanese vessels sunk and damaged by both army and navy forces mounted to 209 in the four months of war ending today.

The two tankers were sunk by a submarine on extended patrol in the vicinity of the Caroline Islands, Japanese mandates lying east of the Philippines. One of the tankers fired on the submarine but, the Navy said, failed to damage it.

The cargo of the tankers, whether oil or gasoline, was not given, but it was considered possible that they were transporting fuel for enemy fleet units. Truk island in the Caroline group is a great Japanese naval base.

Freighter Blasted

The third ship reported sunk was a freighter, blasted by a submarine on patrol in Japanese waters. No details of this encounter were divulged by the Navy. It was recalled, however, that other submarine attacks have been carried out in that area, suggesting the probability that U. S. craft are in constant operation there, thousands of miles from their bases.

That operations over the whole of the enemy-dominated western Pacific are constantly increasing was indicated by the fact that in recent weeks the Navy has made more and more frequent reports of American undersea attacks. Only last Saturday it was announced that two light cruisers had been torpedoed south of Java and that five non-combatant enemy vessels had been damaged by submarine attacks in Dutch East Indies waters.

Text of Communique

The communique issued today, No. 67, said:

Far East—1. A United States submarine has reported the sinking of an enemy freighter in Japanese waters while on extended patrol in that area.

Southwest Pacific Area—2. A United States submarine has reported that it sank two heavily-laden Japanese tankers in waters near the Caroline Islands while on extended patrol in that area. The submarine was fired upon by one of the tankers but escaped without damage.

3. These sinkings have not been reported in any previous Navy Department communique.

4. There is nothing to report from other areas.

Quezon Plans For His Return To Philippines

Dynamic Leader Working Hard With Allied Military Authorities.

By CLARK LEE

MELBOURNE, Australia, April 6 —(AP)—Manuel Quezon, the small dynamic leader of the Philippine people, is working hard with military authorities somewhere in Australia on preparations for eventual reconquest of his island commonwealth.

Looking 20 years younger than when I last saw him in the Philippines, although he is suffering from a bad cold, he is obviously healthier than when he was under constant bombing and shelling.

He still wears an Army shirt and trousers but has swapped his peaked forage hat for a felt fedora and donned an overcoat more suitable for approaching Australian winter than his usual leather jacket.

With his improvement in health, his confidence has been restored and he has got back his swagger and gusto. The president's wife, two daughters and son who made the arduous journey to Australia are also in good health.

Quezon so far has granted no interviews, but from sources close to the president it has been learned that he is still chuckling over the Tokyo radio's claim that "General MacArthur had him murdered."

The Tokyo reports were apparently fabricated when a Japanese warship captured a small Filipino boat somewhere in inner Philippine waters with part of Quezon's luggage on board.

Disgruntled at the president for slipping through their hands, the Japanese invented the story. Tokyo later resurrected Quezon only to report his death anew from a coughing spell somewhere on the island of Mindanao.

Details of Quezon's trip to Australia still cannot be published beyond saying that he had the opportunity of conferring personally with many of his people and assuring himself of their firm loyalty to the commonwealth and United States governments.

Japs Own Worst Enemy

Information reaching the presidential party from the occupied portions of the Philippines reports that the Japanese are proving their own worst enemy by brutal treatment of the people.

Throughout the occupied areas the people are reported unanimous in their hatred of the Japanese and enduring their ordeal in the hope that the United States will come to the rescue before long.

The Japanese high command is said to have attempted to control the behavior of the soldiers but this apparently has been unsuccessful and there have been numerous reports of high-handed and cruel actions by Japanese troops.

The Japanese are said to have built a wall around Santo Tomas University where 1,500 American men, women and children are interned. The American's Filipino servants are denied direct contact with them but may throw packages over the wall from time to time.

On the island of Masbate, the Japanese were reported to have captured a number of American mining engineers who tried to dynamite their property to prevent it from falling into the invaders' hands. They were removed from the island by boat and have been unreported since.

General MacArthur's possessions at the Manila hotel, however, have been respected. The Filipino manager refused to give up the key to MacArthur's suite when Gen. Masaharu Homma asked for it. The Japanese commander, who was later reported to have killed himself as a result of MacArthur's continued resistance on Bataan, did not insist.

A Japanese prince who arrived in Manila some time afterward asked as a special favor, that the suite be opened. On the following morning, the Prince returned the key personally and assured the manager that MacArthur would find everything as he left it.

Wermuth, Bataan's One-Man Army, And A Bolo-Swinger Score

APR 7 1942

(Editor's Note—Clark Lee, Associated Press correspondent who chronicled the heroic exploits of General MacArthur's men on Bataan peninsula for more than two months, discloses for the first time in this dispatch that he himself was injured at the front. Lee recently arrived in Australia.)

By Clark Lee, Associated Press Correspondent

Melbourne, April 6—Despite all that has been written about the courageous defenders of Bataan Peninsula, there are still many tales of individual heroism that have never been told.

There is, for instance, the story of a black night when Capt. Arthur Wermuth—the American officer whose almost legendary exploits caused him to be known as "the one-man army"—was pussyfooting along behind the Japanese lines on a typical scouting mission.

He suddenly bumped into about twenty shadowy figures, the first of whom raised a finger to his lips with a warning "S-s-s—s-h-h!"

"Ssh," Says Wermuth, And—

Wermuth, realizing he had run into a Japanese patrol, made a similar gesture and replied, "S-s-s—s-h-h!"

Then he drew a firing pin from a grenade, pressed the missile into the hand of the Japanese, closed the man's fingers and tiptoed away into the darkness with another admonishing "S-s-s-h-h-h!"

The Japanese opened his fingers a moment or two later, releasing the firing mechanism, and . . .

One Man And His Bolo

Then there is the story of the Filipino scout who fell in behind a Japanese scouting party of eleven men marching along a trail in single file one night near Davao. The Filipino drew out his bolo, lopped off the head of the nearest man and then cut the whole column down one by one from behind.

It also was at Davao that an American sergeant named May, of the Thirty-first (apparently the Thirty-first Infantry) made a lone stand against a Japanese warship attempting to cover a landing party. Equipped with a .50-caliber machine gun mounted on a truck, May mowed down boatload after boatload of Japanese as they came ashore.

Warship Blasts Truck

The warship finally shot the truck out from under him, but he came back with another and went to work again. It was estimated that he accounted for at least 250 Japanese. He is understood to be fighting somewhere in the Philippines still.

I have been trying to recall when I had my biggest scare during the campaign in Luzon. Frankly, I was scared every time there was a loud explosion nearby—and that was often.

Broken Hand, Deaf Ear

I probably was lucky to get out with nothing more serious than a broken hand, suffered while diving into a foxhole to escape strafing planes and a few small scars—the result of being blown off a dock at Corregidor by a shell.

A stick of six bombs which exploded about fifty yards away while I was visiting some Marine buddies in their trench at Corregidor also left me with one deaf ear, but it was partly bad before that.

Escapes From Bullets

During the first frantic days in Manila after the war started there was considerable indiscriminate shooting in the streets, and Russell Brines, also of the Associated Press, and I had a narrow escape when a sentry fired a shot through the rear door of an automobile in which we were riding.

On another occasion, while watching an air raid from the roof of a hotel, we were fired at by guards below, who took us for Fifth Columnists trying to signal the Japanese.

Caught In A Battle

With two Filipino reporters, whom I can't mention by name because they are still in Manila, I found myself in the midst of a minor battle on the road from Baguio to Lingayen Gulf one night early in the war.

Hoping that the Japanese hadn't cut the road we drove safely down the treacherous mountain highway from Baguio, only to be stalled by a convoy of Filipino trainees. Most of them were unarmed and were sitting in trucks laughing and talking when the three of us in our car heard noises across a fifty-yard stream running through the canyon.

Jap Party Discovered

We switched on our headlights and saw a force of Japanese coming down the hill. We quickly switched off the lights and notified the major commanding, who deployed his few armed men and challenged.

As the Japanese replied we turned on our lights again and the Filipinos opened fire. There were a few exciting minutes before the Japanese beat a retreat.

While on Corregidor I couldn't decide which was worse—being bombed or shelled. I was vaguely disturbed that I couldn't get used to either, and spoke to General MacArthur about it. His reply was comforting:

"No soldier ever born isn't terrified of either bombing or shelling. The test of a real soldier is one who'll cling to his foxhole or trench and shiver and shake during the shelling, but who'll stick there without yielding to his natural impulse to run, and when the enemy attacks will jump to his rifle or machine-gun and fire."

Bombs Cause Slight Damage To Two Ports

Jap Premier Hints at Invasion in Warning That India Faces 'Great Calamities.'

SHIPPING IS ATTACKED BY JAP NAVAL FORCE

London Intimates British Squadron Already Searching for Foe's Warships.

NEW DELHI, India, April 6. (AP)—Bombs fell among the people of India proper today when Japanese planes, attacking the Indian coast for the first time, raided two ports in Madras Presidency, and worse to befall was hinted in the disclosure that a Japanese naval force is ranging the Bay of Bengal.

The naval force, which includes at least one aircraft carrier, already has attacked commerce both with its surface ships and its planes, said a communique.

Hint at Invasion

These first direct manifestations of war came to India as its people still were torn with hesitation on their political future and a few hours after Premier Gen. Hideki Tojo in a broadcast from Tokyo had warned of "great calamities" to her 390,000,000 people. These would be unavoidable, he said, "in the course of our subjugation of British forces," a reference which seemed plainly to indicate his determination to direct a Japanese invasion.

The raiding force which attacked Vizagapatam, a city of more than 40,000 and site of a British naval base, and Cocanada, nearby provincial capital of 40,000, was officially described as small.

Vizagapatam and Colombo, capital of Ceylon and sixth largest port in the British empire which the Japanese attacked on Sunday, are two of the points from which the Japanese might expect war supplies to move to Burma and China.

Slight Damage

Slight damage to the Vizagapatam harbor area, which was attacked twice, was reported and only a few casualties occurred at Cocanada—possibly because the raiding force had been dealt with so severely when it attempted the surprise blow at Colombo only to be ambushed by a waiting RAF which asserted 27 of the 75 raiding planes were shot down and 30 more damaged.

Vizagapatam and Cocanada, almost half way up the eastern Indian coast between Madras and Calcutta, are about 800 miles from the Andaman Islands where Japan secured her first foothold in the Bay of Bengal.

The towns are just north of Masulipatam where the British made their first settlements in India, and north of the region where Robert Clive began the conquest of India nearly two centuries ago. Cocanada has a large export trade.

(A hint came from London naval quarters that the Japanese naval force included two aircraft carriers and that British warships already might be searching for the Japanese task force.

(London observers pointed out that Rome broadcasts 10 days ago reported a strong British squadron, including two battleships, two carriers and several cruisers and smaller warships had rounded the Cape of Good Hope en route to the Indian Ocean.)

Japs Menacing Supply Line

British sources said Japanese warships and planes had attacked merchant ships several times in recent days, and it was assumed that one of the missions of this flotilla was to cut United Nations supplies to Burma and the Chinese. This also was borne out by the Japanese attack on Colombo, the Ceylon capital instead of Trincomalee, the Ceylon naval base.

(A Japanese broadcast said naval units—apparently naval air units was meant—had been battering at Colombo since Saturday, inflicting heavy damage in attacks aimed at "enemy warships, merchantmen, air facilities and the principal military establishments."

War also was coming closer to India by land.

In Burma, Japanese patrols had pushed forward to Nyaungbinzeik, 15 miles north of Prome, on the Irrawaddy branch of the Japanese drive.

The Japanese were massing forces west of the Irrawaddy in a possible flanking move to threaten the British connections with the coast. The invader had the advantage of continued air superiority.

(A Tokyo broadcast said destruction of 103 planes in Japanese raids March 21 to 31 was believed to have "shattered the fighting spirit of enemy air remnants" in Burma.)

The Chinese who yielded Toungoo on the eastern end of the Burma line said the Japanese now were attacking lightly with about one battalion, since the foe had lost 3,700 dead in the 12-day battle for the town.

Fresh Chinese Troops Reach Burma Front

APR 7 1942

CHUNGKING, April 6. (AP)—Fresh Chinese reinforcements have reached the Burma front and have bolstered and stabilized the Chinese positions north of Toungoo, it was reported here today.

The reinforcements, it was said, are taking over the front line positions from the Chinese division which withdrew from Toungoo, giving that weary force a breathing spell.

Planes And Warships Raid Allied Vessels On Bengal Bay

APR 7 1942

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, April 6—Japanese bombers carried the war to India proper today by raids on two coastal cities north of Madras, the British announced officially. The planes were based on an aircraft carrier, operating with a Japanese task force in the Bay of Bengal.

Nizampatam, a town situated at the mouth of the Kistna river, was attacked twice.

Cocanada also was raided. It is on the coast north of Nizampatam. Both lie between Madras and Calcutta.

Carrier In Bay

The raids followed closely on an attack Sunday on Colombo, Ceylon, in which the British defenders shot down twenty-seven planes and damaged thirty others.

Slight damage to the harbor area was reported from Nizampatam while a few casualties were reported at Cocanada.

In Hunt Area

(The two coastal towns on the Bay of Bengal lie in the territory where British warships are reported to be seeking a Japanese aircraft carrier from which the bombing planes operate and her escort vessels.

(Cocanada is a town of 40,000 population, the capital of the provincial district and has a large export trade.

(Nizampatam, of 5,000 population, is situated in the irrigation system area near the Kistna river delta where it flows into Bengal Bay.)

The British announcement said:

"In the morning of April 6 it became apparent that an enemy naval force, including an aircraft carrier, was operating in the Bay of Bengal.

Ships Attacked

"Several attacks have been made against merchant ships both by surface craft and aircraft.

"During the morning and again in the afternoon Nizampatam Harbor was bombed by a small number of aircraft causing slight damage to the harbor area.

"Coconada was also bombed although the casualties were slight."

Carrier Hunted

London, April 6 (AP)—British warships were believed scouring the eastern Indian Ocean today for at least two Japanese aircraft carriers from which the Easter attack on Colombo, Ceylon, was launched, informed naval experts said.

The fact that the surprise attack—similar in many respects to the raid on Pearl Harbor — was launched against Colombo instead of the great naval base at Trincomalee found no official explanation here. Some observers thought the attack possibly was aimed at war supplies en route to the hard-pressed British troops in Burma.

Japs At Akyab, Nazis Report

Berlin,
~~New York,~~ April 6—The Associated Press listening post today recorded a German broadcast which said it was officially announced in Tokyo that Japanese troops had made a surprise landing at Akyab, West Burma port, within one hundred miles of the Indian frontier.

(A Chinese army spokesman announced in Chungking last week that the Japanese had landed at Akyab, but the British denied this and the Chungking spokesman said later his statement had been incorrect. Thus far Tokyo has not reported directly any Akyab landing.)

The German broadcast said the Japanese started a thrust from Akyab toward the British rear and added that the Japanese now might use Akyab as one of their main sea and air bases in operations against India.

The announcer said the Japanese now controlled sea communications to Calcutta.

MANDALAY RUINED BY JAP BOMBERS

Two-Thirds of Center of City Destroyed and 2,000 Killed

APR 7 1942

By The Associated Press

London, April 6.—The Daily Sketch's war correspondent in Burma wrote today that two thirds of the center of Mandalay was destroyed by Japanese bombers Friday and that 2,000 to 3,000 persons were killed.

[There was no indication from official or other sources that the damage was severe.]

The correspondent, Alfred Wagg, added that 5,000 others were injured by the 35 bombers which swooped upon the city.

He wrote that no alarm was sounded before the raid and that huge fires broke out swiftly.

"Cholera has been threatening for many weeks," he wrote. He said the water works was destroyed, making the threat of epidemic more grave. The electric system also was bombed out of commission, he said.

Enemy Continues Push

New Delhi, April 6—(AP)—Japanese patrols pushed forward to Nyaung-Binzeik, 15 miles north of Prome, as the invades continued to bring up reinforcements in apparent preparation for a new drive up the Irrawadyy River, a British communique from the Burma waterfront reported today.

The bulletin said there had been no change in the situation on the Irrawaddy front, but declared that Japanese warplanes continued to batter British positions blocking the path to the rich oil fields of northern Burma.

British headquarters reported yesterday that the Japanese were massing forces along the west bank of the Irrawaddy under harassing fire from British artillery trying to break up preparations for a new push.

APR 7 1942

3,700 Japanese Killed

The Chinese announced that 3,700 Japanese were killed in the 12-day battle of Toungoo, the eastern anchor of the United Nations' Burma line which the outnumbered Chinese have been forced to yield.

A Chinese communique said Japanese losses also included six mortars, one mountain gun, one field gun, 70 horses and some bicycles and rifles captured.

The enemy now has launched a small attack on the Mawchi-Toungoo highway with about one battalion of infantry, it said.

Japan Claims Air Control

Tokio (from Japanese broadcasts), April 6—(AP)—A Domei despatch datelined from the Burma front said today that "complete Japanese aerial supremacy over Burma was demonstrated yesterday when not a single enemy plane challenged Japanese planes which swept over a certain enemy air base to destroy one bomber and three fighters on the ground."

"Destruction of 103 enemy planes in a series of Japanese air raids in the period between March 21 and 31 is believed to have shattered the fighting spirit of the enemy air remnants," the despatch added.

MADRAS FORTRESS TO BE BLACKED OUT

MADRAS, India, April 6—(AP)—The Madras fortress area will be blacked out, beginning next Sunday, it was announced today.

(The province of Madras is at the southern tip of India, nearest Ceylon which underwent a mass Japanese air attack yesterday. Its capital city of Madras is 500 miles due north of Colombo, raided capital of Ceylon.)

Loss 27 to 57 Out of 75 Planes in Attempt to Perpetrate Another 'Pearl Harbor'

APR 7 1942

COLOMBO, Ceylon, April 6 (AP).—Japan tried a "sudden-death" air blow on this island Sunday, but alert defenses turned the attack, instead, into one of the sharpest air defeats the Japanese have suffered. Ceylon is just southeast of the tip of India.

About 75 raiders streaked out of the Easter morning sun in the first raid of the war on Ceylon, and, according to Vice Admiral Sir Geoffrey Layton, commander-in-chief of armed forces, 27 were shot down, five more probably destroyed and another 25 damaged so badly that they probably never regained the aircraft carriers from which they were presumed to have come.

Like Pearl Harbor

The harbor area of Colombo, capital and southwest port of Ceylon, the air field and the Ratmalana Railway were chief targets.

[Japanese naval units have been battering at Colombo since Saturday and have inflicted heavy damage, Imperial Headquarters announced in Tokyo. No other reports mention bombardment by naval forces.]

The attack on Ceylon was added evidence that the Japanese, stalled at Australia, may have made India the goal of their next big campaign. The attack was comparable to that on Pearl Harbor because of its attempted surprise.

Ceylon guards important Allied shipping lanes and contains Trincomalee, site of a big naval base.

5185 Miles From Tokyo

The raid stretched Japan's air arm 850 miles southwest of the occupied Andaman Islands and the closest yet to the Indian mainland. Colombo is 5185 miles from Tokyo.

Both air fighters and ground gunners proved the efficiency of Ceylon's carefully-prepared defenses. Twenty-five of the 27 Jap planes were shot down by British fighter pilots. The antiaircraft batteries' curtain of steel knocked down two. Some bombs fell in the city and half the civilian dead were killed at a medical establishment.

Admiral Layton ordered every effort to capture the Japanese crews which managed—as it was known some did—to parachute from their broken planes.

"Capture them and bring them to the nearest police station or military headquarters," he broadcast to the people.

Offers Rewards for Capture

He offered rewards for all Japanese captured or for information which would lead the military police and European and Singhalese patrols to their hiding places.

Ceylon had a preliminary warning of attack Saturday when air raid sirens sounded for the third time since March 30. No planes were reported.

Confident of easy victory because of surprise, the Japanese swept over the harbor. Dive bombers screamed down and other formations swept in with machine guns rattling. It was evident that the Japanese did not know what awaited them.

Britain, for more than a month, has been moving in reinforcements, strengthening docks, laying out new airdromes, building shelters, organizing a civilian air-raid defense system, demolishing blocks of flimsy dwellings and cutting fire lanes through the city.

Say Naval Units Attacked.

Tokio (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 6 (A. P.).—Japanses naval units have been battering at Colombo on the island of Ceylon, since Saturday and have inflicted heavy damage, Imperial Headquarters announced today.

Raids yesterday were directed against enemy warships, merchantmen, air facilities and the principal military establishments in the Colombo area, a communique said.

Enemy Reports

The enemy in many cases puts out statements to induce replies that will disclose military information. The claims made are not confirmed by the United Nations.

Tokio (From Japanese Broadcasts) April 6 (A. P.).—Imperial headquarters declared today that Japanese troops had killed or captured 76,766 Chinese troops in thirty encounters from the beginning of "the Greater East Asia War" through March. The total, said an extensive summary of Japanese operations in China during that period, includes 58,313 killed and more than 18,000 captured.

Japanese losses, the communique asserted, amounted to 2,536 killed and 6,383 wounded. It listed as Japanese booty:

Five planes, seventeen tanks, 1,470 trucks, 309 railway cars, two torpedo boats, 201 guns of various caliber, 1,353 machine-guns and 12,443 rifles.

Japanese forces also shot down thirty enemy planes and either sank or destroyed four gunboats and thirteen merchantmen, it added.

Guerrillas Wreck Two Japanese Supply Trains

Chungking, Tuesday, April 7 (AP). Two Japanese supply trains were wrecked not far from Hankow in the last two weeks by land mines planted by Chinese guerrillas along the Peiping-Hankow Railway, a communique said today.

Casualties were heavy, and a large amount of wa. equipment and supplies was destroyed, the communique said.

U. S. Emissary Trying to Help In India Talks

APR 7 1942

Johnson Confers With Indian Leaders and Then With Cripps.

BY H R KNICKERBOCKER

NEW DELHI, India, April 6 (AP)—Louis Johnson, a special emissary from the United States, sought in a round of conferences today to assist in solution of the complex Indian independence question, rendered even more urgent by the first Japanese air attacks on the mainland.

Friendly assurances of the American government's interest in India's freedom and future were believed to have been given by Johnson in talks yesterday and today with Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, leaders of the All-India Congress party, the country's major political group of Hindus.

Johnson then conferred with Sir Stafford Cripps, British cabinet minister who brought to India an offer of post-war dominion status.

While the American position was described as in no sense involving guarantees to the Indians, Johnson was reported striving to see what could be contributed toward a solution, and his attitude imparted a sense of cigor and urgency to the negotiations.

Talk of Temporary Solution

(In London well-informed sources said a decision one way or the other was expected this week after Cripps explains the British cabinet's revision of the plan for India's defense.

(To meet Indian objections to this defense remaining in British hands, one suggestion under consideration was said by these sources to be appointment of General Sir Archibald P. Wavell as viceroy with Nehru or the moderate Sir Tej Bahrur Sapru as defense minister. Wavell would retain his position as commander-in-chief for India.

(Thus a temporary solution would be founded upon the desperate nature of the military situation rather than on the complexities of Indian politics, with Britain underlining a promise of post-war government of, by and for Indians, these London quarters asserted.)

Roosevelt Letter Not Delivered

Johnson, special American minister to India and head of a mission to bolster India's war industrial possibilities, did not hand to Nehru a letter which he has brought from President Roosevelt to some unidentified Indian native leader. When and to whom he will deliver it remained secret.

Johnson plans to see leaders of various other Indian groups.

The Congress Working Committee heard reports today from Nehru and Azad on their talks with Johnson, and Azad said he was expecting to hear from Cripps possibly tonight.

The committee adopted a memorandum to be given to Cripps, inviting an "unequivocal" declaration on India's future status, and Azad said committee views on British proposals might be made public Tuesday night.

Cripps scheduled a press conference for Wednesday morning, and this was taken by observers as an optimistic sign.

Meanwhile the Moslem League adopted a resolution at Allahabad empowering its president, Mohammed Ali Jinnah, to "take forthwith all necessary and effective steps for protection of the life, honor and property of Moslems." It was not explained what these steps might be. The League, second largest of Indian political organs, claims leadership of India's 77,000,000 Moslems.

The Moslem fear domination by the Hindu majority. The Hindus, on the other hand, are cold to the British proposal for creation of separate autonomous states for those provinces which do not generally agree on one united dominion.

Even if the Congress and the Moslems should get together, the president of the Hindu extremist Mahasabha organization warned the British that his group must be placated. The Mahasabha contends Hindus will be alienated by what it calls "the vivisection of India clause" permitting more than one dominion.

Meanwhile, the Indian press, expressing pleasure over Ceylon's rough treatment of Japanese air raiders, used the raid as a warning to politicians to conclude the current negotiations quickly so India's 390,000,000 people could be mobilized.

The Madras fortress area is to be blacked out starting next Sunday. Madras province is in southern India near Ceylon, with the city of Madras only 500 miles from the raided city of Colombo.

Johnson, Native India Leaders Confer

APR 7 1942

London, April 6 (AP)—Appointment of Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell as Viceroy of India with the Hindu leader Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru as defense minister was reported in informed circles here today to be one of the suggestions under consideration for settlement of the Indian question.

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, India, April 6—Louis Johnson, head of a special mission named by President Roosevelt, held exploratory conversations with India's native leaders in what was widely believed today to be a projection of United States influence in an effort to smooth the country's difficult political problem.

Mindful of the importance of India's political problems if this country is to be converted into a military bulwark against the Axis, Johnson conferred for two and a half hours yesterday with Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, past president of the potent Congress Party.

Sees Nehru Again

Johnson conferred for an hour this afternoon with Nehru and the Congress president, Maulana Abul Kalan Azad.

Johnson, a former Assistant Secretary of War who heads a mission to build up India's war industry potential and who, in addition, has been made a special minister to India, did not give to Nehru a letter which he has brought from President Roosevelt for some one of India's native leaders.

Neither the contents of the letter nor to whom it is addressed has been divulged.

First Of Series

Johnson's meetings were the first of a series he had planned.

His whole attitude has been to impart an attitude of vigor and urgency toward the problem.

The Congress Party working committee, which has conditionally rejected the proposals brought by Sir Stafford Cripps, met for two hours this morning. The exact text of the committee's resolution on the proposals still was undisclosed.

Awaits British Decision

Azad was expecting today a communication from Cripps which presumably would give the British War Cabinet's decision on the Congress Party's proposals concerning Indian defense.

Sir Stafford and Congress leaders are expected to have further discussions after the British envoy receives a reply from the British War Cabinet to the Congress proposals for India's immediate future.

Sir Stafford canceled a press conference set for tomorrow and withheld publication of the Congress' proposals, and this was considered an indication that negotiations are making progress.

Johnson and Sir Stafford met Sunday and the United States envoy was informed of the course of the negotiations. Some quarters attached even greater importance to the conferences Johnson held with Nehru and Azad.

The Indian press used the Japanese raid on Ceylon as a warning to political leaders to bring negotiations to a speedy conclusion which would permit the mobilization of India's 390,000,000 people. Newspapers pointed out that the Japanese aim was to destroy harbors and suggested that India's great ports may logically be the next targets.

The newspapers, while expressing delight over the hot reception given the Colombo raiders, declared that if political problems were settled and India got down to the job behind a national government, there was no reason why the Indian people should not meet the Japanese threat as well as did the residents of Colombo.

(Some London sources expressed belief that the final outcome of the involved negotiations would come from deliberations today of the British war cabinet.

Core Of Difficulty

(The core of the difficulty, evidently, was the insistence of the Indians, particularly the All-India Congress party, that India control her own defenses.

(British sources said the Government would consider any responsible suggestion. One possibility, mentioned by the London News-Chronicle, was that an Indian would become Defense member of the Executive Council and that General Sir Archibald P. Wavell, commander in chief of India, would succeed Lord Linlithgow as Viceroy to insure full cooperation of all defense measures.)

Warning Sounded

"If you depend on any Congress-League pact alone, to which the Hindu Mahasabha is not made a willing party then you will be leaning on a broken reed," warned Vinayak Damodar Savarkar, president of the Mahasabha, in a telegram to Cripps.

"Such a pact can only alienate the largest part of the Hindus who would otherwise have welcomed the scheme if the vivisection of India clause had been omitted."

The reference by Savarkra, whose organization is one of the voices of the Hindus, India's majority group, was to the plan possibly to create two Indian commonwealths after the war, if necessary because of the large Moslem minority.

Japs Exhort India To Reject British Offer

TOKIO (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 6 (AP).—Premier Gen. Hideki Tojo told India's millions today that "great calamities" would be unavoidable" in the course of our subjugation of British forces" in India.

(The hint that Japan's course is set for an attack on India occurred at several points in the Premier's statement, an exhortation to India to reject Britain's offer of post-war independence.)

Tojo recalled Japan's progress through Malaya, Burma and the Andaman Islands in the Bay of Bengall and added:

"The grim determination of our empire to crush the United States and Britain is thus being steadily translated into action.

"If India should remain, as before, under the military control of Britain, it would, I am afraid, be unavoidable in the course of our subjugation of British forces there that India suffer great calamities."

At another point he commented that "British influence in India is now about to be exterminated."

Tomokazu Hori, spokesman of the information board, in a similar appeal, declared it does not matter who obtains command of the armed forces in India, "the only way left is to crush that army."

Japs Urge Indians to Shake Off British Rule

LONDON, April 6 (AP) — The German-controlled Paris radio was heard broadcasting a statement by Japanese Premier Gen. Hideki Tojo today that Sunday's air attack on Ceylon was not directed against the native population but solely on British military installations.

Tojo appealed to the Indian people to "seize the opportunity offered them by Japan to free themselves from British rule," the radio said.

Raids on New Britain Coast Described as 'Among Heaviest Yet Made By Allies' —Large Enemy Ships Hit.

BY EDGAR HAUGLAND

U. S. ARMY HEADQUARTERS IN AUSTRALIA, April 6. (AP)—Raids described as "among the heaviest yet made by the Allies" were reported carried out today by flying Aussies and Americans striking at Rabaul and Gasmata in New Britain where Japan was said to be reinforcing her badly wrecked and overmatched air forces.

Grounded Planes Damaged

The Sydney Herald, which reported the raids, said direct hits were scored on large Japanese ships in Rabaul harbor on the northeast New Britain coast, where the Japanese secured their first foothold on Australia's outer island rim.

Both at Rabaul and Gasmata, on the south coast of New Britain, aircraft were said to have been damaged on the airdromes.

Earlier it had been reported that Japan was strengthening her air forces in that area to bolster her faltering Australian offensive, and it was assumed that the Allies determined to destroy the new planes before they could get in action.

It remained for official reports, however, to tell whether the raid had been as successful as that one March 21 when the Japanese are claimed to have suffered one of the most devastating blows of the southwest Pacific, with 23 ships sunk, burned, beached and damaged and the equivalent of two squadrons of planes knocked out.

Warning Against Over-Confidence

The raid was in line with Army Minister Francis M. Forde's advice today to the defenders—not to grow over-confident because of their recent sharp successes.

This warning was emphasized by reports received in Sydney that the Japanese had taken up positions in four places in Bougainville and nearby islands at the northern end of the Solomon Islands.

These places were given as Kieta, Kessa, Buka and Faisi. Some small forces already had been reported on Bougainville, southwest of New Guinea and northwest of Australia, and the new landings were said to have been accomplished by small forces from destroyers.

New Jap Bases Feared

The Japanese could use the positions, however, to patrol the seaway approaches to Australia from the United States, and possibly to project attacks upon the Free French islands of New Caledonia, the New Hebrides or the Fiji islands in an encircling movement east of the Australian continent.

Forde spoke encouragingly after a visit to one of the American troop camps of the force built up by joint Australian, American and British efforts. He said this force already had given the Japanese a bitter taste of the task they had ahead of them if they attempt to invade this continent.

30.24 1580 7

"Tide Always Returns"

But he warned: "I am encouraging nobody to believe the tide has turned. The tide always returns. We must be vigilant and ready. There is a long way to go yet. The tide in which I am most interested is the flood tide whereon the full strength of the Allies, with Australia among them, will flow toward Japan for the final battle."

Although Australia's position was distinctly easier than two months ago, he said the country "must expect and prepare for attack."

APR 7 1942

He ordered emergency regulations extended to Thursday Island and all the islands in Torres Strait within one hundred miles of the mainland. Military authorities thus were enabled to act promptly in event the Japanese strike from the northeast.

Moresby Raided Again

Hostile action was limited to a Japanese raid, the 23d, on Port Moresby, northern defense center in southern New Guinea. Of seven Japanese bombers with fighter escort which attacked just after noon, the defenders reported they shot down one "Zero" fighter, and damaged a second one and a bomber. Only one casualty, a wounded sergeant, and slight damage to a gasoline dump were reported.

Allied headquarters expected that word from a Sunday attack by Australian and American fliers on the Japanese base to the northwest at Koepang, Dutch Timor, would show further damage inflicted upon the Japanese, already reported to have suffered 20 planes destroyed and 19 damaged in a series of smashing week-end successes for the United Nations.

Dr. Hubertus J. Van Mook, Dutch East Indies lieutenant governor, told Gen. Douglas MacArthur that two groups of Dutch troops "of considerable size" were continuing to hold out in Java's jungles and mountains, and inquired as to the role which they are expected to play in the General's strategic plan.

He said the forces under Generals W. Schilling and A. Plesman were well supplied with munitions and food. He added that Netherlands Indies crack aviators, sailors and soldiers who escaped from Java were operating with the Australians and were prepared to strike at the Japanese again.

BULLETIN

MELBOURNE, Tuesday, April 7. (AP)—Several Japanese bombers were damaged yesterday in Port Moresby, New Guinea, and two of the defending Australian fighter planes were lost, a communique said today.

One of the Allied pilots was saved, however, and the raid on Port Moresby was declared a failure.

APR 7 1942

The communique said:

"A raid on Port Moresby yesterday failed completely. Japanese planes were intercepted and driven off after several had been damaged by bursts of machinegune fire.

"One of our aircraft was shot down and one is missing, but one pilot was saved."

Another Raid on Koepang.

Melbourne, April 6 (A. P.).—Australian airmen made another successful attack yesterday on the Japanese base at Koepang, capital of Dutch Timor, a communique announced today.

Jap Ships and Airdrome Hit By Allied Bombers at Rabaul

Raid on New Britain Port One of Heaviest —Enemy Lands on Solomon Islands Northeast of Australia.

APR 7 1942

Sydney, Australia, April 6 (A. P.).—Large Japanese vessels in Rabaul harbor were hit by United States and Australian bombers today, the Sydney Morning Herald reported. The raiders also damaged airdromes at Rabaul and at Gasmata, both in New Britain, the paper said.

The raids were described as among the heaviest yet made by the Allies.

Air Victories Ease Aussie Situation, Forde Says

APR 7 1942

[By the Associated Press]

United States Army Headquarters in Australia, April 6—The encouraging word that Australia's position is much safer after two months of acute danger was given by Army Minister Francis M. Forde today after a series of smashing week-end successes in which Australian and American airmen destroyed at least twenty Japanese planes and damaged nineteen others.

But he warned that Australia must be everlastingly prepared against attack.

"Vigilant And Ready"

"I am encouraging nobody to believe the tide has turned," he said after inspecting an American troop camp.

APR 7 1942

"We must be vigilant and ready. There is a long way to go yet."

He said Australia owed her easier position "to speedy and generous help" from Britain and the United States plus measures taken by the dominion itself.

Japs Reinforced

"These joint measures have built up in the Commonwealth a force which in the north has already shown the Japanese the sharpness of its range," he said.

His warning, however, that Australia must remain vigilant was underscored by press reports that the Japanese were receiving air reinforcements at their much-battered New Guinea invasion bases which might affect the local superiority gained by Allied aviation.

New Attack Hinted

Reports from Sydney also told of growing danger to the northeast of Australia where, it was said, small Japanese forces from destroyers had established themselves at four places—Kieta, Kessa, Buka and Faisi—on Bougainville and near-by islands in the Solomon group. This movement suggested that the Japanese were planning an attack on Free French New Caledonia or the New Hebrides or Fiji Islands.

Forde extended emergency control regulations to Thursday Island and all islands in the Torres Strait within one hundred miles of the mainland. The regulations will give the military power to act swiftly in any emergency.

Port Moresby was raided again shortly after noon today by seven Japanese bombers, escorted by fighters, an army communique broadcast by the Melbourne radio said. No damage or casualties were reported.

Air Minister Arthur Drakeford said the Australian air force was deployed in a series of concentrations over the most important areas in a new dewense plan. The effectiveness of the new setup, he said, was illustrated by the recent defenses against attacks on Darwin and Port Moresby, where the Japanese have had to pay increasingly heavy tolls of aircraft.

Possibly that the week-end toll of enemy aircraft might be still greater was foreseen as detailed reports were awaited on an attack which American and Australian airmen carried out yesterday on the Japanese base at Koepang, capital of Dutch Timor.

Targets Believed Fired

A communique described the assault, pressed home in the face of intense aircraft fire, as successful and said columns of smoke were seen rising from the target as the raiders turned homeward.

The raid followed up Saturday attacks on Koepang and Lae, New Guinea, in which eleven Japanese planes were reported destroyed on the ground and fourteen others damaged. No allied losses were reported.

Nine Japs Downed

Japanese attacks during the week end, which included raids on Darwin and Port Moresby, New Guinea, cost the enemy at least nine planes, communiques said.

Seven of these—five bombers and two fighters—were shot down over Darwin Saturday in an air battle in which the Allies lost three planes. The other two were downed over Port Moresby—one Saturday and one Sunday.

Darwin also was attacked again yesterday by seven Japanese bombers escorted by fighters, but apparently none was downed.

Damage Termed Small

A communique said that damage resulting from the raids on Darwin and Port Moresby was small and no casualties were reported. Darwin has undergone thirteen raids to date and Port Moresby twenty-two.

Invasion of Solomon Islands Threatens Northeastern Flank of Australia.

NEW CALEDONIA IS MENACED

Territory Under Free French Control May Be Next on Tokio's List.

New York, Apr. 6—(AP)

The All-India radio broadcast Sydney dispatches today saying that the Japanese had made additional small landings in the Solomon Islands, threatening New Caledonia and the New Hebrides, on Australia's northeastern flank. The forces were said to have been landed from destroyers, the broadcast, heard here by the Columbia listening post, said.

"The Japanese will possibly use them in their advance against New Caledonia and the New Hebrides," the broadcast added. The New Hebrides are ruled jointly by the French and British. New Caledonia is under Free French control.

150 Rabaul Defenders Killed 1,500 Japs, Survivors Relate

Australians Tell How Air Force of 5 Planes Battled Against 150

By the Associated Press.

MELBOURNE, April 6.—The bloody story of the Japanese conquest of Rabaul, New Britain, in which 150 Australians mowed down about 1,500 Japanese in a single 200-yard stretch of beach, was told today with the arrival at Australian bases of 600 survivors of the Australian garrison.

Rabaul, former capital of New Britain, fell January 23 after the Japanese had pitted a landing force of 20,000 men, a formidable naval force and an air fleet of at least 150 bombers, dive bombers and fighters against Rabaul's Australian garrison of 1,400 men and an air force of 5 planes.

Rabaul's casualties were 700 killed, wounded or missing while Japanese losses were in excess of 2,000.

It was at Ralauna Beach that a unit of 150 Australians blazed away at a Japanese force which was caught in barbed wire at the water's edge.

Dead Stacked 6 Feet High.

Over a 200-yard beach front, it was reported, Japanese dead were stacked 6 feet high as an estimated 1,500 fell before the Australian fire—and the Australian cost was only 20 men slightly wounded.

The aerial attack on Rabaul, 800 miles northeast of the Australian mainland, began January 20 with 60 bombers and 20 fighters.

Against them the defenders were able to put into the air only 5 Wirraways — single-engine, general purpose monoplanes. The Australian planes accounted for two enemy craft before they were shot down, leaving Rabaul entirely without air protection. Anti-aircraft fire brought down 5 other planes.

Two days later, refugees from the island said, 110 Japanese aircraft bombed Rabau heavily—blasting Praed Point fortress for a solid hour. They attempted to land on the airport but demolition charges were exploded and two of the invading planes were destroyed. Machine-gun fire brought down a third.

The actual invasion began at 2:30 a.m. by a force of Japanese with blackened arms and faces and clad in shorts and singlets.

Thousands More Came.

That force was repulsed, but at dawn thousands of troops came, covered by the guns of warships.

and 100 dive-bombers and fighters.

The Australian garrison caught many landing barges with 50 to 100 men in each before the terrific slaughter of Ralauna Beach.

By noon the Japanese were swarming everywhere, survivors of the defense said, and further resistance was seen to be useless. Some Australian troops then suddenly withdrew through Okopo toward the bush.

Four hundred others took the Malabonga road toward Rabata, a village 30 miles distant, harried by Japanese planes. At Rabata food was picked up and troops moved into the jungle for what turned out to be a struggle of many weeks with mud, mosquitoes, malaria, rain and crocodile-infested rivers.

On many days, veterans of the struggle said, each man had only a single biscuit and one-twelfth of a tin of beer. Later, natives helped them supplement their food supply with yams and coconuts until they could reach Australian-held points on the island.

WINTER SOON FOR AMERICANS IN AUSTRALIA

APR 7 1942

U. S. Army headquarters in Australia, April 6. (AP)—Winter is in the offing in the southern part of this land below the equator, providing problems for those charged with keeping the American Expedition-Force contended and comfortable.

Some of the troops still are living in open shelters, receiving their food from outdoor kitchens, eating in mess halls that are only partly enclosed and bathing in water that is far from warm, Maj. Lynn Cowan, assistant morale officer, disclosed in a formal report to Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Cowan declared that steps to remedy this situation were being taken immediately.

"The boys realize that this is war and that they can't expect the comforts of home," Cowan said, "but they should have better conditions. Some are pretty miserable, but their spirit and discipline are swell."

Cowan's supperior, Col. Alexander L. P. Johnson, also emphasized the high morale of the American troops in a report to MacArthur in which he outlined plans for an organized program of entertainment and recreation to keep the men occupied when off duty.

The principal items on Johnson's program include organized sports, friendly athletic competition between Australians and Americans, nightly entertainments and a free weekly newspaper similar to "the stars and stripes" published by the AEF in the last war.

Johnson, formerly of Nogales, Ariz., and Tampa., Fla., and one-time judge advocate in the Philippines under Gen. Leonard . Wood, said the newspaper would be called "The Kookaburra", after Australia's distinctive laughing jackass bird.

"The aggressive spirit of this game little bird typifies the American soldier," he explained. The paper will stress the lighter aspect of American army life in Australia and will be published in collaboration with the Australian army weekly "Salt".

Australian-American competition in boxing, wrestling and baseball already is under way. Track meets and football games are planned as soon as equipment and uniforms can be assembled.

Camp Built In 12 Hours

[By the Associated Press]

Sydney, April 6 — American hustle is on the job in Australia, a correspondent for the Sydney Sun with the United States forces reported today, describing the transformation of a sheep pasture into a troop camp in twelve hours.

He said carpenters, plumbers, bricklayers, surveyors, draftsmen, electricians and road builders descended on the quiet sheep paddock "like a swarm of grasshoppers."

Roads Constructed

"Within an hour," he reported, "the site was pegged into streets and blocks.

"Within four hours framework buildings were up, tents were rigged and roads laid.

"Within six hours a permanent water system had been installed with hot and cold water and bathrooms.

Army Moves In

"Within eight hours each tent and building had been supplied with electric light, a drainage and sanitary system had been completed, and the camp was interlinked by telephone and radio.

"Within twelve hours an army had moved in; hot meals awaited them, and the carpenters, plumbers and all had moved off to the next job."

DUTCH SUBMARINE OUTWITS JAPS

Torpedoes Tanker, then Limps to Safety from Java Sea

By The Associated Press

A Pacific Port, April 6.—A Netherlands submarine has reached this port after torpedoing a 14,000-ton Japanese tanker in a strong convoy in the Java Sea and then slipping through a net of pursuing warships and aircraft despite considerable damage from depth charges.

A total of 67 depth charges exploded near the submarine, according to the story disclosed today by Aneta, Dutch news agency, and in addition there were numerous bomb attacks by Japanese aircraft.

Damaged fuel tanks leaked and the submarine left a trail of oil in her wake—but she managed nevertheless to slip from the Java Sea through Sunda Strait into the Indian Ocean.

Her adventure began as she sighted the tanker in the Java Sea escorted by one cruiser, three destroyers, two submarine chasers and two planes.

She slipped between the tanker and her escorts, fired a torpedo and then made a crash-dive.

Even as she was diving, her crew said, there came a terrific explosion as the torpedo hit home. At almost the same moment the explosion sof several air bombs were heard and felt.

For three hours the Japanese tried to rack down the submarine, exploding one depth charge after another and causing considerable damage which the crew said was repaired largely amid the attacks.

When the pursuers were silent for an hour, the submarine commander decided to surface—but he had 60 feet yet to go when explosions indicated the hostile aicraft had managed to keep on the trail. He sent his craft deep into the ocean again and waited until dark to continue his flight.

M'Arthur Accepts Honor Offered By Sgt. York

APR 7 1942

[By the Associated Press]

United States Army Headquarters in Australia, April 6—Gen. Douglas MacArthur accepted today the invitation of Sergt. Alvin C. York to become honorary international commander in chief of the Citizens Committee to Display the Flag.

MacArthur replied to a cable from Sergeant York, asking him to accept the honorary post:

"I cannot tell you the sense of distinction I feel in accepting the position you proffer me. Throughout the history of mankind symbols have exerted an impelling influence upon the lives of men. The cross and the flag are embodiments of our ideals and teach us not only how to live but how to die."

York's Message

Sergeant York said in a cable to General MacArthur:

"To fulfill your aim tc keep the flag flying I have accepted national chairmanship of the Citizens' Committee to Display the Flag in every home. I am assured the campaign is pleasing to the President.

"Your sanction of the program would weld the entire nation's enthusiastic cooperation. Will you accept the post of honorary commander in chief? Please cable support and acceptance."

The general's devotion to the flag was illustrated in Manila when an aide suggested that the flag furled over Fort Santiago might serve as an enemy target.

MacArthur replied:

"Men should take whatever other precautions necessary, but they should keep the flag flying."

Epic Of U. S. Naval Airmen

[By the Associated Press]

Melbourne, April 6—Another epic of heroism and endurance was unfolded today following the arrival in Australia of seven United States Navy airmen who within seventy-three hectic hours—

APR 7 1942

Escaped from their flying boat after it was shot down in flames off northern Australia by nine Japanese fighters with the loss of one of their comrades;

Drifted for hours in a rubber dinghy until they were rescued by an American merchantman, which in turn was sunk by Japanese dive bombers as the vessel raced to the aid of another ship set afire by enemy planes;

Survived this sinking and rowed for many hours in a lifeboat manned by panic-stricken natives before sighting an island;

Walked endless miles under a scorching sun to a settlement where they were picked up by a second rescue ship which was bombed by a Japanese flying boat but finally reached the safety of an Australian port.

'Peoples' War Name Proposed

Melbourne, April 6 (AP)—Answering President Roosevelt's suggestion for a name for the present war, Miss Vida Goldstein, of Melbourne, former leader of the International Federatoin of Women Voters, presented to Prime Minister John Curtin today a proposal to call it the "peoples' war."

She told Curtin the name "indicates the solemn pledge of the Allied Governments to their people that the war is being fought to establish a social order and spiritual values based on justice and security."

It was said Curtin was transmitting the suggestion to Washington.

MANCHUKUO ON ALERT

Premier Returns with Orders to Reinforce North Border

London, April 6—(AP)—Premier Chang Ching-hui of Manchukuo, returning to Harbin from a visit to Tokyo, said he had received orders to reinforce the northern frontier of Manchukuo, Exchange Telegraph said today in a despatch credited to the Rome radio.

It said Chang declared the reinforcement was ordered so that Japanese military operations in the south might proceed without being hampered by fear of surprise intervention from the rear.

Chang left Tokyo March 24 after a week's visit in honor of the establishment of Manchukuo under Japanese sponsorship.

Rise Laid to Soviet Neutrality —More Men for Manchuria

TOKYO, April 6 (From Japanese broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press) — An assurance by Lieut. Gen. Dutch Fight On In Java

United States Army Headquarters in Australia, April 6 (AP)—Two Dutch forces of considerable size still are battling the Japanese in Java, Lieut. Gov. Hubertus J. Van Mook, of the Netherlands East Indies, told Gen. Douglas MacArthur today.

The forces, under command of Generals Schilling and Pressman, are well supplied with food and munitions and should keep Japanese forces occupied for some time, Van Mook said.

The Netherlands official conferred at length with MacArthur on the role which the Dutch are expected to play henceforth in the war in the Pacific.

London, April 6—(AP)—The German-controlled Netherlands radio broadcast today that the Japanese had declared the 30,000 Netherlanders in overrun Sumatra enemy aliens and ordered their internment in concentration camps. Dutch quarters expressed the view that the Japanese were forced to take the step to cope with continuing resistance.

Japanese Diplomats To Confer On Turkey

Envoys To Berlin And Ankara Will Meet At Sofia

Bern Says

Bern, April 6 (AP)—Lieut. Gen. Hiroshi Oshima, Japanese Ambassador to Germany, arrived in Budapest today en route to Sofia to meet the Japanese Minister to Turkey for a conference Wednesday on Turkey's attitude toward the war.

The Balkan correspondent of the Basler Nachrichten said the Japanese legation at Sofia, Bulgaria, had confirmed the purpose of the meeting, which diplomatic circles in Ankara counted as important because of increasing Japanese activity in the Indian Ocean and "the possibility of the appearance of Japanese naval and air forces off southern Arabia at the entrance to the Persian gulf."

Allies Forging Ahead In Battle of Attrition

But Loss of Territory in 4 Months Since Pearl Harbor Presents Grave Problems—Jap Ship Losses Mounting.

APR 7 1942

By EDWARD E. BOMAR

WASHINGTON, April 6. (AP)—The Pacific war turns the four-month mark tomorrow with the United Nations apparently forging ahead in a savage struggle of attrition to compensate partly for previous losses of territory to the Japanese.

The Bright Side

A mounting score of Japanese ships and planes destroyed or crippled tops developments buoying hopes of a turning tide. Others include:

Arrival in Australia of General Douglas MacArthur and "considerable numbers" of American ground and air forces, to halt the enemy's southward drive and make ready for a future offensive.

British success in smashing Japan's "sudden death" air onslaught on the Colombo, Ceylon, base in the Indian Ocean. At least 57 of possibly 75 attacking planes were downed or damaged in this Easter attack.

Raids of American submarines in the Java Sea and the Indian Ocean which sank or damaged two enemy light cruisers and five other vessels.

Evidence that American fliers may have won aerial mastery over the northern approaches to Australia, where this last week-end they destroyed a score or more of enemy planes at a cost of three of their own.

Four months after Pearl Harbor, however, the Japanese are hammering with renewed fury at the besieged defenders of the Philippines, and continue to push forward in Burma on the eastern border of India.

Military movements arouse suspicion too that they may soon clash with Russia in Siberia, synchronizing their attack with a Nazi offensive in the west.

Severe Test in Philippines

In the Philippines, the renewed Japanese onslaught on the Bataan Peninsula and the nearby Manila Bay fortifications has confronted the defenders with the severest test since General MacArthur fought the foe to a standstill in February.

Several successive attacks, two supported by assaults by invasion barges on the Manila Bay shore of the Peninsula, have been beaten off by Lieutenant General Jonathan M. Wainwright's forces, but "some gains" were made in the last onslaught, and the situation of the defenders is obviously increasingly perilous.

The brightest spot in the Philippine picture is the sharp shooting of Corregidor's anti-aircraft gunners who downed at least 17 enemy bombers in less than two weeks and thereby freed the fortress from further raids for the time being.

Bad News

The fourth month of the war brought a succession of bad news for the United Nations which was only partly offset by successes.

Java, citadel of the Netherlands Indies, fell at the start of the month, major resistance apparently ceasing March 8.

In the Battle of the Java Sea February 27-28, it was disclosed, the United Nations lost five cruisers, seven destroyers and a sloop in a heroic attempt against overwhelming odds to head off the enemy invasion.

Other losses also were reported belatedly—sinking of the destroyer Peary February 19, of the aircraft tender Langley February 27, and the oil tanker Pecos on March 1, all near Java. Possibly 700 men lost their lives in these sinkings.

But heavy blows also were struck at the enemy. Notable were the raids by two strong naval squadrons on Marcus Island only 1,000 miles from Tokyo on March 4, and on Wake Island February 24. Enemy shore bases were blasted.

Naval planes and surface vessels cooperated with Army and Australian fliers in a dramatic joint raid March 11 on Salamaua and Lae in New Guinea which cost the foe seven sunken or crippled ships and at least five planes.

On April 4 came the Navy's announcement that American submarines operating in the Java Sea and the Indian Ocean had sunk a light cruiser, probably sunk another, and had damaged five other vessels. Only today, the Navy reported that U. S. submarines had sunk two Japanese tankers and one freighter in the western Pacific.

Altogether, as the fateful four months closed, the Navy was able to report 56 enemy warships and 79 noncombatant vessels sunk, probably sunk or damaged. The score of Army bombers was unofficially tabulated at 74 ships sunk or crippled.

New warships which have slid down the ways have more than compensated for the Navy's acknowledged losses of 25 ships of all types, in the Atlantic as well as at Pearl Harbor and elsewhere in the Pacific. Since December, there have been launched a battleship, 16 destroyers, two cruisers, two aircraft tenders and several other vessels.

Australian Says Dauntless Spirit Alone Can Recapture Pacific Area

Speaks At Unveiling Of Statue To Stand At West Point

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 6—Gen. Douglas MacArthur was hailed today by Herbert Evatt, Foreign Minister of Australia, as the "symbol of the valorous heart and the dauntless spirit which alone can recapture the Pacific area which the Japanese covet."

Evatt spoke at the unveiling of a portrait statue of MacArthur at ceremonies here in connection with the annual Army Day celebration. The program was broadcast to MacArthur and his associates in Australia by shortwave.

Given sufficient support in men and materiels, the Australian Foreign Minister declared, MacArthur "will build a monument to himself more lasting than bronze as the saviour of all the peoples in the Southwest Pacific."

To Stand At West Point

The statue was unveiled by Mrs. Arthur MacArthur, sister-in-law of the general. The statue is the gift of William Howard Hoeffer, New York businessman, and the work of Sculptor Nison Tregor. It will stand beside those of other eminent military leaders at West Point.

Joaquin M. Elizalde, Resident Commissioner of the Philippines, referred to General MacArthur as the "hero of Bataan" and said that all Filipinoes respect him and revere him.

Pacific Fleet Called Stronger Than Before Pearl Harbor Attack

Stambaugh Says Knox Authorized Statement; Hits Rumor Mongering

APR 7 1942

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 6.—Lynn Stambaugh, national commander of the American Legion, in a radio address last night quoted a statement he credited to Secretary of the Navy Knox saying that "the Nation's Pacific Fleet in ships, planes and men is even stronger today than it was before December 7."

The Legion commander, deploring complacency and rumor mongering, urged a return to "100 per cent Americanism," and asked that everyone demand proof of many rumors and "inside stories" relating to the war.

Quotes Hayes Statement.

He quoted a statement from former Comdr. Ed Hayes, now a special assistant to Secretary Knox, which said:

"The Navy Department is aware of the many rumors which have arisen about the Japanese action at Pearl Harbor, rumors so fantastic in some cases as to include the whispered statement that the Pacific Fleet was completely wiped out. I am authorized by Secretary Knox to state for the first time that as of this date, and for some time past, the Pacific Fleet in ships, planes and men today is even stronger than it was before December 7."

Calls for Unity.

Mr. Stambaugh urged Legion members to assume leadership in the civilian war effort, adding "there is not now within this country the bright spirit of unity which flamed high as an accompaniment to our entry into this war. I call on you of the Legion to help recapture this spirit of unity before our Nation suffers irreparable harm."

"There are Americans today who, deliberately or innocently, are earning the Iron Cross and the Order of the Rising Sun for their work in spreading Axis propaganda," Mr. Stambaugh continued. "There are Americans who are disrupting the national unity and who are willing to admit that we are defeated, even before we have begun to fight * * *."

REAR ADMIRAL J. W. WILCOX, JR., IS LOST AT SEA

APR 7 1942

High Officer Is Washed Overboard During Heavy Weather, Navy Says

WASHINGTON, April 6 (AP) — Rear Admiral J. W. Wilcox, Jr., has been lost overboard "at sea in heavy weather during normal cruising," the Navy announced today.

No additional details were disclosed by the department.

Admiral Wilcox had been on duty at sea since November, 1941. His official residence is listed as Atlanta, Ga.

He was born in Milledgville, Ga., March 22, 1882, and was appointed to the Naval Academy in 1901. He won his Navy "N" in football in 1903 and 1904.

Immediately prior to his service at sea, Admiral Wilcox was president of the board of inspection and survey at the Navy Department, a post to which he was appointed in September, 1940.

He received the Mexican Service Medal for service in the U. S. S. Dolphin, in 1914, and earned the Victory Medal with the Atlantic Fleet Clasp during the first World War.

He was commended by the Navy for services during the first World War as flag secretary to Vice-Admiral DeWitt Coffman.

He is survived by his widow, the former Miss Caroline Manigault, whom he married in Charleston, S. C., Dec. 22, 1919, and two children, Arthur M. Wilcox, 21, and Mary M. Wilcox, 11.

Two C. And G. Survey Ships Jap War Victims

The Research Beached In Manila Bay, The Fathomer Missing, Admiral Colbert Reveals

Washington, April 6 (AP)—Rear Admiral L. O. Colbert, director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, announced today that both of his agency's ships in the Philippine Islands were either damaged or missing.

The survey vessel Research was beached on the western side of Manila Bay after being damaged by bombings at Engineer Island on December 28 and in Manila Bay December 29 and 30. The survey ship Fathomer was last heard from at Manila before the outbreak of war and its fate is unknown.

Admiral Colbert indicated that the personnel of the Research escaped serious casualties. He added that the shore office of the agency, including map-making facilities, had been safely transferred to army units operating in the Philippines.

The Research was commanded by Lieut. George E. Morris, Jr., of Minneapolis. The Fathomer was commanded by Lieut. (j. g.) J. W. Stirni, of Milford, Del.

Four Die As Bomber Crashes And Burns

Honolulu, April 6 (AP)—Army authorities today reported an army bomber crashed and burned last night with a loss of at least four lives.

Four bodies had been recovered and it was feared there were additional victims.

The crash occurred on the windward side of Oahu Island. No other details were available.

Soviet Losses Only 84

This tremendous toll was rolled up, a Moscow communique said at a cost of only 84 Soviet planes. On Saturday and Sunday alone, it added, 221 Nazi craft were destroyed.

Erupting in full fury over the week end, the biggest day's total was reported yesterday, when 119 Nazi craft were listed as destroyed in the air and on the ground after Saturday's count reached 102.

The communique said briefly that "no essential changes took place at the front."

A supplement to the Moscow communique said that in the last two days of fighting on the Leningrad frout 2,300 German officers and men were killed.

A Russian Guards unit in the Kalinin sector recaptured seven more inhabited localities from the Germans, taking much equipment, it added.

Unprecedented Easter Snow

Worse-than-usual weather of a sodden Russian Spring, along with the Red Army's unceasing pressure on the key German forward bases, was regarded tonight as seriously dampening German hopes for an early Spring drive to the east.

An unprecedented Eastern snow on some parts of the battlefront emphasized the lateness of the season this year and underlined the prospect of weeks of slow thawing that will turn roads into rivers of mud and fields into quagmires.

Although the Germans apparently have started feeling out the front for weak spots, Russian dispatches reported the Red Army still pushing doggedly to the west in their offensive which has cost the Germans important forward positions and sapped the Nazi striking power.

Nazi Reserves Mauled

These reports mentioned particularly the weakening of the German reserve strength on the bitterly-contested southern front where Marshal Semeon Timoshenko's divisions have been said to have mauled troops the Nazis had expected to keep under wraps until time for their offensive.

The Germans also were believed to have been forced to re-plot their campaign on the front west of Moscow where the Russians claimed to have killed 40,000 Nazis from March 23 to April 3, retaking 10 communities and endangering the key German positions at Vyazma and Gzhatsk.

(Dispatches reaching London reported the Red Army shelling Bryansk, 200 miles southwest of Moscow, on one flank of the central front, and pushing forward on the other with cavalry raids northwest of the capital.

(The Germans claimed their troops had lunged forward at places on the central front, after weeks of defensive fighting, and captured 69 communities).

Battlefield Thawing, Nazis and Reds Jockey For Drive Positions

Russians Claim Toll of 102 Warplanes in Day; Leningrad Is Raided

APR 7 1942

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, April 6.—Exceptionally heavy land and aerial action in the jockeying of masses of German and Russian troops for advantage in the grand spring campaign beat fiercely on the thawing Soviet battlefield today.

The Russians claimed a total of 102 German planes shot down or destroyed on the ground last Saturday and officially announced in a special communique that the invaders lost 40,000 men and officers killed on the central front before Moscow between March 23 and April 4.

The Russians also claimed the capture of huge quantities of war material in that bloody area and said 161 inhabited localities had been retaken by their soldiers.

The Red Army organ, Red Star, declared Russian soldiers pressing on westward on the central front had crossed a river behind which the Germans had established their line of resistance.

Germans Raid Leningrad.

German planes pounded furiously at Leningrad Saturday night in the first big raid reported on that key Russian city in months, but the Moscow radio said anti-aircraft batteries and fighter planes dispersed most of the invading craft. The Moscow broadcast said anti-aircraft guns brought down 13 German bombers and Red fighters shot down five more.

The report said some persons were killed when the Germans jettisoned their bombs over living quarters.

The 18 planes downed in Leningrad were part of a bag of 102 German planes the Russians said were shot down or destroyed on the ground along the whole front Saturday while the Red Army lost only 16 planes.

From foreign sources came indications that Germany and Russia were lining up for the spring offensive which the Germans are expected to launch.

Russian reports in London said some 90 new Soviet divisions, or about 1,350,000 men, were concentrated in the 250 miles of defenses between Kharkov and Taganrog. The Ankara radio said these men were trained during the winter on the banks of the Volga.

Other reports said Rumanian troops were being massed on the Russian frontier; fresh Italian divisions were reported en route to the front along with Italian aircraft.

Russians Thrown Out of 69 Localities, Nazis Claim

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts). April 6 (AP).—The German high command reported today that local Russian attacks had failed and that the Soviets were thrown out of 69 localities in the central sector.

The Germans also declared successful night air attacks were made against military installations at Moscow.

Germany also struck at Russia's war industries behind Moscow, according to the communique which reported air attacks on Russian aircraft works at Rybinsk on the Volga River 160 miles northeast of Moscow.

Troops Ready for New Drive on Reds---Berlin

BERLIN, (From German Broadcasts), April 6. (AP)—The Berlin radio said tonight that the German Army had made successful use of strong point tactics, rather than a continuous defense line, in Russia to cover the mobilization of fresh troops and supplies for a renewed drive against the Soviets on whose side "exhaustion is clearly noticeable."

This new offensive will begin when the present thaw ends and the dry season begins, the announcer said, quoting a DNB dispatch.

The Russians also were mobilizing men, he pointed out.

"On both the German and the enemy sides plans are being drawn up for new offensive or defensive operations.

"On the Soviet side exhaustion is clearly noticeable.

"Naturally those German units which have been giving the Russians tit for tat by their continuous attacks in snow and ice cannot be compared with that part of the army which, fresh and rested, is ready for attack.

"But at no time and at no point on the gigantic east front has the morale of German troops been even temporarily shaken."

Recapture of Island Announced By Finns

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts) April 6 (AP)—The Finnish High Command announced today recapture of Tytaersaari, an island on the Gulf of Finland, on April 2. It is south of the Island of Suursaari, occupation of which was announced March 28.

Russian forces on two other islands, Lavansaari and Seiskaari, were bombed, a communique added. All these islands were ceded to Russia by Finland in the 1940 peace.

Finnish artillery action was reported at points all along the front from Karelian Isthmus to the far north.

Reds Shoot Down 57 of 60 Nazi 'Chuists

LONDON, April 6 (AP)—The Moscow radio reported tonight that 60 German parachute troops attempted a landing behind Soviet lines, but before they reached the ground 57 of them had been killed by Red army machine-gunners. This frustrated effort was said to have been made after the Germans had been repelled with severe losses in repeated land assaults on the Russian line.

grew dim today with new developments.

Soviet reports of drastic weakening of German spring reserves on the Southwestern front were considered in informed Russian circles as bound to bring changes in the Nazi strategy.

Thrown Off Stride

In addition, Red army claims to have killed 40,000 Germans between March 23 and April 3 on the Western front, together with the recapture of 161 communities, were felt to have caused the Germans to modify their plans.

Such Western-front successes brought new threats to German defenders in the Gzhatsk-Vyazma area, directly west of Moscow on the Smolensk highway, where Red army units already have knifed deep into territory which German prisoners have reported as the offensive's starting point.

Mud Widespread

Another factor which may delay the attack is spring weather, now breaking over the Russian plains with accompanying quagmires, slush and mud, making roads, highways and bypaths impassable.

From the southwest front, where the fighting has been described as violent as Marshal Semeon Timoshenko struck forward, came reports that the Sixth and Seventeen German Armies are being used up for defense work.

Exclusive Spring Units

Red Star, Russian army newspaper, said these armies had figured prominently in Hitler's plans for the spring.

The Twelfth and Twenty-fourth Divisions, said to be exclusive spring units, already have fought and are tired, it was said.

The dispatches asserted that the Second army under Col. Gen. Baron Maximilian von Weichs has had to hurry to the help of the defeated Thirty-fourth Army Corps the grand army under Marshal Timoshenko in the encirclement battles of Bryansk and Vyazma.)

It was said that the 229th and the 111th Divisions also were rushed up to stem Marshal Timoshenko, but that the Soviet defender of south Russia still was moving forward.

Red Star said that the Germans were moving up "strategic reserves" from the deep German rear.

Kuibyshev, April 6—The next six or eight weeks are expected to see the Russian horse really reach its fighting gait as the battlefront becomes one vast quagmire.

A good example of what machines will be up against was given on a ride through the country today when our automobile got stuck in the mud, but hundreds of horse-drawn vehicles moved on uninterrupted.

A large tractor pulling a piece of machinery bogged down. In desperation the drivers finally abandoned their tractor for six horses.

Sledge's Important Role

A Russian sledge, turned out by hand by two men in two hours, will play an important part in the war during the thaw.

It's of such simply design that it's primitive. This contraption consists of two stout wooden cut runners atop which is a wooden framework and is pulled by a single horse. Built right on the ground, it is amazing what loads it carries and what a horse can pull due to the lack of friction.

The sledge is called a "rozvalni" and its construction has been unchanged for centures. Drivers ride—even sleep—o nthem, hence the name which comes from the verb rozvalista, meaning relaxing.

Cavalry A Big Factor

During the coming operations the rozvalni is going to be as important as the highest perfected weapon, tank or plane.

Here's a prediction—look for increasing cavalry operations as the Russians continue to carry the attack to the invader.

Hard-riding Cossacks already have proved their worth in this war, but military authorities say what they have accomplished in the winter is nothing to what they can do in the spring.

NARVIK COMMANDO ATTACK REPORTED

British Quote Stockholm Paper on Assault by Troops and Planes

By The Associated Press

London, April 6.—Reuters quoted a report today in the Stockholm newspaper Aftonbladet that British troops and planes raided the Narvik area of the German-held coast of Norway last Friday.

Explosions, it said, could be heard on the Swedish side of the frontier which runs close to the coast in the Narvik area, almost touching the back of Narvik fjord.

Authoritative London sources, however, said they had no information about such a raid (which, even if true, the British probably would keep secret until the return of the raiders).

A special Stockholm despatch to the New York Times last night, quoting the newspaper Afton Tidningen, said many casualties and considerable damage to shipping had been inflicted in the far northern

Growing Airpower of United Nations Scores One of Mightiest Blows Yet; Russians Lead, With 221 Nazi Craft Destroyed

APR 7 1942

By The Associated Press

The swelling air power of the United Nations scored one of the mightiest series of blows yet against the Axis in aerial warfare over the week end, destroying by official count 279 enemy planes and damaging scores more at a cost of 47 Allied craft.

The Russian air force—which Hitler once boasted was destroyed—turned in the best performance, listing 221 Nazi planes wiped out Saturday and Sunday against 33 Soviet losses for the two days.

Furthermore, Moscow announced officially that 194 other German planes were destroyed in the air and on the ground in the six days preceding Saturday, for an eight-day total of 415. The Russians said their own losses for the eight days were 84 craft.

More Than 300 Bombers Raid Rhineland and Paris Area.

By Kurt Gunnelle

LONDON, April 6 (AP)—One of the mightiest British air fleets ever to cross the English Channel — a force of more than 300 bombers—cast a thousand tons of explosive and countless fire bombs upon German war plants in an overnight raid extending from the French coast inland to the Parisian industrial suburbs and on east to the heart of the Rhineland.

In this great attack, a part of a master plan to choke the flow of German arms eastward to the Russian front, only five British craft were lost, the Air Ministry announced today in briefly recapitulating one of the most successful operations of recent months.

Hard hit were the docks at Le Havre and the Gnome-Rhone works at Gennevilliers near Paris, in which French workmen under the lash of the Nazi conqueror are making airplane engine parts for use against England and the Russian allies, but the greatest power of the raid was expended on Cologne, the metropolis of the industrial Rhineland and the hub of its railway transport.

150 Planes Raid Cologne

More than 150 British planes beat at Cologne, in the 105th assault upon that city.

Returning pilots told of great flames left in Cologne and of British super-bombs falling upon the targets in fountains of fire.

"It was," said Flight Sergeant Wen Field of Montreal, Canada, "the best of the nine trips I have made."

The Germans themselves in official broadcasts acknowledged during the day that there had been material damage in western Germany, although claiming it was to residential sections, but asserted that only slight damage was caused in the Paris industrial area.

(A Vichy broadcast said that there were several casualties in the Paris area and that bombs fell on Argenteuil, Marly and Colombes as well as Gennevilliers.)

The extraordinarily small number of British losses relative to the weight of the attack—less than two per cent—was stressed by an authoritative informant with the restrained remark:

"Very satisfactory."

The Paris area attack was the fifth since March 3.

Other British offensive action of a different nature was reported during the day but not confirmed.

British News Agency dispatches attributed to the Stockholm newspaper Aftonbladet a statement that British troops and planes had raided the Narvik area of the German-held coast of Norway last Friday. Explosions could be heard on the Swedish side of the frontier, the reports said.

A German raider flew over the south coast of England at dusk tonight and dropped bombs, but the Air Ministry reported that only slight damage was caused and no one was injured.

300 RAF Bombers Smash At Nazi Arms Plants

APR 7 1942

(By the Associated Press)

London, April 6—More than 300 RAF bombers, an air fleet approaching the record number of more than 400 raiders which attacked London less than a year ago, smashed hard during the night at the German arms industry in the Rhineland and in the Paris area, it was reported authoritatively today.

Half Hit At Cologne

Cologne was said to have been one of the main targets of the RAF, but British bombers also attacked the Gnome-Rhone works at Gennevilliers, about three miles from Paris, which the British charged was making aero-engine parts and other war material for the enemy.

Indicative of the weight of the attack, it was reported that more than half of the 300 planes took part in the bombing of Cologne, raided for the one hundred and fifth time.

British sources estimated that the big RAF bomber squadrons unloaded about 1,000 tons of high explosives and many incendiaries in the raids, which spread from Le Havre, on the occupied French coast, to the Rhineland.

Scores of four-engined Stirlings, each carrying eight tons of bombs, were believed to have taken part.

The loss of only five—less than two per cent.—of the air armada was called "very satisfactory."

By contrast, the British lost thirty-seven bombers last November in a large-scale raid on Berlin.

That more than 300 bombers participated was fully and quickly advertised—contrary to the usual policy of concealing numbers—suggesting that the attack ranked among Britain's biggest.

The raid on the Paris area was the fifth there since March 3 when the British began hitting at French industries working for the German war machine with an attack on the huge Renault works.

Twice last week the RAF bombers struck at the Nazi-directed Matford works at Poissy, on the Seine river, eight miles from Paris.

A patrolling British fighter was reported authoritatively to have shot a German fighter down over the Channel this morning.

British Statement

An authoritative statement said:

"The main RAF attack last night was on the Rhineland.

"Other objectives included docks at Le Havre and the Gnome-Rhone works at Gennevilliers, near Paris, which is an important center making aero-engine parts and other war materials for the enemy.

"Over 300 RAF bombers were engaged in the night's operations, from which five of our bombers are missing."

Bomb Damage Is Slight At Paris, Germans Say

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 6 (AP).—D.N.B. said today that British planes again attacked Paris last night but that heavy German anti-aircraft fire shielded all important industrial works from the raiders and only slight bomb damage was caused.

R. A. F. bombing squadrons also were over Western Germany during the night, it said, causing some material damage in residential sections and civilian casualties.

The high command said British bomb raids on Western Germany were mainly against the town of Bonn.

"According to reports so far received three of the attacking bombers were shot down," the news agency added.

The Germany Army bulletin yesterday said 14 British bombers were shot out of a formation which attacked western occupied regions Saturday under the protection of a strong fighter squadron.

Waves of German Planes Pound Malta, Italy Says

By the Associated Press.

ROME (from Italian broadcasts), April 6.—Strong German air formations attacked Malta repeatedly yesterday and last night, scoring direct hits on a British cruiser and damaging an arsenal, several factories and fuel depots, the Italian high command announced today.

Repeated attacks on the Mediterranean island stronghold have done "considerable damage" to runways and other facilities at defense airports, the communique said.

One British plane was reported shot down in the latest raids.

Large-scale Assault Launched At Malta

VALLETTA, Malta, April 6—(AP)—German bombers started a large-scale assault on Malta late today after a number of small raids earlier in the day.

A communique reported that during the violent raids over the weekend a large church and a motion picture house were demolished and a convent school and a large apartment building received direct hits. A number of streets are blocked by debris and craters, but public services are functioning normally.

Five German planes were reported shot down Sunday and 11 others probably destroyed.

13 Planes Claimed by British.

VALLETTA, Malta, April 6 (AP).—Six Axis bombers were destroyed, one Messerschmitt fighter was probably destroyed and six other planes were damaged seriously in raids on Malta in the previous 24 hours, a communique announced last night.

For the third successive day the harbor area was the main point of attack by waves of Junkers 88 bombers and Junkers 87 dive bombers.

Vichy Aid To Axis Alleged

APR 7 1942

Vichy, April 6 (AP)—The Paris region was held under an air alarm from 4 to 5.30 A. M. today and anti-aircraft batteries threw a heavy weight of steel into the sky.

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 6—The Free French Press Service asserted today that France is scheduled to produce 6,000 planes in 1942, and that all but 1,000 are for Germany.

The remaining 1,000, it said, are for Vichy's armed forces.

Other military aid being given to the Axis by the Vichy Government, the statement continued, included the manufacture of torpedoes for the Germans at Toulon and for the Italians at St. Tropez.

Troop-Carrying Planes

The seaplane works at Toulon, the statement said, have produced three prototypes of troop-carrying planes and "are now making plans for their mass production."

The statement also said three German ships arrived at Marseille "a few days ago."

It added that night work in the Dodeville Aeroengine Works at Marseille had ceased since the RAF bombed the Renault factories near Paris.

Vichy Air Strength Up

Gen.. Jean Marie Bergeret, French Secretary for Aviation, disclosed at Vichy Saturday that Germany had given special permission for the Vichy Government to increase its air force, and that it now has 1,000 modern planes.

Laval Blocking Laid To U. S.

Vichy, April 6 (AP)—The Paris newspaper Nouveaux Temps said today that United States pressure had blocked a rapprochement of Marshal Petain and Pierre Laval and that the Axis powers were "through with France" because of her failure to collaborate.

The writer, Jean Luchaire, warned that the Axis would take large slices of the French Empire unless Vichy sided with Germany.

Rome Reports Libya Fighting

APR 7 1942

Rome, April 6—The Associated Press listening post has recorded an Italian broadcast in which sharp patrol fighting in the Libyan desert was reported today by the high command, which said Axis forces had repulsed advance British units, supported by artillery, after an encounter southeast of El Mechili.

The Italians also reported their planes had attacked British tank concentrations in the same area, severely damaging a number of vehicles. Other Fascist air formations were said to have bombed the Martruh-Alexandria rail line, cutting it in several places.

(The British reported yesterday from Cairo that their forces had routed an Italian column about fifteen miles southwest of El Mechili. Today's Cairo communique mentioned continued patrol skirmishes.)

The German air force was said to be continuing its attack on the British Mediterranean base of Malta "by day and night."

Italian Repatriation Ships Reach Gibraltar

Bringing Back Part Of White Population Of African Colonies Now Under Allied Control

Gibraltar, April 6 (AP)—The Italian liners Saturnia and Vulcania, showing large red crosses on their foremasts, dropped anchor in Gibraltar today in accordance with a plan to repatriate part of the white population of Italian African colonies now under Allied control.

This repatriation of civilians followed announcement Saturday that Britain and Italy had started to exchange their sick and wounded prisoners of war. Ships carrying the war prisoners met at the western Turkish port of Smyrna for the exchange.

Escape Of Norwegian Ships From Sweden Laid To Fog

Sailor Says It Saved Those Which Reached England When Nazis Attacked With Bombs And Torpedoes

APR 7 1942

[By the Associated Press]

A British Port, April 6—A number of the eleven Norwegian ships which last week made a daring dash toward Britain from Goteborg, Sweden, have reached this port safely after being attacked repeatedly by German airplanes, naval surface craft and submarines.

A combination of heavy fog, skillful seamanship and plain luck enabled the ships to run the German blockade. But some of them were sunk by the Germans.

[Copenhagen dispatches said that from two to four of the ships were sunk, and that two turned back to Goteborg.]

A young Norwegian sailor who came through the gantlet said "those torpedoes seemed to fill the sea."

Chartered To British

The ships had been in the Swedish harbor opposite the northern tip of Denmark since the German invasion of Norway, and were chartered formally to the British by the Norwegian Government in exile.

The problem was to get them through an alert German blockade. The attempt was made last Tuesday.

Germans Had Tip

"We knew we were taking tremendous risks, but we did not expect things to happen as quickly as they did," the young Norwegian said.

"The Germans had been tipped off. They were waiting just off the Swedish coast in the heavily mined Skagerrak, and opened up on us immediately.

"We could do nothing in reply.

"Their shells were screaming all around us. German bombers droned overhead and it seemed as if nothing could save us. Some of us were being fired on at point-blank range.

"Somehow we managed to survive, some of us.

Most Had Turned Back

"Most of the ships had turned back from this almost certain destruction. Then suddenly a heavy fog came down. Visibility was nil, and the Nazi bombardment stopped.

"We crept out again. Then I saw a vivid flash. I think it was a ship which had turned with us on the second attempt to make a run for it. She must have been hit by a torpedo.

"Our ship kept on at full speed. Above us we could still hear the roar of German bombers, and every now and then the thud of exploding bombs. In spite of the fog the German warships and U-boats were resuming the attack.

"Those torpedoes seemed to fill the sea, but all missed us. We were chased for hours and attacked with every form of weapon—bombs, shells, torpedoes.

"But that fog was our salvation."

NORSE SHIPS SAFE

British Announce Arrivals After Sea Dash.

London, April 6 (A. P.).—An undisclosed number of the ten or eleven Norwegian ships which set out from Gothenburg, Sweden, last Thursday in an attempt to run the German naval blockade was reported safe in British ports today. Their arrival was announced in a terse bulletin which said:

"Recent sailings from Gothenburg to the United Kingdom of a number of Norwegian merchant ships under charter to His Majesty's Government have now been completed. While complete success was not achieved, certain ships have arrived safely in this country."

The Vichy radio said on Saturday that two ships had reached Britain. Earlier reports from Stockholm said that German warships had sunk two and possibly four in the Skagerrak and that several had turned back, but that some probably had gotten through.

Liner Drottningholm To Leave Soon For U. S.

Stockholm, April 6 (AP)—The Swedish passenger ship Drottningholm, which is to be used to exchange German diplomats in the United States and American diplomats held in Germany, is expected to leave on the voyage to New York about April 15.

A number of American citizens in Sweden are planning to make the crossing.

First Officer Is Shifted From R.C.A.F. to U.S. Army

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 6.—Group Capt. Harold Fowler, director of United States personnel in the Royal Canadian Air Force, was transferred to the United States Army today, the first officer of the R. C. A. F. to do so. He was sworn in with the rank of colonel at a ceremony in the United States Embassy.

A former deputy police commissioner in New York City whose home is in Far Hills, N. J., Col. Fowler has been in Britain since last autumn.

He was born in Liverpool and as a sportsman he twice rode his own horses in the Grand National, steeplechase classic.

He served in the Royal Flying Corps in the first World War and later transferred to the United States Army Air Service.

In today's ceremony he was sworn in by Col. I. B. Summers, adjutant general.

Decoration Penalizes Flyers

APR 7 1942

London, April 6 (AP)—American flyers in the RAF Eagle Squadrons have introduced a new decoration—"the order of prang"—but it never appears in official citations.

"Prang" is Eagle slang for crash. Any American pilot who damages his plane gets the decoration whether he wants it or not, if an investigation shows the damage might have been avoided.

The "order", a large wooden cross in the shape of a German iron cross, is presented at full dress parade together with a scroll detailing the damage.

For seven days the award must be worn.

"It's made the Americans put their planes down as if they were made of glass," one RAF pilot commented.

CANADIANS IN BRITAIN ORGANIZE TO ATTACK

1st Army sets up Headquarters in United Kingdom

Somewhere in England, April 6—(AP)—Formation of a Canadian First Army headquarters in the United Kingdom was announced today, and its commander, Lieutenant General A. G. L. McNaughton, declared that it would provide a Canadian organization "competent to undertake the planning for, eventual offensive operations on the continent."

"It will keep the closest liaison with British organizations set up for similar purposes," McNaughton said in a statement from the new headquarters which was opened this morning in southern England.

He said formation of the First Canadian Army "is a clear recognition that the war can only be won by attack aimed at the heart of Germany."

An Ottawa announcement on the setting up of headquarters said Acting Lieutenant General H. D. G. Crerar had been named commander of one of the new army's two corps.

Time Bombs Explode In Belfast Theater Used by U. S. Troops

Later Gun Fight Between Police and Armed Band Results in One Death

By the Associated Press.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, April 6.—Three German-type incendiary time bombs exploded harmlessly yesterday in a movie theater which just had been emptied of a Saturday night crowd of United States and British troops, and a search disclosed other explosives hidden like Easter eggs in the building.

Besides the explosions, the rattle of gunfire in a running fight between police and members of an armed band marked the anniversary of the Easter rebellion of 1916 when Irish Republicans revolted against the British in Dublin.

The outbreaks followed arrests recently among reputed members of the outlawed Irish Republican Army in Northern Ireland.

The police, fired on from an air-raid shelter as their car passed by in broad daylight, were among many on patrol to guard against such incidents.

One policeman was killed in the ensuing fight. A man who police said was a member of the armed band was wounded seriously and five other men and two women were arrested.

The theater where the bombing occurred had been requisitioned for shows for British and American troops. A strong guard was posted until after a concert last night which was attended by 1,500 troops and members of women's auxiliary services.

U. S. ARMY IN IRELAND ALERT

Gen. Hartle in Message to Men Suggests War Title

By RICE TURNER

WITH THE U. S. ARMY IN NORTHERN IRELAND, April 6 (AP)—Major-General Russell P. Hartle, field commander of the AEF in Britain, suggested tonight in an order of the day commemorating the United States entry into World war I, 25 years ago, that the present conflict be called a "Crusade for Living."

Broadcasting to his troops, some veterans of the last war and others sons of veterans, General Hartle said:

"If in the future this war is known by some other designation than World war II, it should be named in terms that express this will to fight for truth, international character and freedom—in other words, a 'Crusade for Living.'"

The rigid training programme of his forces abroad permitted only the barest ceremonials to mark the anniversary. At each camp the general's message was read, reminding the forces of their "individual responsibility" and saying that "every act will take America a step toward victory or a step toward defeat.

"To win this war, there must be no backward or downward step," his message said, adding that "never in all history was the determination of our men to accomplish the task that lies before them as intensely great as it is today."

General Hartle said he and his soldiers were "thrilled" by General Douglas MacArthur's stand, "inspired" by naval successes and "not unmindful of work in the munitions industries."

Sight of Hams Causes Near-riot in Italy

BERN, Switzerland, April 6. (AP)—Two succulent hams hanging in a Milan store window caused a near-riot among ration-pinched Italians who couldn't believe their own eyes.

The incident was related today in a Milan dispatch printed in the Fascist newspaper La Stampa of Turin.

The newspaper said a grumbling crowd gathered in front of the store at the spectacle of "two marvelous hams," and began asking one another if the hams were real or a joke.

The crowd grew, traffic was blocked and police were called. Finally the authorities learned that, sure enough, the hams, described as "gifts from God," were real and had been acquired legally.

The proud owner, who had put the hams in the window merely for show purposes, was ordered to hang them out of public view.

WASHINGTON, April 6—A War Department communiqué, based on reports received here up to 9:30 A. M. today, said:

APR 7 1942

1. Philippine Theatre:

The enemy on April 5 renewed the attack on the right center of our line in Bataan. Though the assault was made with great force, supported by tanks, artillery and dive-mombers, it was stopped by our troops after hard fighting. The enemy was unable to extend the slight gains made on the previous day. Japanese losses were heavy. One enemy dive-bomber was shot down by our anti-aircraft artillery.

Another attempt to land hostile troops on the east coast of Bataan under cover of darkness last night was frustrated by light artillery fire from our beach defenses.

Corregidor was again free from hostile air raids, but two nemy dive-bombers attacked Fort Frank yesterday morning and Fort Drum yesterday afternoon with light bombs. No damage and no casualties resulted.

2. India:

A delayed message confirms previous press dispatches reporting a successful raid by American Army air units on Japanese shipping at the Andaman Islands in the Bay of Bengal on April 2. The attacking planes were heavy bombers of the Flying Fortress type. The attack was led by Major Gen. Lewis H. Brereton, United States Army. Direct hits were scored on a Japanese cruiser and a transport. Both ships were left in flames and heavy explosions were observed. Three American planes were slightly damaged by anti-aircraft fire and by enemy fighter planes, but all returned to their base.

3. There is nothing to report from other areas.

A communiqué based on reports received until 4 P. M. said:

1. Philippine Theatre:

Savage fighting is in progress in Bataan today, where General Wainwright's troops are resisting stubbornly the repeated attacks of Japanese assault troops. During the day the enemy made some gains, but at a heavy cost in casualties. The attacks were supported by artillery and dive-bombers. One enemy plane was shot down by our fire.

On the east coast hostile artillery, firing from barges, harassed our beach defenses. Most of the shells were short of the targets.

There was no air attack on Corregidor today.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

A Navy Department communiqué said:

Far East—1. A United States submarine has reported the sinking of an enemy freighter in Japanese waters while on extended patrol in that area.

Southwest Pacific Area—2. A United States submarine has reported that it sank two heavily laden Japanese tankers in waters near the Caroline Islands while on extended patrol in that area. The submarine was fired upon by one of the tankers, but escaped without damage.

3. These sinkings have not been reported in any previous Navy Department communiqué.

4. There is nothing to report from other areas.

Chinese

NEW DELHI, India, April 6 (AP)—The following Chinese communiqué on the Burma front was received here today:

Reports from Chinese field headquarters indicate that the Japanese have launched a small attack on the Mawchi-Toungoo highway, using about one battalion of infantry.

Yesterday there were two bombing raids on Chinese troop positions. The Chinese suffered one truck destroyed and some wounded in two raids. There was no other damage reported.

A resume of the twelve-day battle of Toungoo has been received. During furious fighting which took place 3,700 Japanese were

British

NEW DELHI, India, April 6 (AP)—British headquarters issued this communiqué on the Burma operations:

There is no change in the situation on the Irrawaddy front.

Enemy action was confined yesterday to air bombing and reconnaissance.

On the east bank their forward troops are located in the area of Nyaungbinzeik.

A further British announcement said:

APR 7 1942

In the morning of April 5 it became apparent that an enemy naval force including an aircraft carrier was operating in the Bay of Bengal.

Several attacks have been made against merchant ships both by surface craft and aircraft.

During the morning and again in the afternoon Vizagapatam Harbor was bombed by a small number of aircraft, causing slight damage to the harbor area.

Cocanada was also bombed, although the casualties were slight.

MELBOURNE, Australia, April 6 (AP)—Prime Minister John Curtin issued this communiqué today:

Port Moresby, New Guinea, was raided for the twenty-third time shortly after noon today when seven Japanese bombers escorted by fighters made an attack. Details are awaited, but it is confirmed that there was no damage or casualties.

An additional Australian communiqué said:

The attack on Kupang by the Royal Australian Air Force yesterday was on a small scale and was directed at wharves and grounded aircraft and was pressed home in the face of most intensive anti-aircraft fire. It is believed the attack was successful. As our bombers left to return home a column of smoke was seen rising from the target area.

The enemy losses in Saturday's raid on Darwin mentioned in yesterday's communiqué are now confirmed. Five bombers and two fighters were shot down. Our losses were three aircraft, the pilot of one being safe.

CAIRO, Egypt, April 6 (AP)—The Royal Air Force Middle East Command issued this communiqué today:

Enemy airdromes at Berka and harbor shipping at Bengazi were again raided by our bomber aircraft during the night of April 4.

During the same night our aircraft bombed and machine-gunned airdromes at Martuba and attacked other objectives in the same area. Fighter aircraft were in action over Cyrenaica April 5 and one Junkers-88 was shot down. In the Gialo area a twin-engined enemy aircraft was destroyed on the ground.

Enemy aircraft continued their raids on Malta yesterday and our fighters shot down three Junkers-88s.

A further Junkers'88 was shot down by anti-aircraft gunfire on the night of April 4-5, while complete reports for the raids of Saturday show that an additional Junkers-88 was destroyed by anti-aircraft gunfire and our fighters shot down another German bomber.

Six of our aircraft are missing, but one pilot is safe.

LONDON, April 6 (AP)—An Air Ministry communiqué said today:

Last night a strong force of our bombers attacked targets in the Rhineland, particularly at Cologne.

The Gnome-Rhone works and other factories at Gennevilliers, near Paris, which are making war material for the enemy, and docks at Havre also were bombed.

Bombers and fighters attacked airdromes in occupied territory.

From all these operations five of our bombers are missing.

An additional Air Ministry communiqué said:

One enemy fighter was shot down into the Channel this morning by one of our fighters on patrol.

The Ministries of Air and Home Security issued this communiqué:

In the early part of last night there were a few enemy aircraft off the east coast of England. One of them was destroyed.

The Air Ministry and Ministry of Home Security also issued the following communiqué:

Before dark this evening an enemy aircraft dropped bombs at a place on the south coast of England. Slight damage was caused but no one was injured.

VALLETTA, Malta, April 6 (Reuter)—A Malta communiqué issued tonight said:

Sunday evening a fourth and final mass attack was made on the harbor by two formations of Junkers-88's and a small attack on the airdrome by fighter-bombers. Anti-aircraft artillery engaged the enemy. One Junkers-88 was destroyed and one Messerschmitt-109 damaged.

Monday, after a quiet morning and afternoon, the German Air Force launched a large-scale raid at 6 P. M. local time. The raid has just finished as this report is issued. No details have yet been received. This morning and this afternoon a number of brief alerts were given for small fighter patrols and one bomber dropped bombs on land.

Last night enemy activity was also small. There were five alerts for a single bomber dropping bombs over a wide area. Anti-aircraft artillery engaged the enemy. Preliminary reports show one person seriously injured.

Russian

MOSCOW, April 6 (From Russian broadcast recorded by The Associated Press)—The Soviet Information Bureau broadcast this communiqué today:

During the night of April 5-6 there were no substantial changes at the front.

One unit on the Kalinin front, overcoming enemy defense fortifications, captured from the Germans four guns, seven machine guns, 1,660 shells, 432 automatic rifles and other ammunition.

On another sector of the front one of our artillery units, overcoming furious German resistance, in one day's fighting annihilated 780 German soldiers and officers and destroyed six tanks.

On one sector of the northwestern front the Germans flung into battle an infantry unit supported by tanks. Five German tanks were destroyed.

Soviet fighter pilots encountered in the air eleven German fighter planes.

Despite considerable numerical superiority of the enemy our airmen attacked the enemy planes and shot down four.

The rest turned tail. All our fighter planes returned to their airdromes safely.

The Soviet Bureau of Information issued the following tonight:

On March 6 no essential changes took place at the front.

On April 5 119 German planes were destroyed in air combats and on enemy airdromes. Our losses were seventeen planes.

A supplement to the communiqué said:

In the week from March 29 to April 4 the Germans lost 296 planes. Our losses during the same period were sixty-seven planes.

German

BERLIN, April 6 (From German broadcast recorded by The Associated Press)—The German High Command issued this communiqué today:

On the eastern front several local attacks by the Russians failed.

In the course of a German attack in the central sector the enemy was expelled from sixty-nine localities in fighting lasting several days.

In addition to hundreds of prisoners and dead, the enemy lost forty-seven guns, twenty-seven grenade throwers, 132 machine-guns and numerous firearms.

Six Russian planes were shot down yesterday in aerial combats or were destroyed on the ground. Two of our planes were lost.

Successful night attacks were directed against installations of Russian aircraft works at Rybinsk and military objectives at Moscow.

In North Africa, thrusts by strong British patrols toward Mekhili were repulsed.

The Alexandria-Matruh railway line was interrupted at several points by bomb hits.

Successive attacks were directed by German bombers and fighters against military installations on the island of Malta.

Direct hits were scored on shipyards, port and dock installations, barracks, fuel dumps and public utility plants, causing explosions and fires.

A light British cruiser in the dock, a merchant ship and a harbor tanker were damaged by bomb hits.

German bombers bombed industrial works important for supplies on the south coast of England.

British bombers last night attacked various places in Western Germany, in particular the town of Bonn. The civilian population sustained casualties in killed and wounded. No damage was caused to military objectives or targets of economic importance. A number of public buildings, some of high cultural value, were damaged by bomb hits.

Anti-aircraft fire and night fighters shot down five of the attacking bombers.

Italian

ROME, April 6 (From Italian broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press)—The Italian High Command broadcast this communiqué today:

Enemy patrols supported by artillery were repulsed southeast of Mekili. In the same sector our air formations attacked with particular effect a concentration of enemy tanks and severely damaged a great number of them. One of our planes failed to return.

The railway line from Matruh to Alexandria has again been cut at several points by our planes.

Large German air formations again repeatedly attacked the island of Malta by day and night.

An arsenal, several factories and fuel dumps at Valletta were heavily bombed and one cruiser in port received a direct hit.

Airdromes and runways on the island suffered considerable damage. One Hurricane was shot down in aerial combat.

TANKER LOSS PICTURED

Germans Try to Show how Vital those Sunk were to Foes

Berlin (from German broadcasts), April 6—(AP)—German sources estimated today that 2,755,900 tons of enemy tankers or tankers in enemy service have been sunk by the German navy and air force since the start of the war.

The Germans said that these ships, if loaded, would be carrying more than 4,000,000 tons of oil. This, they said, was more than the annual output of the Iraq oil fields.

Washington, April 6-(AP)-Three merchant ships have put into port safely "following inciidents with enemy submarines at sea," the Navy announced today, identifying them only as a large Panamanian ship, a large United States ship and a medium sized U.S. ship.

The Navy gave no additional information here about the "incidents."

Ship Torpedoed, Shelled, Crew Returns to Save Her

APR 7 1942

NEW ORLEANS, April 6. (AP)—Eighth Naval District headquarters here late today announced the loss of eight seamen and the wounding of about 20 others among a crew of 50 in the torpedoing of a large Panamanian ship in the Caribbean March 8.

2 Other Ships Escape

The survivors who escaped in three life rafts and one life boat after other life boats were shot away were landed at an unannounced port and the vessel, a cargo ship, after being given up as lost by the crew, was reboarded the day after the attack and taken to Mobile under her own power.

This attack was one of three attempts by hostile submarines to [illegible] in March, as reported [illegible]y by the Navy.

[illegible] as a medium sized U. S. cargo vessel attacked March 25 about midnight when one or two torpedoes were fired but missed.

The other was a large U. S. ship which was attacked on a clear night March 23 and outran the sub after missing running it down by about 30 feet.

Both put in at Texas ports without being damaged.

Captain Missing

Among those lost in the torpedoing of the Panamanian ship were its master, Captain James Stewart, and First Mate Hawkins Fudske.

Stewart was killed by shrapnel which raked the deck for 30 minutes while Fudske died from the explosion of a nearby shell after he had entered the only life boat which was not destroyed by shellfire.

T. J. McTaggart, 29, of Medford, Mass, chief engineer on the vessel, told the navy the attack occurred at 2:25 a. m. on Sunday, March 8 under a full moon.

The ship was raked by machine guns, shellfire, shrapnel and pom poms and after a 30-minute siege with the steering gear out of control orders were given to abandon the ship.

Seamen began jumping into the water. One of them was killed by a shark, his shipmates said.

One shell sent into the side of the ship injured six men. After 4 1-2 hours of firing, the sub abandoned attack because of two star shells sent up by another ship.

Ship Reboarded

McTaggart said the deck was aflame when he left the ship but the next day the vessel was found to be still afloat. The fire had burned itself out and surviving members of the crew reboarded her, made repairs and took her to Mobile.

APR 7 1942

The one torpedo fired into the vessel tore a gaping hole in the port side amidships at the water line.

Captain Willard Davis, Jr., was master of the medium sized U. S. vessel which was attacked March 25 and escaped one or two torpedoes.

The larger cargo ship, attacked March 23, reported having sighted a hostile submersible after first picking up the thrum of its motors with a mechanical detecting device.

Tried to Ram Sub

Its master, Captain Oscar Christensen, a naturalized Dane, said the sub with grey stripes and a brown conning tower was spotted in the Atlantic "close to the coast" and that he immediately changed sourse, ordering the ship "hard to port" and tried to ram the sub, missing by about 30 feet.

"The crew of the submarine was just emerging from the conning tower and they looked as surprised as seeing us as we were at seeing them," the captain was quoted as saying.

After the ramming attempt had failed, the captain said, the sub gave chase for about an hour on the ship's stern but never got close enough to shoot.

A zig-zag flight by the surface vessel with its crew of 37 Americans and one Filipino reduced the enemy's chances for a successful shell barrage, Captain Christensen said.

Italian Sub Is Taking Toll, Skipper Reveals

Miami, April 6 (AP)—The captain of a medium-sized British freighter, sunk in West Indian waters March 13, said today that an Italian submarine was taking its toll of shipping in the western Atlantic. (The navy announced the sinking).

One member of the crew, who died of a heart attack, was the only casualty when the submarine torpedoed and shelled his vessel, Capt. J. J. Egerton said. The remaining fifty-seven in the ship's company were picked up after forty-two hours in lifeboats and were taken to Nassau, where the sinking was announced March 17.

Sure It Was Italian

"I am certain the sub was of the large Italian class," said Egerton, a 64-year-old veteran of more than forty years at sea, after he and the other survivors were brought to Miami.

"After we abandoned ship, the sub circled our four lifeboats and the captain shouted out to ask us whether we were all right and whether we needed anything. He spoke very good English, but it was easy to tell that it was an Italian talking English and not a German.

'Then he hoisted the Italian flag just before waving good-by."

Attack In Broad Daylight

The attack occurred in broad daylight, Egerton related, but the men saw nothing of the submarine or the torpedo until it crashed into the boiler room "and stopped the ship completely."

The men abandoned ship immediately. The sub surfaced, fired ten or twelve shells, then used another torpedo to sink the blasted hulk.

Many of the crewmen had been on torpedoed vessels before.

One of them, Anthony M. Cox, 21-year-old senior wireless operator, said he "wasn't nearly as worried as the last time, when I was aboard a benzine tanker that I was afraid was going to blow up."

On Borrowed Time?

Cox, a modest, good-natured youth, grinned when someone asked him if he felt he was living on borrowed time.

"Well, this was my sixth attack, but, as I said, it wasn't as bad as some of the others. I was on a boat that was bombed while we were lying in the English Channel, waiting to help evacuate the men at Dunkerque. We got the ship away that time, though.

"I was bombed two other times and this was my third torpedoing. Out of the six attacks, this freighter was the second time I've had a ship sunk under me."

Captain Egerton said Cox stuck to his post and sent distress signals for more than thirty minutes before he was ordered to abandon ship.

Torpedoed Destroyer With Fleet Once More

Kearny Repaired At Boston Navy Yard—Work At War Scene Commended

Washington, April 6 (AP)—The destroyer Kearny, which was torpedoed in the North Atlantic October 17, has been completely repaired and is again operating with the fleet, the navy announced today.

Final repairs were made at the Boston Navy Yard. Emergency repairs made immediately after the attack by the repair ship Vulcan were performed so efficiently that Lieut. Com. Edwin R. Duncan, of Burlington, Ky., repair officer, and Capt. Leon S. Fiske, of Whitinsville, Mass., commanding officer of the Vulcan, have been officially commended.

Eleven men were killed in the attack, two were seriously injured and eight received minor wounds.

Destroyer Launched At Night

Seattle, April 6 (AP)—The 1,700-ton destroyer Endicott left the ways of the Seattle-Tacoma Shipbuilding Corporation last night in Seattle's first night launching of the war. The Endicott was named after a navy gunner who fought with Stephen Decatur at Tripoli 138 years ago.

COASTAL CONVOYS PLANNED BY BOARD

APR 7 1942

Inter-American Defense Group Gets Started.

Washington, April 6 (A. P.).—The Inter-American Defense Board, charged with formulating plans for defense of the Western Hemisphere, opened its first business meeting here today.

The first reported problem was the creation of a hemispheric convoy system to assure delivery of vital war materials to the United States and safe passage to Latin America of goods necessary to the security of the twenty other American republics.

To surmount language barriers, each of the thirty-two board representatives listened on headphones to translations of each speaker's remarks.

Presiding was Lieut.-Gen. S. D. Embick of the United States, elected chairman.

The board was created by a resolution passed at the January meeting of American Foreign Ministers in Rio de Janeiro. Each of the twenty-one American republics is represented.

The board sessions will be secret because of their military and naval nature. Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles has declared the convoys imperative due to the sinking of merchant vessels of Brazil, Chile and Uruguay.

Ship Sit-down Strike Mutiny, Court Rules

5-4 Ruling By Supreme Court Upsets Labor Board Order for Steamship Firm to Reinstate Five Seamen.

APR 7 1942

WASHINGTON, April 6. (AP)—A sit-down strike aboard a ship is mutiny even though the vessel is in port, the Supreme Court ruled today.

Normandie Disaster Cited

In a 5 to 4 decision, the court upset a Labor Board order directing the Southern Steamship Company to reinstate five seamen who were discharged after a strike aboard the steamer City of Fort Worth at Houston, Tex., in 1938.

But it upheld the portions of the board's order directing the company to bargain with the CIO National Maritime Union. It was the company's alleged refusal to do so, after the union had been certified as bargaining representative, which caused the strike.

The strikers refused to provide steam to operate machinery for loading cargo and the board and the union contended that their sit-down, which was attended by no violence, constituted no danger to the vessel and that the ship was safe while tied up at the dock.

But the majority opinion, written by Justice Byrnes, recalled the recent disaster to the former French luxury Normandie at New York, in the course of its conversion to naval use, as "grim enough proof that the hazard of fire is ever present."

"It is by no means clear that a ship moored to a dock it 'safe' if the crew refuses to tend it, as the strikers did at Houston," Byrnes wrote. "At the very least, steam must be maintained to provide light and fire protection."

Moreover, the opinion observed, "the strategy of discipline is not simple" and "the maintenance of authority hinges upon a delicate complex of human factors." Thus, it added, in enacting the mutiny laws, "Congress may very sensibly have concluded that a master whose orders are subject to the crews veto in port cannot enforce them at sea."

"Ever since men have gone to sea," the decision said, "the relationship of master to seaman has been entirely different from that of employer to employee on land. The lives of passengers and crew as well as the safety of ship and cargo are entrusted to the master's care. Every one and every thing depend on him. He must command and the crew must obey. Authority cannot be divided."

The mutiny statute covers acts not only on the high seas but in "any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States" and the court viewed this language as a "plain congressional mandate" that the act applied to vessels in port.

The majority held that the labor board, in performing its mandate to "effectuate the purposes" of the Wagner Act, could not "wholly ignore other and equally important congressional objectives."

Dissenting Opinion

The dissenting opinion, by Justice Reed, held that the board did have discretion to order the seamen reinstated and noted that the board had found that they were discharged "not for disobeying orders but for striking, for peacefully, albeit unlawfully, resorting to self-help in retaliation against denial of their rights." Justices Black, Douglas and Murphy joined in the dissent.

The court also disposed of a Florida case in which the question whether the 1939 Hatch Act applied to primaries as well as general elections had been raised, but it did not decide this issue. Two WPA officials and the police chief of Ormond, Fla., were accused of threatening a WPA worker with loss of his job unless he supported certain candidates in the 1940 primary. The Supreme Court sent the case back to the district court to consider whether such an action was not outlawed by the relief act itself.

AXIS FIRMS TRY TO CIRCUMVENT U.S. BLACKLIST

APR 7 1942

Washington, April 6. (AP)—Widespread fraud in applications for export licenses to circumvent the policy of blacklisting foreign firms which do business with the Axis is being detected almost daily, board of economic warfare officials said today.

Some of the attempted frauds are clumsy and are caught immediately, for example, a drugstore in South America evidently screening a Nazi firm ordered 250 tons of beams. Another drugstore applied for license for a big shipment of tinplate.

Officials of the board reported that the blacklist had been so effective in keeping American goods out of enemy hands that foreign concerns or individuals acting for enemy powers were now using dummy names or misusing the names of non-blacklisted firms in applying for American export licenses.

The export control division, largest unit of the B. E. W., recently blocked a large shipment of quinine to Mexico. The application was filed in the name of the Mexican government and its validity was suspected because of the size of the order and the fact that Mexico had not been accustomed to buying quinine here.

A line of trucks loaded with small packages of drugs and chemicals for retail stores in Mexico was halted at the border when it was discovered no such stores had ordered the goods.

Many German and Italian orders for South American goods are blocked before the orders are received by the shippers. British mail censors take care of this in West Indies ports.

The United States to date has forbidden trade with 4,494 firms and individuals in Latin America and 1,894 in Portugal, Spain, Sweden Switzerland and Turkey because of suspected enemy ties.

With virtually every exportable item under rigid control, the export license division of B. E. W. is now handling 8,000 license applications daily. An average of three days is required to clear each one.

The applications have increased more than five-fold since January because of the requirement that each shipment be licensed. Before January exporters could get a general license covering all their shipments for a year.

So thorough is the control system that in some cases even licensed shipments are traced at the other end to make sure they do not leak into enemy territory. This is true of some exported to Spain.

Another control feature with respect to Spain is that the United States will not allow certain goods to go there in excess of Spain's known domestic needs of those goods. Licenses for such shipments are held up until Spain's supply of those things are about exhausted. In return this country gets some strategic materials from Spain.

Would Shoot Short, Kimmel, Says Rep. May

APR 7 1942

Military Committee Chairman Says Hawaiian Commanders Ignored Repeated Warnings.

PIKEVILLE, Ky., April 6—(AP)—Congressman A. J. May (D-Ky), chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, declared today that "when General Short and Admiral Kimmel come up for court martial I'm in favor of holding a shooting match."

Then turning to newspapermen seated on the stand from which he addressed some 5,000 Army Day celebrants, he said; "You can quote me on that, and if it gets back to Washington that will be all right too."

May asserted that the deposed commanders of American Army and Navy forces in Hawaii received repeated and ample warnings to take every precaution because war was imminent and that they had not heeded these warnings.

(Lieut. Gen. Walter C. Short and Admiral Husband E. Kimmel were relieved of their commands Dec. 17, 10 days after the Japanese surprise attack on Pearl Harbor. They face court martial at a time not yet set but expected to be delayed until the end of the war.)

The congressman devoted much of his talk to a discussion of America's war production, stoutly defending the steps taken and decrying as help to Hitler the "repeated assertions by some persons and some newspapers that the war program has broken down."

Stating he could not give exact figures because of censorship regulations, he said, "The lowest percentage of increase in vital production since America entered the war has been 40 per cent, and in some cases the figure has gone over 100 per cent.

"If, then, in December, 1941, we produced 3,108 fighting planes and if production increased 40 per cent, it would lead a person to believe that more than 4,000 planes were produced in the last month and that if the rate continues the President will have his 1942 quota.

"By the end of the year our production will have reached such proportions there will be no question but what the United Nations will be able to take the offensive on all fronts."

He brought prolonged cheers when he declared, "It won't be long now before American bombs will fall on Tokyo, and let me promise you there will be one hell of a fire when that time comes."

May asserted that if he had anything to say about matters when the war was over "we won't stop at an armistice but will go on into Berlin and into Tokyo and take every gun and every battleship."

Italians Lead Count of State's Foreign-Born

With Germans, They Form Nearly a Third of White Immigrant Population

WASHINGTON, April 6 (AP).—German and Italian immigrants compose nearly one-third of New York State's foreign-born white population of 2,853,530, figures released today by the Census Bureau show.

New York State, with 32 per cent of its foreign-born white population furnished by the enemy powers, runs well beyond average figures for the nation in this respect. Germans and Italians form about 25 per cent of the national total.

Census figures for 1940 show more New York State residents were born in Italy than any other foreign country—584,075. Russia, with 436,028, and Germany, with 316,844, followed.

Poland and Eire, with 281,080 and 205,323, respectively, were the only other countries furnishing more than 200,000 natives.

30.24 15815

Despite its large foreign-born white population 92 per cent of the state's residents are American citizens. Of the 13,497,142 state total, only 904,714 are known aliens. Citizenship was unreported for an additional 173,099.

In the voting-age class, of particular interest in this gubernatorial election year the percentage of aliens, who of course are non-voters, is slightly higher. The figures disclose 9,350,026 state residents of voting age, of whom 859,136 are aliens and 163,327 of unknown citizenship. This leaves a potential voting total of 8,327,563, or 89.1 per cent of the balloting-age population. In 1940, those voting for President in New York State numbered 6,301,596. In 1938, 4,821,631 voted for Governor.

Other large foreign-born groups residing in the state included 172,347 born in Austria, 117,370 in England, and 123,737 in Canada. Among others were Hungary, 75,254; Scotland, 57,639; Norway, 37,169; Sweden, 48,317; France, 26,373; Czechoslovakia, 41,798; Rumania, 43,950; Greece, 34,800; Denmark, 14,304; Yugoslavia, 9,743; Lithuania, 22,455; Latvia, 6,058; Finland, 15,101; Bulgaria, 1,103; Spain, 16,147; Portugal, 4,468; Palestine and Syria, 12,515; Turkey, 20,817; Mexico, 3,567; Newfoundland, 6,073; Cuba and the West Indies, 14,986; Central and South America, 14,322; Australia, 1,433.

The smallest number of foreign-born white residents—112—came from the Azores.

New Jersey had 695,810 foreign-born white residents, with more Italians than any other nationality. The bureau found 169,063 native-born Italians in the state in the last census. Next in order in the total number of foreign-born groups were Germans, 87,692; Poles, 77,782; Russians, 55,407; from England, 39,316; Irish Free State (Eire), 35,830; Austria, 34,195; Hungary, 33,816; Scotland, 27,202.

Pennsylvania had 973,260 foreign-born, with 197,281 Italians and 80,111 Germans.

New Jersey stood sixth in the total number of foreign-born. New York State was first; Pennsylvania, second; Illinois third, with 969,733; California, fourth, with 870,893; Massachusetts, fifth, with 848,852. Michigan followed New Jersey with 683,030, and Ohio stood eighth with 519,266.

The ratio of Italians and Germans in the lead among all foreign-born residents was found to be true throughout the country, with the Italians most numerous. The bureau reported the foreign-born population dropped 18.3 per cent from 1930 to 1940 and commented that if present conditoins continue the foreign-born whites will cease to be a numerically important element in the population in twenty or thirty years.

The bureau reported that New Jersey's population included 2,592,978 citizens of voting age in 1940, when 2,361,080 were registered for the Presidential election and 2,019,406 votes were cast.

Wife of Alien Repatriated

American Woman Wed to Japanese Clergyman Regains Citizenship

BOSTON, April 6 (AP).—Mrs. Nellie Cook Minakuchi, wife of the Rev. Utaka Minakuchi, sixty-three years old, Vermont's only Japanese alien, regained today the American citizenship that she lost upon her marriage to the minister and lecturer, who now is under detention as an enemy alien. Federal Judge George C. Sweeney granted her petition for repatriation.

Mrs. Minakuchi, mother of two children and a former resident of Watertown, Mass., has been employed as a teacher in Glover, Vt., where she lived with her husband. The Rev. Mr. Minakuchi, a native of Okayama, Japan, who came to the United States forty-five years ago and who lectured on the subject "Whither, America?" prior to the outbreak of war between the two countries, was taken into custody after Federal Bureau of Investigation agents raided his home and seized a radio set and a camera. He is held at Newport, Vt., where he had an enemy-alien-board hearing last week.

Seek Recognition By Allied Nations

Free Albanians Appeal to U. S., Britain, Russia

BOSTON, April 6 (AP)—Asserting that Albania's "national rights to independence seem completely disregarded by the United States and allied nations," Constantin Chekrezi, president of the Free Albania movement in this country, appealed to the heads of the United Nations today for recognition of Albania's status as a "combat allied nation."

Boston headquarters made public copies of messages which Chekrezi addressed to President Roosevelt, Secretary of State Hull, British Ambassador Lord Halifax and Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff.

Pointing out to Hull that today was the fourth anniversary of Italy's invasion of Albania, Chekrezi declared that that country's rights to independence had been ignored until now despite formal adherence by Free Albania supporters to the declaration of the 26 nations.

Lear Says U. S. Must Wage Bold And Aggressive War

Second Army General Declares Costly Machines Useless Without Hardened Fighting Men

[By the Associated Press]

APR 7 1942

Detroit, April 6—Lieut. Gen. Ben Lear, commanding the Second Army, told the Detroit Economic Club in a luncheon address today that the United States must fight an aggressive war, "bold, venturesome and loaded with the risks of daring action and distant objectives—a war in which fighters will win."

General Lear, here to view an Army Day parade, declared costly machines and equipment, necessary as they are, would be useless without "hardened fighting men"—whom he called "the master machines of war"—to operate them.

Fighting Men Ask Support

And American fighting men, he added, look to you never to fail them, not even for an hour; never to fumble, never to falter, never to look backward, never to compromise with the evil that they fight."

"Gone from the minds of reasoning men," the general said, "is the futile and tragic conception of the static defense of the Western Hemisphere, as preached only a few months ago by the isolationists—the false, distorted theory that this land of free men can survive by taking those measures that have resulted in defeat wherever the aggressors have been given the initiative to make war on their own timing and according to their own plans.

Whole World Battleground

"Today we know that all the world is our battleground, and that our troops must go forth through all perils to carry the attack to the enemy. . . .

"There will be no escape from this reality, the alternative to which is defeat, humiliation and untold misery for humanity. We will enjoy the benefits of no tricks of military legerdemain, no ready collapse of enemy resistance, no secret weapons, no machine-made victory, no substitution of gasoline for the blood of heroes."

Pelley Remains in Jail, Unable to Provide Bond

Says He Will Plead Innocent to Charges of Sedition

INDIANAPOLIS, April 6 (AP).—Unable to furnish bond, William Dudley Pelley, chief of the Silver Shirts, remained in the Marion County Jail today awaiting grand jury action on an affidavit charging him with sedition in connection with articles published in his magazine, "The Galilean."

The silver-goateed publisher of anti-Semitic magazines said he would plead innocent to any indictments brought against him. It was not definitely known, however, when his case would be presented to the grand jury.

Pelley was unable to obtain his freedom last night, although United States Marshal Julius Wichser, of the Southern Indiana District, allowed him several hours to post a $15,000 bond before ordering him to jail. Pelley was brought here yesterday by United States Marshal Bernard Fitch from the East after his arrest Saturday in Darien, Conn.

District Attorney B. Howard Caughran, who prepared the complaint and affidavit against Pelley under the 1917 espionage act, said he had not decided whether to call a special grand jury in the case or to submit it to the regular session in June.

Pelley, whose organization was charged with being Fascist in Dies committee hearings, has suspended publication of both "The Galilean" and "The Roll Call," which he had been printing in an old box factory at Noblesville, Ind. He gave his home address as Noblesville.

Stimson Asks New Medal For Exceptional Service

Would Give 'Legion of Merit' to Civilians Also

WASHINGTON, April 6 (AP).—Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, asked Congress today to create a new decoration—the "Legion of Merit" award.

It would be awarded to personnel in the armed forces of the United States and those of friendly foreign nations and to civilians connected with national defense who distinguished themselves by "exceptionally outstanding conduct in the performance of essential service," during the war, secretary Stimson said.

"There does not now exist any decoration, which we can award for a course of conduct by an individual, which is characterized by being outstanding and essential to our national defense, as distinguished from a specific act or service," he wrote Representative Rayburn, Democrat, of Texas, Speaker of the House.

Great exphasis has been placed by Congress, he continued, upon creation of friendly relations with Allies and South American neighbors. During visits from South American diplomats during the last year, officers of the United States received decorations given as a gesture of friendship.

"It has proved to be most unfortunate," he said, "that no reciprocation could be made. We were compelled to stand mute as a nation because we had nothing to give in return."

Sugar From Martinique And Guadalupe Offered Washington By Vichy

Washington, April 6 (AP)—The State Department today confirmed reports from Vichy that the French Government is negotiating with the United States for the sale of 200,000 tons of sugar from Martinque and Guadalupe.

The Pacific war has disrupted the flow of sugar from the Philippines and limited drastically the amount of shipping available for transport of Hawaiian sugar to the United States. Hence the demand for Caribbean sugar has been increased sharply.

Aside from this aspect of the situation, however, it is understood that the Government is interested in encouraging normal trade relations with the French Caribbean possessions so long as authorities there show a disposition to collaborate with the United States.

State Department officials would not comment, beyond disclosing that the negotiations had been undertaken at the request of the Department of Agriculture.

Reply to Philadelphia High School Boy Sets Forth Why We Fight Axis

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

John J. Hunt, High School Junior,
2308 N. Bouvier Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

APR 7 1942

Dear John:

You pay me a very real compliment in wishing to quote my view in your essay on "Why America MUST Win This War." I am deeply appreciative and am particularly happy that such an inquiry should come from a high school student, since it is further evidence that our boys and girls are doing serious and patriotic thinking in these grave days.

As a matter of fact, John, I have been encountering much of this grand spirit in traveling about. Many high school and university students have been asking me: "What is our part in this great crisis—how can we help?" Believe me, my throat was tightened more than once at this eagerness of youth to serve.

Answer to Letter.

So, because your query represents what is in the hearts of all our people, both young and grown-ups, I'm taking the liberty of answering your letter through this column. I hope you won't mind.

In the first place, we are fighting for much more than an ideal. To put it bluntly, we are battling for existence—for country and firesides. It has been difficult to realize this, because of our great distance from the forces of evil in Europe and the Orient. It hasn't seemed possible that invasion could come to us.

As this terrible conflict has proceeded, however, it has become clear that we are engaged in a fight to the death with a terroristic gang that is bent on ruling the world by force. Can any one doubt the awful purpose of the Axis when we see the brutal enslavement of many nations and mass slaughter of civilians because they have refused to bow their necks to the yoke.

Murder and Destruction.

As for our safety because of geographical isolation, the inventive genius of man has destroyed that by wiping out distance. Our United States is vulnerable, John, and don't let any one tell you otherwise. If we should lose to Hitler in Europe and to the Japanese in the Orient, we may be sure that murder and destruction would come to our shores.

Not long ago, Admiral Yamamoto, commander-in-chief of the Nipponese fleet, declared his ambition to dictate peace terms to us in our own capital. There's not much doubt what that means, is there?

Beyond this grim matter of survival, we are battling for those rights which are symbolized by that old, cracked Liberty Bell in your home city—democracy of our own design. But we don't stop there, for we are defending something which goes even farther back than that—back to our Pilgrim Fathers, who came to settle this new continent so that they might have freedom of thought and expression.

Right to Our Freedom.

This is one of the great things we are fighting for at Armageddon, John—the right to freedom of thought and speech and worship, that is, to "our way of life." This is a privilege denied the unfortunate peoples under Axis dictatorship. Their thinking is done for them they are forbidden the right of expression, they aren't even permitted to worship their own God, in their own way, in some cases.

That's the sort of thing we are fighting, John. We won't have that kind of life imposed on us by barbaric conquerors and we want to help other nations to escape such a fate. We want our freedom so much that life would be worthless without it and because such an existence would be meaningless, our people would rather die fighting than accept it.

With all good wishes,
Yours sincerely,
DEWITT MACKENZIE.

Japan Gains Ground in Bataan, Puts In Fresh Troops and Tanks; Casualties Heavy on Both Sides

APR 8 1942

Bloody Struggle Raging

Losses Heavy on Both Sides—Japs Throw Fresh Troops Into Battle.

U. S. HOSPITAL AGAIN BOMBED

Wainwright's Greatly Outnumbered Men Fighting Desperately.

WASHINGTON, April 7—(AP)—Fresh troops thrown into the battle of Bataan by the Japanese today clawed their way further into the stubbornly defended positions of the American-Filipino forces.

A late day communique from the War Department reported that the greatly outnumbered troops under Lt. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright, fighting desperately to hold their line midway across Bataan Peninsula were being forced back slowly.

Tanks, Artillery Aid Japs

Beginning the fourth day of almost ceaseless pounding of the center of Wainwright's line, the Japanese were aided by tanks as well as intense artillery fire, aerial bombardment and strafing. Losses were heavy today on both sides.

Concentrating their assault on the front lines and rear positions on the mainland, the enemy left the fortified island of Corregidor free of aerial attack for the fourth successive day, but for the second time in little more than a week bombed a base hospital in Bataan, killing a large number of wounded soldiers who were being treated there.

The attack on the hospital was carried out this morning by three flights of heavy bombers, the department reported. After the same hospital was bombed March 30, the Japanese command in the Philippines broadcast an apology, but the department asserted that the second attack on the plainly marked building "tends to prove that both raids were intentional."

Severe Aerial Attack

Yesterday, said an earlier communique, the defending forces were subjected to a particularly severe aerial bombardment behind the lines, and the Japanese aimed a concentrated air attack at the south coast of Bataan in an apparent effort to shatter Wainwright's vital communications with Corregidor, two miles offshore.

The enemy also directed a two-hour artillery barrage against Corregidor and Fort Hughes from land batteries on the Cavite shore of Manila Bay, but the Department reported that neither casualties nor damage resulted from the shelling. The guns of the forts laid down a counter-battery fire, the results of which were not reported.

One anti-aircraft battery, lowering the elevation of its guns, caught an enemy amphibian plane on the water in Manila Bay and destroyed it with horizontal fire.

The action reported in this morning's communique was a continuation of the furious attacks reported late yesterday, in which the Japanese infantry, supported by heavy artillery and dive bombers, achieved some gains at a cost of heavy losses of men.

Since Saturday morning there has been scarcely any pause in the Japanese assaults against Wainwright's positions, and the attacks have been supported by the heaviest artillery and aerial bombardment yet employed by the enemy in the Philippines.

The department reported that General Douglas MacArthur, who left the Philippines last month to assume the United Nations supreme command in Australia, had a long conference today with Dr. Hubertus Van Mook, acting head of the Netherlands Indies government.

Plans for future Dutch participation in the war in the southwest Pacific were discussed, and Van Mook reported that two Dutch forces of considerable size, well supplied with food and munitions, still were fighting against the Japanese in the interior of Java.

The text of the communique, No. 180, based on reports received here up to 5 p. m. E.W.T.:

1. Philippine theatre:

Superior enemy forces, supported by tanks and artillery, continue to attack the center of our line in Bataan. The Japanese have thrown fresh reserves into the fighting and have made some additional progress. Heavy losses have been sustained by our forces and by the enemy.

Jap dive bombers are assisting in the attack, dropping bombs and machine gunning our front-line soldiers.

The enemy again bombed one of our field hospitals, inflicting heavy casualties among wounded soldiers undergoing treatment. The attack was carried out this morning by three flights of heavy bombers. This same hospital was bombed only a few days ago, after which the Japanese High Command broadcast an apology. Today's attack on this plainly-marked hospital, following so closely the first attack, tends to prove that both raids were intentional.

There was no air attack on Corregidor today, but all of our harbor defenses were shelled intermittently by artillery located in Cavite province.

Navy disclosed that two submersibles had sunk three Japanese ships. One raider sent two heavily-laden tankers to the bottom near the Caroline Islands, just east of the Philippines, while the other blasted a freighter in Japanese waters.

Melbourne, April 7—For the third successive day Royal Australian Air Force and American planes smashed at the Japanese in New Guinea areas today, swooping in a low-level attack on Lae, where they planted sticks of bombs on grounded aircraft and the airdrome buildings and runways.

Correspondents at Port Moresby, Australian base in New Guinea, said fires were started by the attacks and that the damage inflicted in the three successive days of attacks must have been extensive.

Lone Jap Shot Down

The Allied bombers were accompanied by fighting planes which shot down the lone Japanese fighter who tried to interfere with the attack. He crashed into the sea.

Meanwhile, J. M. Makin, Navy and Munitions Minister, declared that "Australia never stood in a better position than she does today" to repel a Japanese invasion.

Production of munitions and war equipment is mounting rapidly, he declared.

To Coordinate Supplies

The Allied Supply Council, holding what John Beasley, Supply Minister, described as its most important meeting yet, adopted a plan to coordinate supplies and equipment for United States and Australian troops from materiel available here and that arriving from America under the lend-lease program.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Maj. Gen. Richard H. Sutherland and W. S. Wasserman, chief of the United States lend-lease mission in Australia, attended the session and informed the council of the amount of United States equipment in this country and gave an estimate of supplies expected.

Scope Widened

Beasley said the scope of the supply council has been widened to include control of shipping, land transport and distribution of medical equipment.

Francis M. Forde, Army Minister, announced that he had ordered an official report from soldiers who escaped from Rabaul in New Britain and brought stories that Australian prisoners had been pinioned, shot, and bayoneted by the Japanese.

Forde said he would study the report before deciding what action Australia would take. Three Australian soldiers said they were the sole survivors of a party of six trapped and captured at Rabaul.

Dutch To Stay In Australia

In other war moves, Hubertus J. van Mook, Netherlands East Indies Lieutenant Governor, announced that the nucleus of the Dutch air force would remain in Australia, supplies which arrived too late for the battle of Java would be diverted to Australian and American forces and a number of Dutch officers attached to the staff of Gen. Douglas MacArthur and the Allied naval command.

Van Mook announced establishment of a four-man commission headed by J. E. van Hoogstraten, former East Indies economic affairs director, to handle all non-military affairs from Australia, and the formation of an information bureau.

Errol G. Knox, Managing Director of the Melbourne Argus was appointed by the Australian government to the post of Director General of Army Public Relations.

Japan's New Guinea Base Is Raided by Allied Warplanes

Several Enemy Bombers Are Declared Damaged Over Port Moresby

By the Associated Press.

MELBOURNE, April 7.—United States and Australian bombers and fighters attacked Japanese-occupied Lae in New Guinea today, damaging several enemy aircraft, an Australian communique said.

The Japanese threw up intensive anti-aircraft fire, but no effective interception was encountered.

Several Japanese bombers were damaged yesterday in attacking Port Moresby, New Guinea, and two of the defending Australian fighter planes were lost, a communique said early today.

One of the Allied pilots was saved, however, and the raid on Port Moresby was declared a failure.

A party of United States Army nurses arrived in Australia today.

Gen. Smart to Go to U. S.

Lt. Gen. E. K. Smart, Australian adviser to the Pacific War Council in Washington, said he expected to leave for the United States soon. He has been studying camps and maneuvers of the United States Army in Australia with the idea of improving the commonwealth's training program.

APR 8 1942

Other authorities indicated that the Federal Government shortly would take the last step to unify entirely the Australian forces. Unification of pay and service conditions of the militia, called up under a compulsory order, and the volunteers of the Australian Imperial Force was announced last week.

Gen. Smart, 51, disclosed that the staff to go to Washington with him would be made up of Lt. Col. F. G. Sutton, former publisher; Lt. Col. C. W. Hicks, former engineer, and Lt. Col. T. R. Blamey, 27, one of the youngest officers of that rank in the Australian Army.

Col. Blamey is a son of Gen. Sir Thomas Blamey, chief of the ground forces within the commonwealth. Col. Sutton heads an international organization of dog lovers, holding within it the title of chief tail-wagger.

Gen. Smart Sees MacArthur.

Gen. Smart conferred with the United Nations commander, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, today and said later he considered the American a great man, well qualified to head the Allied command.

The portly white-haired Gen. Smart said his first visit to the United States would allow him to renew acquaintances with the Americans he knew so well in the first World War. Members of the A. E. F. were attached to his Australian division which broke the Hindenburg line in 1918.

He was a major and liaison officer there and knew the American troops of the 27th and 33d Divisions. He was wounded once in action.

The head of the United States lease-lend mission to Australia, W. S. Wasserman, said American aid was reaching the island continent in ever-increasing quantities. He added that the Australians were rendering reciprocal assistance to the American troops now stationed

"The Australian Government has been most helpful," he said. "Nothing we have asked for has been refused. This is the sort of co-operation which will win the war."

Mr. Wasserman said he was making a comprehensive survey of Australian requirements.

Australians Tell How Japanese Kill Prisoners

Three Men Who Escaped on New Britain Say Captives Were Shot or Bayoneted

SYDNEY, Australia, April 7 (AP).—Charges that the Japanese killed their captives in cold blood on the islands of New Guinea and New Britain were made today in a statement issued officially at Port Moresby, New Guinea.

Army Minister Francis M. Forde said he had asked that the report be forwarded to him by senior Australian officers. He said he would study the report before deciding what action Australia would take.

The statement told the story of three Australian service men who said they were the only survivors of one group of ten officers and men who were trapped on New Britain after the fall of Rabaul, the capital. The others, with their hands tied behind their backs, were shot or bayoneted to death after their capture by a landing party from a Japanese destroyer, it stated.

Leaflets scattered from Japanese planes had warned that any who did not surrender would be killed.

Each captured Australian officer received a revolver and one bullet and was ordered to commit suicide, the statement said. One of the men who escaped shammed death when a Japanese officer went among the fallen bodies to finish off the wounded.

The three survivors said they wandered, bleeding from their wounds and numb from the horrors they had seen, for several days with their hands bound behind them before they were rescued. (How they escaped was unexplained.)

Hands Were Tied Behind Them

"Our hands were fastened and we were made up into parties of ten," said one of them. "Each party was taken into the jungle. My party was stopped after going a short distance. A Japanese officer drew his sword and ordered his men to fix bayonets. One Australian after another was detached from the party and sent into the bush with a Japanese soldier armed with a bayonet. Soon after we heard screams and wondered what was happening.

"One of our men asked to be shot and this was done by the officer himself.

"Another of our fellows got loose and dashed into the bush, but the officer caught up with him and ran his sword through his back, then shot him. After that several men were bayoneted only a few yards from me without being taken into the undergrowth.

"Most of the Australians cursed the Japs and said, 'You'll pay for this when our chaps catch you.'"

A twenty-year-old Aussie corporal, who said he escaped from Rabaul and lived in the New Britain jungle for two months before reaching Australia, declared there still were many Australians living primitively among the island's natives while awaiting a chance to escape.

Dutch Board In Australia

[By the Associated Press]

Sydney, Australia, April 7—Lieut. Gov. H. J. van Mook, of the Netherlands Indies, announced today formation of a Netherlands Indies commission in Australia and New Zealand, to deal with all non-military matters.

He said that the principles of Dutch contribution to unity of the war effort had been agreed upon in discussions with the Australian Government and the United States command, and that he intends to consult his London Government.

The nucleus of the Dutch air force will remain in Australia, and a number of officers will be attached to Gen. Douglas MacArthur's staff and to the Allied naval command.

Supplies which arrived too late to be of service in the Indies will be diverted to the Australian and American forces.

Aussie Supply Plan Adopted

[By the Associated Press]

Melbourne, April 7—The Allied Supply Council adopted a plan today to coordinate supplies and equipment for United States and Australian troops from materiel available here and that arriving from America under the lease-lend program.

John Beasley, Australian Minister for Supply, said the meeting which was attended by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, was the most important yet held.

War Cabinet To Act

MacArthur and Maj. Gen. Richard H. Sutherland and other members of his staff informed the council of the amount of United States equipment in Australia and gave an estimate of the supplies expected from the United States.

Beasley said the plan discussed today would be drafted immediately and submitted to the next meeting of the Australian War Cabinet.

Scope Widened

The scope of the Allied Supply Council, the Minister added, has been widened to include control of shipping, land transport and distribution of medical equipment.

W. S. Wasserman, chief of the United States lend-lease mission in Australia, sat in on today's meeting.

Oil Installations At Two Centers Are Destroyed Before Retreat

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, April 7—A continuing Japanese push northward up the broad valley of the Irrawaddy river in Burma was reported today by the British, who announced the defending forces had fallen back more than forty miles north from Prome after destroying oil and cement installations at Thayetmyo and Alanmyo.

The Japanese columns last were reported at Kama, on the west bank of the Irawaddy fifteen miles above Prome, and at Nyaungbinzeik on the east bank, a British communique said.

Others Move Northeast

Other Japanese elements are moving northeast up the Sinjok Valley, farther east on the path to Mandalay, still more than 200 miles distant.

With fighting momentarily confined to patrol skirmishes, the British said their forces still were taking up new defense positions north of Thayetmyo and Alanmyo.

The main Burmese oil fields are around Minbu, about sixty-five miles farther north.

Air activity continued scanty, but the Japanese bombed an unidentified town in central Burma Monday, causing a few casualties, the British announced.

Japs Motorized

A Chinese army spokesman at Chungking said the Japanese advance up the Irrawaddy was being made with one hundred trucks and a number of tanks.

He said the Chinese forces who hold the Sittang River Valley, the east sector of the Burma defense lines, were engaging a Japanese force in the Toungoo region south of Kyibuangan. The Japanese in that area, however, were described as more intent on constructing defenses than on advancing.

30.24 — 15821

The Chinese and British lines are thrown across the one-hundred-mile-wide stretch of lowland which runs almost the full length of Burma. Both the Irrawaddy and Sittang rivers flow through this depression, their watersheds separated by a range of low hills. Rough, 6,000-foot mountains protect the borders of China and India on east and west, respectively.

Burma British Retreat Again

Madras, India, April 7 (AP)—Madras had its first air-raid warning today, but no bombs were dropped and the all-clear signal was sounded an hour later. No planes appeared over this great East Indian port.

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, India, April 7—British forces defending the western Burma oil fields have fallen back to new positions within about sixty-five miles of the main oil area of Minbu after successfully demolishing oil and cement installations at Thayetmyo and Allanmyo, a British communique announced today.

Thayetmyo is about forty miles north of Prome on the Irrawaddy river, up which the Japanese are pressing, and is 225 miles from the nearest point of the Indian frontier on the coast of the Bay of Bengal. Allanmyo is just north across the river from Thayetmyo.

British Position Undisclosed

Where the British are going was not divulged in the communique, which declared that "our forces are still in the process of taking up their new positions which are now north of Thayetmyo."

The British declared that the latest information on Japanese movements showed that a column on the west bank of the Irrawaddy was located north of Kama, which is twenty-five miles south of Thayetmyo, and another on the east bank of the river about Nyaungbinzeik, with other elements moving to the northeast up the Sinjok Valley. The Sinjok Valley is between the Mandalay-Prome and Mandalay Toungoo roads.

The communique said that action yesterday was confined mainly to contact by enemy patrols on the Irrawaddy front.

"There was not much air activity during the day," the communique said.

It reported, however, that a town in central Burma was bombed, with "very few casualties and no damage."

Chinese Battling Japs

A military spokesman in Chungking said Chinese forces in Burma were engaged with the Japanese striking force south of Kyibuangan, in the Toungoo region. The Japanese were said to be constructing defenses and not advancing.

On the Prome front, the spokesman said, the Japanese were continuing to advance against the British defenders northward along the Irrawaddy river. He said they were pressing forward in 100 trucks, accompanied by a number of tanks.

The spokesman appealed for more aircraft for Burma.

Ceylonese Ready

London, April 7 (AP)—A volunteer corps drawn from the European and native populations of Ceylon is ready to defend that island against any Japanese invasion, a military commentator said today.

Grouped in the Ceylon defense force, the volunteers mostly are non-Europeans and include the Ceylon Light Infantry and the Planters' Rifle Corps.

London, April 7—A broadcast Japanese communique heard by Reuters tonight said the same Japanese units which raided Colombo Sunday had attacked a British naval unit in the Bay of Bengal.

Reported Concentrated On Formosa

APR 8 1942

CHUNGKING, China, April 7. (AP)—Thirteen Japanese transports and six warships have been sighted off Amoy, on the south coast of China, a military spokesman here declared today.

Three Japanese divisions are concentrated on Japanese Formosa Island but their destination has not been ascertained, the spokesman said.

Chinese forces in Burma are engaged with the Japanese striking force to the south of Kyibuangan, in the Toungoo region, he added. The Japanese were said to be constructing defenses and not advancing.

Pleads For More Planes

On the Prome Front, the spokesman said, the Japanese were continuing to advance against the British defenders northward along the Irrawaddy River. He said they were pressing forward in 100 trucks, accompanied by a number of tanks.

The spokesman appealed for more aircraft for Burma.

Jap Ships Take Food Back From Conquered Areas

By the Associated Press.

TOKIO (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 7.—Col. Kiusaburo Okada, chief of the war preparations section of the War Ministry, declared today that Japanese transports moving troops into the Southwestern Pacific war theater were returning home laden with foodstuffs and raw materials.

His article was displayed conspicuously in Tokio newspapers.

In the three months through March, he said, troop transports on their return voyages have brought back 100,0000 tons of sugar, 4,000 tons of corn and large quantities of rice and other supplies.

The writer said Japan hoped to transport 3,000,000 tons of products annually from the South Pacific regions and added that "not only in foodstuffs but also in other natural resources the Japanese will be able to secure self-sufficiency."

3,100 Allied Troops Taken In Sumatra, Japs Claim

By the Associated Press.

TOKIO (from Japanese broadcasts), April 7.—Imperial headquarters announced today that the whole of the Netherlands Indies island of Sumatra came under Japanese control March 27 when the commander of the Dutch forces on the island surrendered at Koetaradja, a strategic port in Northern Sumatra.

The report said that in military operations in northern and central sectors of Sumatra, Japanese troops captured 3,100 Allied soldiers, including 1,900 Dutch and 900 British.

It said the British were those who landed in Sumatra when ships carrying them from Singapore were sunk by Japanese naval units. The British included 30 members of the R. A. F., the Japanese added.

New Objectives Raised As London Agrees To Indian Defense Minister.

LEADER URGES FIGHT ON JAPAN

Nehru Calls on Indians to Oppose Nipponese Aggression.

By A. T. Steele

NEW DELHI, India, April 7 (AP)—Rejection of the British program for post-war Indian independence was reported tonight to be the reiterated stand of the powerful All-India Congress Party, despite a British offer to appoint an Indian native as defense minister of this country.

In the face of renewed American efforts toward an agreement and this major British concession to the Congress Party's earlier contentions, new objections were raised on other points—and without the Congress Party's acquiescence the entire plan is considered unlikely to succeed.

New Obstacle

Mohammed Ali Jinnah, President of the Moslem League, said he had been told this afternoon by Sir Stafford Cripps, British cabinet envoy to India, that "the Indian defense portfolio would not fail to be administered by a representative Indian."

Jinnah then had a talk with Sir Archibald P. Wavell, commander in chief for India, and planned to present to the Moslem League Wednesday the British plan to bring Iidia more fully into the war effort immediately in return for full dominion status after the war.

But Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, most powerful figure in the huge Hindu All-India Congress Party, which had raised the defense criticism in the first place, went on to another point with the flat declaration that he opposed any dominion plan omitting the peoples of the Indian states.

In the interests of these states, as distinguished from British India, and on behalf of the big Moslem minority in India, the British dominion plan provides that several autonomous states may be established if the people wish.

Nehru, however, contended hotly, "we have remained united in slavery and we shall remain united in freedom." He spoke at a reception given by Thany Pillay, president of the Travancore State People's conference.

Calls on Indians to Oppose Japs

At the same time Nehru urged Indians to organize themselves against Japanese aggression.

"The Japanese assertion that they are coming to India to set us free is absurd and wholly false," he said. "That is clear from Japan's misdeeds in China and Korea.

"I consider it my duty to oppose any foreign invasion of India."

Louis Johnson, head of a special American mission to India, then talked again with Nehru and with Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, president of the Congress party, and it was learned he had been in recent touch with the White House at Washington on the Indian affair.

Later tonight Nehru said after a long committee session, "we are not releasing our resolution yet."

Azad reported he had presented a letter from Cripps and that the decision on the British plan would be sent to Cripps tomorrow.

Negotiations Seen Collapsing

Congress quarters described Nehru's stand as a sign that the negotiations were breaking down, despite the new defense minister plan aimed at mollifying Hindu and Moslem alike.

Nehru was reported already to have received from Cripps the revised British War Cabinet statement, which presumably was the same thing Cripps told Jinnah Thus Nehru's objections afterward took on greater significance.

A less potent Indian leader, the one-time Communist Manendra Nath Roy, called on his countrymen to fight the Japanese first and settle their political quarrels afterward.

Calling attention to the bombings Sunday and Monday of Ceylon and the Indian mainland and today's planeless air raid alarm at the great southeast port of Madras, Roy declared:

"War has come to India. x x x We know what happened in Malaya and what is happening in Burma even today. The same thing will happen in India if stern measures are not taken immediately. There is no time to lose.

"All political bargaining must stop and the government must be reinforced with popular men who are prepared to set aside all other considerations to apply themselves to the task of arousing in the people a spirit of resistance and putting them on a war footing."

Roy heads a "Win the War" group which demands postponement of every other issue.

Meanwhile the civil defense department of the Madras Presidenty reported that not more than 10 Japanese planes participated in Monday's raids on Vizagapatam and six in the raid on Cocanada.

Although full details were not disclosed, it was announced that the first Vizagapatam raid was directed against ships approaching the port and two subsequent raids were aimed at the dock area and oil installations, causing slight damage.

Indian.

Jinnah said that this conc sion was made by the British W Cabinet in its reply to Indi criticism of the original Briti proposal for India's post-war dependence.

He revealed that the British gotiator, Sir Stafford Cripps, to him of the Defense Ministry off this afternoon and that the p posal would be considered by t Moslem League tomorrow. Aft seeing Sir Stafford, Jinnah co ferred with Sir Archibald P. Wa ell, Commander-in-Chief for Indi

Nevertheless, despite the ne British offer and renewed effor by a United States envoy, t leader of the Hindu all-India Congress party expressed fort right objections to other phas of the program, and signs gre that the whole plan probab would fail of general Indian a ceptance.

League Dominantly Hindu Signifies It Is Rejecting Plan Which Would Make Native Head of Ministry.

New Delhi, April 7 (A. P.).—The working committee of the All-India Congress was reported tonight to have decided to adhere to its stand against the British independence plan in spite of a British offer to appoint an Indian as Defense Minister.

Reports that this dominant Hindu group still opposed the British program for Dominion status after the war followed announcement by the Moslem League president, Mohammed Ali Jinnah, that the British War Cabinet was prepared to hand the defense portfolio to a representative er, after the two had met this morning with Sir Stafford.

The meeting of Pandit Nehru and President Azad with Sir Stafford lasted only eight minutes. Before that brief interview, Mr. Johnson had seen Sir Stafford.

The emissary from London was reported to have handed Pandit Nehru and President Azav a statement from the British Cabinet.

A short time later, Pandit Nehru declared his opposition to any plan for India from which the peoples of the Indian States were omitted—a declaration which Congress quarters said was an indication that the negotiations with Britain were breaking down. One element of the British plan for giving India Dominion status was that separate agreements would be made with the Indian States if they chose to remain apart from a post-war federation.

Nehru Makes Speech

Pandit Nehru, speaking at a reception given by Thanu Pillay, president of the Travancore State People's Conference, described those who talk of treaties with the Indian States as "lunatics, fools or knaves." He also indicated that whatever the British Government or its emissary might say, the Indian people had essential unity and that he would fight those who meant to disrupt India.

"We have remained united in slavery," he said, "and we shall remain united in freedom."

"I don't know what the future will bring," Pandit Nehru said, "but in the present I will not, as far as I can, permit or encourage a wrong conception in the people's mind.

"This country, with its mountain fastnesses and southern seas, is one country. It is going to be once in freedom as it has been in subjection and the Indian States people must play a big part in that United India."

Pandit Nehru said that he disagreed with those who thought that the problem of the States could be left out for the time being and contended that "instead of an attempt being made to soften animosities and untie knots, the Brtiish Government is adding more knots."

Of a decidedly different opinion was Mahendra Nath Roy, former communist who heads an Indian Win-the-War group. Calling attention to Japanese air attacks on India, he demanded a halt in all political bickering and immediate stern measures to save India from Malay's fate.

An adherent to the original British proposal for the formation of an Indian union was gained today in Kashmir, the largest State in India. Kashmir's Prime Minister, Sir Gopalaswami Iyengar, said that his State would welcome the information of a single Indian union and would do its utmost to co-operate in the work of framing a suitable constitution.

Mohammed Ali Jinnah, president of the Moslem League, the biggest group among India's 77,000,000 minority Moslems, conferred later for 30 minutes with Cripps.

Jinnah arranged to meet Sir Archibald P. Wavell, commander in chief in India, later while the Working Committee of the Congress party was called to hear a report by Azad and Nehru on their meeting with Cripps.

Cripps was expected to make an announcement tomorrow which would indicate the success or failure of his mission.

Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles said today he did not believe the people of India would be deluded by Japanese radio propaganda urging them to rebel against Great Britain and co-operate with Japan.

Mr. Welles added he imagined the Indian people would remember the type and results of co-operation extended by Japan to China during the last few years and would judge the current Tokio propaganda accordingly.

Doubts India Will Be Fooled.

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—Premier Hideki Tojo's appeal to the people of India to rise against British rule and join hands with Japan does not impress Acting Secretary of State Welles as likely to score a resounding success.

Asked at his press conference today for comment on Tojo's appeal, Mr. Welles said that he did not think the Premier's words would strike a responsive chord in the Indian masses.

The people of India, he asserted have very much in mind the type of co-operation which Japan for the past several years has held out to the people of China, and they are therefore not likely to be deluded.

U. S. Hongkong Officials Reported Transferred

Quarters Said To Be Better Than Those Of British, But Food Remains Problem

Chungking, April 7 (AP)—The most recent arrivals who escaped from Hongkong said today that Consul General Addison Southard and other members of the American consulate staff have been transferred to new quarters in the Stanley district of Hongkong, where most of the civilians are interned.

The new quarters were described as better than those provided for the British, but food was said to be a problem. Prices have increased tremendously, and the American dollar, formerly the equivalent of four Hongkong dollars, now brings only two Hongkong dollars. Flour is selling for thirty-five American dollars a bag.

China and Vatican to Open Diplomatic Relations.

Chungking, April 7 (A. P.).—An exchange of diplomatic representatives between China and the Vatican has been arranged, a governmental spokesman announced today. He said that the Chinese Government soon would send an envoy—as yet undesignated—to the Holy See.

A similar exchange was arranged recently between Tokio and the Vatican.

Pearl Harbor Pictures Sent to Russia By Japs

KUIBYSHEV, Russia, April 7 (AP)—A series of Japanese pictures purporting to show the damage inflicted on U. S. ships and defenses at Pearl Harbor by Japanese bombers and torpedo planes have reached this auxiliary Russian capital.

The text with one picture describes a row of eight ships in the foreground as "The U. S. Pacific Fleet Before It Is Finally Destroyed." A blazing background in this picture is said to be Hickam airfield.

The other photographs show ships either capsized, afire, or surrounded by oil patches, with one direct bomb hit being scored. The wakes of torpedoes streaking down on the ships also are portrayed.

There are also pictures showing two sinking ships, entitled "the dying moments of the Prince of Wales and Repulse," the British warships sunk off Malaya.

The appearance in Russia of pictures of Japanese successes immediately recalls the German technique of sending films of the Nazi conquest of France and the Lowlands throughout the world to impress other countries of Nazi might.

Japanese and Russian armies presently are on the alert along their Manchukuoan-Siberian borders despite the existence of a neutrality pact between the two countries.

"Makes General Review"

Halifax told reporters that there had been a "great deal of talk about allocation of munitions—the principles of allocation," and he added:

"The President made a general review of what reinforcements the United States had moved to various points in the Pacific."

He said these reinforcements consisted both of manpower and material.

Walter Nash, New Zealand's Minister to the United States and representative on the council, reported that "everything is going excellently." He said he knew of no council or meeting "doing a better job than we are so far."

Mackenzie King May Attend

With two exceptions, the personnel at the council meeting was the same as attended a week ago. Harry L. Hopkins, chairman of the munitions assignment board, was absent and Leighton McCarthy, the Canadian Minister, was present. Canada was represented last week by the legation's councillor, Hume Wrong.

McCarthy said he thought W. L. Mackenzie King, the dominion Prime Minister, would come to Washington for a meeting of the Pacific council if it is at all possible. The next meeting is scheduled for a week from today.

Roosevelt Gives Council Troop-Use Review

APR 8 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 7—A review of the reinforcements the United States has sent to various points in the Pacific, described by the British Ambassador, Lord Halifax, as very encouraging, was presented by President Roosevelt today at the second meeting of the Pacific War Council.

Representatives of the seven United Nations with membership on the council indicated the Chief Executive might have a statement later in the day concerning the meeting.

Strategy Task Ahead

An organization meeting was held a week ago and the participants indicated afterward that they might be ready at today's conference to plunge actively into the task of devising strategy and policies.

The nations represented on the council are the United States, Great Britain, China, the Netherlands, Australia, New Zealand and Canada.

President Roosevelt, rid of a head cold that had troubled him for two days, resumed a full-work schedule in the executive office.

Japs' Main Rush Stemmed, Military Men Agree

Associated Press Correspondent

APR 8 1942

Washington, April 7—The lightning has gone out of Japan's lightning war after four months of spectacular advances, military men agreed today.

They expect further enemy gains and possibly such a bold new stroke as an attack on Siberia. But concentrations of Allied air power in Australia and India have stemmed the main Japanese onrush.

Here is the view of military and naval men as the war enters its fifth month:

The United Nations are approaching, if they have not actually attained, numerical airplane equality with Japan in the Australia and Burma-India theaters.

New Guinea And Ceylon

This was shown March 11 in the smashing of the first big invasion thrust at Australia before it could even get under way from New Guinea. It was shown again last week end when a "Pearl Harbor" attack on Ceylon became a bitter Japanese defeat.

Over the western Pacific as a whole, however, Japan still has superiority of plane strength and may have it for months. Thus, if she makes an all-out drive in any particular region she undoubtedly can win control of the air there.

Airmen recently returned from the fighting zones report that the best Japanese pursuit plane, the "Zero fighter," can out-maneuver the American P-40 type, although the P-40 compensates for this with greater armor protection and leakproof gasoline tanks.

Jap Flyers Outfought

Japanese pilots are excellent flyers, but American pilots have been able to outfight them repeatedly, even when greatly outnumbered.

Unfortunately one theater in which the Japanese have undertaken a determined campaign is one where there is no prospect of aerial reinforcements—the Philippines.

If the Japanese decide to take Bataan at any cost they can bring such ruthless pressure against Gen-eral Wainwright's forces that even ually he will have to fali back o the fortress of Corregidor. No on knows how long Corregidor can hol out under heavy enemy bombard ment.

The Japanese apparently want t end the main Philippine campaig before the rainy season, which b gins in two or three weeks.

Similarly, heavy May rains i Burma will impede aerial fightin and flood the valleys over whic any advance to India must be mad

If Japan's Burma and Australia campaigns go too slowly, Toky may seek new fields of conquest.

The next Japanese grand cam paign may be an attempt to secur the northwestern flank by pouncin on Russia to drive the Soviet Arm into the interior of Siberia. Th Russians have kept a powerfu army facing Japan's Kwantung army to check just such a maneuver

What the Japanese do about Rus sia may depend on the outcome o early spring battles on Russia's European front.

TELLS JAPS SKIES WILL RAIN STEEL

Senator Thomas Warns That Cities Face Fires.

APR 8 1942

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—Senator Thomas, Democrat, of Utah, speaking in Japanese, warned the Japanese people today that they can expect heavy losses "when your own cities and villages will look into the skies to find a rain of fire and steel falling upon them."

The chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, a former missionary and instructor in the Orient, prepared his fourth monthly appeal to the Japanese for broadcast from West Coast short wave stations today, the 120th day since the Japanese attack upon this country.

Asserting that 30,000 Japanese were killed in one engagement alone—the battle of Macassar Strait—Senator Thomas asked the Japanese to remember how great had been their losses in 120 days even while they were winning.

The Senator said that a few military leaders had allowed themselves to be bribed into sacrificing the people of Japan in a futile attempt to save Nazi Germany from destruction.

He said that Japan now had only two Allies "Italy, already wasted and on the verge of exhaustion as a result of acting as a tool of Hitler, as your nation is doing today. The other is Nazi Germany, whose career since your partnership began has been one almost exclusively of defeats."

At the same time the Senator said "on the other side a different kind of partnership has arisen—a partnership that embraces already twenty-six nations, with eleven more nations rendering aid in fighting the Axis. That partnership is not one just among governments, it is a partnership among peoples. The peoples of the world have come together in an unprecedented alliance based on mutual understanding, mutual sympathy and mutual respect."

It Was "Oil Or Else" With Japs, Hart Says

Former Allied Far East Naval Chief Refers To Campaign Won. For The Present

Chicago, April 7 (AP)—Vice-Admiral Thomas Hart, former chief of the Allied naval forces in the Far East, state dtonight that the Japanese had to obtain oil "or go under."

"That is the one essential strategis material which the Japanese have to acquire—or go under—and the fact was fundamental, in the Far East campaign which the Japanese have won—for the present," he told members of the Economic Club.

"The Japanese offensive campaign, in the Far East, appears to have been built around their necessity of getting those southern oil fields just as quickly as they could. Until they can get that oil out, they have to carry on, for the most, on the oil which they had in storage. They had a lot of it, but they have to manage replenishment in some way."

Washington, April 7 (AP)—Mrs Herbert Evatt, wife of the Australian Minister of External Affairs came to the aid of romance today. She said she didn't see why Australian girls shouldn't marry Uncle Sam's soldiers, sailors and Marines stationed there.

HELD UP REPORT ON HAWAII IN '23

APR 8 1942

Senate Committee Had Data on Plotting of Japs.

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—The Senate Immigration Committee withheld from publication today a report on conditions in Hawaii in 1923 which Senator Maybank, Democrat, of South Carolina, said contained information that might have made the United States more alert in the defense of the island possession.

On the suggestion of Senator Johnson, Republican, of California, Senator Stewart, Democrat, of Tennessee, the chairman, decided to consider implications of the document before disclosing its details. Mr. Johnson said that he believed publication could cause misgivings between the legislative and administrative branches of Government at a time when unity was the nation's purpose.

The report was prepared by a commission appointed by the then Secretary of Labor Davis to investigate labor conditions in the islands. Senator Stewart commented that the report interested him because the investigators, sent to study labor problems, emphasized an urgent need for military preparedness in the light of Japanese infiltration.

Senator Maybank said that, while the information obviously was "water over the dam," its publication might serve to prevent mistakes of the past and help assure defense in the future.

If, he said, the people had known what the Japanese were doing to control the economic and political life of Hawaii, the country might be in a better military position.

The South Carolinian quoted the commissioners as reporting alarming Japanese occupancy of quarters contiguous to Pearl Harbor and how they were confident of ultimate control by sheer numbers of the Pacific islands.

Senator Maybank said that he was not criticizing any one for not making the report public at the time because there might have been good reasons for suppression.

Marine Corporal Saved Flyer in Crash.

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—Lieut.-Gen. Thomas Holcomb, marine commandant, commended Corporal Carl T. Hickman of the marines today for having rescued Capt. Randolph C. Berkeley Jr., when their plane crashed during a take-off December 18 from an island in the Midway group in the Pacific.

Capt. Berkeley, a resident of Washington, D. C., was dazed and injured in the crackup and Hickman braved the possibility of bomb or gasoline explosions in order to rescue him.

"It is apparent," Gen. Holcomb told Hickman in the commendation, "that Capt. Berkeley's successful rescue could not have been effected had it not been for your presence of mind and resourcefulness in the emergency."

Hickman, 27 years old, enlisted in the marines in 1940. His home address was given as Richmond, Cal. Capt. Berkeley, a graduate of Annapolis in 1938, is the son of Brig.-Gen. R. C. Berkeley, retired marine officer of Staunton, Va.

HONOLULU IS READY WITH GAS DEFENSE

Decontamination Squads Are Prepared for Action.

APR 8 1942

Honolulu, April 7 (A. P.).—Grotesquely clad decontamination squads battled through a simulated gas attack yesterday to demonstrate that Hawaii is prepared for any eventuality. An airplane, ammunition dump, tank, gun, telephone building and a long stretch of road were treated just as if great gas bombs suddenly had threatened to put men and equipment out of action.

Roaring to the scene in trucks, the decontamination squads leaped from vehicles and plunged through clouds of purposely set smoke bombs. They sprinkled the landscape with chemicals and dirt, sprayed the ostensibly contaminated walls and equipment, washed them down so that there no longer was any danger and sped away to other fronts.

It took less than three minutes each to decontaminate the airplane, tank, gun, ammunition dump and telephone building. The roadway was made safe for artillery and infantrymen at the rate of fifteen feet a minute.

More than a hundred army men each week are put through an intensive course in decontamination and first aid under Lieut. J. E. Reilly of Jackson Heights, L. I., who operates the Chemical warfare School here. Lieut. Reilly said that the army was providing the best protection available against gas. The entire civilian and military personnel on Oahu, on which Honolulu is situated, has been equipped with gas masks.

REDS REPORT 79 MORE NAZI PLANES DOWN

Toll For 9 Days Raised To 494, With Russian Loss Of 103

Germans Declared Drawing On Tank Force Meant For Spring Drive

By EDDY GILMORE
Associated Press Correspondent

Kuibyshev, April 7—Soviet airmen and ground batteries destroyed seventy-nine German planes yesterday, to boost their nine-day total to 494 Nazi aircraft, against 103 Russian losses for this period, the Russians announced officially tonight.

Thelatest figures given in tonight's Moscow communique indicated a slackening in the furious pace of the aerial warfare which reached a peak over the week end when the Russians listed 221 Nazi planes destroyed in the air and on the ground in two days. Yesterday's Soviet losses were placed at nineteen planes.

As for the situation on the land front, the night communique again said there were no substantial changes in positions.

Ground Force Toll Added

A communique supplement said that on Monday the Red air force destroyed or damaged a number of German tanks, armored cars and 100 other motor vehicles; smashed a railway train, and cut to pieces two Nazi infantry companies.

Khaki - painted German tanks thrown into the fighting against the Russians were singled out as fresh evidence that continued heavy blows by the Red army were forcing Hitler to use up material he had meant to save for a big spring offensive.

The tanks were manufactured as late as February when Hitler's factories were going at top speed to equip the new German armies, said Pravda, Communist party organ. Instead of being painted white for winter fighting, they bore their summer khaki.

30 Towns Captured

Military dispatches reported the capture of thirty communities and a large railway station on the Central front, as Russian claims of German planes destroyed indicated that the heaviest aerial battles of the year were being fought, probably around Lake Ilmen.

The ground gains were said to have been made in the last two days.

[The Germans admitted a break in their lines southeast of Lake Ilmen, where the Russians have been trying to destroy the trapped Sixteenth German Army at Staraya Russa for weeks, but claimed that the gap eventually was closed in hand-to-hand battles.]

On another section of the front the Soviet communique said, Soviet artillerymen destroyed seventeen blockhouses and other defense works in two days of severe fighting.

Fighting Over Murmansk

Red Star, the army organ, indicated that some of the heavy air fighting had taken place over Murmansk, reporting 119 raids on that far-northern supply port since the start of the war, and a very big attack on March 24, when 200 aircraft fought over the harbor.

Red Star said fifteen German planes were destroyed and the rest forced to jettison their bombs in the bay and on the cliffs. The attack was termed a "big fiasco."

Meanwhile, the first United States plane in its war paint to reach Soviet Russia landed Admiral William H. Standley, United States Ambassador, at the airport here.

"It's Good To Be Here"

As the big plane with its red, white and blue insignia rolled to a stop, Admiral Standley stepped out into a foot of slush and remarked: "Well, it's good to be here. We've been on the way nineteen days."

He was wearing a fedora, a strange-looking hat in this climate, and while a biting April wind reddened his ears he received the greetings of American Embassy personnel, representatives of the Russian Foreign Office, Chinese, Polish and Netherlands diplomats, and Sir Archibald Clark Kerr, the British Ambassador.

He said he would present his credentials soon in Moscow, where Premier Vyacheslav M. Molotov was receiving the new Japanese Ambassador, Naotake Saito, today.

With the arrival of Admiral Standley, the United States is represented in Russia by an Ambassador for the first time since last October, when Laurence A. Steinhardt left to take a new post in Turkey.

MOSCOW, Wednesday, April 8 (AP)—Soviet troops, overcoming a fierce German counter-attack, have captured "an important place" on the southwestern (Kharkov) front, the Moscow radio announced today.

The announcer said the "Germans made every effort to hold this place and avert encirclement," but that Soviet troops wrested the initiative, and with a Red tank attack "the Germans retreated in disorder.

30 Communities Fall Before Reds' Drive; Air War Intensified

Germans Declared Showing They Are Prematurely Tapping Spring Reserves

APR 8 1942

By the Associated Press.

KUIBYSHEV, U. S. S. R., April 7.—Thirty German-occupied communities and a large railway station have fallen before fierce Red Army attacks in the last two days in one sector of the western front, military dispatches reported today.

With land combats continuing in various regions, the Communist party newspaper Pravda said the Germans show they are prematurely tapping their springtime reserves by using tanks painted khaki, rather than winter white in Nazi counter-attacks.

Intensified aerial warfare was reported today to have cost the Germans 415 planes in the eight days from March 29 through April 5, while Red Army losses were held to 48.

110 Destroyed Sunday.

Soviet flyers and gunners destroyed 119 German aircraft in sky combat and on airdromes Easter Sunday alone while "our losses were 17 planes," the Soviet Information Bureau said.

(The bureau's figures indicated aerial action of a scope unparalleled in Russia since the first days of the German invasion last summer. Such details, however, as the major combat areas and the proportion of victims shot down were not announced.)

Red Army men were officially declared to have killed 2,300 Germans in two days on the Leningrad front and recaptured 18 more settlements on the Kalinin front to the south.

"On another sector of the front," the information bureau said, "Soviet artillerymen in two days' fighting destroyed 17 blockhouses and defense works and 5 machine-gun nests."

A counterattack on the central front was said to have been repulsed by the Russians with slaying of about 100 Germans, capture of five machine guns and disabling of three tanks.

Hungarians Revolt.

Tass declared in an Istanbul dispatch that some men of a Hungarian regiment ordered to the Russian front had revolted. About 70 soldiers who signed a petition saying they did not want to fight the Russians were arrested, and ringleaders were shot, it said.

The Moscow radio said 60 Nazi parachutists attempted to drop behind a Russian line which had repelled repeated ground assaults, and Red Army machine gunners put up such a hail of fire that only three reached the ground alive.

Increased use of cavalry and horse-drawn sledges by the Red Army is expected during the next six or eight weeks as the battle front becomes a vast quagmire.

Tass said "the decline of the fighting spirit of German soldiers and officers" was the subject of an order of the day to the Twenty-third Army Corps of General Schubert, a copy of which was reported seized by guerrillas.

Russian Successes Checked, Nazis Claim

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 7 (AP).—The Berlin radio today told of Russian breaks into Nazi lines southeast of Lake Ilmen, but the German high command reported that offensive operations "brought further successes" and local Soviet attacks had been repulsed.

The Russian drive, with a substantial number of heavy tanks supporting strong infantry forces, was said by the Berlin radio to have smashed the German positions.

(The Russians have long claimed that the German 16th Army had been trapped at Staraya Russa, in the Lake Ilmen region.)

The German report said the Nazis had inflicted heavy losses on the Soviet troops and "adjusted" their lines after heavy bayonet fighting. Eight heavy Red tanks were destroyed and others damaged, the radio announced.

The Russian attacks followed fierce artillery preparation.

Twenty-nine enemy tanks were destroyed yesterday on the eastern front and sixty-nine Soviet aircraft were shot down or destroyed on the ground, the High Command reported.

Military installations within Leningrad were declared kept under fire by heavy artillery.

The German radio said that 307 Russian and sixty-eight British planes had been shot down in aerial combat between March 29 and April 4.

The radio said that northeast of Lake Ilmen, in the region northwest of Moscow, and Kalinin, Red Army preparations for renewing heavy attacks were recognized in time and were smashed by well-aimed and concentrated German fire.

Position Is Improved, Nazi Radio Declares

LONDON, April 7 (AP).—The German radio, quoting the German high command, reported today that a Nazi infantry division northeast of Orel had driven Soviet Russian forces back and achieved an important improvement in the German position, Exchange Telegraph said.

The German report said numerous prisoners were taken and that the Russians suffered bloody and severe losses.

STANDLEY ARRIVES IN SOVIET CAPITAL

Landed at Kuibyshev by First Plane to Show U. S. Insignia in Russia

By The Associated Press

Kuibyshev, April 7.—A plane with the red, white and blue insignia of the United States brought the new U. S. Ambassador, Admiral William Harrison Standley, to Kuibyshev today.

The aircraft was the first American plane to arrive in "war paint" in the Soviet Union.

Standley stepped out into the foot-deep slush of the air field and said: "Well, it's good to be here. We've been on the way 19 days."

The British Ambassador, Sir Archibald Clark Kerr, arrived by air ten minutes earlier from Moscow.

As the Standley plane circled the field, Chinese, Polish and Netherlands diplomats who were waiting to greet Admiral Standley gasped with pleasure at sight of the U. S. emblem.

"Boy, that's home!" shouted Major Richard Park, assistant military attache of the American embassy.

Admiral Standley said he planned to keep the plane here. He said he carried no special message, merely his credentials, which he expects to present shortly in Moscow.

While he was arriving, the new Japanese Ambassador, Naotake Sato, was being received in Moscow by Foreign Commissar Vyacheslav Molotov.

Berlin (from German broadcasts), April 7—(AP)—The Japanese military attache to Russia, Colonel Michitake Yamaoaka, has left Kuibyshev for undisclosed reasons for Tokyo, the German radio said today quoting "competent Tokyo quarters."

Canned American Asparagus Soviet Porter's Chief Weakness

APR 8 1942

Correspondent Pays Tribute to Railway Provodnik Ivan Ivanovich and Colleagues of Hot-Water, Cold-Water and No-Water Schools of Service

By Eddy Gilmore

KUYBYSHEV, Russia, April 7 (AP).—It is hard and at the same time easy to become an expert on Russian railroads. It is hard because it takes a long time to get to Russia. It is easy because once here, you naturally become an expert.

I have been here five months, twenty-nine days of which have been passed on Soviet trains, enjoying every class from "riding hard" to traveling in an ultra-soft car.

Russian porters are called provodniks, and I have passed so much time with them that I feel entitled to write a tome on "My Life Among the Provodniks."

One trip took seventeen days. Here I really got to know the inner soul of provodnik Ivan Ivanovich, whose one great weakness was canned American asparagus sprouts.

Another trip took six days. The provodnik on this jaunt had a name that sounded like Ivan Ivanovich. He had a weakness for almost everything. A third trip also took six days, with a provodnik who had a name that sounded like Ivan Ivanovich.

The big reason why it takes a long time to get anywhere these days is a compliment to Russia's war effort: war materials and troop trains come first. The line is cleared for them on all routes.

During my life among the provodniks I always carried my own food, arriving at this wise conclusion because there was no dining car on the trains.

Provodniks are divided into three great classes: hot-water provodniks, cold-water provodniks, and no-water-at-all provodniks.

A hot-water provodnik jumps off at stations and gets hot water from taps that spout almost boiling. A cold-water provodnik jumps off at stations and gets cold water and heats it in a small samovar. A no-water-at-all provodnik just jumps off at stations and looks up and down the track, or picks his teeth.

The reason for water is "Chi," which in Russion means tea, without which you can't travel far.

Train travel offers many diversions besides provodniks. After a day on the train all become one big family. You sing songs with people, lend can-openers, borrow tobacco and indulge in snowball fights.

It is the provodnik, however, who strikes a deep note in my heart. To see him at his best is to see him in full flight across a snow bank, a bucket of water in each hand, leaving a steaming trail as he frantically hot-foots it for a train slowly pulling away.

Provodniks generally have assistants, and if ever there was a job where the individual is subordinate to the task, it is a second-string provodnik on a Russian hard train.

Ruhr And Rhineland Hit. Nazis Raid English East Coast Town

APR 8 1942

[By the Associated Press]

London, Wednesday, April 8—The Berlin, Luxembourg and Hilversum radios went off the air early today, an indication usually that the RAF is operating over Germany or German-occupied territory. The Hilversum station is in the Netherlands.

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 7—In fair weather or foul, the RAF is going to continue its destructive assaults upon German war industries, a well-posted informant said today, citing last night's raid despite severe icing conditions upon the Ruhr and the Rhineland.

German arms production already has been crippled by the initial heavy blows of the spring air offensive, said this source, and, he added, "this is just the beginning."

Nazis Hit Back At England

German raiders hit back at England tonight, dropping high-explosive and fire bombs on an east coast town. One Nazi raider was reported shot down.

Four persons, including a 10-year-old boy, were injured slightly in the east coast town and a few houses were damaged. A village and another east coast town also were bombed, but there was no damage. British night fighters were heard in action against the raiders.

Because of the weather, last night's RAF raids failed to match the ferocity of those the preceding night when 300 British bombers blasted Cologne, Le Havre and plants at Gennevilliers, near Paris.

Five British planes were lost in the latest attacks, the same number that failed to return from Sunday night's forays.

The Air Ministry declared the recent RAF raids on the Renault and Malford motor works near Paris has destroyed the equivalent of equipment for five armored and mechanized divisions.

"In effect one of the major tank battles of the war had been won by the RAF in about six hours at the cost of four bombers and twenty-five men," the Air Ministry said. "This is of paramount importance to the Allied armies of both the Russian and Libyan fronts."

Production Stopped For Year

The two factories were producing about seventy trucks daily as well as many tanks and other vehicles for the Germans.

The Ministry said this production had been stopped for at least a year, and some of it for the duration of the war because irreplaceable machine tools had been ruined.

The Admiralty announced the British submarine Tempest is overdue and must be consireded lost.

Destroyer Havock Wrecked

The Admiralty also announced the British destroyer Havock had been wrecked off the coast of French Tunisia. One sailor lost his life in the wreck. The rest of the normal crew of 145 were "believed safe." The Italians claimed they had sunk the Havock.

The eight-year-old warship participated in the destruction of six German merchant ships and the munitions ship Ravensfeldt at Narvik April 10, 1940.

She was unscratched, although two destroyers of the force of five were lost.

Ruhr and Rhineland R. A. F. Targets in Continuing Attacks

Docked British Destroyer Is Fired by Bombers, Germans Claim

APR 8 1942

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 7.—British bombers, raiding Germany for the second successive night, attacked objectives in the Ruhr and the Rhineland last night, it was authoritatively stated today.

Bad weather, however, held the attack to a smaller scale than that of the night before, when more than 300 bombers raided Cologne, docks at Le Havre and Gennevilliers, near Paris.

The text of the authoritative British statement said:

"It is learned in London that last night our bombers attacked objectives in the Ruhr and Rhineland. Owing to very bad weather, the scale of the attack was reduced and results were difficult to observe."

The Air Ministry reported five bombers were missing after the attacks.

The communique added that two medium-sized enemy supply ships were hit yesterday off Norway by coastal command planes—one by a torpedo and the other by bombs. One coastal command plane is missing, it said.

Nazis Report Warship Hit

BERLIN (From German broadcasts), April 7 (AP).—German bombers fired a British destroyer docked at a point on the south English coast and scored hits on a radio station, the German high command announced today.

"British bomber aircraft last night carried out nuisance raids on western German," its communique said. "There were slight civilian casualties." Three raiders were said to have been shot down.

The fighting squadron of the late Lieutenant Colonel Werner Moelders won its 3,000th air victory yesterday, the high command said.

The British raid was for the second night in succession.

"Damage was caused to houses in residential quarters," an official statement said.

"There were some dead and injured among the civilian population.

London, April 7—The Admiralty announced today that the British destroyer Havock had been wrecked off French Tunisia.

Only one sailor lost his life in the wreck, the Admiralty said, adding that the 1,340-ton vessel was a total loss. The rest of the normal crew of 145 were "believed safe."

(The Italians claimed they sank the Havock.)

Nazi Dive-Bombers Raid Malta In Heaviest Attack, 4 Downed

VALLETTA, Malta, April 7 (AP).—Germany's mass air attack today on this British island base, with dive-bombing of airdromes and the harbor in the face of intense anti-aircraft fire, was the heaviest Malta has experienced in the war, it was officially announced tonight. Four Nazi planes were announced as definitely destroyed.

Malta has had more than 1,500 air-raid alarms in two and one-half years.

The Germans roared in from several directions and penetrated both the high and low level anti-aircraft barrages for their dive-bombings. Preliminary reports showed that casualties were "not heavy, considering the scale of the bombing."

Two Junkers dive-bombers and two Messerschmitt fighters were reported destroyed, one Junkers was probably destroyed and two were damaged.

Great concussions shook this fortress city during the raid. Buildings in the harbor area vibrated as the bombs exploded and British gunners sent up their counter-fire. Cries could be heard from the darkness of the city.

Incomplete reports said anti-aircraft gunners had shot down two bombers and two fighter planes during the day and it was confirmed that two bombers were destroyed last night.

Transport Sunk, Few Saved, Italy Admits

By the Associated Press.

ROME, April 7.—The Italian high command acknowledged today that an Italian transport sailing in a convoy was torpedoed several days ago off the Greek coast and only a part of the troops on board could be saved.

The high command also reported lively patrol activity on both sides on the Libyan battle front and said Italian planes attacked British concentrations southeast of El Mechili.

It said the British lost eight planes—six in an attempted raid on Derna—and two in a raid on Bengasi which "caused only slight damage."

British to Repatriate Civilians by Cape of Good Hope Route

LONDON, April 7 (AP).—Diplomatic sources said today that 11,000 Italian civilians would be repatriated from camps on the East African coast in a long operation around the Cape of Good Hope which would be led by the Italian liners Saturnia and Vulcania.

The Saturnia and Vulcania are now at Gibraltar, British fortress at the western entrance of the Mediterranean, on their way to a withdrawal port on the Red Sea. (The United Press said the Oceania also was there).

The German Navy presumably has been notified of their passage to protect them from U-boat attack in the Atlantic. Many more ships will follow these two, it was said.

The civilians to be withdrawn are men unfit for military service, and women and children. They were placed in coastal camps by the British after defeat of Italian armies in East African territories of Italy.

Nazis Massing Troops Along Belgian Coast

LONDON, Wednesday, April 8 (AP)—German troops are being concentrated along the Belgian coast apparently as a precaution against any British landing attempts, the News-Chronicle said today.

Typhus cases were reported to have broken out among Germans quartered in the Paris area, where all leaves were cancelled.

A reporter who covered the commando raid on St. Nazaire asked the Canadian commander whether he expected his troops to share in raiding activities.

"Yes," the general replied, "Patrol and raiding activities are part of the training the troops require and the normal business for the army is to get its patrols well out." He urged war industries to speed their production "so our men can go into the field with an advantage over the enemy."

Vichy was said to be fully conscious of the feeling of the German army, and this, plus the old instrument of blackmail through the control of the lives of thousands of French prisoners in Germany, makes Laval's position stronger than heretofore, London sources said.

Laval's New Rise Leaves London Apprehensive

APR 8 1942

By Drew Middleton

Associated Press Correspondent.

London, April 7 — Apprehension over the part the Vichy Government will play in the momentous events of this year is growing here in view of the emergence of Pierre Laval from the shadows, the transfer of the French battleship Dunkerque from Algiers to Toulon and the outstanding strategical importance of Madagascar to the struggle for control of the Indian Ocean.

The reappearance of Laval, former Vice-Premier in the Petain Government at Vichy, was called "ominous" by qualified sources. It was asserted that the Germans had chosen him to press Vichy for the surrender of all or part of the French fleet to German control.

Aim To Withdraw Army

Laval's hand was said to be strengthened in this aim by a new factor—a growing agitation in the German army for direct control of all France by the Germans. This agitation is especially marked in that part of the army concentrated in occupied France and commanded by Gen. Otto von Stuelpnagel, it was asserted.

Chief of State Petain and Laval conferred recently in and near Vichy, and an official announcement indicated they had reviewed the question of collaboration with Germany. However, advices reaching foreign diplomatic quarters in Bern, Switzerland, last Friday said Petain had declined to take Laval back into his Cabinet, from which Laval was ousted in December,

At the worst—and Britain has learned to look at the worst lately—Germany will assume control of the French fleet through pressure on Vichy, they said.

This fleet, plus the Italian navy, probably would give the Axis numerical superiority in the Mediterranean at the very moment it is believed intending to launch a drive on the Allied middle eastern bridge to the Caucasus and Russia.

As the Japanese drive westward across the Indian Ocean, the importance of Madagascar grows.

Britons said Vichy's assurances that the neutrality of the island would be upheld fail to arouse confidence here. The Government remembers similar statements concerning French Indo-China, which proved to be a stepping stone for the Japanese conquest of Malaya.

U. S. Relations Hopeful

One bright spot in the situation is the United States' influence with Vichy, informed sources said. One source said that Vichy is "most eager" to maintain relations with the United States.

He called these relations and their promise of food and medical supplies for the French people a "cardinal plank in the Vichy policy."

However, retention of American friendship in the face of closer collaboration with Germany is naturally most difficult.

Petain Gov't Ready to Sell Sugar to U. S.

APR 8 1942

German - controlled Paris Press Predicts New Vichy Regime.

By Mel Most

VICHY, Unoccupied France, Apr. 7. (AP)—Marshal Petain's government was disclosed officially tonight to be negotiating the sale of sugar from Reunion Island in the Indian Ocean to the United States as Axis-sponsored Paris newspapers expressed the strongest antipathy to date to Franco-American rapprochement.

One Paris editor, Jean Luchaire of Les Nouveaux Temps, openly predicted the fall of the Vichy cabinet "at the end of this week or beginning of next—unless France has agreed to commit suicide for the benefit of President Roosevelt."

The sale of Reunion sugar, from an annual maximum supply of 88,000 metric tons, is planned to relieve the present sugar shortage in the United States, officials said. They denied that the negotiations included supplies from Martinique and Guadeloupe in the Caribbean.

American ships delivering war materials to the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf, officials declared, could easily pick up sugar at Reunion on their way home. This is considered of vital inteerst to the United States since the American lack of sugar is due nto to a shortage of production but a shortage of transportation tonnage which cannot be diverted to Caribbean commercial traffic.

The Paris daily Aujourdhui devoted a front page editorial to the thesis that the United States had fallen out with Britain over who had the upper hand for the moment.

Citing the nomination of General MacArthur as commander in the Southwest Pacific and the "hardly disguised absorption of Canada by America, Aujourdhui added that President Roosevelt "not only charged his British partner with maladroitness; he treated him as a person of bad faith. If not, why the need for this engagement undertaken toward Hindus that London's promises will, this time, be kept?"

Tacit Complicity Seen

Luchaire's editorial comments, passed by the German censor in Paris, said "French 'neutrality' is nothing but tacit complicity between Vichy and Washington."

He warned the French against drastic measures the Axis might take—"more harmful to our country than all the diplomatic breaks imaginable between France and the United States"—if the association between unoccupied France and the Anglo-American bloc were continued.

Marshal Petain and Vice-Premier Admiral Jean Darlan are only "rusting away in Vichy," he said, whil former vice-premier Pierre Laval, Axis enthusiast, is the only one to occupy himself wtih the crucial questions of the day.

During the day the Vichy government protested officially to Washington against the appointment of Maynard Barnes as consul general to French equatorial Africa "without asking the consent of the legal French government." The vast colony is controlled by the Free French committee of Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

(The protest appeared to be a routine matter).

The Luchaire criticism of the Petain regime was matched in vehemence by another in the Paris newspaper La France Socialiste, written by Rene Chateau, who charged the church was among the forces working against Laval and collaboration.

Vichy, Chateau said, is suffering from "clericalism which has insinuated itself everywhere, everywhere dealing a blow to liberty of spirits, everywhere constraining them to weakness and poverty."

Capitalism Unbridled

He charged further that capitalism likewise was "reigning unbridled" and warned of "an undercurrent of bitterness and rebellion which mounts in a tide."

The Vichy government, meanwhile, announced officially it was protesting to Washington against the appointment of Maynard Barnes as Consul-General to Free French Equatorial Africa.

It was pointed out that Reunion Island lay more or less on the course of American ships taking war materials to the Red Sea and Persian Gulf and that they could pick up sugar on the return trip, whereas extra transportation tonnage could not be spared to ship sugar from the Caribbean. Reunion's annual sugar production ranges from 68,000 to 88,000 metric tons.

News of the negotiations aroused the greatest interest in Vichy, since Reunion, a small island of 200,000 population, 420 miles east of Madagascar, has been largely isolated since the French-German armistice, but now will establish trade ties with America. The island has been French for 300 years.

Paris, April 7 (A. P.).—Jean Luchaire, editor of the German-sponsored Paris newspaper Les Nouveaux Temps, predicted today that France will have a new government at the end of this week or the beginning of the next—unless she has agreed to commit suicide for the benefit of President Roosevelt.

Luchaire, president of the Paris Journalists Union, said that if political association between unoccupied France and the Anglo-American bloc should continue, the Axis would take measures more harmful to our country than all the diplomatic breaks imaginable between France and the United States.

AP Writer Predicts New Gallic Headache for Hitler—German Anger Is Reflected In Controlled Paris Press.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Roy P. Porter, Associated Press foreign correspondent who was in France before, during and after the German conquest and occupation, sees hopeful Spring signs for the United Nations and a new Gallic headache for Adolf Hitler in today's news from both French zones. Here is his interpretative story).

APR 8 1942

BY ROY P. PORTER

NEW YORK, April 7—(AP)—Adolf Hitler's lieutenants in the German occupation forces who control two-thirds of France are getting really worried about the increasing friendship between Vichy and Washington—and if German-inspired press comment is any gauge, they may do something about it.

Bad News For Axis

For three reasons, today's announcement that Marshal Petain's government is negotiating the sale of French Sugar from Reunion Island in the Indian Ocean to the United States is good news for the United Nations.

For the same three reasons, it's bad news from the Axis. The reasons are:

1. Official confirmation that the negotiations are proceeding means that normal diplomatic relations between the United States and France are continuing, despite Axis efforts to have them broken off.

2. The fact that these negotiations are new and that they deal with a subject as completely recent as the American sugar shortage means that both France and the United States can agree to consider new problems as they arise.

3. Most important of all, this announcement means that Marshal Petain is not afraid of German threats of reprisals for his increasingly close collaboration with the United States and has gone ahead, in the face of these warnings, to open a "new business" entry in his government's books.

All of which, if the Paris papers still print what the Germans tell them to print in the form the German censors specify—and there's no reason to believe that they don't—has made the Germans very, very angry.

Jean Luchaire, who rose to the editorship of the once authoritative newspaper "Le Temps" after the German occupation and changed its name to "Les Nouveaux Temps," predicts that France will have a new cabinet within a week.

And, still speaking through a German megaphone, he warns his countrymen of what may happed to the country on the old familiar Nazi pattern of "a fate worse than death." His remarks were only the keynote of the tone of all the Paris newspapers, which all get the same orders from the same German officials.

What Germans Might Do

What can the Germans do to the misbehaving French for playing in forbidden territory of the United Nation's backyard? There is only one answer: military action.

They can occupy the rest of France, they can seize the French fleet, they can send the recalcitrant marshal and part of his cabinet to concentration camps, they can continue to hold 1,500,000 French prisoners of war in German camps, they can intern—temporarily—United States Ambassador William D. Leahy and his staff at Vichy.

But all those are military moves and the question arises whether the German Army, sufficiently engaged if not embroiled in Russia, is capable—and willing—to take on the job of policing a new zone, subduing a new group of people and cutting of a new part of an already conquered nation from the rest of the world.

German garrisons in the occupied zone have already been depleted and replaced by older men because of manpower needs for the Russian front. German occupation commanders in September, 1941, etsimated the number of men they would need if the unoccupied zone were to be taken over and then threw up their hands, saying: "Where will we get the men and material to do all that?"

If they had it, they'd still face tremendous French opposition in the unoccupied zone, possibly greater than in the occupied territory, because the people under Vichy are hungrier than the people under German Paris, and a Frenchman with an empty stomach is very close to a bob-cat on a diet.

Some Frenchmen have maintained right along that it would have been better if the Germans had occupied all of France in 1940, but they are opposed to it now. Others regard the unoccupied territory as their only refuge from Nazi domination and would certainly make trouble for any troops the Germans might send in.

30.24 — 15827

It looks like a gigantic Nazi headache any way you figure it.

der circumstances indicating Axis pressure on the Vichy government, the United States abruptly discontinued these shipments and Secretary of State Hull announced that the United States felt compelled to reconsider its whole policy toward the Vichy government.

U. S. TO SHIP GOODS TO FRENCH AFRICA

Vessels in New York Get Permission to Sail; Military Supplies Barred.

APR 8 1942

WASHINGTON, April 7 — (AP) In line with the accord reached last month between Vichy and Washington, limited shipments of non-military supplies to French North Africa will be resumed, the State department disclosed today.

Two French vessels now in New York loaded with cargo for North Africa will be permitted to leave simultaneously with the departure from North Africa of two ships loaded with materials for the United States.

The precise nature of the cargoes and the exact dates of the ship movements were not revealed, but the State department emphasized that no military supplies of any character will go to North Africa. It was also emphasized that distribution of supplies arriving from the United States to the North African consumers will be under the direct supervision of American control officers.

In other words, satisfactory arrangemets have been made to insure that no United States supplies shipped to French North Africa for civilian uses will fall into Axis hands.

After the defeat of France in 1940 the United States agreed to permit limited shipments of civilian supplies, including food and motor fuel, to French North Africa. It was recognized that a collapse of North African economy, due to acute shortages of vital supplies formerly obtained from the United States, might cause unrest or even revolt among the native population and thus indirectly serve Axis ends.

However, when General Weygand last year was removed as French administrator in North Africa un-

St. Pierre Governor in Vichy

VICHY, April 7 (AP).—Baron Gilbert de Bournat, former Governor of St. Pierre and Miquelon, islands off Newfoundland, which were occupied by Free French forces last Christmas Eve, arrived here today from Lisbon. Taken prisoner during the occupation, De Bournat was repatriated at his own request under an agreement between the Free French and the British.

Intellectuals Seized in Paris

Vichy, April 7—(AP)—The arrest of 10 of "the most illustrious" members of the five French honorary academies was reported by Monday afternoon's Paris Midi which arrived here today.

The intellectuals were held three days, the newspaper said, after numerous illegal mimeographed leaflets were found in their possession during raids on their homes.

While the paper said their names could not be disclosed, it stated seven of them were members of the Academy of Inscriptions and Literature, two others of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, and one a scientist.

The item did not disclose what happened to the men after their detention, but it implied that they were allowed to go free after a warning from the authorities.

British Political Truce Hit

APR 8 1942

[By the Associated Press]

London April 7—Lord Beaverbrook's Evening Standard has attacked the so-called political truce under which Britain's major political parties have been avoiding contests in Parliamentary by-elections.

Under the heading "Ersatz MPs," the Standard said editorially yesterday that "a virile Parliament becomes all the more indispensable in view of the apparent desire of some Ministers," through wartime curbs on the freedom of the press and powers of the courts, to leave Parliament "the only free and independent institution."

Churchill Letter Printed

The editorial was followed by publication of a letter which Prime Minister Churchill had sent to War Minister Sir James Grigg, who is a candidate for the House of Commons in East Cardiff in a by-election.

Churchill expressed pleasure that the War Minister was seeking votes as a "non-party candidate" and said he believed the voters would realize that "to play party politics at such a time would be to strike a blow at national safety."

Paper's Criticism

The Standard said:

"Party machines and their local bodies assume immense powers (when continued under the truce). The result is a steady procession of ersatz MP's. . . . Some of them are so overcome by the hurly-burly of their uncontested elections that they are scarcely ever heard from coherently again.

"They would have a valuable function to perform in a Fascist Grand Council where suitable and spontaneous cheers are required. . . . Something more articulate is needed from the men whose duty it is to uphold Parliament as the chief bulwark of British freedom."

Lord Beaverbrook was Minister of Supply in the War Cabinet until the recent shakeup. Recently he was sent to the United States to assist in coordinating and expediting the lease-lend program.

U. S. Troops Revive Baseball In Ireland

Belfast, Northern Ireland, April 7 (AP)—United States troops revived baseball in Northern Ireland today for the first time since the last war when Company B defeated the Headquarters Company, 10 to 8.

The AEF paraded in full battle equipment before the game and donated the proceeds to the Air Force Benevolent Fund.

7 Charged With Murder In Belfast Gun Battle

By the Associated Press.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, April 7.—Five men and two women were charged with murder today as a result of the Easter Sunday running gun battle in a Belfast street in which a police officer was killed.

There was no statement from the suspects in a brief court appearance except that the killing "was not premeditated." The men, aged from 18 to 21, all were war industries workers.

The women were an 18-year-old waitress and a 16-year-old garment stitcher. Bail was denied in each of these two cases.

A sixth man, who was injured during the gun fight, will be charged when he is released from the hospital, police said.

AXIS CLAIMS 3 VESSELS

Italian Submarine said to have Sunk 20,000 Tons of Shipping

London, April 7—(AP)—The Bremen radio said today that an Italian submarine returning from operations in the Atlantic told of sinking three vessels aggregating more than 20,000 tons, Exchange Telegraph reported today.

The Bremen radio said the three were the Melpomene, British motor tanker, 7,011 tons; the Charles Racine, Norwegian tanker, 9,957 tons; the Boren, Swedish freighter, 4,528 tons.

The Melpomene formerly was a French vessel, trading with Mediterranean oil ports before the war began. She figured in the news on August 3, 1940, when British naval authorities at Port Said, Egypt, refused to permit her to sail for France, fearing that the oil would reach German hands.

BRAZIL PLANS TO ARM SHIPS

APR 8 1942

Move Spurred By Loss Of Five Vessels And 100 Lives In Two Months

Freighter Carrying Coal Disappears On Voyage From Philadelphia

[By the Associated Press]

Rio de Janeiro, April 7—Spurred by the loss of five ships and more than one hundred Brazilian lives in two months, the Government was reported today to have decided to arm all Brazil's merchant ships and to order their skippers to defend themselves against Axis submarines.

Brazilian vessels also will sail in convoys, blacked out at night, a high shipping source said.

These measures were reported following the announcement of the disappearance of the 3,557-ton Cabedello, which sailed from Philadelphia February 14 with a cargo of coal. There has been no word of her fifty-five crewmen.

Sinkings Caused Riots

Four other Brazilian ships had been sunk by Axis submarines. Following the last previous sinking rioters in Rio de Janeiro smashed up several German-owned business establishments.

Brazil severed diplomatic relations with Germany, Italy and Japan following the recent Pan-American conference here and subsequently broke up a vast Axis spy ring with the arrest of 200 Axis nationals.

This anti-Axis drive continued apace today with more widespread arrests of Japanese and the removal of fifty-eight more Nazi spies from prisons here to concentration camps on Ilha das Flores, in the middle of Rio de Janeiro harbor.

Posed As Peddler

Among those arrested today was Minoro Ohaski, Japanese army aviator, who had been posing as a fruit peddler.

A second postponement in departure of the first boatload of German and Italian diplomats for Lisbon was announced. They originally were to have sailed on April 5 but now they will not get under way until "some time after April 17." There was no official explanation.

A high source said the Germans have raised one protest after another against leaving the country, the latest being over the vessel's accommodations.

BRAZIL TO ARM MERCHANT SHIPS

Move Reported After Fifth Vessel Is Lost.

Rio de Janeiro, April 7 (A. P.).—The Brazilian Government was reported to have decided today to arm all merchant ships heavily and order them to defend themselves against Axis submarines following the disclosure of the loss of the fifth ship flying this republic's flag.

A high shipping source said the merchant fleet also would sail blacked out at night. More than 100 Brazilian lives have been lost in Axis submarine action so far.

The Brazilian Foreign Ministry announced today the disappearance of the 3,557-ton Brazilian freighter Cabedello, which sailed from Philadelphia on February 14 for Brazil and has not been reported since.

Four Brazilian ships previously had been sunk by Axis submarines. The last sinking was followed by extensive anti-Axis riots in Rio De Janeiro in which numerous German business houses were smashed.

Brazil severed diplomatic relations with Germany, Italy and Japan during the Pan-American Conference and followed up her action by smashing a vast Axis spy ring late last month, throwing 200 Axis nationals into concentration camps.

The Cabedello carried 4,400 tons of coal and was commanded by Capt. Pedro Velloso de Silveira, with a crew of fifty-five. Officials of the Government line Lloyd Brasileiro, the ship's owners, said they believed the vessel "was torpedoed at night without previous warning and sank immediately."

The ship was the former Prussia, built in Germany in 1912 and acquired by Brazil in 1917.

Tugwell Urges Plan To Avoid Submarines

San Juan, April 7 (AP)—Rexford G. Tugwell today said he believed a system of West Indies highways with ferries bridging the water gaps between islands in the Caribbean would be the answer to the submarine's threat to the area's food supply.

Just back from a trip to Trinidad, British Guiana and many of the islands, he said ferries could be built quickly and could cover the water gaps in daytime with a minimum of patrol protection.

The food stocks of some of the islands were described as "very low."

Mexico Will Put Two Axis Ships Into Service

Former German Hameln And Italian Marino O. To Ply Between Gulf Ports And New Orleans

Mexico City, April 7 (AP)—The Government announced today that two former Axis ships would be put into service between Mexican Gulf ports and New Orleans to take the place of steamer service formerly provided by the War Line from New York.

The Oaxaca, formerly the German Hameln, and the Tabasco, the former Italian Marina O., to be used in the service, were among the twelve Axis ships seized last spring while refuged in Mexican ports.

Arrangements have been made with United Sttaes railroads to carry needed cargo to New Orleans for loading, the announcement added.

Dutch Officials Warn Of West Indies Attacks

Balboa, C. Z., April 7 (AP)—Two Netherlands colonial governors, warned of approaching hostilities for the Dutch possessions in the Western Hemisphere today as United States and Netherlands forces prepared a determined defense for the strategic and economically important West Indies against marauding Axis naval forces.

Gov. G. J. Wouters of the Dutch West Indies warned the legislative council at Willemstad, Curacao, of the "serious possibility" that the islands may be involved directly in new hostilities and said the Government was taking all possible military measures.

Gov. J. C. Kielstra of Dutch Guiana, at the opening session of that colony's legislature, told the legislators that "actual war" is approaching the Netherlands territories in the Western Hemisphere.

Asserting that Curacao had already undergone enemy attack, the Governor said:

"A heavy responsibility is ours as a remaining free part of the empire. We must guard our liberty with all our strength and means."

Both governors spoke of the United States forces now based in the Netherlands possessions.

CURACAO FEARFUL OF ATTACK BY AXIS

APR 8 1942

Military Steps Taken in Dutch West Indies.

Willemstad, Curacao, Dutch West Indies, April 7 (A. P.).—The Dutch Government is taking all possible military measures in the Dutch West Indies in view of the serious possibility that these islands may be involved directly in new hostilities, Gov. G. J. J. Wouters announced today to the legislative council.

An Axis submarine shelled an oil refinery at Aruba and sank a number of tankers between Aruba and the Venezuelan coast in mid-February. It was the first direct attack on Western Hemisphere territory.

United States troops are in the Dutch West Indies, and only last week the entire United Nations armed forces there were placed under command of United States Rear Admiral J. B. Oldendorf.

Gov. Wouters said that British troops which came here last year had left following the arrival of United States forces.

He declared the serious possibility of further hostilities was proved by the submarine attacks in February.

Sinkings Off Coast Declining, Says Knox

APR 8 1942

Better Protective System May Be Responsible, Asserts Navy Secretary—Ship Masters Now Complying With Navy's Orders.

WASHINGTON, April 7—(AP)—A sharp decline in the number of U-boat attacks off the Atlantic coast was reported today by Secretary Knox, who said that recently-adopted methods of combatting the submersibles might be responsible.

Only Two Attacks Last Week

He did not, however, overlook the possibility that the drop might be due in part at least to the German practice of sending out submarines in waves, with intervening periods in which few U-boats are actually operating far from their bases.

However, Knox pointed out that last week there were but two attacks in the coastal area—one upon a tanker and the other on a towboat and its barges. During the week the Navy announced 14 attacks but 12 of these occurred before March 29 o r in Caribbean waters, not covered by the secretary's announcement.

In addition, Knox revealed that "very careful study" is being given to the whole problem of operating the merchant marine. No decisions have yet been reached, he said, but a possibility remained that the Navy might take charge of ships assigned to "long voyages." There had been some difficulty in manning ships, he said.

Some high ranking naval officers have complained that a large percentage of ship losses was due to the failure of ship masters to carry out naval instructions, regarding darkening ship and the course to be steered.

Ships Seek Cover at Night

Knox said today, however, that the Navy was now getting "very complete" compliance with its orders that shipping stick to certain well-defined coastal lanes. He intimated that many coastwise vessels were following a practice of entering harbor at night, for the submarines have been most active during the hours of darkness.

The cabinet member was apparently well pleased with the progress of the anti-submarine campaign. He said the Navy was "constantly enlarging" its patrol fleet. Soon to become available for coastal patrols, he said, were 200 patrol boats 10 feet long, 250 173-footers, and 150 180-footers.

He said, too, that blimp deliveries were "coming along nicely." Small blimps, with a wide cruising range, and capable of dropping depth charges had proved "very valuable," he said.

Army and Navy activities against the submarines were recently concentrated under the single command of Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews, and the airplane patrols were increased by the assignment of an unspecified number of army planes.

In a response to a question on how the war was going in the Pacific, Knox would say only that:

"The longer the war lasts the more I'm impressed with the fact that the American sailor is just as great a sea fighter as he has been in the whole history of America."

KNOX SAYS U-BOAT ATTACKS OFF U. S. HAVE DECREASED

APR 8 1942

Asserts Drop May Be Due to New Methods Navy Uses for Protection.

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—Secretary of the Navy Knox reported today that German U-boat attacks on shipping along the Atlantic coast of the United States had dropped off considerably last week and that the drop might be due to protective methods recently enforced by the navy.

Discussing the submarine situation at a press conference, Mr. Knox said that the navy's experience with U-boat raiders throughout the north Atlantic had shown that they operate in waves.

"In preparing your stories," he told reporters, "it will be necessary to keep that fact in mind because that may be responsible for the decline in coastal attacks last week. On the other hand the drop may be due to methods newly adopted."

The navy announced fourteen submarine attacks in the western Atlantic and adjacent waters last week. Naval officials said, however, that only two of those, one tanker and a tug with barges, actually had been attacked along the coast during the last week. The other attacks occurred either prior to March 29 or else were in the Caribbean area which Mr. Knox's statement did not cover.

Sinkings Since Pearl Harbor.

The latest figures on announced Atlantic Coast shipping losses show that 116 ships have been sunk since Pearl Harbor. Of these fifty-nine were sunk off the United States, twenty-three off Canada, thirty in the Caribbean Sea and four off South America.

Secretary Knox also disclosed at his press conference that the Government has "under very careful study" the problem of operating the American merchant marine, especially ships on long voyages. He said there had been some difficulties in manning ships and that how the problem would be solved had not been decided.

He gave this explanation of the merchant marine situation at present when asked whether the navy was considering taking over the merchant ships and operating them with naval crews. He declared that would be one way to tackle the problem, but it was by no means certain that this would be done.

In describing anti-submarine measures already taken or in prospect, the Secretary said, "We are constantly enlarging the number of patrol craft," and revealed that the navy soon would get, for coastal patrols, an additional 200 craft 110 feet long, 250 craft 173 feet long and 150 craft 180 feet ong.

Getting More Blimps, Too.

Blimp deliveries also are coming along nicely, Mr. Knox reported, explaining that small blimps capable of long distance, ow-speed cruises and of discharging depth bombs were proving very valuable in hunting submarines.

The Secretary described other methods of defense against submarines as:

Insistence that merchant ships travel in certain well-defined lanes along the coast. "We are now getting very complete obedience for the rules laid down for lanes," he said.

Provision of safe harbors for ships to anchor in at night. The Secretary noted that subs had been most active at night.

Enlargement of air patrols, including the new plan of army co-operation whereby Army Air Force units were assigned to Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews, the Eastern sea frontier chief.

Mr. Knox was asked how the war was going in the Pacific from the navy's standpoint.

He confined his reply to declaring, "The longer the war lasts the more I'm impressed with the fact that the American sailor is just as great a sea fighter as he has been in the whole history of America."

U. S. SHIPS TO USE INLAND WATERWAY TO AVOID RAIDERS

APR 8 1942

Roosevelt Suggests Route for Wooden Barges South to Jacksonville.

WASHINGTON, April 7. — (AP) President Roosevelt disclosed today that plans were underway for greater use of the inland waterway along the Atlantic seaboard, where Axis submarines have been active.

The chief executive suggested to his press conference that perhaps old shipyards in New England, where wooden schooners used to be built, could be used to turn out wooden barges for use on the water way.

From Jacksonville, Fla., north, Mr. Roosevelt said, an 11-foot channel can be obtained, but south of there the channel is only six feet deep. That almost precludes the use of the southern end of the inland waterway and necessitates a transfer of cargo at Jacksonville, the President asserted.

While he cautioned reporters against starting a new controversy over a Florida ship canal, he remarked there was no way, by water, of getting across the Florida peninsula.

To deepen the six foot channel, he remarked, would take too long and require much valuable manpower and machinery. So, he said, we must do the best we can with what we have.

He said it seemed perfectly possible to build the wooden barges and not interfere with the use of steel for war purposes. He said the wooden barges would be cheaper than concrete, self-propelled barges, to which some consideration had been given.

Answering a question, the chief executive said he did not know whether any thought had been given to constructing a pipe line across Florida.

Crew Reboards Ship Torpedoed by Sub, Sails It Into Mobile

Caribbean Attack Ends When Raider Sights Star Shells; 8 Seamen Die

By the Associated Press.

MOBILE, Ala., April 7.—Shelled for more than two hours, then torpedoed by an enemy submarine in the Caribbean, a Panamanian vessel was reboarded by her crew the next day and brought to port here.

Survivors' accounts of the March 8 shelling, which cost the lives of Capt. James Stewart, First Mate Hawkins Fudske and six others of the 50 crew members, were released by the Navy yesterday.

Adrift for hours in three life rafts and the only lifeboat that was not wrecked by the firing, the survivors were rescued by a United States minesweeper. Some of them returned to the scene the next day and on finding the vessel still afloat, managed to bring it into port.

Other survivors, 19 of them badly wounded, were rushed to a Caribbean port for transshipment here.

The attacked vessel carried a gun manned by a Navy crew and a few machine guns, but the submarine kept out of range.

Vessel Eludes Submarine.

At New Orleans, the 8th Naval District headquarters announced that the Panamanian ship was one of three vessels attacked by enemy submarines in March.

A medium sized United States cargo vessel was attacked about midnight March 25. One or two torpedoes were fired, but missed.

On the night of March 23, the Navy said, a large American ship sighted a hostile submarine in the Atlantic "close to the coast" and missed running it down by about 30 feet. The submarine gave chase for about an hour, but never got close enough to shoot.

Both vessels put in at Texas ports.

Flames broke out on the after deck of the Panamanian ship almost immediately after the attack began. "We kept running under shelling from the submarine for perhaps 30 minutes until a shot crippled our steering gear," Chief Engineer T. J. McTaggart, 29, Medford, Mass., said. "When this occurred, we stopped and prepared to abandon ship."

The three life rafts and the one boat were put over, but the latter was almost swamped by a shell explosion that killed the first mate and sprayed the occupants with steel.

Vessel Being Repaired.

The raider continued firing and did not leave the scene until two star shells, presumably fired by a United States Navy ship off the coast, cast a faint illumination on the water.

Survivors said one seaman leaped overboard to escape the flames and was killed by a shark.

Arthur Lauman, 50-year-old water tender-fireman, who escaped by climbing a smoldering rope ladder to the deck, was praised by Mr. McTaggart for the manner in which he remained at his post. One of the first shells carried away the smokestack and a piece of a broken steam line fell into the fireroom.

"He just got it out of the way and went ahead with his job as though nothing had happened," the engineer said.

The vessel, pock-marked from one end to the other and with more than 20 feet of water in her forehold, when it arrived here is being repaired.

OREGON LAUNCHES SHIP EVERY 6 DAYS

New Yard Applies Mass Production Methods to Liberty Freighters.

PORTLAND, Ore., April 7.—(AP) A 10,000-ton Liberty freighter every six days—that's how fast one shipyard is helping to build our bridge of ships to the warfronts.

For any shipyard in the United States that would be a proud record. For the Oregon Shipbuilding Corp., it5s an industrial miracle.

Edgar Kaiser, Oregon shipbuilding's head man, never thought about building ships until the war in Europe was well under way. He was a builder of dams—Boulder and Grand Coulee. Now he's showing veteran shipbuilders how to apply mass production methods to their industry.

The first Liberty EC-1 was launched at Oregon Shipbuilding last Sept. 27. Today No. 26 slid into the Williamette river. That total from an 11-way yard, probably equals the number of Liberties turned out by all other yards combined, says O. Alexander Mechlin, resident U. S. Maritime commission engineer.

Company men say the organizing genius of the boss—they mean Kaiser—is the major factor. He took 30,00 men—most of whom, like himself, never had worked on a ship—and whipped them into a fireball production unit in less than 12 months.

Kaiser's experts have studied the EC-2 from stem to stern for production speed, Mechlin says, and have developed pre-assembly to a point unparalleled in other yards.

Commander Charles Hibbard supervisor of Navy shipbuilding in Oregon, the man who awarded Oregon Shipbuilding one of the first three "E" pennants on the Pacific coast, said:

"The Kaiser men came into shipbuilding with a full knowledge of production methods but with little about shipbuilding. They had no preconceived notion about ship construction; no traditions, no prejudices to overcome. They just figured out the fastest way to put them together and did it."

El Mundo added that a large part of the crop might be lost as a result.

BOLIVIA AGREES TO SELL ALL HER COPPER TO U. S.

LA PAZ, Bolivia, April 7.—(AP) The Bolivian Foreign Office announced tonight that an agreement had been reached in Washington whereby the United States contracted to buy Bolivia's entire copper production which is expected to total 6,500 tons annually.

The contract with the U. S. Metals company also called for the acquisition of 1,800 tons of copper now on hand, and the deal was said to be similar to one between Chile and the United States.

U. S., Mexico In Accord On 6-point Plan

APR 8 1942

Designed to Aid Mexico's War Effort and Develop Its Resources.

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP) — The United States and Mexico tonight announced a six-point program designed to aid this country's war effort and develop the vast resources of the neighboring republic.

Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles and Dr. Ezequiel Padilla, Mexican foreign minister, in a joint statement climaxing a week of conference, outlined plans for:

The Six Points

1. Development of Mexican industry including construction of a steel and tin plate rolling mill with export-import bank credits;
2. Increasing the capacity of Mexican railways through addition of needed rolling stock—United States and Mexican experts already are surveying the country's rail system;
3. Studying the feasibility of constructing small cargo vessels with material and tools provided by the United States.
4. Construction of a high octane gasoline refinery in Mexico with United States equipment.
5. Streamlining procedure for handling priorities and allocations for Mexico based on Mexico's needs in relation to the war production effort of the United States.
6. Early conclusion of a reciprocal trade agreement between the two countries.

The program was announced on the eve of the departure of Dr. Padilla for New York after a series of conversations with Welles and other high government officials.

"In the short space of a few days," the joint declaration said, "we have agreed on a number of arrangements that not only will develop the economic life of Mexico and the United States but will greatly speed the war effort of the United States."

It was explained that the establishment of various industries in Mexico "to meet consumption needs and to supply goods required by the war effort in the United States" would be accomplished through cooperation of private investors and the Mexico government and that any further capital needed would be supplied by the export-import bank.

Canada Checking Up On Clothing Sales

Canadian Prime Minister Says Battles Here Are Alternative In Broadcast

Ottawa, April 7 (AP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King said tonight the final battles might be fought on Canadian and United States soil unless the enemy is defeated abroad.

Speaking over a national network in the campaign for an affirmative result in the April 27 manpower plebiscite, he said a great offensive to cut the Atlantic and Pacific supply lines might be launched at any moment.

Defense of Canada is essential, but it is equally essential that Canada, a country which might need help as no other country ever needed it, must continue to do all it can to help other countries, he said.

NEW BUYING GROUP

South Africa Changes Its Purchasing Commission.

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—The Union of South Africa announced today that John Martin of Johannesburg would hereafter be the Union's purchasing commission in the United States, with the existing South African Purchasing Commission being abolished due to altered circumstances since the United States entered the war.

Mr. Martin will be assisted by a staff consisting of H. T. Andrews, at present assistant secretary in the Department of Defense; Emil Frank Horn, the Union's consul in New York, and Edwin Arthur Bambury, a member of the present purchasing commission. George Swingler, a member of the present commission, will be consultant and representative of the Director-General of War Supplies.

Durable Goods Output Will Halt by May 31

APR 8 1942

Nelson Sees Sharp Drop in Standard of Living —Optimistic Over Speed of Industry's Transition to War Work.

WASHINGTON, April 7—(AP)—The manufacture of most consumers' durable goods will be halted for the duration of the war by May 31, Chairman Donald M. Nelson of the War Production Board reported today in announcing two imminent new orders—a civilian construction stop-order and a ban on the use of steel in hundreds of civilian articles.

Non-Defense Building Hit

These two actions, added to the swift succession of production curtailments and stoppages which will be almost complete by May 31, are of equal importance to "the winning of a major battle," Nelson told a press conference.

The building order will suspend non-defense construction and stop the use in building materials of war-essential metals, Nelson said. The steel order will not only prohibit the use of iron and steel in a multitude of common items, but also will ban the use of other metals and scarce plastics as substitutes.

The normally cautious Nelson gave an unexpectedly optimistic view of the speed and scope of industry's transition from peacetime gadget-making to the output of the implements of war.

"I am more pleased with the conversion effort at this time than at any time since I've been on the job," he said.

Civilian Economy To Get Leaner

The meaning of the transition to the average citizen is a "sound but lean" civilian economy, the production chief reported. "We don't know how lean it can be, but it will get leaner and leaner as time goes on."

The consumers' durable goods industries whose doom he sounded are those producing such characteristic elements of the American standards of living as automobiles, refrigerators, washing machines, vacuum cleaners and other articles having a relatively long life. All the articles named are under stop-production orders.

"History will record whether we have moved too fast or too slow," Nelson said with reference to the sweeping change in this country's industrial complexion.

"It is worth bearing in mind that during the entire course of the first world war, not a single limitation order was issued which completely prohibited the output of any civilian product."

"In August of 1918, or a year and four months after the United States entered the war, an agreement was made between the automobile industry and the War Industries Board to limit the output of the auto industry for the second half of 1918 to a quarter of its normal output."

By comparison, an informal tabulation revealed that production already has been halted in five major industries and production stopped in 15 others.

Nelson acknowledged that "industrial casualties"—plants forced to shut down for inability to convert or for lack of materials—would be inevitable.

WPB's effort will be to make the casualties as few as possible, Nelson added, but he conceded that "the next two or three months will be a period of difficult adjustment for the nation in general and the industrial producers and employes engaged in the operations which are restricted."

Consumers will find that many items formerly easily obtainable will be entirely lacking or available only through rationing.

JONES ASSERTS RUBBER MAKING SHOWS NO LAG

APR 8 1942

Commerce Secretary Says Synthetic Program Has Been Speeded.

BATT'S TESTIMONY A SURPRISE

RFC Director Reveals That All Plants in Original Program Will Be Working in '42.

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce, asserted today that there had been no delay in the development of synthetic rubber by the Government, adding that there were now engagements for domestic manufacturing facilities sufficient to produce more than 700,000 tons of synthetic rubber annually.

Testifying before the Senate Defense Investigating Committee, Mr. Jones said that this rate of production could be readily increased if necessary but declared that "even with this production, civilians must conserve tires and rubber in order to meet our military needs."

"We have persistently worked at the problem of acquiring and producing rubber," he declared. "There has been no delay; on the contrary, the program has been pushed."

Replying to earlier testimony by William L. Batt, chief of the War Production Board's materials division, that Mr. Jones overruled in 1940 recommendations of the defense commission for a 100,000-ton production program, the Secretary of Commerce declared that this program had in fact been met.

Contracts Let in 1941.

When the commission's recommendations were turned over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the fall of 1940, Mr. Jones said, there were many unsolved problems to be met, but by May 19, 1941, contracts were entered into for plants with a total capacity of 60,000 tons annually.

In addition, he said, the du Pont company is completing at Louisville a neoprene plant with a capacity of 10,000 tons, and the Government is now buying the plant.

Du Pont, he testified, has another plant at Deepwater, N. J., with a capacity of approximately 10,000 tons, and the Goodrich Rubber Company has a plant at Akron with a capacity of approximately 10,000 tons.

"Some of the other companies are making small amounts," he said, "so that the recommendations of Messrs. Batt & Stettinius (C. R. Stettinius Jr., formerly of the defense commission) was met."

Batt Testimony a Surprise.

Mr. Jones said that until he read the Batt testimony, he had thought the RFC was following the recommendations of the commission in the synthetic rubber program.

"Not only," he said, "did the RFC undertake to provide experimental manufacturing facilities recommended by Mr. Stettinius, but we have a much better stock pile of natural rubber on hand than it was contemplated we would have when Mr. Stettinius wrote the President September 12, 1940.

"Furthermore, there were plenty of unsettled questions delivered us by Mr. Batt. The members of his National Defense Council were themselves not in agreement on what to do or how to do it."

"Beyond question the whole process was in a state of flux. Any responsible Government department undertaking the building of synthetic rubber plants without first making a careful investigation of all these questions, would have been subject to very great criticism."

In written replies to questions submitted by the committee in advance of the hearing, Mr. Jones said that "the patent situation naturally prolonged the negotiations" and that "only recently was a satisfactory solution worked out for the pooling of all patents."

In Production this Year.

The Secretary of Commerce said that all of the plants in the original program would be in production this year, one before July 1, two before September 1 and one before the end of the year, "assuming materials are available as required."

"Were the Dutch and British reluctant to release stocks and raise percentage of the base quotas (before December 7), and why?" Mr. Jones was asked.

"I could not say they were reluctant to release stocks sufficient to provide the United States with a reasonable stockpile," he replied, "but apparently they did not want the quotas increased to such an extent that the post-war market would be seriously affected."

Mr. Jones said the nation's stockpile of natural rubber had increased from 40,143 long tons on December 31, 1940, to 342,101 long tons on March 20, 1942, including an increase of 87,045 tons since December 7, 1941.

On that date, he testified, a substantial amount of rubber was awaiting shipment, and "practically all of this rubber was

Negroes Can Enlist in Navy

Knox Says They Will Be Accepted in Marine Corps and Coast Guard.

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—The navy announced today that Negro volunteers would be accepted for enlistment for general service as reservists in the navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard, with recruiting soon to get under way.

Eventually, Secretary of Navy Knox added at his press conference, small warships such as destroyers or patrol craft may be manned with Negro crews commanded by white petty officers and commissioned officers. As Negroes gain experience and qualify for higher ratings they will be made petty officers themselves, Col. Knox said, but for the present there is no plan to commission Negro officers.

The plan of opening up the navy and its auxiliary services to Negro recruits has been worked out after careful study, Col Knox said, and "the whole thing will be carried along in a cordial spirit of experimentation to make the maximum use of Negroes in the most effective way to avoid difficulties of racial character."

Negroes will get the same ratings and pay as white enlisted men and may be assigned to a variety of duty, including a special Negro outfit in the Marines, employment in navy yards, and work on construction crews, probably small outfits similar in purpose to the navy's construction battalions.

The navy announcement made clear that recruiting of Negroes for service in the messman branch is to continue without change or interruption.

Naval officials said that the same physical and mental entrance standards required of all navy personnel is to be required of Negroes.

As explained at the headquarters of the Third Naval District today, there has never been any regulation prohibiting the enlistment of Negroes in either the navy or the Coast Guard. It has been, instead, a matter of policy, and there have been but rare exceptions in both branches. The only capacity in which Negroes have served generally in the past has been as messmen.

Recruited as reservists, Negroes will be enlisted for a period to last until six months after the cessation of hostilities. White men, however, may also enlist as regulars, the term extending for six years if the man is over 21 years of age or until the day before his twenty-first birthday if he is under that age.

Compromise Reached On War Profits Curb

Senate Approves Measure Providing for Renegotiation of High-profits Contracts—Administration Move to Block Labor Debate.

WASHINGTON, April 7—(AP)—A modified measure for limiting war profits emerged from the Senate late today attached to the latest $19,212,773,260 appropriation bill.

Approved 40-21

Before it actually will apply to the billions of dollars of present and future contracts, the profit restriction faces further modification by a joint Senate-House committee that must adjust many differences between the two chambers over the huge wartime appropriation.

The provision—largely limited to authority to re-negotiate contracts which might yield unreasonable profits—was advanced as a compromise by administration leaders to avoid an assortment of proposed riders dealing with wartime labor problems, union dues, the flat 6 per cent profit limit voted by the House and the sliding scale limit of 2 to 10 per cent substituted by the Senate Appropriations committee.

The Senate approved it, 40 to 21, after hours of angry discussion and only after assurances that the Senate-House conference would have broad authority to rewrite the entire section if war production officials and congressional leaders can agree upon a new plan.

Senator Pepper (D-Fla) lost by a standing vote an attempt to suspend the rules in order to consider riders that would outlaw union dues on defense jobs and empower the President to freeze all prices and wages as of a certain date.

Then on a voice vote the Senate passed the appropriation. More than $18,000,000,000 of the funds would go to the Army, with most of this for expansion of the air force, including 31,070 additional airplanes. Funds also were provided to supply and house an army of 3,600,000 men by the end of this year.

The profits provision adopted by the Senate would grant the secretaries of war or navy or the maritime commission chairman authority to require that all future contracts and subcontracts in excess of $100,000 include an agreement for re-negotiation to eliminate excessive profits, and retention by the government of part of the payments to cover any profit refunds that might develop.

Still Opposed To Sales Tax, Says Roosevelt

CIO Officials Urge House Group to Reject Sales Proposal.

APR 8 1942

WASHINGTON, April 7 (AP)—President Roosevelt said today he was still not inclined toward a sales tax to help finance the war.

Mr. Roosevelt was asked at his press conference whether he had figured what his taxes would be under the Treasury's recommendations for $7,000,000,000 in new revenue, to be raised chiefly through increased personal and corporation income levies, excess profits levies and excise taxes.

He replied that he had not figured them for next year, that they were bad enough now.

"Do they incline you toward a sales tax?" he was asked.

No, he responded, in spite of personal hardships.

The President's view on a general sales tax—which has gained favor in some Congressional quarters as a substitute for the Treasury's recommendations — came at about the same time that CIO officials urged a House Committee to reject the sales proposal.

Philip Murray, CIO president, in a statement read to the Ways and Means Committee, strongly opposed a sales tax as inflationary and suggested that the corporation excess profits tax computations be revised to "remedy the vicious abuses on war contracts now being exposed by the committees of Congress."

Julius Emspak, general secretary-treasurer of the United Electrical and Machine Workers of America (CIO), proposed that federal personal income tax rates be placed "at or near" 100 per cent above the level of $100,000 annually.

That is more than we pay our President," he said. It is more than we pay our top military personnel; and there can be no sound case for any individual's claiming that he is worth more to the nation than, say, $100,000 per year."

W. P. Hobby, publisher of the Houston (Tex.) Post and former Texas governor, asked for special consideration for small businesses—particularly newspapers — which find their revenue dwindling.

Proposes Credit for Old Debts Paid

He proposed an income tax credit for money actually paid on debts incurred before Jan. 1, 1940, up to a maximum of 5 per cent of such indebtedness.

Hobby told the committee:

If you will allow in the new revenue law a credit for money actually paid on debts incurred prior to Jan. 1, 1940, by those businesses not enjoying war contracts, the credit not to exceed five per cent of the total debt in any one year, and to apply on that portion of income subject to surtaxes and or excess profits tax, I think you will have a formula which will not hurt the Treasury but really help it in the long run and at the same time prevent a sentence of death being passed on thousands of businesses in this country."

In the case of his own business, Hobby said that income taxes took 15 per cent of net earnings in 1937, 19 per cent in 1938 and 1939; 25 per cent in 1940, and 30 per cent in 1941.

"It is proposed to increase it to 65 or 70 per cent under Treasury proposals in the 1942 revenue bill, which would make it impossible to meet debt payments," he said. "The question is, gentlemen, whether these businesses shall be given tax relief which will enable them to remain in existence or whether the way shall be left open for a wave of foreclosures and bankruptcies. x x x

"I may point out that within one week two very old and once well established newspapers were forced to suspend publication. One, the Dallas Journal, is in my own state of Texas. It closed after nearly 40 years of continuous operation in the interest of Texas and the nation. The Kansas City Journal, an 84-year old newspaper, suspended a few days later.

"I am not arguing that taxes alone killed these newspapers, but a combination of taxes, rising costs and shrinking revenue did kill them their death is symptomatic. x x x

"We say to you gentlemen: Give Uncle Sam all our profits if he needs them, but leave us just enough of our earnings to pay a little bit on our debts so we may keep the sheriff away from our door."

Representative Knutson (R-Minn) observed that with shrinking lineage and rising production costs, the picture for newspapers is "very, very dark," and the publishing business is "going to be very, very hard."

Outside of "three or four newspapers"—the Washington Star, the Kansas City Star, the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune—"they will all have to be dipping into their invested capital pretty hard," Knutson added.

Knutson again suggested a national lottery to help raise new revenue but Hobby declined to comment on the proposal.

CIO Union Demands Manufacturers Make 'Equal Sacrifices'

Roosevelt Informs Conference Extra Wages Curb Production

[By the Associated Press]

Detroit, April 7—A war conference of United Automobile Workers (CIO) delegates tonight approved unanimously, by voice vote, an executive board recommendation that premium pay for week-end and holiday work be waived for the duration.

At the same time, the delegates, representing more than a half million workers in automobile and aircraft plants in the nation, demanded that manufacturers of war materials be compelled to make "equal sacrifices."

Reaffirms Pledge

Acceptance of the executive board's proposal to forego extra pay for Saturday, Sunday and holiday work except when such work constitutes a sixth or seventh consecutive working day followed a day-long session which at times became boisterous when opponents displayed reluctance to waive premium wages unless "excess profits" were banned war manufacturers by Congress or the President.

Earlier President Roosevelt, in a letter to the conference, informed the U. A. W.-CIO that premium pay "puts a brake" on wartime production and "helps our enemies."

In adition to waiving premium pay, the conference reaffirmed a pledge to refrain from strikes or work stoppages and to submit all disputes to mediation for the war's duration, agreed to increase production by "all means available" and urged that arms plants be operated on a twenty-four-hour seven-day week basis through establishment of swing shifts."

The board submitted also what it termed a "victory through equality of sacrifice" program proposing wartime laws to limit family or individual incomes to $25,000 a year and war production profits to three per cent. on invested capital, in return for which, it said, labor would agree that all wages for time over forty hours a week be paid in special non-negotiatble defense bonds.

APR 8 1942

Roosevelt's Letter

Mr. Roosevelt's letter, addressed to R. J. Thomas, UAW-CIO president, stated that "every factory and every shipyard should be working seven days a week, night and day.

"Of course, the relinquishment of doube time should not operate as a windfall to any employer or group of employers. We are asking sacrifices from no group for the selfish benefit of any other group. Total war demands total sacrifice for the common good."

In its "equality of sacrifice" program the board made the acceptance of non-negotiable defense bonds in lieu of overtime pay contingent on acceptance of nine other proposals.

Other Proposals

They were:

Legislation limiting profits on war production to 3 per cent. on actual capital invested.

Legislation permitting no individual or family to receive in dividends, salaries or from other sources more than $25,000 a year.

Rigid fixing of prices on food, rent, clothing and other necessities of life.

Rationing to insure fair distribution of available consumers' goods.

Adjustments to bring "real wages" to 1941 levels; increases in industries where "sub-standard (less than $1 an hour) wages exist.

A "guaranteed living wage" for dependents of persons in the armed forces.

Moratorium on debts of those in armed forces and those unemployed through conversion of industry.

Creation of a labor production division in the War Production Board to encourage suggestions for increasing war production.

Creation of an agency of Government, labor, industry and agriculture to "make plans for post-war adjustments."

Victor Reuther, the executive Board's Floor leader, declared in urging adoption of the program that "the board is leading with its chin."

Urges "Some Sacrificing"

"If this is our war, we've got to do some sweating and sacrificing," he said. "Let's start a campaign to make this proposal a live, positive issue in this country. If we adopt it, we can go to Congress with clean hands."

George F. Addes, secretary, asserted the program was designed 'to put labor on the offensive," adding:

"You will get limitation of overtime pay whether you like it or not, because your friends in Washington have deserted you. You can't stop Congress now. The reactionaries, with their offensive program, are gaining momentum and by April 20 they will have gained enough to abrogate labor's rights."

The text of the President's letter:

"My dear Mr. Thomas:

"To preserve the rights of free men and women in the modern world, we must win this war which the Fascist Powers plotted and planned for many years.

"While we worked for peace, the Fascist Powers drove their people overtime, Sundays and holidays, to prepare for war. They got a jump on us, and before we could catch up with them, they deliberately launched their treacherous attack against us at Pearl Harbor.

"I am sure that no group of our people is more determined than our workers to match and master the totalitarian tyrants whose aim is to destroy the dignity of men and the rights of free labor.

Seven Day Week a Must.

"To overtake and outstrip Axis production, our munition factories and our shipyards must operate on a seven-day week. Every day must be a work day. That does not mean that every man must work seven days a week. That would slow up, rather than quicken, production. But it does mean that every factory and every shipyard should be working seven days a week, night and day. The war does not stop for Sundays and holidays.

"The provision in some union contracts requiring double time or other premium pay for week end and holiday work is quite understandable in peacetime. But in wartime it puts a brake on production. It causes factories to close on Sundays and holidays. It helps our enemies.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations, acting concurrently with the American Federation of Labor, has wisely and patriotically recommended that double and premium time for work on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, when such days fall within the normal work week, be given up for the duration of the war and that these days be treated like any other day of the week. I am sure that with the knowledge that this policy will help expedite war production, it will have your wholehearted support. I am likewise sure that this policy, so understood, will commend itself to the rank and file of the American workers everywhere.

"Of course the relinquishment of double time should not operate as a windfall to any employer or group of employers. We are asking sacrifices from no group for the selfish benefit of any other group. Total war demands total sacrifice for the common good.

"It is the intention of the Government to renegotiate contracts with the employers wherever necessary to insure that the savings from the relinquishment of double or premium time go not to the employer but to the nation.

"Very sincerely yours,

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

Roosevelt Urges 48-hour Week

APR 8 1942

Says Average Person Can Produce More at That Pace Than on 60-hour Basis.

Washington, April 7 (A. P.).—President Roosevelt declared today that the people of this country ought to examine and get into their heads the fact that an average person produces more in a forty-eight-hour week than when he works a sixty-hour week.

He made that statement during a press conference discussion which began with an inquiry whether any progress was being made on studies toward controlling both wages and profits.

Mr. Roosevelt said he thought these studies were coming along. To a request that he supply a clew to the direction they were taking, he aserted that he could and he hoped reporters would interpret correctly.

Finds Two Salient Factors.

Then he went on to say he had been thinking in terms of the average man, woman and child in the United States and that two salient factors stood out:

First, a person, in time of war, thinks a great deal, and rightly, about what it costs him and his family to live.

Second, an overwhelming majority of the people are patriotic and want to do all they can to turn out the things needed in the war.

As a corollary to these two points, the President said he had been giving some attention to studies of the output of the human being which have been made here, in England and in Europe since the world war, with reference to the number of hours per week which, over a period of time, turn out the most goods.

It was found, and it is generally agreed, he said, that the average person turns out more in forty-eight hours than in sixty.

Cites Ford on Working Hours.

It was at that point that he said the people should examine this and get it into their heads. He said he thought Henry Ford had said that any work over forty-eight hours, perhaps it was forty-four, did not count for an addition to production.

To a question whether he had considered the possibility of cash bonuses for workers turning out more pieces of work, the President said he was utterly opposed to this for peace time and in war time he thought people were going to turn out all they could anyway. He said he did not like the idea of a bonus for piece work.

He was reminded that he had told the United Automobile Workers Union in a letter that no employer should profit by employee relinquishment of double pay for week end and holiday work and he was asked whether he had in mind any way for implementing this position. Not specifically, he said.

Promise Workers Will Stay On Job Until War Is Won—McNutt Deplores Anti-Union "Libels"

The United Automobile Workers (CIO) approves a proposal to forego extra pay for Saturday, Sunday and holiday work except when such work constitutes a sixth or seventh consecutive working day.—Story on Page 7.

APR 8 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Pittsburgh, April 7—The chiefs of the AFL and CIO, appearing together on a public platform for the first time since the split in labor's ranks in 1936, renewed tonight a pledge of labor peace, promised that labor would stay on the job until the war is won and spoke out against those whom they charged were attacking labor.

The words of William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and Philip Murray, of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, were echoed by Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, Government's representative at a joint AFL-CIO rally in Syria Mosque.

McNutt Deplores "Libels"

McNutt deplored what he termed "libels against labor" and declared that labor "by voluntarily waiving the right to strike, has assured the nation of uninterrupted production of war materials as far as labor is concerned."

In an address prepared for delivery, Green said:

"The workers of our country are performing production miracles every day. Give them the tools and the materials and they will produce everything America needs for victory."

Green charged that certain business interests and "high pressure propagandists" were claiming that America must abolish the forty-hour week, overtime pay, the union shop and the right to strike.

Grefen On 40-Hour Week

But, he said, President Roosevelt, War Production Director Nelson and heads of the army and navy "agree unanimously" that abolition of the forty-hour week would not add "a single hour of labor to war production . . . that overtime pay is necessary to meet higher living costs and provide an incentive to greater production . . . and that labor's voluntary surrender of the right to strike for the duration of the war is far more effective than any compulsory law could be."

Green introduced Murray as "my friend, my collaborator and fellow-American" in token, he said, of "this spirit of unity and cooperation" between the two labor organizations.

Murray On Labor Unity

Muuray in his prepared address said the presence of the AFL and CIO leaders on the same platform "tells beyond words that we know this is labor's war," and added:

"Labor stands together. . . . Labor is sick and tired of having its patriotism questioned. With their backs bent over their machines, their hearts and minds devoted to increased and increased production, the workers now look over their shoulders and find behind them with knife upraised, grous who would renew old attacks upon the workingman and his organizations."

Too Many Idle Machines

"Labor," Murray said, "wants the mills and factories going twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week and labor has shown the nation how we can get more metal scrap, how to produce more aluminum, how ao produce more airplanes by utilizing the auto industry, how to produce more copper.

"But labor is not satisfied. There are too many idle machines, and labor warns those 'business as usual' advocates that labor is going to place a sticker on every idle machine in this nation—a sticker that reads: This idle machine is helping Hitler."

MsNutt said, in his text, that while the workers were "loytlly pulling their weight in the war effort we are faced today with a stream of libels against labor in the press and in Congress."

Accusation Declared False

"These indictments," McNutt said, "are part of a campaign to arouse antagonism based on confusion and misunderstanding. It is the kind of attack against patriotic citizens that so often proved successful in weakening other countries to the advantage of the Axis powers."

". . . despite its clear record since Pearl Harbor, labor is accused of work stoppage while the country is under attack. The accusation is false."

Since labor gave the Government a pledge not to strike, McNutt said, not one authorized strike has been called and "even unauthorized strikes have been so rare as to be negligible."

Trend of Anglo-Indian Crisis Is Likely to Influence Japanese Plans

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

The Japanese bombing of Ceylon and cities on the Madras coast of India may or may not be preliminary to an attempt at invasion, but it patently does represent (1) an effort to disrupt strategic British supply stations and (2) terrorism which is calculated to drive the Indians into rejecting Britain's offer of Dominion status and refusing to support the war effort. Coincident with this rain of bombs, Japanese Premier Tojo has announced his country's intention to invade.

He has in effect warned the people of Hindustan to desert the British and join the Nipponese, lest "India suffer great calamities." Perhaps he spoke the truth, since invasion certainly is possible, but the fact that he is advertising his plans in advance is no recommendation for confidence.

Psychological Barrel-Spin.

You have seen the Japs at circuses spin barrels on their feet. Well, it strikes me that Gen. Tojo at the moment is lying on his back and doing some psychological barrel-spinning for its effect on the Anglo-Indian dispute.

Whether India is susceptible to this jugglery remains to be seen. As might be expected, the immediate reaction of the Indian press was the reverse of what Gen. Tojo wanted, the newspapers urging that the two parties iron out their differences and get together for defense.

That would seem to be sound advice, since an India divided against itself is an invitation for invasion. In addition, there is small doubt that Herr Hitler is urging the Japs to take the offensive either against India or Russia as a support to the German spring drive against the Bolshevists.

War on Two Fronts.

An attack on Siberia would compel the Russians to fight on two fronts at once—a terrific strain. An invasion of India would force the British to withdraw troops and equipment from Irak and Iran for use in Hindustan, thereby unguarding the gateway into the Middle East for the Nazis.

Either of these operations is possible at this moment. As this column pointed out some time ago, if the Japanese offensive against Australia went sour, the little men of the Rising Sun would turn to something else.

Their adventure in Australia has bogged down considerably, due to the fierce seasonal rains which have swept their bases on New Guinea, and to the destructive pummeling which has been handed them by the American and Australian air forces. As Australia's Army Misinter, Francis M. Forde, said yesterday:

"In spite of the continuing gravity of the Pacific situation, it is not unwise to say that Australia's position is distinctly easier than it was a couple of months ago."

Hitler's Preference.

Probably Hitler would prefer the attack on Siberia. His immediate problem is to bring the Russian offensive to a standstill, then hold the Reds, from the Baltic clear down to the Ukraine, while he tries to blast his way down into the Caucasus and on into the Middle East. Therefore, a Japanese assault on Siberia would be a Godsend to him.

In many ways, the Russian show would be attractive to the Japs. They know they must fight the Soviet sooner or later anyway.

They long have coveted the rich Amur basin and the Russian forces in the Vladivostok area have been Japan's greatest worry. The Nipponese are particularly fearful of the Red Air Force there, since it is near enough so that its bombers could play havoc with the flimsily built cities of the island empire.

However, much as the Japs would like to drive the Russians out of that area, the job presents difficulties which call for consideration. The Nipponese are said to have a million troops ready at the Siberian frontier, but the Bolshevists also reportedly have a large force of unknown number.

Quite likely the trend of the British-Indian crisis will have much influence on the Japanese plans.

Phoney Stories of This War Were Circulated Widely in 1918

By GLADWIN HILL

LOS ANGELES, April 7.—(Wide World)—It is a pleasure to report that that American boy in the Japanese prison camp didn't have his tongue cut out after all. . .

You've probably heard the story around in the last few weeks—about the captured American soldier who wrote home that everything was jake, the food was good, etc., and added, "Please save the stamp on this letter for my collection"—and underneath the stamp were written the words "They have cut out my tongue."

Don't you believe it. . .

The story gained such currency in Nashville, Tenn., a few days ago, and people were so indignant when its truth was questioned, that The Nashville Tennessean, after its reporters had run down numerous trails on the story and found them all false, offered $1,000 for the original letter. Nobody has stepped up to claim it.

The same story circulated back during the first World war—about an American in a German prison camp. It's just one of those chestnuts that's so dramatic people like to believe it and get a thrill out of passing it on as truth. Makes 'em feel like insiders.

The Tennessean was informed by the government, incidentally, that no mail has been received from the men in Japanese prison camps.

Another one you've probably heard as fact is the one about the woman on the trolley car who said she hoped the war kept on forever because she was making so much money, and was promptly slapped by a man "for my son who was killed at Pearl Harbor," and again "for my son who was killed in the Philippines."

A lovely, touching story, but bunk. It broke out in half a dozen cities at the same time a few weeks ago. The fact that some of the cities didn't even have any trolley cars didn't bother the yarnmongers a bit.

On the Pacific coast, the leading current phoney war stories involve Japanese—the Japanese grocery clerk who was insulting to the American lady customer because "we'll be running California in two weeks." . . . The Japanese school child who refused to participate in air raid practice because his mother knew just when the raids were coming and would keep him home those days. . . The Japanese gardener who left his employers a farewell present—two gas masks.

Labor M.P. Gives Anti-Churchill View

Hits at 'Legend' Current in America—Says Britons Consider Prime Minister Paralyzed By Defense Psychology.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: What is behind the recent wave of criticism of Winston Churchill's government? Wide World asked two members of Parliament, representing opposing views, to explain the arguments for and against Churchill's leadership. Today a Labor M.P. presents the anti-Churchill viewpoint. Tomorrow a Conservative M.P. will offer the pro-Churchill view).

APR 8 1942

By ANEURIN BEVAN

Labor M. P. for the BBW Vale Division of Monmouthshire

Written for Wide World

LONDON, April 6.—I am told there is a legend in America. The legend is that the premiership of Winston Churchill and Britain's will to continue the war to final victory are so closely bound together that if one goes, the other goes with it.

An Illusion of Distance

This is either an illusion of distance, a by-product of wartime censorship or the result of the vividness of American reporting. Probably it is the result of all three.

I suspect the legend is supported by an older one which has even less to justify it.

This is the story—even Churchill now believes it—that his was the solitary voice raised in British politics for a stand to be made against the menace of Fascism.

Like most legends, it is a fairy story with just enough fact to give it verisimilitude and a strong dash of self-interest to keep it growing.

In recent broadcasts, Churchill was careful to make a reference to it, like a good shopkeeper who keeps his best exhibit in the front center of the window.

However, it is bad business to floodlight a doubtful article. Blemishes in this particlar one are already being pointed out, and I should not be surprised if it is withdrawn to a less conspicuous position.

There is no tendency in Britain to belittle Churchill's contribution during the critical days of 1940. He gave authentic and immortal expression to the dogged spirit of the British when they had their backs to the wall.

Did Not Create That Spirit

But let us be quite clear even about that. He did not create the spirit. He expressed it. If he had not done so, he would not have lasted a day.

In social affairs, people think that because water comes through a tap, it comes from it. So they thing that their public spokesmen are sources of power and not only its expression.

The British people thought Churchill grand when he had his back to the wall. Now they are beginning to think he is leaning against it. And they can't see how the war can be won that way.

Churchill's oratory, which was the main source of his power, is now likely to weaken him. Rolling periods and heroic calls for what turns out to be unheroic action begins to pall and even look ridiculous, like a little man strutting about in a big man's clothes.

So Churchill, who was so short a time ago Britain's pride, is coming to be regarded by many as the chief source of her humiliation, and I have yet to hear of a statesman who survived that role.

Chief Criticism of Churchill

The chief criticism of Churchill falls under two heads: one is that as prime minister he is not trying to do his job, and second that as defense minister it would be better if he didn't try.

Take the first. For many months the country has been calling upon the Prime Minister to reconstruct his government on lines which disregard claims of party machines. He answered at first by saying he couldn't see anything wrong with his government or his policy and that he would not change either.

Outside himself and members of his government, nobody of any importance agreed with him. The press condemned him and Parliament kept up a daily criticism. People grumbled.

Altogether the situation is extremely unhelpful to the war spirit of any nation. In a fit of angry petulance, the Prime Minister challenged a vote of confidence, which he obtained with ridiculous unanimity.

All it proved was that the House of Commons had a greater sense of responsibility than the prime minister.

Within a few weeks Churchill had to reconstruct his government. His incapacity to realize the seriousness of his position was soon shown by the steps he thought it necessary to take.

He tried to persuade Sir Stafford Cripps to take a minor position and then a few days later was compelled by the force of public opinion to take him into the War Cabinet and make him leader of the House of Commons.

The only other step of importance was to dismiss Arthur Greenwood, deputy leader of the Labor Party, from the government entirely, a move which could only be justified if fundamental changes were intended. Greenwood is a much-liked person, and his removal in the circumstances has only irritated labor without impressing the country.

In some of his minor appointments, Churchill has shown either weakness or ignorance of the political situation, or both.

For many months he has fumbled with the ministry of production, vacillating from refusal to have one at all to the creation of a pretentious facade which failed to conceal the fact that no real change had occurred in the allocation of functions of ministry.

Behaves Like Stiff-Necked Tory.

In the main lines of his domestic policy, Churchill differs in not the slightest regard from Chamberlain. He behaves like a stiff-necked tory with the result that workers' support of tht government is dangerously undermined.

He still retains it because men like Ernest Bevin remain in the government, but their reputation is beginning to suffer from the association, and while they may be able to carry official labor with them, they might not long be able to pledge cooperation of rank and file.

The best description of Churchill as Defense Minister is given by the military record t odate. Much of it was inescapable by any man and there is no tendency to blame Churchill for all of it.

But he fails to inspire confidence in his assessment of the military situation because events quickly falsify his predictions as in the last campaign in North Africa.

Also his frequent references to the possibility of invasion cause British people to believe he is paralyzed by a defense psychology against which he periodically reacts by an ill-thought-out attack.

So it is not because the will to victory of the British people is weakening that Churchill is not so strong as he was.

APR 8 1942

It is because they, the British people, feel he is not fighting the war so robustly as he did. If he falls, America should bear this in mind and fear no weakness here.

The best thing I could say of Churchill is that he would prefer to have it that way.

Conservative Offers Pro-Churchill View

Says Churchill's Fall Would Be Great Nazi Victory—Quotes Al Smith: 'You Can't Beat Somebody With Nobody.'

(EDITOR'S NOTE: What do Britishers think of Winston Churchill's leadership? In view of recent criticism of his government, Wide World asked two members of Parliament, of opposing views, to explain the arguments for and against the Prime Minister. Yesterday a Labor M. P., Aneurin Bevan, gave the anti-Churchill viewpoint. Today a Conservative M. P. offers the pro-Churchill view. Lieutenant Kerr, like Churchill, is half-American; his father was Henry S. Kerr of Long Island, N. Y.).

APR 8 1942

BY FLIGHT LIEUTENANT HAMILTON W. KERR
CONSERVATIVE M.P. FOR OLDHAM
(Written for Wide World)

LONDON, April 7—Why is it that the critics of government, when denouncing its ministers, its policies, and its conduct of the war, always hastily add: "Of course, I'm not attacking Winston. I want him to remain as prime minister."

Answer is Simple

Incongruous, you may say. How can a Prime Minister be good and the government bad? I think the answer is simple. The Prime Minister has the immeasurable asset of having been right about Hitler.

During those years in the thirties when people said Hitler was bluffing, that the German people never again would be able to face the horrors of blockade, that war would mean an end of civilization, Churchill stood up almost alone in Commons, and from a corner seat below the gangway made those historic speeches telling an incredulous world of the growing evil in its midst.

It was like the tolling of a great warning bell on a sleepy Summer afternoon. Gradually its deep insistence caused passersby to pause, listen and read its message.

Then when the time of testing came, he had the courage to tell the truth. Democracy is supposed to like soft words, but no free people ever responded more generously to the promise of blood, toil, tears and sweat.

Politicians had forgotten that people will slave and sacrifice for a great ideal and like it. That is why Beveridge in a recent article in the Times called for "political suicide squads," men who will give up ambition and hopes of a career rather than compromise with their principles.

Patriotism Roused by His Oratory

Nor will the people of Britain readily forget the Prime Minister's gift of words. In the years after the last war it became fashionable to decry oratory as "the harlot of the arts."

But these critics had forgotten that in time of war, words and ideas they express can be as valuable as many squadrons of fighters.

During the battle of Britain when the German bombers were droning over our countryside day after day, the Prime Minister's speeches roused the fires of patriotism to white heat.

I remember being in an RAF mess in South England on the day France fell. Few of us cared to speak. For years we had been taught to believe the loss of channel ports was one of the most terrible disasters war could bring us.

An older generation still talked of the awful days of March, 1918, when it seemed as if our armies would be separated from the French and the channel ports must fall.

Somebody switched on a radio. The Prime Minister was speaking. By the time he finished, each of us felt like we had drunk a bottle of champagne. People laughed. A new look had come into their eyes. We felt ready for the worst.

The Prime Minister has the instinct of a great military leader who shows himself to the troops in the front line where the battle is the hardest.

Thus indomitable Clemenceau clambered through the mud of trenches to talk to the Poilus in 1918, and thus Churchill walked through the rubble and debris of our cities on the mornings after great aerial bombardments.

APR 8 1942

You speak of the past, you may say, but what of the future?

Can Churchill bring Britain to victory?

I believe so. The fact is that no living statesman at present in office knows as much about war as Churchill.

Too Big Not to Have Faults

Critics say he is autocratic and headstrong and he will not listen to his advisers. But of course he has his faults. He is too big not to have big faults. But refusal to listen to advice is certainly not one of them.

The Prime Minister has listened to all of the wisest criticisms. He has appointed a leader of Commons. He has increased the number of members in the War Cabinet who have no departmental duties. He has not appointed a Minister of Defense for the good reason that the Prime Minister must be master in his own house and a Minister of Defense would in many respects enpoy greater powers than the Prime Minister.

Once before in British history a similar occasion arose. Lloyd George asked for a Minister of Defense in Asquith's cabinet. Asquith refused. When Lloyd George succeeded him, he quickly forgot all about the idea of a Defense Minister.

On the conduct of the war, Churchill certainly has strong views. But then from his earliest days as a newspaper correspondent in Cuba to those fateful hours in August, 1914, when he brought the British fleet fully prepared to battle stations, he has studied the rules and lessons of warfare.

His vision lies in the fact he thinks of war in a global sense. In the front line the soldier sees only his sector of the front. One commander reports enemy tanks are breaking through and there is a shortage of anti-tank guns. Another asks what happened to fighter squadrons because dive bombers are mercilessly pounding his troops. But at the base, the commander-in-chief takes in the entire battle at a glance. Colored pins show him the positions of his tank divisions moving up to counter attack, others show interceptor fighters his troops cannot for the moment see, gunning vital supply lines of the enemy.

Sees Battle as Whole

It is the strength of Winston Churchill that he sees the battle as a whole and never allows public clamor to move him from the main strategy.

And finally, no one in Commons can seriously challenge him either as a personality or a master of parliamentary forms. Nobody carries such heavy guns.

His opponents often seem like light scouting craft trying to zigzag within range to launch torpedoes in some vital spot. Then great broadsides crash and rumble and attackers retire behind the smoke screen of protective verbiage.

If the ranks of opposition can show no potential rival to the prime minister, can the front government bench suggest a likely successor? Two names come to mind, Sir Stafford Cripps and Anthony Eden.

Cripps certainly soared like a rocket into the political sky.

Napoleon had an excellent maxim, that in war the unexpected always happens.

Certainly three years ago not even the most daring or imaginative of political prophets would have suggested Cripps would be the leader of Commons in the Spring of 1942.

Expelled by his own party for advocacy of a popular front, the Bete Noire of Tories on account of his extreme political views, this reserved, aloof, almost ascetic man was respected for the legal skill which earned him $120,000 a year at the bar but was considered to be the last of the field at Westminster.

He owes his present reputation to two facts: first, he was ambassador in Moscow when Germany attacked Russia and the public therefore was tempted to believe he was responsible for the present alliance.

Second is the admirable broadcast he gave on his return.

He now faces the greatest task of his life in India. No Grand National favorite approaching Beechers Brook ever was more closely watched by thousands of anxious eyes than Cripps at New Delhi.

If he clears the fence the shout of applause will crack the skies. If he fails, well . . .

Lacks Mass Appeal

For my own part, I believe the man, with all his gifts, lacks mass appeal. He could never be the war leader that Churchill is.

And then there is Eden. Admired for his courage, his high-minded-ness popular with all shades of opinion, the gift of stirring the heart and imagination by the spoken word is not his—a gift which Churchill enjoys above all men.

I feel the position of the Prime Minister is sound. His prestige certainly suffered with military disasters. If ever he fell, I believe Hitler would have won his greatest victory of the war. But Churchill has only yielded the forward political defenses. The main position still holds—a base for vigorous counter-attack. And I do not believe the great guns will long be silent.

After all, was it not Al Smith who coined the wise saying of politics—"You can't beat somebody with nobody."

PILOT OFFICER WILLIAM LITTLE CALDER JONES, WHOSE WIFE RESIDES AT BALTIMORE, MD. (EARLCOURT APTS), PREVIOUSLY REPORTED MISSING, IS NOW REPORTED A PRISONER OF WAR.

AN ATLANTIC SEABOARD AIR CORPS FIELD, APRIL 7-(AP)-A LIGHT-WEIGHT, PORTABLE AIR FIELD IN THE FORM OF A METAL "LANDING MAT," WHICH CAN BE LAID DOWN IN TWO DAYS OR LESS FOR EMERGENCY USE, WAS EXHIBITED TODAY BY THE ARMY ENGINEER CORPS AND AIR FORCES.

ITS USE REQUIRES ONLY A PIECE OF FLAT LAND 3,000 FEET LONG AND 150 FEET WIDE WITH REASONABLY GOOD TERRAIN FOR "APPROACH" PURPOSES SURROUNDING IT.

UNLIKE A MAT KNOWN AS THE MARSTON STRIP, WHICH WAS TESTED SUCCESSFULLY DURING ARMY MANEUVERS IN NORTH CAROLINA LAST FALL, THE NEW TYPE CONSISTS ONLY OF A FRAMEWORK OF BARS AND RODS.

PART OF IT IS BEING MANUFACTURED BY A MIDWESTERN COMPANY WHICH, HERETOFORE, HAS MADE TRAYS FOR ELECTRIC REFRIGERATORS. IT WEIGHS ONLY 1.9 POUNDS A SQUARE FOOT, OR 450 TONS FOR THE ENTIRE STRIP.

THE MARSTON STRIP, MUCH HEAVIER, IS IN FACT A FULL METAL LANDING PATH WHICH CAN BE USED EVEN IN SWAMPLANDS. THE BAR-AND-ROD TYPE, WHILE IT CAN BE LAID EFFECTIVELY ON MUDDY GROUND WHICH OTHERWISE WOULD NOT SERVE AS AN AIRFIELD, IS TOO LIGHT FOR USE ON MUSHY TERRAIN.

TO THE ADVANTAGE OF THE NEW TYPE IS THE FACT THAT GRASS, GROWING

30.24 - 15837

30.24—15837

UP BETWEEN THE BARS AND RODS, CAN SCREEN IT AGAINST ENEMY OBSERVATION AND PHOTOGRAPHIC PLANES A FEW WEEKS AFTER IT HAS BEEN LAID.

THE MAT IS DESIGNED PRIMARILY FOR RELATIVELY LIGHT PLANES--OBSERVATION, LIGHT ATTACK AND PURSUIT SHIPS. ARMY OFFICERS SAID THE SPEED WITH WHICH IT CAN BE ASSEMBLED MADE IT A LIKELY INSTALLATION ON BEACHES OR IN THE DESERT.

APR 8 1942

"THE SUCCESS OF THE TESTS OF THIS NEW 'VEST POCKET' RUNWAY," SAID A TYPED DESCRIPTION DISTRIBUTED BY THE ARMY, "MAY WELL OBVIATE THE COMPLETE DEPENDENCE OF AN INVADING FORCE ON SEA-BORNE AIR TRANSPORT."

TWO OTHER TYPES OF PORTABLE LANDING STRIPS ARE IN PREPARATION FOR TESTING. ONE, THE SOMERFELD TRACK, IS IN WIDE USE BY THE BRITISH.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 7-(AP)-THE WAR DEPARTMENT ANNOUNCED TODAY THAT THE DISTINGUISHED FLYING CROSS HAS BEEN AWARDED TO COLONEL EUGENE L.EUBANK FOR HIS LEADERSHIP OF A MASS FLIGHT OF FOUR ENGINE BOMBERS OVER A 10,000-MILE ROUTE FROM SAN FRANCISCO TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS LAST FALL.

APR 8 1942

EUBANK, A NATIVE OF MANGUM, OKLA., ACCOMPLISHED THE FLIGHT BETWEEN OCTOBER 17 AND NOVEMBER 19 WITHOUT INJURY OR ACCIDENT TO ANY OF THE PLANES OR THEIR CREWS. THE BOMBERS WERE TAKEN OUT OF THE PHILIPPINES AFTER THE JAPANESE DESTROYED THE USEFULNESS OF THEIR BASES, AND HAVE BEEN FIGHTING SINCE IN JAVA AND AUSTRALIA.

WHEN THE AWARD TO EUBANK WAS RECOMMENDED TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT IN DECEMBER BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT, THE WAR DEPARTMENT SAID THAT "IN ACCOMPLISHING THIS DIFFICULTY FLIGHT, COL.EUBANK DISPLAYED SUPERIOR AIRMANSHIP, EXCELLENT LEADERSHIP, UNUSUAL ABILITY, AND AN ACCURATE KNOWLEDGE OF THE MANY INTRICATE DETAILS INVOLVED."

WASHINGTON, APRIL 7-(AP)-THE NAVY ANNOUNCED TODAY THAT GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR HAD CONFERRED THE FIRST ARMY DECORATIONS ON TWO MARINES FOR "GALLANTRY IN ACTION" IN THE PHILIPPINES.

APR 8 1942

THE CITATIONS SAID THAT THE TWO MARINES, "DISREGARDING FALLING BOMBS AND HOSTILE AERIAL MACHINE GUNNING, AND CONCERNED PRIMARILY WITH THE COMPLETION OF THEIR VOLUNTARY MISSION," FOR WHICH THEY HAD ABANDONED THEIR OWN SHELTER AND SAFETY, DROVE THE TRUCK TO ITS DESTINATION AND OBTAINED ITS MEDICAL ATTENTION FOR THE INJURED.

GREER'S PARENTS, MR. AND MRS.STEPHEN M.GREER LIVE AT HUGHSON, CALIF. THE NAVY GAVE NO DETAILS OF KATCHUCK'S PARENTS RESIDENCE.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 7-(AP)-ASSIGNMENT OF COLONEL HAROLD L.GEORGE, A NATIVE OF SOMERVILLE, MASS., TO SUCCEED BRIGADIER GENERAL ROBERT OLDS IN COMMAND OF THE ARMY AIR FORCES FERRY COMMAND WAS ANNOUNCED TODAY BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Bataan Pounded Without Let-Up by Foe As Wainwright Withdraws to New Line; Gen. Marshall and Hopkins Fly to London

APR 9 1942

Situation Is Seen Critical

Foe Attacking Heedless of Casualties—Defenders' Losses Also Heavy.

ASSAULTS FROM SEA FRUSTRATED

Hordes of Shock Troops, All Kinds of Planes Force Wainwright To Withdraw.

APR 9 1942

WASHINGTON, April 8 (AP)—The Japanese invaders, after forcing the desperately-pressed defenders of Bataan back to a new line, swarmed down upon them today with hordes of shock troops and all types of planes—and a communique reported ominously that "casualties were heavy on both sides."

Fresh Nipponese infantrymen were aided by dive bombers and lead-spitting attack planes. Describing a struggle which reddened the soil and rocks of the narrow peninsula, the War Department declared in the late afternoon:

Continuous Assault

"The present Japanese attack is the longest sustained drive of the enemy since operations began on Bataan. Waves of shock troops have attacked almost continuously, without regard to casualties, which have been heavy on both sides.

"American and Filipino troops, including naval and marine contingents, have stubbornly resisted every advance. Repeated efforts of the enemy to land troops behind our lines have been frustrated by our beach defenses, manned largely by naval and marine personnel."

The situation, however, was evidently critical because of the numerical superiority of the foe. The Nipponese Command was obviously seeking, not merely to press the defenders back again but to cut off their avenue of withdrawal to the Corregidor fortress two miles off Bataan's tip.

"Heavy bombers are continuing their attacks on our rear areas near the southern extremity of the Bataan Peninsula," said the communique.

Water-borne Attack Smashed

An announcement earlier in the day had told how the defenders had resorted to a general withdrawal of their defense line because of a Japanese break-through. The location of the new line was not disclosed, but the fact that the Japanese launched a heavy attack against it so swiftly indicated that the stubborn American - Filipino troops had not relinquished much territory in their withdrawal.

An apparent Japanese effort to start a water-borne atack against fortified islands at the entrance to Manila Bay was smashed when the big guns of the forts broke up a concentration of barges and small boats near Patungan, on the mainland 10 miles due south of Corregidor. A similar concentration of small craft was smashed at the same spot 10 days ago, and weeks earlier such an assembly of "invasion craft" was destroyed at Ternate, east of Patungan.

A minor but heartening success was reported from the southern island of Mindanao, where a Filipino patrol captured a Japanese outpost in a surprise attack which forced the withdrawal of several enemy units.

The break in the Bataan line came as the heroic but outnumbered defenders, subjected to increasingly heavy pressure since March 22 when Lieutenant General Jonathan M. Wainwright ignored a Japanese demand that he surrender, gave way before the sledge-hammer blows of the shock troops which have been pounding the center of the line almost without pause for four days.

Japs Heedless of Losses

Heedless of the enormous toll of casualties exacted by the fierce resistance of Wainwright's men, the invaders threw repeated waves of infantry assault forces against the line with the support of tanks, artillery and dive bombers, and clinched the success of their drive yesterday by throwing fresh reserves into the fight.

The valiant defending army, its own strength depleted by heavy casualties, lacking reserves of manpower, and with dwindling supplies of food and munitions, fought with grim determination to hold its positions across the peninsula, but its lines sagged inevitably before superior enemy power, and the apparently inexsaustible reserves of seasoned Japanese veterans.

The American - Filipino troops have been holding an advanced line since a sudden and successful thrust along the whole front February 25 forced the Japanese to withdraw from one-half to five miles. This anchored the defenders' forward positions at a point north of Abucay on the east coast of Bataan, and about halfway between Bagac and Moron, on the China Sea coast.

Prior to this attack, the troops—then under the direct command of General Douglas MacArthur—had established their main lines slightly north of the road which traverses the peninsula between Pilar and Bagac. This may have been the "previously prepared defensive position" to which Wainwright withdrew his forces.

However, another strongly entrenched line as set up months ago several miles farther south, stretching roughly from Limay on the Manila Bay shore, along the crest of the Mariveles Mountains to Kaybobo Point on the China Sea. If the withdrawal was to this line, it represented an advance of several miles by the Japanese, leaving only the southernmost tip of the peninsula in the possession of the American-Filipino forces. If such a line were pierced by the enemy spearhead, a retreat to Corregidor Island for a last-ditch stand would be the only remaining resource of the defenders.

Aiming at Wainwright's communications over the two miles of water between the mainland and Corregidor, and apparently anticipating an attempt to transport the remaining American-Filipino troops to the fortified island for a final defiant resistance if Bataan is lost, the Japanese in recent days subjected the south coast of the peninsula to a heavy dive-bombing attack.

This was part of the intensive aerial bombardment with which the Japanese, possessing undisputed mastery of the air over the Philippines, have pounded all the Bataan positions for nearly a week.

Text of Communique

The text of the War Department's communique, No. 182, outlining military situation up to 4:00 p. m., EWT, today:

1. Philippine theatre: Fresh Japanese troops are continuing their forward drive in Bataan with great vigor. A heavy attack on our new positions is now in progress. Dive bombers and attack aircraft are bombing and machine gunning our front lines. Heavy bombers are continuing their attacks on our rear areas near the southern extremity of the Bataan Peninsula.

The present Japanese attack is the longest sustained drive of the enemy since operations began in Bataan. Waves of shock troops have attacked almost continuously, without regard to casualties, which have been heavy on both sides. American and Filipino troops, including naval and marine contingents have stubbornly resisted every advance. Repeated efforts of the enemy to land troops behind our lines have been frustrated by our beach defenses, manned largely by naval and marine personnel.

During the past 24 hours there were no air attacks on Corregidor. The guns of our harbor defenses broke up a concentration of enemy barges and small boats in the vicinity of Patungan on the southern shore of Manila Bay.

General Wainwright has been advised of a successful raid by one of his patrols in Mindanao which captured a Japanese outpost in a surprise attack and forced the withdrawal of several hostile units.

2. There is nothing to report from other areas.

Orderly Withdrawal

Officials said there was no immediate indication of the extent of the withdrawal, but it apparently was accomplished in orderly fashion. The Japanese, with greatly superior forces numerically, have been hammering constantly at the line since Saturday, supported by tanks, heavy artillery fire, and aerial bombardment and strafing of the defending troops.

A break-through in the line has been expected by officials here since the major assault started five days ago, and apparently General Wainwright had prepared a new line before the concentrated assaults of the enemy could convert the break into a disastrous rout.

APR 9 1942

The communique also confirmed previous dispatches from India reporting that seven American army heavy bombers carried out a successful raid April 3 on the harbor of Rangoon, Burma, damaging docks and port facilities and starting three large fires.

Communique Text

The text of the communique, No. 181, based on reports received here up to 9.30 A. M.:

"1. Philippine theater:

"In order to rectify the line in Bataan which had been penetrated by the Japanese, our troops withdrew during the night of April 7 to a previously prepared defensive position.

"2. India:

"Confirming previous press dispatches Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton reports in a delayed message that seven American army heavy bombers of the Flying Fortress type carried out a successful air raid on the harbor of Rangoon on April 3. Several tons of bombs were dropped, damaging docks and port facilities. Three large fires were started. Light anti-aircraft fire from Japanese batteries was encountered but none of our planes was hit.

"3. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Timed To Beat Rains

Japanese forces on Bataan Peninsula were believed to be developing the opening phases of a headlong offensive to wipe out resistance before the start of the rainy season.

Japanese strength available for the Luzon campaign has been estimated at one full army at least. This would be from two to six infantry divisions which, together with heavy artillery and other troops, would number from 110,000 to 135,000 officers and men, far superior to the defending forces.

The divisions themselves would be the attacking units. Each would have one tank company, 6,000 riflemen, 380 light machine guns, 82 heavy machine guns, 20 37-mm. guns, 18 70-mm. guns, 36 75-mm. guns and 12 105-mm. howitzers.

Likely Jap Tactics

Officers familiar with Japanese tactics say the normal attack would consist of frontal, direct pressure to hold the enemy while a column maneuvered to strike at a flank. This is the phase of the fighting which apparently has been developing over the past four days. The War Department described it thus:

"Superior enemy forces, supported by tanks and artillery, continue to attack the center of our line in Bataan. The Japanese have thrown fresh reserves into the fighting and have made some additional progress. Heavy losses have been sustained by our forces and by the enemy.

"Japanese dive bombers are assisting in the attack, dropping bombs and machine-gunning our front-line soldiers."

Task Is Difficult

The fact that one end of the American-Filipino line is on the China Sea and the other on Manila Bay makes a successful flanking attack unusually difficult. The Japanese have tried futilely, and at

Wainwright's Forces Fall Back To New Lines On Bataan

APR 9 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 8—A general withdrawal of the American-Filipino forces in Bataan to new defensive positions because of Japanese penetration of their line was announced today by the War Department.

The troops under Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright withdrew last night to "a previously prepared defensive position," a communique said, in order to rectify heavy cost [illegible] the Bataan flanks with waterborne troops. However, there is always the possibility that they might eventually drive a strong column through one of the flanks and then attempt to roll it up.

Any such thrust by a flanking column may, of course, meet a counter-attack by the defenders. European armies consider such a meeting engagement a dangerous gamble, but the Japanese seek it deliberately.

Assume Spirit Better

The Japanese assume that their own fighting spirit is superior to that of any enemy. They also are willing to chance the disruption of unified infantry and artillery action which inevitably goes with the collision of two attacking armies or of any army in motion and one which has halted but has not had time to organize defensively.

The Japanese place much faith in the ability of their infantry to look out for itself and in the combat decisions of commanders of small units—the gunso (sergeants) and the gocho (corporals)—in the confusion of battle. Trained in the tradition of offensive warfare, Japanese officers from general down reach attack decisions where orthodox tactics would require development on the defensive.

Batteries Leap-Frogged

In the attack, the Japanese plan usually is to furnish continuous artillery support to advancing infantrymen by leap-frogging batteries from position to position directly in the rear of the infantry.

Officers pointed out that thus far in the Bataan fighting American and Filipino defenders have been able to prevent unification of Japanese infantry and artillery advances, either through counter-attacks and the disruption consequent to meeting engagements, or through concentrated artillery fire of their own.

Gunfire Confuses Foe

Artillery fire often has thrown the Japanese flanking columns into confusion. In a division attack these columns consist of an advance guard regiment of infantry and battalion of field artillery and a main force of two regiments of infantry and two battalions of field artillery.

Such columns have an overal length of about eight miles—a good target for General Wainwright's big guns.

Gen. MacArthur in Touch With Bataan Defenders

By the Associated Press.

UNITED STATES ARMY HEADQUARTERS, Australia, April 8.—Gen. Douglas MacArthur is in touch with the American-Filipino defenders of Bataan, his spokesman disclosed today.

The spokesman did not disclose any details, but said Gen. MacArthur had received reports from Lt. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright, who took up his command when Gen. MacArthur came to Australia.

He reiterated what Gen. MacArthur has held ever since he became supreme commander for the Southwest Pacific—that the Philippines remain a very real part of his active command.

Three Months After First Clash Bataan Defenders Fight On

APR 9 1942

Americans and Filipinos Battling For Their Lives and a Promise

By CLARKE LEE,
Associated Press War Correspondent.

GEN. MacARTHUR'S HEADQUARTERS, Australia, April 8.—The men of Bataan are fighting for their lives and a pledge—the American soldiers to redeem their country's promise to defend and liberate the Philippines; the Filipinos because they believe the United States will keep that faith.

Three months ago yesterday the first big infantry engagement was fought on Bataan Peninsula as United States infantry met the Japanese in large-scale, close-quarter combat for the first time in history.

Since then Singapore has fallen. Bataan fought on. Java fell. Bataan fought on.

Behind that fighting spirit is the superb work of American field officers and the equipment of the Army which was of first-class quality although on Bataan it was available in pitifully small quantities.

When I left Bataan its defenders were still keeping them falling.

Broke Up Bomber Formations.

The day before leaving, I visited a battery of anti-aircraft gunners who defended the Manila waterfront in the early days of the war and since then had been beating off repeated Japanese dive-bomber attacks on airfields from which Gen. MacArthur's tiny air force continued to operate.

On Christmas morning, en route to Bataan, the battery set up its guns in open fields 35 miles north of the capital and gave a surprise reception to 37 low-flying bombers which had been pounding the city.

I happened at that time to be returning from the Lingayen area in a train which was stopped nearby because of an air-raid alarm, and I saw the battery's guns break up all three formations of enemy planes.

On January 7, in Northern Bataan, one battery was credited with knocking down seven dive bombers and hitting many more after moving into positions guarding Gen. MacArthur's airfields.

I can't recall the names of all those I saw on my last visit late in February, but they included Sergt. Joe Smith, who had been recommended for a lieutenancy; Corpl. Gene Davis and his brother, all of Carlsbad, N. Mex., and Sergt. Hall, a mustached Texan.

No Grumbling Among Troops.

They reported that all of their regimental mates who had survived the Clark Field bombing by the Japanese the first day of the war were still alive and fighting on Bataan.

The boys looked older. They had "Bataan faces," lined, strained and streaked with dust.

It was no picnic, but none of them was grumbling. They still had a chuckle left for the story of the visiting inspection officer who saw them shoot down an enemy dive bomber.

He began praising the mechanical marvels of their gun, saying that the sights were so perfect it was virtually impossible to miss, and then:

"Sorry, sir," drawled the gunner, "but that mechanical sight ain't connected. We got that last bird free-hand, so to speak."

Jeered Propaganda Broadcasts.

Sergt. Smith and his mates had distinguished themselves a few days previously by bravery in extinguishing fires caused by a bomb which set off a pile of shells stored nearby. The bursting shells peppered their position but caused no casualties.

Another night I had tinned pot-luck with Sergt. Hall's battery, which was in one of the real hot spots of the peninsula, with its gun positions pockmarked by bomb craters.

After supper the boys turned on a field radio and were delighted when they picked up a United States program instead of the Japanese-run station at Manila to whose music they listened daily, even while fighting, and at whose propaganda broadcasts they jeered heartily.

Mrs. Wainwright Broadcasts To General And Filipinos

APR 9 1942

[By The Associated Press]

San Francisco, April 8—Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright, fighting the battle of his life against the Japanese on Bataan, received a broadcast "letter from home" today, which included a message from his wife and a bark from his dog.

Filipinos Addressed

Mrs. Wainwright and the general's retriever, Seal, came here from Carmel, Cal., for the broadcast to the Philippines at 3.15 A. M. over the powerful shortwave radio station KGEI. Her message was a feature of the "freedom-for-the-Philippines" program.

She also sent a message which was translated into Tagalog in which she asked the Filipinos to "have faith and keep that faith," and promised that the United States never would forget them.

"I would travel many a mile and endure many a hardship if necessary to send my love to my husband and to each and every brave lad fighting by his side in the Philippine Islands," she said.

In response to the announcer's question of how the General must feel about the publicity about him, she replied:

"My husband is pretty much of a philosopher at heart, but I know he will be as uncomfortable as a bull in a china shop if he ever hears any of the songs that have been written about him."

MELVILLE JACOBY TELLS OF VOYAGE FROM MANILA BAY

APR 9 1942

Boat Was Spotted Twice by Jap Planes During 20-Day Trip to Australia.

NEW YORK, April 8—(AP) A Godspeed from General MacArthur sent Melville Jacoby, his bride of four months and Clark Lee, Associated Press correspondent, off on their perilous 20-day voyage from Bataan to Australia, Jacoby, Time magazine correspondent, relates in the current issue of that magazine.

In his detailed account of the daring dash through the Japanese blockade, Jacoby said MacArthur asked a couple of days before his own departure: "Do you want to go now?"

Then, he said, the general shook hands around and told them "I believe you will make it."

Traveled by Night

The correspondents traveled by boat between the islands at night, holing up on shore by day.

In bright moonlight, their boat slipped through minefields and past the Cavite shoreline where Japanese artillery blazed intermittently at Forts Drum and Hughes.

Jacoby said the little party sat on deck with their legs and arms crossed as well as their fingers and with "a tight feeling in our stomaches."

When a member of the crew wrung a chicken's neck, he went on, "the agonized squawk made us jump, our stomachs rejoining us some time after."

Saw Plane Twice

Twice they were spotted by a Japanese plane—it looked like "Photograph Joe," a reconnaissance pilot who flew daily over Corregidor—but the expected bombs did not fall.

Once, when putting to sea at dusk, the account went on, they were spotted by a German on shore and soon afterward signal fires flared on the hills around them.

Several times they fled from islands when reports were received of an approaching Japanese destroyer; darkness saved them from an enemy auxiliary cruiser.

During alarms, Jacoby said his wife "filed her nails over and over again." Twice she filed them nearly to the quick—the first time when they sighted eight Japanese warships steaming parallel to them but the enemy, presumably damaged and returning home, paid them no attention.

The second time was when a big Japanese ship chased them but they gave the vessel the slip by racing into a dark rain squall.

Jacoby said that when they finally reached a friendly port and the engineer shut off the motors of the boat a piston cracked, and he added: "The motors wouldn't have turned another time."

PILOT OF BOMBER PRAISES FILIPINOS

Natives Beheaded First Landing Party of Japs, Flier Says.

DULUTH, Minn., April 8—(AP) With nothing but praise for the fierce loyalty of the Filipino people as well as the Moros and Igorots who live in the more primitive parts of the Philippine islands, Lieut. Edward W. Bergstrom of Duluth, a Navy bomber pilot just returned from the south Pacific, recounted this story today of the type of opposition the Japanese are running into:

When the first Jap landing party broke into Lingayen gulf, the invaders were repulsed with heavy losses by American forces, but some Japanese were able to make shore and escape into the nearby jungles where bolo-wielding Igorots live.

Three days later the Army was surprised to see the Igorots come marching single file out of the wilderness, a spear over each shoulder and a Japanese head on each spear. The entire Jap party had been beheaded.

"It was," said Lieutenant Bergstrom, "the first time head hunting had not been punished in the Philippines in 40 years."

Manus Flanks Bridgeheads On New Guinea and New Britain.

157 ENEMY PLANES DOWNED IN MONTH

Several Raiders Hit in Latest Attack on Port Moresby.

APR 9 1942

SYDNEY, Australia, April 9—(AP)—The Japanese have landed on Manus Island in the Admiralty group, it was reported today, in an apparent design to protect their far-extended forces on New Guinea and New Britain, to the south and southeast, respectively.

Anticipating this move by a small occupation group, the Australians had destroyed the airdrome and everything else which might be of use to the Japanese at the landing port, Lorengau.

The point is 350 miles north of occupied Lae on the New Guinea coast and about an equal distance northwest of Rabaul, New Britain. Lorengau's seizure strengthened the belief here that Rabaul was growing in importance to the Japanese hold in the entire southwest Pacific area and that the invaders found they vitally needed further outposts for sea and air reconnaissance to protect Rabaul's supply lines.

A similar intention was seen in the recent Japanese landing at Bougainville in the Solomon Islands.

Brilliant Air Offensive

An Australian war correspondent reported from Port Moresby that "excluding Allied air operations north of Australia yesterday and today we have destroyed or seriously damaged at least 157 Japanese aircraft in the past month in a brilliantly executed air offensive over a front extending from Timor to Rabaul."

"We are rapidly approaching the time," he said, "when the Japanese will have to decide whether they will be hurled out of the islands which they have occupied, or are willing to bleed other vital fronts of air power in a desperate effort to safeguard their meager gains north of Australia."

Continuing to make the Japanese footholds as insecure as possible, Allied air forces reported that yesterday they hit five or six grounded enemy planes at Lae and shot another out of the air. At Koepang, in Japanese-occupied Dutch Timor, the Royal Australian Air Force beat off three attempts at interception by Japanese fighters before dropping bombs on the target.

MacArthur, Curtin Confer

With the opposing forces thus maneuvering, Australia's war council laid the groundwork for important decisions expected to be taken tomorrow. Prime Minister John Curtin met for two hours with General Douglas MacArthur and his principal aides, but the nature of the conference was not disclosed.

The Australian war correspondent who told of recent Allied air successes against the Japanese described these successes as a result of "one of the most powerful and most sustained air blitzes since the Pacific war began."

It began with the Japanese landing at Lae and Salamaua, New Guinea, exactly a month ago today.

Bad Weather Only Bar

"Bad weather conditions have been the only factor that has stopped the Allies from hammering them every day," the correspondent continued.

"An examination of the air activity over Darwin, Timor, the Torres Strait, New Guinea and New Britain since the Lae landing March 8 shows that we have shot down or destroyed on the ground ninety-nine Japanese planes and damaged at least fifty-eight.

"It is only a few weeks since single Japanese reconnaissance planes could come over Port Moresby and complete their jobs almost unchallenged. Today on such a job the pilot stands a good chance of suicide, and we see the extraordinary picture of five or seven highspeed Zero fighters being used as escort for one lone reconnaissance plane."

Allies Disable 157 Jap Planes

Japanese Beaten Off In Attack on Moresby

MELBOURNE, Thursday, April 9 —(AP)—Japanese planes attempting to raid Port Moresby, in southern New Guinea, yesterday were driven off by Allied fighters and several invading craft were damaged, it was announced today.

Japanese Force Lands On Manus Island

APR 9 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Sydney, Australia, April 8—The Japanese have landed a small occupation force at Lorengau, on Manus Island, one of the largest of the Admiralty group above New Guinea, dispatches from New Guinea, reported today.

Lorengau is about 350 miles north of Lae, New Guinea port occupied by the enemy, and the Sydney Sun's New Guinea correspondent said this new base and another at Bougainville, in the Solomon Islands, could be used by the Japanese for dispersion forces.

Move Anticipated

It had been anticipated that the Japanese would occupy Manus, which lies on the main Japanese supply route to Rabaul, in New Guinea.

The present Japanese plan, it was believed here, may be to protect Rabaul, which is assuming ever-greater importance in the entire Pacific war, through seizure of outposts for sea and air reconnaisance.

At Lorengau, the airdrome and everything else which might have been useful to the invader were reported destroyed before its capture.

fulfilling its original function of maintenance of supplies and equipment will be discussed.

Jap Plans Smashed

The conferees with Curtin were MacArthur, supreme commander in the southwest Pacific; Gen. Sir Thomas Blamey, commander of Allied ground forces; Lieut. Gen. George H. Brett, deputy commander and air chief, and Vice-Admiral Herbert F. Leary, the naval commander.

In the air smash yesterday on Lae, Japanese-held New Guinea port, a communique issued by Curtin said American and Australian flyers scored direct hits on five or six grounded enemy fighters, and also hit Japanese bombers on the landing field.

Koepang Bombed

The United Nations' fighter escort encountered no Japanese air opposition, but a lone enemy Zero fighter rose to challenge the bomber squadron and was shot down in a concentrated salvo from their guns, the communique said.

Australian planes reached and bombed the target area over Koepang, on Dutch Timor, despite three interceptions by enemy fighters, it added. One plane is missing from the two operations.

CRUCIFIX SAVES AMERICAN FLYER

APR 9 1942

Causes Natives on Island to Spare His Life.

Somewhere in North Australia, April 8 (A. P.).—Lieut. Clarence Sanford, an Alabama University graduate from Auburn, N. Y., reported today his life was saved by the silver crucifix he wears around his neck. Chasing Japanese planes over the Pacific, Lieut. Sanford's fighter plane ran out of fuel and he had to bail out, drifting into the water three miles from a small island.

He ripped off all his clothing to swim ashore, where he collapsed. He was aroused by three aborigines; one, who held a spear to his chest, accused: "You Jap."

Lieut. Sanford said that he was about to be impaled when the native spied the crucifix and exclaimed, "Jesus Number One man!" The now friendly natives led the nude flyer twenty-five miles afoot to the Bremer Island mission and a pearl lugger brought him back to Australia.

Auburn, N. Y., April 8 (A. P.).—The attractive, 20-year-old wife of Second Lieut. Clarence Sanford, 24, was "quite upset" today to think her husband had been so near death but at the same time "thrilled" to learn he was safe.

Mrs. Sanford, formerly Margaret Bolger, had not heard from her husband since receiving a cablegram from Australia a month ago but was "thankful the little cross had helped him."

The couple were married at West Palm Beach on December 31, 1941. Mrs. Sanford is living with her parents here.

MELBOURNE, Australia, April 8 (AP).—Australian showgoers now are hearing "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "God Bless America" along with their own anthems.

Naval Battle Reported Imminent in Bengal Bay

LONDON, Thursday, April 9 (AP)—Naval reporters here today said that "the biggest naval battle in all history seems about to blaze up in the Bay of Bengal" between the Japanese and British fleets.

"The battle may already have begun," the Daily Sketch's correspondent said, and recalled that Sir Andrew Caldecott, governor of strategic Ceylon off the southern Indian coast, had told the people there Wednesday that "good news might be expected as an aftermath to the Easter Sunday raid" by the Japanese.

A mass formation of unconfirmed Axis reports tell of naval battles already in the Indian ocean where the Japanese steadily are thrusting westward.

Dispatches appearing here agreed that powerful [illegible] of the Japanese fleet [illegible] in the area, and [illegible] British were tracking.

Informed sources declined to comment on a Rome radio report that a strong British naval formation rounded the Cape of Good Hope March 27 en route to the Indian Ocean.

The Daily Herald noted that strong Japanese units had moved into conquered Rangoon's harbor. Others were said to be at Port Blair in the Andaman Islands where U.S. flying fortresses bombed a cruiser last week.

Oil Installation Demolished

Before giving up Thayetmyo, British engineers demolished oil installations in that area. Military quarters here expected an enemy attempt to break the British army before it could carry out similar destruction in Minbu's fields.

Establishment of a continuous front above Thayetmyo may thwart the heretofore successful Japanese tactics of encircling movements on the flanks to set up road blocks against British communications.

These enemy maneuvers have served to pen the defenders in small areas which then were blasted with artillery and incessant aerial assaults. The British thus far have been able to break out of these traps, but they cost heavy casualties, which the imperial forces are less able to afford than the numerically superior Japanese.

Todays New Delhi communique, reporting no change in the situation on the Irrawaddy front, said an unidentified town in north Burma was bombed yesterday. It added that so far as was known there was no damage.

British Better Positions On Burma Front

Picture Brighter By Move Toward Establishing Continuous Line.

LONDON, April 8 (AP)—British forces in Burma occupied tactically improved positions north of Thayetmyo today after the latest withdrawal to a point in the narrowing Irrawaddy valley which offered prospects of a continuous front for the first time since the Japanese started their up-river drive.

This was the somewhat brighter picture after weeks of bitter fighting and withdrawals, and it was hoped the defenders would be able to check the invaders' rush toward the main Burmese oil fields around Minbu.

Same Old Story.

London, April 8 (A. P.).—The British withdrawal from Prome to new positions north of Thayetmyo, on the Burma front, was the same old story of the last two or three weeks, a military commentator said today.

"The Japanese attack with superior forces," he said. "We stay as long as we can, inflict as much loss as we can, gain as much time as we can, and then go back to the next suitable position."

At present, he said, there is a pause in fighting while the Japanese reform.

The British ground forces are feeling the lack of air support, he said, but added that the fighting had been hard and at least equally exhausting for the Japanese as for our troops.

2,000-Ton Minelayer Claimed Sunk, Four British Planes Hit

APR 9 1942

By the Associated Press.

TOKIO (From Japanese broadcasts), April 8.—Japanese naval planes, furiously attacking the Burmese port of Akyab, blasted air facilities, sank a 2,000-ton minelayer in the harbor with direct hits and destroyed four British planes on the ground, dispatches from a Japanese naval base reported today.

(The Berlin radio broadcast a Tokio report that Japanese ships last week end sank more than 20 enemy ships in the Indian Ocean. It also said Japanese submarines were extending their operations in the Indian Ocean and already had sunk a large number of ships.)

In the raid on Akyab Monday, the dispatches said, widespread damage was done to hangars and runways.

It also was reported that explosives dumped on enemy vessels in the harbor caused heavy damage.

Scores of United Nations vessels have been sunk by Japanese naval and air units since Sunday in the Indian Ocean and during an assault against Colombo, Ceylon, Japanese dispatches declared today. (The Tokio radio account gave no details.)

JAPANESE PLANES AVOID U. S. PILOTS

100 Warcraft Bomb Burma Road Town, Cause No Military Damage.

By Darrell Berrigan

A. V. G. HEADQUARTERS IN UPPER BURMA, April 1—(Delayed) (AP) More than 100 Japanese planes struck at Lashio yesterday and today, but their apparent wariness of the American "Hell's Angels" squadron led by Arvid Olson of Chicago, kept them 20,00 feet up and their bombing was indiscriminate.

Unofficial reports said 20 civilians were killed and 45 were injured in Lashio's first raid of the war yesterday, but military objectives were almost untouched.

No Casualties or Damage

Today's bombing caused neither casualties nor damage, and the raiders for the second time kept high. Apparently they knew the A. V. G. airmen still were active on this front despite heavy blows suffered by the American pilots in the Japanese raids March 21 and 23 on their Central Burma base.

Charles H. (Chuck) Older, a hustling American airman already credited officially with six Japanese planes, made it seven Monday when he shot down a Japanese reconnaissance plane encountered near the China-Burma border.

Olson, the tall No. 3 squadron leader, telling of Tuesday's raid, said:

"We heard there was a plane up there. The sky's a big place to find one reported plane, but 'Moose' (R. C. Moss of Doerun, Ga.) and I went up. I didn't find anything on my patrol. Now let 'Moose' finish the story."

Runs Into Traffic Jam

"Moose" Moss, a heavy-set pistol-toting southerner officially credited with the destruction of eight enemy planes, still has chipped teeth from a parachute jerk when he bailed out of a bullet-punctured Tomahawk fighter behind the Japanese lines in Thailand last January. He landed then and hitch-hiked back to Rangoon.

"I went looking for one little ole Jap and got in a traffic jam," he drawled.

"There I was coasting along plenty high trying to see every which way. All of a sudden I noticed nine Japanese fighters almost directly below me. I looked up, and at 20,000 feet the place was sorta populated by both Jap fighters and bombers.

"A navy Zero leading the formation below must have seen me, too. He zoomed up a little way, banked, and I'll swear he was saying, 'Come down, sucker, and stick your neck out.'

"But I stayed up there and just counted them. That's all. The odds were 43 to 1."

Sixty Japanese bombers and fighters droned overhead today in the second attack, but they stayed high. A ground haze prevented accurate bombing. The A. V. G. pilots were unable to contact them.

By H. R. Stimson

NEW DELHI, India, Thursday, April 9 (AP)—The prospect of an eventual settlement of the complicated Indian questioned remained bright today after President Roosevelt's special envoy, Louis Johnson, conferred at length last night with members of the All-India Congress party.

Meets Cripps, Nehru

Sir Stafford Cripps, Britain's envoy, and the Hindu leader of the Congress Party, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, both saw Johnson. Nehru saw the American twice, besides participating in a seven-hour party session, and then Johnson was closeted with Cripps.

Mohandas K. Gandhi, India's little spiritual leader who has great power, was understood to have been kept informed of developments.

Cripps indefinitely postponed a press conference this morning, indicating that the negotiations were not deadlocked.

Preparing New Formula

The Congress Party was understood to be working on a new formula envisaging a position in India approximating that in Australia where Gen. Douglas MacArthur is supreme military commander but where Australians still hold defense posts with clearly defined prerogatives and responsibilities.

Cripps was reported to have handed a new defense formula to Mohammed Ali Jinnah, Moslem League president.

Chakravarthi Rajagopalachariar, former premier of Madras, already had made a specific reference to the Australian analogy.

At any rate, authoritative quarters said it would be several days, if not a week, before the British finally learned the terms of both the Congress Party and the Moslem League.

The Congress Party is the most potent single group in the Indian political maze.

This group has opposed the British proposal to keep the defense of India in British hands, contending that despite the imminent danger of Japanese invasion Britain should turn the defense over to Indians as an evidence of good faith.

Yesterday, however, Congress quarters intimated that their committee discussions had been helped notably by information on the roles of the war secretary and army command under the American constitutional system and that they now realized an army must be under a commander-in-chief who has full responsibility for prosecuting the war.

Indicative of Johnson's role in the protracted and complicated proceedings was the fact that the Hindu leader, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, left a Congress committee meeting to confer anew with Johnson, then rejoined the meeting. Another session was scheduled for tomorrow.

Moslem League Statement

During yesterday the Moslem League's working committee declared the British proposal for dominion status after the war must be so modified that no province could remain aloof from the proposed federation; that a constitutional convention must be chosen by direct vote rather than by provincial legislatures, and that defense must be transferred immediately to Indian hands.

Mohammed Ali Jinnah, president of the Moslem League, said he was misunderstood yesterday when he was quoted as stating Britain had offered to name a representative Indian as defense minister.

Nevertheless, there was some cause for belief that Britain had in fact offered the Indians a much more substantial hand in their own defense than at present, and the reports from the Hindu sessions pointed the direction of a possible compromise agreement.

Both Johnson and Cripps are determined to avoid a breakdown of negotiations and to remove distrust.

The belief grew that the common desire of Britain and the Indians to defend India might prove to be the key to the whole difficult question of a national government.

Outlook Brightened On Indian Problem

Optimism Grows as U. S. Envoy Confers With Cripps, Indian Leaders—New British Formula Reported.

New Plan May Break Indian Deadlock

APR 9 1942

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, India, April 8—A new formula for handling Indian defense was reported worked out today at an All-India Congress party committee session and semi-official sources declared that the way might yet be cleared for a settlement under which India would attain a national government and take up her full part in the war.

It was intimated that Louis Johnson, former United States Assistant Secretary of War, who came here as President Roosevelt's personal emissary, had played a prominent part as mediator in averting a deadlock on Britain's offer to the Indians.

Tonight, however, the working committee of the All-India Moslem Conference, big Moslem organization, adopted a resolution declaring the Cripps proposals unacceptable in their present form. The committee stated that the proposals must be modified so that no province would be permitted to remain out of the proposed Indian union.

APR 9 1942

Defense Responsibility

The Moslems contended that the Cripps proposals as they now stand would impair the solidarity and unity of the Indian people.

Meanwhile the situation as regards the Hindus seemed brighter.

The new plan for dealing with responsibility for defense, heretofore a stumbling block in the way of Congress party acceptance of the autonomy proposal, was said to have developed at a morning session of the party's working committee.

The plan was said to have been turned over to party leaders, and the committee continued in session.

Earlier Deadlock

Earlier, a deadlock had threatened to wreck Sir Stafford Cripps' mission to India as Britain's amended offer to appoint an Indian as the country's Defense Minister fell short of Nationalist demands.

Only two possibilities, apparently, remained to give the negotiations for post-war Indian dominion status a new lease on life—that the eagerness on both sides for an agreement might produce satisfactory terms or that United States influence might be brought to bear on the involved situation.

Synopsis Of Bargaining

This, briefly, is a synopsis of the bargaining in the deal for Indian independence.

Seeking India's all-out war support now, Britain sent Cripps to New Delhi as her emissary with an offer of dominion status after the war.

There were two strings: Britain must hold control of India's defenses for the duration; India could take it or leave it.

India said no.

Main Pitfall

The All-India Congress party, the potent voice of the Hindo majority, and the Moslem League, strongest spokesman of 77,000,000 minority Moslems, have been India's chief negotiators.

They insisted on Indian direction of India's defenses against the Japanese enemy, already threatening from the Bay of Bengal. That was the main pitfall. There also was inner dissension among the Indian factions, the minorities fearful of Hndu dominance in a new dominion and the Hindus adamant that India remain an entity, not divided in separate federations, as Britain suggested.

Greater Power Sought

Britain modified her original offer yesterday with the concession that an Indian become India's Defense Minister. It has failed to break the deadlock.

Most of members of the party's working committee were said to hold that the British offer was unacceptable unless the Minister be conferred far greater defense power than such projected responsibilities as public relations, defense coordination and the raising of a home guard.

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, influential Congress leader, who had raised the defense issue originally and who also had injected the unity theme later, was represented, however, as one of the most anxious of all Indian leaders for a last-minute settlement.

Some sources said Nehru was hopeful that President Roosevelt might reconcile the Indian and British points of view through Mr. Johnson, former Assistant War Secretary, who has been here as the President's personal emissary and has kept posted on both sides.

BRITISH INSIST INDIA DEFENSE IS THEIR TASK

English Report Last Offer Made to Nationalists Was Final.

NEW FORMULA WORKED OUT

Congress Party Committee Still Is Seeking Way Out of Possible Stalemate.

APR 9 1942

London, April 8 (A. P.).—Word from New Delhi that leaders of the All-India Congress party are considering new proposals for a national government and a revised formula for India's defense was met here today in diplomatic quarters with the statement that Britain's last offer is final.

The London informants said that the British War Cabinet is determined to retain primary responsibility for the defense of India because it is inseparable from the defense of Burma and Ceylon, control of the Indian Ocean, the disposition of British forces in the whole Far East and Middle East and liaison with Chungking.

Dispatches from India said that Mohammed Ali Jinnah, president of the All-India Moslem League, had been misunderstood when he was quoted as saying that Britain would relinquish the Indian defense ministry post to an Indian. Despite this, there appeared grounds for a belief that Britain in fact had offered to turn over to the Indians a substantial share in the organization of their country's defense.

The political correspondent of the Evening News wrote that Britain had offered the Indians "a position of high importance in relation to defense matters—it would amount to co-ordination in India of all relations between regular forces and civil defense and general administration of the country, leaving control of operations strictly in the hands of the commander-in-chief."

Halifax Says Britain Will Do Its Duty in Defense of India

Will Assume Obligation If Leaders Reject Plan For Dominion Status

APR 9 1942

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 8.—Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States, said last night that should Britain fail to win agreement among Indian leaders on a plan for dominion status after the war "the British government would find itself obliged to do its own duty, without the assistance or co-operation of the larger organized Indian parties."

"Should this be so," said Lord Halifax in the annual lecture of the Jonathan Peterson Foundation at Town Hall, "many of the best friends of India, here and elsewhere, would deplore the fact.

"But, sad as they would be, they would not find it difficult to decide where the responsibility lay."

Great Britain long had aimed at the eventual granting of dominion status to India under a constitutional form of government, he said.

Lays Down Definite Plan.

The plan to which Sir Stafford Cripps was trying to win Indian agreement, Lord Halifax asserted, "lays down a perfectly definite plan for the satisfaction of India's claim to the free management of her own affairs."

Britain's only conditions to the granting of dominion status, he said, "are conditions that are plainly necessary for its own fulfillment. The recognition of the right of Moslem provinces, that for the present at all events may hesitate to join the union, to remain outside it, and provision by treaty for the due protection of minorities."

Reviewing the hopes of Britain for the eventual self-government of India, Lord Halifax added:

"It may be that in denial of these hopes those who speak for India will reject this opportunity.

Halifax Still Hopeful.

"The trend of the news suggests that this is not at all impossible. But my information is not complete, and I still hope that the wiser counsels may prevail.

"I can well understand the distaste with which many Indians are likely to regard particular features of the scheme proposed by the British government. But, as I have already said, if any scheme is to be successful it must carry the broad agreement both of the minorities and of the rulers of the Indian states. * * *"

The sincerity of the British government, Lord Halifax declared, "has been proved. No one any longer will be able to fool an audience by accusing Britain of bad faith to India. We for our part shall not lose hope."

Walter Nash, New Zealand's Minister to the United States, said he firmly believed the United Nations would win the war, but cautioned that general belief "that we are bound to win" was the one great danger in the path to victory.

JAVA PRISONERS LISTED

Tokyo Reports 82,618 Captured, Including 833 Americans

TOKYO, April 8 (From Japanese Broadcast Recorded by The Associated Press)—Imperial Headquarters said today that Japanese forces on Java had captured 82,618 prisoners, including 833 Americans.

The announcement said 66,209 of the prisoners were Netherlanders, 10,636 British and 4,890 Australian.

The Japanese said their clean-up on the island had netted them 177 war planes, 1,059 tanks and armored cars and large quantities of artillery, small arms and equipment.

Imperial Headquarters said Japan's losses in the Java battle were 845 killed and 1,764 wounded.

To Liquidate Hongkong Banks

TOKIO (From Japanese broadcasts), April 8 (AP).—Domei, the Japanese news agency, said today that the Japanese administration in occupied Hongkong has decided to intrust the liquidation of the Chase National Bank, National City Bank of New York, Underwriters' Savings Bank for the Far East and American Express Banking Corporation to the Yokohama Specie Bank and Bank of Japan.

Sub's Skipper Describes Attack on 2 Jap Tankers

APR 9 1942

Both Ships Sunk in Enemy's Home Waters, Says Navy Officer.

By WALTER CRAUSEN

PEARL HARBOR, T. H., April 8—(AP)An intrepid young skipper of an American submarine which made a foray in enemy waters told today how his undersea craft sent two Japanese tankers to the bottom.

The first tanker, sailing in its home waters, fired on the submarine with a pistol or rifle to decoy the submarine in, then straddled it with four or six-inch shells, but the tanker was sunk with its three-million gallons of fuel.

Sailed in Enemy Waters

The young skipper, Lieut. Commander Edward Hutchinson, of Philadelphia, calmly recited some of the details of the foray thousands of miles from the submarine's home base in waters controlled by the Japanese and within easy range of patrol planes from enemy bases.

His commanding officer, with a glint in his eye, remarked:

"They (enemy craft) are going down all the time. Our submarines starting out Dec. 7 have been very successful. They have done excellent work. Their bags haven't been as big as some of those operating closer to their bases but considering the time in going and coming, the bags have been very high."

Hutchinson was permitted to tell something of how his ship sent to the bottom the two fast naval tankers, which between them were carrying some six million gallons of fuel to Japanese warcraft.

Stalked Tanker at Night

"It was night," he said when we picked up the first tanker. We stalked it out of gun range. Trailing it astern we saw no guns. He challenged us with lights. We were astern when he fired at us, apparently with a rifle or a pistol Still there was no sign of larger guns. Suddenly he straddled us with two shots from a four or six-inch gun in the center of his ship. We dove.

"We fired two torpedoes at his tail, and another closer. He was wallowing heavily. Then pretty soon he sank. It was a fast tanker several hundred miles from the enemy base.

"The other tanker was of the same size or perhaps a little larger.

Fired at Close Range

"Just after surfacing right after sunset we approached on the surface and then submerged. We fired at close range. The first torpedo hit his stern, which went up in smoke. His propeller stopped.

"Our second torpedo was fired at such close range we had to turn fast and dive to get out of the way. He went down by the stern at a 65 degree angle. We were submerged and could hear the heavy gear rolling down his deck. There were several explosions followed by a big one, and he was completely gone.

"We were picked up by enemy patrol vessels but were never attacked."

He was asked how the submarine's crew fared for food on such a long undersea cruise.

Crew Eats Well

"Well, we had turkey on patrol," the skipper said. "It tasted good. When we submerged in the day time we ate soup, salads and light food, but the men were idle and did not need heavy food.

"The food on submarines generally is excellent. We have all the best canned foods and a tremendous amount of fruit juices. Of course there is a loss of weight by the men on such cruises of from eight to 20 pounds."

His superior commented:

"It is wonderful how these crews out such a long time in close quarters never get on each others nerves. They get along fine with each other They do come back peeked and dehydrated but in fine spirits and do not realize how tired they are until after a day ashore.

"They are wild to get going again and the hardest thing they have to face is when we have to leave some of them ashore for awhile."

24 Navy Crosses Awarded By Nimitz at Hawaii

By the Associated Press.

PEARL HARBOR, T. H., April 8.—Twenty-four Navy Crosses were presented yesterday "for exceptional courage, coolness and devotion to duty" under fire.

The presentation was made by Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander in chief of the United States Pacific Fleet, on the deck of a battleship.

"You officers and men assembled * * * have won the admiration of all your shipmates and the entire Nation," Admiral Nimitz said. "It is particularly appropriate that this ceremony of medal awards for distinguished and heroic service should take place on the deck of this veteran ship."

One of those honored also received a gold star "for successfully attacking * * * an enemy submarine" from the air three days after the Japanese assault on Hawaii. He is Lt. Clarence E. Dickinson, jr., 26, of Wilmington, N. C.

All of those honored went through the December 7 attack on Pearl Harbor. Two were marines.

The Navy has waiting 23 other crosses for men whose work has been deemed outstanding.

Lt. Dickinson was given the Navy Cross for bailing out of his burning plane December 7, making his way to headquarters and taking up another plane to aid in the battle without even telling his superiors of his initial hazardous experience.

Los Angeles Area Is Under Blackou

LOS ANGELES, April 8—(AP)—A blackout was ordered at 9:03 p.m. Pacific War Time tonight (12:0 a.m. Thursday, E.W.T.).

Radios went off the air at 8:3 p.m.

Half an hour after the blackou was ordered the city was dark ex cept for a light here and there i office buildings and one or tw distant glows, the source of whic was not immediately apparent.

Aviation plants in this area wer blacked out, but crews continue work inside.

Radios were off the air at San Diego where a Coast League base ball game was in progress, but the blackout had not been extended there at 9:45 p.m.

The blackout area covered Los Angeles and Orange counties. Communities in other nearby counties, including San Bernardino, Ventura and Santa Barbara, had not received a lights-out order.

Army officers said only that the blackout covered a 50-mile radius around Los Angeles.

New Russian Trap Threatens Germans

APR 9 1942

Reds Reported to Have Cracked Heavily Fortified Defenses on Dnieper in Flanking Move Northeast of Smolensk.

By NOLAN HARGAN

LONDON, April 8 (AP)—The Russian armies of the center were reported tonight to have forced the heavily fortified upper Dnieper River in a major flanking movement designed to cut off and destroy the German Rzhev-Gzhatsk-Vyazma salient before Moscow, the last enemy line of consequence standing east of Smolensk.

Large Nazi Forces Menaced

The crossing, said Soviet advices via Stockholm, was made between the towns of Dorogobuzh and Durovo about 50 miles northeast of Smolensk and at about the point where the Moscow-Smolensk railway bridges the Dnieper.

The German-held corridor running from Smolensk to Vlazma was said already to have been narrowed to 30 miles and Soviet artillery was commanding the main highway and rail routes. Durovo itself apparently remained in Nazi hands, although imminently menaced.

This Russian thrust, which if successful would envelop large numbers of German troops and put the Soviet armies in strongly consolidated position to breast the expected German Spring offensive mounted on Smolensk, was timed to coincide with hthe last period of solid footing aground before the approaching complete thaws.

Violent Action in Crimea

In the far south, meanwhile, action was violent during the day. The Moscow raid announced that a German atack on Soviet positions in the Crimea spearheaded by 100 tanks had been broken and that the Nazis had reeled back with losses of at least 32 tanks and hundreds of dead.

This indicated that in the far south the ground already was firm enough for large-scale movements and some observers saw signs that the Germans had opened a series of attacks intended to establish the invader's control over the Kerch peninsula, the southern approach to the Caucasus.

In the Ukraine, Russian dispatches reported that the inhabitants of Kramatorsk—in the heart of the Donets Basin about midway between Kharkov on the north and Rostov on the south—could hear the guns of the approaching Red Army.

In the Leningrad area, Soviet forces reported that they had cut the highway connecting two German sectors and that in another sector the Nazis still were withstanding furious Russian assaults begun three days ago.

Earlier Russian reports that the Germans were using tanks which had come from their factories as late as February were confirmed in British news dispatches, which made the point, however, that this did not necessarily establish that the Nazis were being compelled to use equipment intended for later operations.

It was possible, these dispatches said, that Hitler was merely taking the opportunity to test new weapons, and the observation was added:

"Everything which the Germans are doing at present has the air of experiment about it."

Soviet Forces Smash Over Upper Dnieper To Cut Off Germans

Crossing of River Called Remarkable Because of Heavy Fortifications

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 8.—Soviet forces have smashed across the upper Dnieper River in a furious final drive to pinch off the Vyasma-Ghatsk-Rzhev bulge toward Moscow, Soviet dispatches relayed by Stockholm said today.

This crossing, between Dorogobuzh and Durovo, was a striking achievement, these dispatches said, since the Germans had established vast fortifications along the river.

The Red Army appeared intent on utilizing the brief period remaining before the spring thaw to crush Nazi armies within the central front pocket and prepare to meet later German offensives from the direction of Smolensk which is 50 miles west of the point where the Dnieper was reported crossed.

The German corridor of escape from Vyasma to Smolensk now has been narrowed to 30 miles with Soviet guns raking the main highway and rail routes, Stockholm informants said. In addition, the Russians were reported threatening Durovo, vital rail junction about midway between Smolensk and Vyasma, from its southern and southwestern suburbs.

Reds Down 51 Planes, Sink 2 Nazi Transports

MOSCOW, April 8 (AP)—The Soviet command announced late tonight that 51 additional Nazi planes had been shot down in yesterday's operations and that the northern Red fleet had sunk two enemy transports in the Barents Sea, one of 5,500 tons and the other of 10,500 tons.

Yesterday's Russian plane losses were put at 14. The new figure given for German aircraft destroyed brought their losses to 545 for a 10-day period.

Russians Destroy 139 Nazi Troop Planes

MOSCOW, Thursday, April 9 (AP)—A disptach from the northwestern front today to the army newspaper Red Star quoted a captured German lieutenant as saying 139 German troop-carrying aircraft were destroyed in the three-day period of April 3-5—123 of them on the ground.

The quoted German prisoner was identified as Oberlieutenant Erich Fros.

"Landing grounds in the neighborhood of Lake Ilmen became a cemetery for German Junkers 52s," he said, according to the Red Star correspondent. Fros was said to have witnessed several devastating raids carried out by the Soviet air force.

Other prisoners taken in the same area were quoted as saying the heavy aircraft had been transferred from France and North Africa in efforts to carry provisions to the encircled German 16th army around Staraya Russa.

Russians Beat Back Nazis Attacking With 100 Tanks

MOSCOW, April 8 (AP).—The Germans attacked Soviet positions in the Crimea with 100 tanks today, but were trapped by furious Russian artillery fire and eventually turned back, the Moscow radio announced.

After several hours of vain attempts to break through the barrage, the German tanks still in operation retreated, leaving 32 machines and hundreds of dead on the battlefield, the radio said.

(It was not announced whether the action was in the Sevastopol (western) or Kerch (eastern) areas of the Crimea, where the Russians maintain their footholds.)

The Soviet Information Bureau's mid-day communique repeated its familiar "no significant changes occurred at the front" but told of past operations in which 1,675 Germans were killed or wounded in various sectors of the long battlefront.

In one day's fighting alone to the northwest of Moscow, it said, the enemy lost 1,125 soldiers and officers in dead and wounded; 300 were killed in a day's fighting on a sector of the Kalinin front, also northwest of Moscow, and 250 were killed on the southwestern front in the recapture of "a strongly fortified populated place."

Soviet troops routed the Germans from an important village on the southwestern (Orel-Taganrog) front yesterday despite a hurricane of machine-gun fire and captured seven Nazi tanks, the Russians said.

The Soviet Information Bureau emphasized the quickening aerial warfare with a report 79 German planes were destroyed Monday against 19 Russian aircraft lost, increasing its total for nine days to 494 German machines and 103 Russian.

In addition the Red Air Force was said to have demolished or damaged a number of German tanks and armored cars and 100 other motor vehicles, smashed a railway train and disrupted two German infantry companies.

Details of the fighting for the southwestern front villages were announced by the Moscow radio and its report that both Russian and German tanks were in operation indicated a drying or re-freezing of the ground in that locality. The village was not identified.

"The Germans made every effort to hold this place and avert encirclement," the Moscow announcer said.

"They launched fierce counter-attacks in which a large number of tanks were thrown into action.

"The Soviet troops did not yield. They met the German onslaught by a stiff counterblow, wrested the initiative from the Germans and sent their own tanks forward.

"The Germans retreated in disorder."

Melting of ice has opened the lower Volga river again as a Russian supply line. The season's first group of tankers had left the Caspian Sea port of Baku with fuel and lubricating oil for Astrakhan, at the Volga's mouth.

Voronezh Plane Engine Works Raided, Nazis Say

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 8 (AP).—German bombers, striking 150 miles beyond the Russian battlefront, raided an airplane engine works at Voronezh Monday night, causing heavy destruction, the German radio reported today.

The broadcast said the attack was made despite intense anti-aircraft defense at the town half way between Moscow and Rostov.

Several buildings were reported hit with heavy caliber explosives at the plant which was said to have been damaged in previous raids.

Another heavy raid was said to have been carried out against an ammunition plant—its location undisclosed—where direct hits were said to have touched off great explosions and caused large fires.

The high command made no mention of the air attacks behind the Rusisan lines.

It said only that "German offensive operations successfully continued" and that "at several points the enemy repeated his ineffective attacks."

Russia Is First on U. S. Aid List, Says Standley

KUIBYSHEV, U. S. S. R., April 8 (AP)—Admiral William H. Standley, new U. S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, told a press conference today that the United States is determined to give Russia aid second only to supplying the American fleet.

By the end of April, he said, the United States should be up to schedule on its Russian aid program.

The ambassador, who arrived here only yesterday in a big American warplane, was asked if America's all-out aid to Russia might not lessen her aid for Britain.

"The best way we can give Britain aid is to keep Russians killing Germans," he replied.

Standley will go to Moscow shortly to present his credentials.

He said he could see the change in the Russian people since he was here last autumn attending Allied supply conferences.

"I notice it in the people's faces," he said. "The last time I was here the Germans were making for Moscow. The Russians turned them back. They show confidence in their faces. I am talking about the people I have seen in Russian cities."

Russia Denies Her Planes Bombed Swedish Towns

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, April 8.—The Soviet government has rejected a Swedish protest against the bombing of Haparanda last Thursday and informed the Swedish government that Russian planes had nothing to do with any attack on the town near the Swedish-Finnish frontier, Tass reported today.

The news agency said that in reply to a note from Vilhelm Assersson, the Swedish Minister, Vice Foreign Commissar Andrei J. Vishinsky said "not a single Soviet plane has flown over the town of Haparanda or dropped bombs or handbills on Swedish territory."

The Russian reply said that Russian markings on bomb fragments and handbills were a sample of "the methods of provocation" tried repeatedly by the Germans.

Jap Envoys To Meet

BUCHAREST, April 8 (AP)—The Associated Press records a German broadcast saying that Lieut. Gen. Hiroshi Oshima, Japanese Ambassador to Germany, arrived in Bucharest today en route to Sofia, Bulgaria, for talks with Japan's Ambassador to Turkey.

London, Thursday, April 9 (AP)—The Moscow radio in a broadcast heard here said today that Hungary had protested to Germany and Italy because of the formation of a Rumanian-Croatian-Slovakian military union whose aim was to prevent further Hungarian territorial encroachment and regain land already lost to that country.

AXIS TROOPS OPEN ATTACK IN LIBYA

APR 9 1942

Three Enemy Columns Move Ahead in Desert Testing British Defenses.

LONDON, April 8.—(AP) Axis columns in north Africa have sprung into sudden activity in the front area west of Tobruk which may be the forerunner for the expected big Axis drive for control of the eastern Mediterranean, the Suez gate and the southern road to Russia.

The British issued a special communique in Cairo tonight announcing the action, noting that as yet here had been only "minor engagements with our light forces" by "two or three" enemy columns between the Tmimi-Mechili track and the British position south of Ain El Gazala, roughly 40 miles west of Tobruk.

No Heavy Fighting

Although no heavy fighting had yet been reported in two days of this action, issuance of the special communique underscored the potential significance of the Axis move.

"The enemy movements are being closely watched," the communique concluded.

The Allies have been keenly on the alert for the first signs of an Axis spring campaign to use the Libyan desert battleground as the first testing area for the troop, tank and bomber strength Hitler has been gathering during the winter.

Malta, Alexandria Raided

The first thunder of the new storm was heard at Malta and Alexandria, where Axis bombers blasted at the key bastions of Britain's naval hold on the middle and eastern Mediterranean in the most furious assaults either the island or the big Egyptian port have withstood.

Its menace was felt in the desert flatlands 100 miles southwest of Tobruk where the spearheads of three Axis columns numbering perhaps 125,000 picked desert troops jabbed at British advanced positions in search of a soft spot through which to pour a shock force of 100 tanks.

The first hint of a large-scale renewal of the Libyan campaign since late in January, when the Germans recaptured Bengasi and pushed the British back 200 miles, came from a British military source who said "there is some increased activity in Libya which we may hear more about."

The new challenge came at an hour when Gen. Sir Claude Auchinleck's defense forces have been weakened by the dispatch of Australian veterans of the north African fight back to defend their homeland under General Douglas MacArthur.

By contrast, German Marshal Erwin Rommel is believed to have been strengthened to two German armored divisions, an Italian armored division and six infantry divisions supported by thirty squadrons of warplanes.

Alexandria Damage Slight

Besides the forces already in Africa, Auchinleck's long shore flank is exposed to the danger of thousands of additional German and Italian troops reported along the Axis-held northeastern shore of the Mediterranean, with small ships and invasion barges by the hundreds massed and ready.

An Alexandria communique said last night's Axis raid there caused only slight damage. This attack and one the night before in which fifty-two persons were killed followed a pamphlet raid a week ago.

The pamphlets, printed in Arabic, described the British as Egypt's enemies and the Italians as her friends; declared that Britain had lost control of the Mediterranean and that the united nations had been ejected from control of the western Pacific.

Stories of Alexandria and Malta raids on Page 3.

By Drew Middleton

Associated Press Correspondent

London, April 8—Axis forces numbering 125,000 desert-wise troops were reported in motion across the Libyan desert today against British lines in what may be the opening of a spring drive to conquer Egypt and smash through Suez toward Russia's southern flank.

The action—not yet told in detail—came as the German air force lashed with rising fury at Malta and Alexandria with fire and explosives.

Worst Raids Of War

The tiny island fortress and Egypt's chief port and base of the British Mediterranean fleet—keys to Britain's dominance of the Mediterranean—each reported the worst raids of the war as Axis bombers set the stage for the first great land campaign of 1942.

At present, German Marshal Erwin Rommel commands two German armored divisions, one Italian armored division and six infantry divisions in the desert. By contrast, the British have been weakened by the dispatch of Australian veterans from North Africa to fight under General Douglas MacArthur in defense of their homeland.

30 Aircraft Squadrons

Thirty squadrons of all types of aircraft are believed by the informed quarters here to provide air support for the Axis offensive.

While the Axis claimed initial gains in the Libyan theater 100 miles southwest of Tobruk, the British command at Cairo said only that "our fighting patrols again were active in the Libyan desert yesterday."

100 Tanks Lead Way

But a military informant in London added cautiously: "There is some increased activity in Libya which we may hear more about."

The vanguard of the Axis army in the desert is three columns, paced by about one hundred tanks, British informants said.

This is the first hint of large-scale action since the Germans recaptured Bengasi late in January, and forced the British back more than 200 miles to a line subsequently stabilized along a front running from El Gazala, on the coast forty miles west of Tobruk, to Bir Hachiem, some fifty miles inland.

RAF headquarters at Cairo announced that British bombers and fighters had blasted Axis concentrations deep behind the front yesterday in Cirenaica. At Alexandria, RAF defenders downed two Axis raiders last night.

If the desert action is the beginning of a grand Axis offensive, it is expected here that Axis invasion troops assembled in Crete, Greece and the Dodecanese Islands may be used for flank attacks on Alexandria and Cairo by sea and air.

Both the German and Italian communiques said that British advanced forces had been pushed back in the new surge of desert fighting. Neither communique went into details. The Germans identified the scene of the action only as "southwest of El-Mechilli."

Cairo Confirms Axis Drive.

Cairo, Egypt, April 8 (A. P.).—In the first official British announcement of the new Axis drive in North Africa, a special communique tonight said two or three enemy columns have begun operations in the Libyan desert.

"During the last two days the enemy has shown increased activity in the forward area," the special announcement said.

German Marshal Erwin Rommel's forces were reported operating between Tmimi and Mechili and the British position south of Ain el Gazala, which is some forty miles west of Tobruk. There have been light preliminary engagements, the communique said, but the enemy had not yet reached British outposts.

Berlin Claims Success.

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), April 8 (A. P.).—British forces in Libya have been thrown back southeast of El Mechili, where the desert front had been stabilized for weeks, the German High Command said today.

Say Libya British Fall Back

ROME (from Italian broadcasts), April 8 (AP).—The Italian high command said today increased Axis pressure in Libya had forced the British "to give up several advance positions." The communique gave no details and did not identify any of the advance positions or indicate the extent of the British withdrawal.

Heavy-caliber bombs were dropped on the harbor area of Alexandria by Axis air formations yesterday and caused extensive damage on military and industrial objectives, it was said.

"Heavy bombing actions again were directed against Malta," the high command said. "German air formations have bombed workshops and depots on the island. With direct hits several anti-aircraft positions were silenced and one destroyer was damaged."

The Italians said ten Arabs were killed or wounded in a British air attack on Bengasi, Libya and one British plane was shot down in an attack on Derna.

9 GERMAN PLANES DOWNED IN HEAVY ATTACK ON MALTA

APR 9 1942

Nazis Say Guns Destroyed But Batteries Knock Down 7 Warplanes.

VALLETTA, Malta, April 8—(AP) Nine German planes were destroyed during relatively heavy Axis assaults on Malta today as the enemy continued a prolonged intensified attack now several weeks old.

Tonight's communique reported that anti-aircraft fire brought down seven planes, and the R.A.F. shot down two in today's raids, which followed an attack yesterday listed as the heaviest of the year.

"The enemy continued his policy of using mass formations of bombers at intervals of three hours for his attack on Malta," the communique said "The main objectives were the harbor and airdromes Bombs and incendiaries were dropped" and by evening, the German reports stated, "Valletta presented a spectacle of utter destruction."

"Everywhere in the harbor area fires were burning," it was said.

"Anti-aircraft gun emplacements which were attacked in direct diving attack did not fire any more, and as a result the anti-raid defense was rather weak."

2,000th Raid On Malta

APR 9 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Valletta, Malta, April 8—Massed German bombers pounding on 'round-the-clock relays gave this bomb-shaken British island stronghold its heaviest air attack of the war yesterday and touched off the 2,000th air raid alarm in Malta since Italy entered the conflict.

Four German planes were reported destroyed—two Junkers dive bombers and two escorting Messerschmitt fighters. Another Junkers dive bomber was said to have been probably destroyed and two planes were damaged in the hours of intense raiding.

Preliminary reports indicated the casualties were "not heavy considering the scale of the bombing," an official said.

Bombers Penetrate Barrage

The Germans struck from many directions to confuse the alert ground crews and the chain of Nazi planes penetrated intense high and low-level anti-aircraft barrages to unload bombs on airdromes and the harbor.

Even the hardy residents of Malta, who are confident that their patron, Saint Paul, still protects the island on which he reputedly was shipwrecked, noted the unprecedented ferocity of the raid as bomb explosions shook buildings and echoed through the centuries-old rock caves used as shelters.

There was no indication of the number of planes but observers expressed belief that some Nazi crews are making three or four daily trips across Malta channel. The British island is only sixty miles south of air fields based on Sicily.

Bombing Almost Continuous

The first alarm of the war here sounded shortly before dawn June 11, 1940, a few hours after Italy's declarations of war the day before took effect.

The latest series of attacks began last December 4. Malta since has had only one raidless day and night in succession and only nine raidless nights. The one thousandth alarm since last December 2 alone also sounded yesterday.

The rock shelters, sufficient to care for the bulk of the 273,000 population on the 120 square-mile island, help the Maltese stand up to the raids but the attacks have exacted their tolls. The official death list for March showed 230 killed, the heaviest monthly death total yet recorded here.

Valletta in Flames Nazis Say

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 8—(AP) The German bombing of Malta Tuesday was the greatest of the war, Berlin military quarters said tonight, and it left the principal city of Valletta "a spectacle of utter destruction," its docks and supply depots aflame, its anti-aircraft guns silenced.

(The British acknowledged that the raid was the heaviest of the year and said extensive civilian damage was caused. Preliminary reports indicated that casualties were "not heavy considering the scale of the bombing.")

The attack lasted 10 hours, the Germans attacking incessantly the naval base at Valletta and air bases on the island's interior.

Direct hits with one-ton bombs were scored on munitions dumps and arsenals. The living quarters of shipyard workers "were also destroyed by sticks of bombs and set afire," German reports said.

"A considerable portion of the Valletta oil stores went up in smoke," the reports continued, a cruiser in dock received a direct hit from a half-ton bomb and barracks were hit.

Egypt Mourns Heavy Toll At Port

APR 9 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Alexandria, Egypt, April 8—This Mediterranean naval port was bombed again early today after its worst air attack of the year yesterday when fifty-two persons were killed and eighty injured.

The follow-up assault was light, however, the Government said, with only a few bombs dropped, no casualties and only insignificant damage.

The raiders struck by moonlight and picked out their targets methodically by dropping flares then dive bombing.

Egypt's Day Of Mourning

As the Government acted quickly to care for the victims of the earlier bombing, Premier Mustapha Nahas Pasha broadcast to Alexandrians that "this is a day of national mourning for the whole country."

The public works minister visited the wounded at a hospital, giving each two Egyptian pounds (about $8). An estimation committee received orders to estimate property losses quickly so the Government could pay in full from credits of enemy property seized in Egypt.

RAF in Wide Sweep Over French Coast

LONDON, April 8 (AP)— Squadrons of British fighter planes spread their wings in a wide sweep over the Calais and Boulogne areas of the German-occupied French coast today.

Few German fighters were seen. One British plane which left its main formation was missing after the flights.

The first squadrons flew over in the early morning sunlight.

6 Norwegian Ships Sunk In Break, Nazis Claim

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 8.—Six out of 10 Norwegian vessels which attempted to break out of the Swedish port of Goteborg last week were sunk by German naval and air forces and two others fled back to Swedish territorial waters, official German quarters announced today.

(This report indicated that two ships eluded the German blockade. The Vichy radio said Saturday that two vessels had reached Britain and a terse British announcement Sunday said "certain ships have arrived safely in this country," but did not give the number.)

The Germans' announcement broke their silence on the break by the Norwegian vessels on March 31.

It said light German naval forces intercepted the ships, which were reported under command of British captains.

Five ships aggregating 26,000 tons were sunk by German outpost boats, the announcement said, while one 6,000-ton ship was sunk by the German air force.

American Army Chief, Hopkins Fly to London

Surprise Trip Spurs Talk of Allied Offensive —General Marshall Says Purpose of AEF Is to 'Expand.'

By William Humphreys

LONDON, April 8 (AP)—Gen. George C. Marshall, U. S. Army Chief of Staff, and Harry Hopkins, chairman of munitions assignments and close aide of President Roosevelt, arrived in London today on a surprise mission by air plane and almost immediately conferred with Prime Minister Churchill.

Hint of Offensive Seen

Tonight Gen. Marshall told newspapermen that the purpose of the American forces in Europe was to "expand"; Hopkins said that President Roosevelt had entrusted him with some confidential matters on which to confer with Churchill.

General Marshall's remarks about expanding the American forces were in reply to a question implying that the U. S. forces might become cramped in the British Isles.

"Well, we want to expand over here," he replied, and the correspondents at his press conference roared with laughter.

General Marshall's use of the word "here" was interrupted by some sources as meaning Europe.

Although the Americans arrived only this morning, by dinner time they both had already managed to "spend a few hours with the Prime Minister," Hopkins said.

British sources assumed their conferences in the main would deal with United Nations' grand strategy in the 1942 campaign, and some persons thought the trip might be of "critical importance."

To Gen. Marshall's remark that American troops here are to expand, Hopkins nodded assent and added that production alone was not going to win the war, but that "soldiers under General Marshall and sailors under Admiral King" would be the deciding factor.

Might Visit Cairo

Gen. Marshall said he was here "to see the development of the British forces here in the British Isles and to talk things over in general with the British chief of staff."

He said he was not sure whether he would go directly back to Washington, and he said he certainly would visit American troops in northern Ireland. A visit to Cairo, he added, was a "suggestion."

The Marshall-Hopkins arrival followed closely upon reports in London papers that the American and British forces eventually would strike together against Germany through France and that the bulk of the American Army was being trained for a mass invasion of the continent.

Thousands of American troops already are undergoing intensive training in Ireland.

It was recalled also that Marshall in a letter to the U. S. Senate March 2 said: "The time has now come when we must proceed with the business of carrying the war to the enemy."

Accompanying Marshall and Hopkins, who were reported to have arrived in Britain by bomber, were Col. Howard A. Craig of the U. S. Army Air Corps, Lieut. Col. A. C. Wedemeyer of the general staff, and Lieut. Com. J. R. Fulton of the U. S. Navy.

May Discuss Naval Strategy

High strategy talks among the military men must include Hopkins, it was said. One of President Roosevelt's closest advisers and chief of the Lend-Lease program, he is expected to deal with the important matter of supplies for the United Nations' armies.

Some observers also suggested that naval strategy might hold a high place on the conference schedules. Admiral Harold R. Stark is due here soon to replace Vice-Admiral Robert Lee Ghormley as chief of U. S. naval operations in European waters.

With the forces of the United Nations generally still on the defensive, an editorial in Lord Beaverbrook's Evening Standard attracted attention today.

It said a "huge fear" of the "eastern graveyard" prevailed "over every company of German soldiers in every corner of the continent," and demanded:

"When ever again shall such a fear possess the soul of the German soldier? How will the gods reward us if we fail to exploit the mighty labor of our ally (Russia) in these nine months of ceaseless fighting?

"There are questions x x x which challenge the audacity of this nation as it never has been challenged ebfore."

HARRY HOPKINS AND MARSHALL ARE IN LONDON

Army Chief Says Purpose of U. S. Forces in Europe Is to 'Expand.'

CONFERS WITH CHURCHILL

Hopkins States He Was Intrusted by Roosevelt With Mission to Prime Minister.

London, April 8 (A. P.).—The purpose of United States forces in Europe is to "expand," Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, declared tonight a few hours after his arrival here in a bomber.

Harry Hopkins, who came to London with Gen. Marshall, seconded the General's words, saying that production alone is not going to win the war but that soldiers under Gen. Marshall and sailors under Admiral King would be the deciding factor. Admiral Ernest J. King, to whom Mr. Hopkins referred, is chief of all American naval operations.

Gen. Marshall and Mr. Hopkins arrived in London only this morning, but already have managed to "spend a few hours" with Prime Minister Churchill, Mr. Hopkins said.

To Visit North Ireland.

Discussing his mission, Mr. Hopkins added that President Roosevelt had intrusted him with some confidential matters on which to confer with Churchill. Mr. Hopkins is chairman of the British-American munitions assignment boards.

Gen. Marshall said that he had been invited to London three or four times before, but that the best opportunity came "this particular week and so I'm here." His mission, he said, was "to see the development of the British forces here in the British Isles and to talk things over in general with the British chief of staff."

Replying to a question, the General said that he did not know whether he would return directly to Washington, but that he would certainly visit American troops in northern Ireland.

Asked if he would go to Cairo, Gen. Marshall said: "That's a suggestion."

Says U. S. Mobilizes Quickly.

To British newspaper men the Chief of Staff declared that mobilization of man power in the United States is moving apace and that training there was proceeding more rapidly than it could in the British Isles because of the large unpopulated areas available.

"Don't you think that will make you feel cramped over here?" He was asked.

"Well, we want to expand over here," he said.

Mr. Hopkins said:

"I came over to see Oliver Lyttelton (Minister of State in Charge of Production) and to relate his new ministerial duties with some new department in Washington. I also came over to discuss with the Prime Minister some matters with which President Roosevelt has intrusted me."

Emphasizing that when he was here last he had been solely concerned with production matters, he said that since then things have changed. He then made the statement that the armed forces of the United States were in the war to win it.

After indicating that the armored strength of the United States now was as important as its role as the "arsenal of democracy," Mr. Hopkins said that "you may be sure that our country is not going to be short of guns."

Reports Soviet Aid Stepped Up.

There has been an appreciable increase in production since December 7, he said, and supplies to Russia are moving "very rapidly." He added that "we are sending munitions to every part of the world where Japs and Germans can be killed."

Asked whether he was satisfied with arrangements in Australia, Gen. Marshall replied: "We are never satisfied, but we are busy. I think things are being organized there in excellent shape."

Mr. Hopkins, who has passed through many jobs and titles in his long and close association with President Roosevelt, was asked his present title, but he had to confess, "I forget." Reminded that he is chairman of the Munitions Assignment Board, he laughed and said, "Yes, that's it."

The last time he was in London Mr. Hopkins forgot his hat and went home with Mr. Churchill's.

Hopkins and Three Officers Also on Trip by Bomber

APR 9 1942

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 8.—The United States Army's Chief of Staff, Gen. George C. Marshall, and Harry Hopkins, chairman of the British-American Munitions Assignments Boards, arrived in London today for talks with Britain's leaders, presumably on the grand strategy of the United Nations' 1942 campaigns.

Gen. Marshall's arrival was reminiscent of that of Gen. John J. Pershing, who reached London June 8, 1917, two months after the United States entered the First World War.

Accompanying the Army chief of staff and Mr. Hopkins were Col. Howard A. Craig of the Air Corps, Lt. Col. A. C. Wedemeyer of the general staff and Lt. Comdr. J. R. Fulton of the United States Navy.

It was announced that they would be in London for a "short stay."

(Declining to elaborate on the purpose of the American mission, White House Secretary Stephen T. Early this morning described the Hopkins-Marshall trip as "a perfectly normal wartime mission." The War Department likewise withheld comment.)

Trip Made in Bomber.

It was understood that the party made the trip to Britain by bomber.

The arrival of Gen. Marshall comes on the heels of reports circulated in London that the bulk of the American Army is training for a mass invasion of the continent.

These reports, published in London newpapers only yesterday, said the Americons and British eventually would strike together at the heart of industrial Germany through France.

Thousands of Americans already are training in Northern Ireland.

London observers, on hearing the news that the chief of staff of the United States Army was here, predicted that high strategy talks would be on his agenda.

It was assumed Mr. Hopkins would take part in these as one of President Roosevelt's closest advisers. In his official capacity, Mr. Hopkins would have the last word in military talks involving supplies.

First Meeting With Brooke.

This will be the first meeting between Gen. Marshall and Britain's new chief of staff, Gen. Sir Alan Brooke.

An announcement said Mr. Hopkins and Gen. Marshall would hold a press conference at 7:15 a.m. (1:15 p.m., Eastern War Time).

The possibility that naval strategy may figure high in the London discussions was noted by some observers.

Admiral Harold R. Stark is due here soon to replace Vice Admiral Robert Lee Ghormley as chief of United States naval operations in European waters.

Normal Mission, Says Early.

Washington, April 8 (A. P.).—The White House said today that Gen. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, and Harry L. Hopkins, who has several war jobs including that of chairman of the Munitions Assignment Board, had gone to London on a normal wartime mission. Stephen Early, the President's press secretary, made that single explanation and would not elaborate.

The War Department likewise withheld comment for the present.

Kuibyshev, Russia, April 8 (AP)—The English-language Moscow News predicted a great offensive by the United States in an article today, which praised Americans as "people who received statehood and won democratic rights not by sitting down, but by standing up and fighting."

The newspaper also lauded the British for their recent heavy bombings of occupied France and Germany, saying that "What Goebbels and his ilk fail to realize is that the more reverses a Britisher suffers, the tougher he gets, as the Fascists will learn to their sorrow."

CHURCH OPPOSES NAZIS IN NORWAY

APR 9 1942

Quisling Assails 'Treasonable' Actions of Bishops, Warns of Retaliation.

LONDON, April 8.—(AP) The quiet but unyielding resistance of Norwegian churchmen to the Nazi conquerors drew today from Vidkun Quisling, the traitor who heads the German government of his homeland, the angry declaration that his goals were "endangered by treasonable machinations of Norwegian bishops such as Bishop Fylind Berggrav of Oslo."

Quisling's statement, which in the same breath disclaimed any desire to interfere in religious matters, was broadcast by the German radio and distributed by the Norwegian Telegraph bureau via Stockholm.

Laymen to Serve

A Stockholm dispatch to the Vichy news agency said Quisling had empowered laymen to perform the functions of clergymen who had resigned in protest against the puppet government's policies.

The Norwegian agency quoted Quisling as saying of the churchmen: "Their attitude is compelling us to annihilate them together with those who have joined them."

The German radio quoted him as saying his troubles were due to "provocative trespassing by the wirepuller, Bishop Berggrav, and all who collaborate with such wirepullers must be prepared to fall with them."

Quisling contended he did not intend to establish a new religion or interfere in religious matters, but "the servants of the church must stay within the boundaries of their tasks and not misuse the church and Christians for party political purposes."

Hour of Attack Near

(The British Broadcasting corporation seized immediately upon Quisling's outburst, telling Norwegians "now the hour of attack is approaching," and calling on them to stand firmly beside the church. The BBC, heard in New York by NBC, said 1,100 Norwegian pastors and all bishops had resigned in protest against the Quisling-Nazi policies and that many doctors and lawyers were following the lead of the clergy, even though prosecutions were threatened.)

Bishop Berggrav, singled out by Quisling, has been a leader throughout the church's opposition to the Nazis.

Progressive Democrat

A German broadcast from Oslo eight days after the German invasion two years ago, purporting to come from Berggrav, advised farmers not to fight the Germans and said German soldiers were acting chivalrously toward the Norwegians.

APR 9 1942

Whether this actually was Berggrav never has been determined but he always had been known as a Progressive Democrat, and last December called on the National Lutheran Church to avoid any participation in Quisling politics.

He also rejected Quisling efforts to have his church declare a "holy war" against Russia, and canceled collective prayer after Quisling directed that the prayers include professions of obedience to the chief of state.

On March 2 the story leaked out that Berggrav and five other Norwegian Bishops had resigned in protest against efforts to Nazify the education of children and police restrictions on church attendance.

Quisling contended Berggrav had been dismissed rather than resigning. The Bishop's present whereabouts and status are not known, but the puppet Premier's statement bears evidence to the effect of his unarmed but spirited resistance to the Nazi new order.

the Vichy news agency, said Quisling had issued a decree enabling laymen to perform the duties of the clergymen, who resigned because of differences with the puppet government over youth control and other matters.

Quisling, reputedly enraged by the resignations, was quoted by the Norwegian telegraph agency as saying of the clergymen: 'Their attitude is compelling us to annihilate them together with those who have joined them."

Norse Clergy 'Traitors'

LONDON, April 8.—A special parliamentary committee today recommended sterner compulsion to force individuals into jobs in which they would be most useful in Britain's wartime industry.

These suggestions came from the select Committee on National Expenditure:

3. Additional standardization of design and elimination of unnecessary grades in manufacturing.

New York Stowaway Gets to Britain for It.

London, April 8 (A. P.).—A 21-year-old American from New York, charged with entering England illegally, told a magistrate today that he stowed away on a tramp steamship to try his luck with the R. A. F. after being turned down by the United States air force.

He identified himself as Russel King Haight of New York city.

He said that he first went to Canada, but became impatient with long waiting lists and so stowed away on a steamer at Halifax. Once here, his efforts to join the R. A. F. were hampered by the fact that he was an alien. Mr. Haight said that if he was unable to become a flyer he would try to join the United States forces in Britain. The magistrate released him on bail for a talk with the United States Consul.

Mr. Haight was born at Mount Kisco, N. Y., and his last address was 930 West End avenue, New York.

De Bournat arrived in Vichy yesterday after being held two months aboard a boat at the islands, which lie off Newfoundland.

"According to what the de Gaullists say, 98 per cent of the population rallied to their side," he told the press. "I assert those figures to be devoid of any foundation. There were really 35 per cent who abstained and more than half of the rest remained loyal to Marshal Pétain's Government."

A battle-training school to give training in guerrilla and commando warfare is being established by the National Defense Department, he said.

The men in the guerrilla groups probably will be called "militia rangers." They will not wear uniforms but may be issued arm bands. They will largely use their own firearms and will not draw pay.

Ottowa Considers Raising Status of Legation at Washington.

OTTAWA, April 8—(AP) Reports were current here today that the Canadian legation in Washington might be raised soon to the status of an embassy under an ambassador who would also be a member of the Ottawa cabinet.

Officials declined to comment but it is known that high government circles have considered such a step, and the name of Defense Minister J. L. Ralston has been mentioned for such a post.

If such a change were made, presumably it would involve the retirement of Leighton McCarthy, Canadian minister to the United States, to make way for either Ralston or another present cabinet member.

The United States also probably would raise its ministry here that of an embassy, with J. Pierrepont Moffatt becoming the first U. S. ambassador to Ottawa.

The growing importance of Canada's position in the war, and also that of Washington as the seat of vital war councils, are the reasons cited for such a change.

RIO DE JANEIRO, April 8.—(AP) President Getulio Vargas signed a decree tonight authorizing War Minister Eurico Dutra to drastically increase the effective army of Brazil with trained reserves.

In the decree the president said the army strength "does not correspond to the new heavy duty of the army in the maintenance of public order and national defense."

The army was reported to total less than 100,000 but with the addition of trained reserves it eventually might number as high as 1,200,000.

At Least 17 Reported Killed in Savage Shelling Of One Vessel.

NOFOLK, Va., April 8 — (AP)—A West Point plebe who went to sea for his health and a free-lance writer seeking story material were among 31 survivors of two American merchantmen shelled and torpedoed by Axis submarines off the Atlantic coast last week.

The Navy announced today the attack on the two vessels with the probable loss of 36 lives. Seventeen crewmen were known dead and 10 or 11 missing in a shellfire attack that sank a small freighter the night of April 2. Three survivors from the ship were landed here by a rescue vessel.

Ships Set Ablaze

Two torpedoes from an enemy raider turned a medium-sized merchant ship into a flaming inferno in the second attack two nights later and left nine of the ship's crew missing, members of the 28 survivors reported on their arrival at Norfolk aboard a rescue vessel the next day.

Monor Collins Mabry, 19, United States Military Academy plebe from Ruston, La., had signed as captain's messman aboard the victim of the second attack, thinking that a sea voyage would improve his physical condition. Mabry, on furlough from the academy because of eye trouble, saved his certificate of appointment to West Point.

Merlin Johnson, 26-year-old writer of Minneapolis, who joined the crew as an ordinary seaman, talked less of the torpedoing than of an experience he recounted when he was imprisoned in England on suspicion of espionage. Johnson said that among his prison mates were Sir Oswald Moseley and other British Fascists.

Sailors Killed By Shelling

Ordinary Seamen Ernest Cartwrigt, 29, of Norfolk, who was wounded in the arm by a shell fragment told newsmen he believed the crewmen lost in the first attack were killed by the savage shelling and estimated that the submarine fired between 50 and 100 shells at a range of about 600 yards.

Cartwright and two shipmates, Sabino Gomez, fireman, and Jack Burros, mess boy, both of Providence, R. I., were picked up by a rescue ship after being adrift in a lifeboat four hours, and landed at Chincoteague early Friday.

Boatswain Fernando Beato of Brooklyn, N. Y., said the prey of the second raider attack "caught fire right off the reet and the flames spread from amidship all the way back to the stern," immediately after the torpedoes struck.

John Austrauski, oiler, of Wilkes-Barre, Penna., remained aboard the flaming ship for 45 minutes after he found a lifeboat overcrowded and failed in his effort to launch another alone. He succeeded in launching a raft into clear water and boarded it, only to see it drift "right into the flaming oil." When the raft started burning, he escaped by diving through the flames and swimming about 50 feet under water.

BASE FOR BLIMPS CHOSEN IN FLORIDA

Second Site Selected in California, Navy Announces.

APR 9 1942

WASHINGTON, April 8.—(AP) The Navy announced today that a new site for a lighter than air craft base had been selected at a point near Perrine, Fla., and that a similar base on the west coast would be located south of Santa Ana, Calif.

Selection of these two new sites, the Navy said, indicates an expansion of the Navy's anti-submarine blimp patrols.

The base near Perrine, Fla., is being built by the Ivy H. Smith company, the S. S. Jacobs company, the Langston Construction company, and the Hubbard Construction company of Jacksonville, Fla. Senator Andrews (D., Fla.) said the construction would cost $3,173,000.

The new California base will be constructed by the James I. Barnes Construction company, Santa Monica, Calif., with work scheduled to begin immediately.

East coast blimp bases already in operation are at Lakehurst, N. J., South Weymouth, Mass., and Elizabeth City, N. C. The west coast base is located at Moffett field, Sunnyvale, Calif., a field which the Navy is scheduled to take over from the Army officially on April 16.

Sailor Who Ripped Down Nazi Flag in 1941 Cited

U. S. Extends to Cuba $25,000,000 Credit

WASHINGTON, April 8 (AP).—Climaxing several months of negotiations, a contract was signed here today extending a $25,000,000 Export Import Bank credit to Cuba for public works construction and diversification of agriculture.

Warren Lee Pierson, president of the bank, signed on behalf of the United States, while Dr. Aurelio F. Concheso, Cuban Ambassador; Oscar Garcia Montes, Cuban Minister of Finance, and Amadeo Lopez Castro, Secretary of the Presidency, signed for the island republic.

Spaeth to Represent U. S.

WASHINGTON, April 8 (AP)—Carl Spaeth, Assistant Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs and a member of the United States delegation to the Rio de Janeiro Conference of Foreign Ministers, will represetn this country on the Emergency Advisory Committee for Political Defense, to meet soon in Montevideo, it was learned today. The committee, to coordinate control of subversive activities, was authorized by the Rio conference and will comprise representatives of eight countries—Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, the United States, Uruguay, Venezuela and Mexico.

STANDARD PATENTS LISTED IN REGISTER

Thousands of Processes Available to Industry Without Cost During War.

WASHINGTON, April 8. — (AP) The Justice department announced today that it was compiling a register of the thousands of patents made available to the public through the consent decree which closed the anti-trust case against the Standard Oil company (New Jersey) and six subsidiaries.

Under the decree, all patents of I. F. Farbin industries controlled by Standard, including those for manufacture of synthetic rubber and the "know-how" to use them, were made available royalty free for the duration of the war. After the war, "reasonable" royalties may be charged for their use. In addition, many Standard patents made available for use at "reasonable" royalties.

The register will be available soon for public inspection at the Newark, N. J., field office of the anti-trust division, the department said. Applications for licenses to use the processes, however, should be made to the Standard Oil of New Jersey, New York, Justice officials added.

The decree was filed at Newark March 25, in settlement of a civil complaint charging that Standard and the German Dye Trust had conspired to restrain trade in the petroleum and chemical industries.

TWO ACCUSED OF SEDITION

Robert Noble and E. O. Jones Are Indicted in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, April 8 (AP)—Robert Noble and Ellis O. Jones, organizers of "Friends of Progress," were indicted by a Federal grand jury today on charges of sedition.

Noble is a former leader of the old-age pension movement and Jones founded the "National Copperheads" isolationist group. The indictment charges, in part, that:

"With the United States at war the defendants would willingly make and convey false reports and statements with intent to interfere with the operation and success of the military and naval forces of the United States and to promote the success of its enemies.

"The defendants wilfully caused or attempted to cause insubordination, disloyalty and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States and would wilfully obstruct recruiting and enlistment services of the United States, to the injury of the United States."

The indictment quoted Jones as attacking General Douglas MacArthur in a Friends of Progress bulletin of March 30.

Bail was set at $20,000 each.

Noble and Jones, with seven of their followers, also are charged by the State with violating State laws covering subversive activities.

Non-essential Building Is Halted for Duration

APR 9 1942

Projects Under Way May Be Stopped—Sale Of Building Materials 'Frozen' Except For Certain Repair Jobs.

WASHINGTON, April 8 (AP) — The War Production Board tonight prohibited new construction of non-essential residences, roads and commercial buildings, and indicated that projects already under way might be halted if the materials going into them could be used more effectively in the war program.

Effective Today

The order is effective tomorrow. Specifically it bans any residential construction other than maintenance and repair work if the cost is $500 or more, unless specific government permission is granted. Similar permission must be allowed for any new agricultural construction if the estimated cost is $1,000 or more.

No other types of construction commercial, industrial, recreational institutional, highway, or utilities, whether publicly or privately financed may be started without permission if the cost of the project is more than $5,000.

"It is in the national interest that all construction which is not essential directly or indirectly to the successful prosecution of the war, and which involves the use of labor, material or equipment urgently needed in the war effort be deferred for the duration of the emergency," the board stated.

Ordinary Repairs Expected

The drastic action, which WPB Chairman Donald M. Nelson had declared would virtually "suspend the civilian construction industry," does not apply to ordinary maintenance and repair work needed to restore a structure to "sound working condition."

The labor department estimated overall 1941 construction at $10,473,000,000 of which $5,348,000,000 was of a non-defense character. The department estimated 1942 construction at $10,750,000,000, with $3,650,000,000 of this amount going for non-defense work. WPB gave no indication of how much of the 1942 non-defense work would be eliminated.

To prevent evasion, the $500 upper limit on residential construction was made the maximum for a 12-month period. That is, no person may spend $500 on a dwelling and subsequently make another $500 outlay on the same dwelling in the same 12-month period. The same restriction applies to the farm and "other restricted construction" maximums.

Under consideration is a plan for issuance of an emblem or insignia to be posted on each job to show that the construction has been approved by WPB.

William V. Kahler, chief of the WPB construction branch, was named administrator of the new program. He is on leave of absence.

Although the shutdown was applied only to construction not yet started, WPB gave this warning:

"Projects already under construction are being examined by the WPB on an individual basis. Such projects may be stopped if the scarce materials to be used in them can be put to more effective use in the war program."

Sale of Materials 'Frozen'

In effect, the order "freezes" the sale of building materials except for specifically approved projects or those costing under the dollar limits specified.

"This is done through provisions which not only prohibit the start of construction, but also "the withdrawal from inventory and the purchase, sale or delivery of any material for use in such construction unless authorized by the war production board."

Exempt from the order are projects built for the armed forces and a group of other named government agencies; construction to replace residences destroyed since January 1, by fire, flood, tornado, earthquake or the "public enemy," and petroleum producing and distributing facilities which are provided for in earlier WPB actions.

The result of the order, WPB said, will be to allocate scarce copper, steel, iron and other materials away from unnecessary construction and into ships, planes, tanks, guns, defense housing and other essential production."

No change was made in existing regulations permitting construction of residences, costing up to $6,000, in defense housing critical areas specifically designated by the government.

Applications to start new construction elsewhere must be filed with local offices of the Federal Housing Administration on forms obtainable from FHA local offices or from WPB district offices.

The FHA local offices will decide whether a project is eligible for recommendation to WPB.

APR 9 1942

If so, the application will go forward to WPB's production division, headed by William H. Harrison, for final consideration.

"The public is urged to file only emergency applications during the next month as it is anticipated that authorization will be given only for emergency projects," the board said.

A board will be created to hear appeals from rejections.

WPB Reveals Rules For Women's Clothes

APR 9 1942

WASHINGTON, April 8—(AP)—Uncle Sam today decreed wartime styles in suits, coats and dresses for his nieces that by eliminating non-essential frills will result in an expected production of 15 per cent more garments out of the same yardage of cloth.

At a press conference to which were invited the nation's leading fashion writers, Stanley Marcus, head of the apparel branch of the War Production Board, explained that the new order assures women there will be no extremes in dress styles during this war as in the last.

It also assures women that their present wardrobes will not be made obsolete by radical fashion changes, Marcus stressed. The order goes into effect regarding Fall clothes. It tends to stabilize for the duration of the war the present length and fullness of skirts.

In detail, Marcus, a prominent Dallas, Tex., merchant, explained the objectives of the order—how it affects new styles, a woman's present wardrobe, the woman who makes her own clothes, the manufacturer and the retailer.

Aimed at Saving Cloth

The objective is to simplify styles and to save cloth to avoid any possibility of shortages, Marcus said. He added that one belief is that 100,000,000 yards of cotton, rayon, wool and mixtures can be saved annually in this way.

The order points out that the conservation measures consist mainly of eliminating such things as French cuffs on sleeves, balloon sleeves, patch pockets of wool, all-around pleated skirts and the prohibition of selling three-piece ensembles, such as a suit and matching coat, at one price.

The restrictions on woolen garments become effective one minute after midnight in time to apply to the production of most of next Fall and Winter clothes.

Spring, Summer Clothes Not Affe

The order will not affect clothes for this Spring and Summer, most of which are already made. Restrictions on cotton, rayon and other materials do not go into effect until June 19, which is about the time the manufacturer turns to making fall and winter clothes.

Retailers have until August 17 to clear their stocks, Marcus said. He noted that this is the usual period for "end-of-the-summer" sales. The order provides that after that date no retailer can sell a three-piece suit, or a dress with a jacket, or redingote, at a suit price. The dress and jacket, for example, would be priced separately.

The idea of prohibiting the sale of jacket-frocks, Marcus explained, is the belief that a woman who really wants a jacket will buy one that she can wear with several dresses.

Asked if a woman would have to take a tape measure with her on a shopping tour to determine whether the length of the jacket or skirt came within the specification set down by WPB, Marcus replied that the responsibility rests on the cutter o. manufacturer.

The manufacturer will be required to specify on the invoice to the retailer that the garment meets the specifications, Marcus explained. For violations he would be liable "to a year in the jug", or a $10,000 fine and the possibility he would be prevented from obtaining materials on which there was priority.

Marcus also said that the woman who makes her own clothes, buying goods by the yard, is not affected. If, however, she takes the goods to a dressmaker, the latter would be required to abide.

He said no restrictions had yet been placed on pattern manufacturers, although it had been discussed. Pattern manufacturers and the woman who makes her own clothes usually follow the fashion trend anyway.

To Follow Fashion Trend

Marcus said women should not hesitate to buy existing stocks in stores because to refrain would really lead to waste. He said he didn't think women would look different next fall. The experts who drew up the specifications, he said, have been careful not to invalidate present styles.

They followed the existing trend of fashion, he said, and have taken off the things that a study showed were least essential. The order notes that the measurements fixed represent present averages in women's clothing.

These averages were arrived at through a survey conducted by the WPB apparel section in 25 of the larger cities throughout the country. Thus, it was noted, officials did not arbitrarily say that a woman's dress or coat should be so long and no longer. They found out what women are now wearing.

The decision that daytime skirts should be from 16 to 19 inches from the floor was based on the finding that 80 per cent of women have their hem-lengths shortened when they buy their clothes, Marcus said.

In regard to short skirts, Marcus said, Washington, D. C., women are wearing the shortest skirts and women in the northwestern section of the country, the longest. Suit skirts were found to range from 26 to 28 inches, and now cannot be made longer than 28 inches.

The sweep of wool suit skirts is limited to from 64 to 72 inches, depending on the weight of wool material. This compares to the present range of 54 to 86 inches. All-around pleated skirts are eliminated but pleats can be used for trimming.

No suit jacke can be longer than 25 inches. The present range is from 23 to 27 inches. There can be no Norfolk styles, cuffs or bias cut sleeves on jackets. There will be no wool evening wraps, wool evening skirts or wool evening dresses.

Evening Clothes

In regard to evening clothes, Marcus said that since Pearl Harbor there had been a drop in sales. Anyway the maximum length allowed for a size 16 is 59 inches—the present range for this size is 59 to 61 inches. No size can be fuller at the skirt hem than 144 inches. The present average is from 130 to 216 inches.

When it comes to slacks, the women are on a par with the men—No cuffs or patch pockets. Women's slacks will be beltless. Slack legs at bottom cannot measure more than 19 inches. The present average is from 19 to 22 inches.

In regard to dresses the maximum length of size 16 dress—with proportionate length for other sizes—is 43 inches. At present this size varies from 41 1-2 to 44 inches. The maximum fullness of skirt for size 16 in rayon and cotton is 78 inches; in wool, nine ounces and less, 75 inches, and in wool more than nine ounces, 64 inches. The present range is from 66 to 96 inches.

No hoods, shawls, capes, scarfs, petticoats, overskirts or aprons can be made with the dress. No belt can be more than two inches wide. Also no hem on dress, suit skirt or coat will be more than two inches wide.

The maximum length for a size 16 coat is 42 inches for a box coat and 43 inches for a fitted number. This compares with the present average length of 41 to 42 inches for a box coat, and 42 to 45 for a fitetd coat. Maximum sweeps for size 16 is 60 inches for a box coat and 70 inches for a fitted coat, compared with 58 to 65 for a box coat and 68 to 80 for a fitted model.

No Cuffs on Coats

There are to be no cuffs on coats, nor wool linings, nor wool cloth lining under fur trimming. No coat sleeves are to be cut on the bias nor is any belt to be wider than two inches.

nI each case, the measurements fixed in the order permit variations, to accommodate the requirements of "regular women", "little women", "stout women," "misses", junior misses", "'teen age", "girls" and "children".

The order does not apply to infants' and toddler apparel—sizes 1 to 4—bridal gowns, maternity dresses, clothing for persons of abnormal size, burial gowns, and robes and vestments as required by the rules of religious orders or sects.

Marcus said it is hoped that designers will see further ways to conserve material. He said fashion is not going to be killed by this order or any order. "If it were decreed that women were to wear barrels, you would find within a few days women decorating their barrels with lace edges or painting designs on them just to be different," he laughed.

CUTS IN WOOL HIT MEN MORE

WPB In Setting Standards Appears To Think Stronger Sex Can Take It

Their Savings To Boost Suit Yield 26%, Women's To Add 15% In Garments

APR 9 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 8—All in all, it appeared today, the War Production Board was considerably harder on the men than on the women when it came to setting wartime standards for clothes.

To the casual male, whose pants sooner or later will be minus both cuffs and pleats, the women will look just about the same for the duration. He'll never miss her balloon sleeves or the extra swish in the train of her evening gown, but she certainly will begin commenting when he isn't able to turn out in a full dress coat or cutaway when occasion demands.

Will Save Huge Amount Of Wool

Although the restrictions on her clothes will tend largely to prevent extravagance, and avoid extremes in long, full skirts and sleeves, he won't be able to buy a two-pants suit, get a vest with his double-breasted suit, or swank around with a belt on his overcoat.

The new specifications for women's clothing make it possible to produce at least fifteen per cent. more garments from the same amount of material, WPB said; the crack-down on men's clothes will save an estimated 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 pounds of raw wool and permit production of twenty-six per cent. more suits and ten per cent. more overcoats with the same amount of material.

Frills Banned

Generally, the restrictions on men's clothing tend to reduce length—lopping two to four inches off topcoats and overcoats and about three quarters of an inch off suit coats. In contrast, maximum lengths set for women's coats and dresses were described as strictly average on the basis of present styles.

Frills were banned for the men as well as the women—no patch pockets of wool, no fancy-back coats, no cuffs on overcoat sleeves and no lapels on vests.

May 17 Is Proclaimed I Am an American Day

Day to Reflect on Citizenship's Boon, Says President — Roosevelt Also Issues Mother's Day Proclamation.

APR 9 1942

WASHINGTON, April 8 (AP)—President Roosevelt today designated Sunday, May 17, as "I Am an American" Day and urged that it be observed in a manner to impress on all citizens "the duties and opportunities of citizenship and its special responsibilities in a nation at war."

Annual Observance

He said in a proclamation that it was even more essential in time of war than in time of peace for a people to understand fully the form and genius of their government and the responsibilities of citizenship.

Consequently, in accordance with an act of Congress calling for recognition of all citizens in an "I am an American" day on the third Sunday in May each year, the President called upon federal, state and local officials, patriotic, civic and educational organizations to take part in appropriate exercises.

In another proclamation, the President set aside Sunday, May 10, as Mother's Day, again under terms of an act of Congress.

He ordered the flag flown from all government buildings on that day and asked the people also to fly the flag on their homes and by tokens and messages of affection to "express the love and reverence which we feel for the mothers of our country."

"I Am an American" Text

The text of the President's "I Am an American Day" proclamation follows:

Whereas Public Resolution No. 67, approved May 3, 1940 (54 Stat. 178), provides in part:

"That the third Sunday in May each year be, and hereby is, set aside as Citizenship Day and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation setting aside that day as a public occasion for the recognition of all who, by coming of age or naturalization, have attained the status of citizenship, and the day shall be designated as 'I Am an American Day.'

"That the civil and education authorities of States, counties, cities, and towns be, and they are hereby, urged to make plans for the proper observance of this day and for the full instruction of future citizens in their responsibilities and opportunities as citizens of the United States and of the States and localities in which they reside"; and

Whereas it is even more essential in time of war than in time of peace that a people should fully understand the form and genius of their Government and the responsibilities of citizenship:

Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, president of the United States of America, do hereby designate Sunday, May 17, 1942, as "I Am an American" Day; I urge that the day be set aside as a public occasion for the recognition of all our citizens who have attained their majority or who have been naturalized during the past year; and I call upon Federal, State and local officials and patriotic, civic and educational organizations to take part on that day in exercises designed to impress upon all our citizens, both native born and naturalized, the duties and opportunities of citizenship and its special responsibilities in a nation at war.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington on this seventh day of April, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and forty-two, and of the (Seal) independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-sixth.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By the President:
Sumner Welles,
Acting Secretary of State.

Mother's Day Proclamation

The proclamation naming May 10 as "Mother's Day" said:

Whereas public resolution, 25, 63d Congress, approved by President Wilson on May 8, 1914, attests that "the service rendered the United States by the American mother is the greaest source of the country's strength and inspiration," that "we honor ourselves and the mothers of America when we do anything to give emphasis to the home as the fountain head of the State," and that "the American mother is doing so much for the home, the moral uplift and religion, hence so much for good government and humanity;" and

Whereas the said resolution provides that the second Sunday in May shall be designated as Mother's Day and that it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to request the observance of the day;

Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do hereby direct the officials of the Government to display the flag on all Government buildings on Mother's Day, May 10, 1942, and I call upon the people of the United States to express the love and reverence which we feel for the mothers of our country by the customary display of the flag at our homes and other suitable places and by tokens and messages of affection.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this seventh day of April, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and forty-two, and of the (seal) independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-sixth.

Democratization of Indian Princes' States Now Hindering Negotiations

APR 9 1942

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

The crisis revolving about Britain's offer of Dominion status, which involves Hindustan's support of the war effort, has developed another tough difficulty—the Nationalist insistence on democratization of the States under the native princes.

If you were looking for examples of the antithesis of democracy you would find it among these bejeweled potentates whose wealth is so great that some of them don't know just how rich they are. One hastens to add that this isn't true of all of them (there are close to 600 princes and chiefs) for I know some who have done grand work for their people.

There are the two kinds of rulers. One is represented by the young Maharajah whom I encountered in India—a wastrel who used to get enthusiastic on champagne and chase jackals across country in a Rolls Royce. Then there was the prince who shot a peasant because that unfortunate man's slow moving bullock cart blocked the way for the prince's car, though in all fairness it must be recorded that the ruler said this wasn't a nice thing for him to do and he regretted it.

Created Model State.

The other class is magnificently represented by such men as the late Gaekwar of Baroda, whom I mention because he was so widely known in this country. He was wholly wrapped up in the welfare of his people, and created a model State.

Taking the princes as a whole, however, I'm afraid they represent about the last word in absolutism. A lot of them literally have the power of life and death over their people—and life has been pretty cheap in India. Their vast wealth has been amassed through generations, and handed down from father to son, by the simple expedient of imposing taxation running as high as 75 per cent in extreme cases.

Now along comes Pandit Nehru, powerful political leader of the All-India Congress, and declares opposition to any plan for Hindustan which excludes the peoples of the states under the princes. Mr. Nehru would have all the states ruled by a people's government, within the structure of federal India.

Well now, if you and I were proud Indian princes, possessed of riches and prerogatives which had come down to us through the centuries, how would we feel about being deprived of them? Of course, we would be glad to make the sacrifice (we hope).

Bar of Special Privilege.

Still, we can understand the feeling of the Maharajah who has enjoyed the privilege of taking a ride on an elephant with gilded tusks before breakfast, and who has needed only to push an electric button to perform magic the like of which Aladdin's lamp never knew. He just doesn't care for the idea of constitutional government and the cutting off of his power and revenues.

In fact, the majority of the princes dislike the idea so much that they assuredly will resist it strongly. Just what form that resistance will take, or how far it will go, is problematical, but it could be very great if the rulers stood together. Just as an aside, it might be mentioned that many of them maintain small standing armies.

Actually, while the British Government certainly expects the princes to play a useful part in connection with the proposed dominion government, or any other government for British India, there has been no indication that London intended to deprive them of their rule.

Taking it all in all, it's difficult to see how the British-Indian deadlock could be broken if the Nationalists insisted on bringing the native States into the proposed set-up. However, the general position was reported this morning from New Delhi as not without hope. Emphasis was laid on the fact that Louis Johnson, personal emissary of President Roosevelt, has been taking a hand in the discussions.

Invasion May Test British Defense Plan

Civilian Army of Men and Women Now Numbers Over 500,000—Carelessness and Complacency Are Menaces.

APR 9 1942

By RUSSELL LANDSTROM

LONDON, April 8 (Wide World) — If invasion comes, millions in Britain will be called upon to show whether the principles of a total civil defense plan are sound.

Equipment Lacking

It would be the hour of trial for the half-military, half-civilian homeguard.

The training of these units, which embrace persons from every level of life, is designed along full-fledged military lines even to commando tactics.

The rub has been in a shortage of equipment. But while there have been numerous jokes and satirical jabs at Home Guard makeshifts and proposals to arm it with pikes, staves, bows and arrows and other primitive weapons, nonetheless it is felt officially the Home Guard would give a good account of itself.

Paralleling the Home Guard is the civilian army of men and women numbering over 500,000 formed into rifle clubs, which are springing up over the country. The clubs are made up of Home Guardsmen, members of civil defense services, and all industrial groups.

The whole idea of civil defense, one authority asserted, was that there would be no lost opportunities and no slack.

"We've had plenty of difficulties and we've made plenty of mistakes," says a civil defense spokesman. "Conditions have changed rapidly and improvisation has been necessary all along the line. So much was not to be foreseen.

"Take rescue work. Much unnecessary labor and worry was caused because many people didn't notify wardens of certain essential circumstances.

"There was the time when rescuers dug for hours for a person who, it was later learned, had gone to the country.

"The importance of the wardens' record was not recognized at first. Such incidents made it clear we should take a census, showing not only whether a person expected to be at home but even what part of the house he would be sleeping in, the next of kin, and so on."

The whole development of Britain's air raid shelter policy was one of trial and error.

Figured on Short Raids

Again, it was acknowledged, Britain started from the wrong premise. It was thought raids would be shorter, for one thing. Few if any feared France would collapse, enabling Germans to have air bases just across the channel.

Thus dormitory shelters were a product of long, heavy raids and it became necessary to commission shelter wardens, establish shelter first aid posts and canteens, and make use of subways and basements.

It was found that many persons preferred to stay at home however [illegible] the blitz. Authorities generally [illegible] inclined to encourage this both [illegible] morale and health reasons.

It wasn't expected that the walls of ordinary houses would hold up as well as they did, and homes were found to be more effective protection than anticipated.

Government representatives were asked repeatedly why they hadn't constructed deep shelters, to which they replied: the government couldn't build deep shelters for the masses because it had neither the time nor the money. In many places there was no available space and soil frequently was found unsuitable.

Some authorities felt it would be bad for morale to have deep shelters, making it difficult to cope with surface chaos. In every blitz men are urgently needed above ground. As raids develop and more and more incendiaries are dropped, virtually every adult civilian is needed to help quench fire bombs. This means that complete mobilization of civilians is necessary to beat the fire raiders.

APR 9 1942

For women, children, older men, and those exhausted by a hard day's work, there are the subways.

7,600 Shelters in London

In the London area alone there are more than 7,600 raid shelters, each housing from less than 200 to more than 500. Approximately 2,100 of them are equipped with canteens. Somewhat larger totals cover the shelter provisions for the rest of Britain.

At the time of the first raids, there was virtually complete stoppage of work and traffic. To correct this, there grew up a system wherein widespread use of roof spotters, sounding warnings, enabled work to go on and transport to continue.

Trial and error on the railroads led to establishment of special fire-fighting trains carrying their own water supplies to special key points.

Among the foremost civil defense difficulties authorities said they encountered were a tendency of some people to be bogged down in the deadliness of routine, the carelessness of some firewatchers, and blackout violations.

Voluntary firewatching proved to have too many drawbacks. Now there is a compulsory system throughout the country, with every street, office, block and factory working by rotating schedules.

Blackout Indispensable

"People seem to mind the blackout more than anything else," said a high-placed source. "But the blackout has got to stay. It is indispensable. Not even ten times the agitation of late last summer, aimed at suspension or modification of the blackout, would result in any appreciable relaxing of the rules.

"We have been told that the evil caused by the blackout outweighed the good. It is said the blackout increased incidence of crime, multiplied the number of accidents, produced the ultimate in boredom and created a wide variety of phobias.

"Except for fears regarding the spread of crime, much of that is true. But the blackout stays, nevertheless."

One of the hindrances to the most effective civilian defense, as criticized both by the press and the man-in-the-street, is that many in the invasion zones don't take the invasion possibility seriously.

"There is much lack of preparation and foresight," one source said. "And one counters a certain stubbornness among some older residents which hampers efforts. Many others haven't the slightest idea what they'd do if an invasion came tomorrow."

This authority asserted: "The United States, for all that its civil defense problems differ from ours, might well profit by the faults which have been tossed to the surface by long freedom from heavy raids.

"During the lull, the British people have been criticized for falling into complacency, cultivating a false sense of security, and growing indifferent in holding strictly to the letter of precautions.

"Sad to say, far more of this is true than we like to admit.

"How few persons, for instance, carry gas masks any more? Yet how few really believe the Germans will not eventually use poison gas?

"No small part of civil defense is the responsibility resting upon all to be extremely discreet in speech, to refrain from all manner of gossip mongering and to avoid sinking into enervating doldrums.

"It has helped us to keep on promoting the welfare of shelterers and to provide all the recreation we can. The same of course applies to all war workers.

"So it can be seen that we've come a long way from the early days of the ministry of home security which was created at the outbreak of war and was concerned then primarily with precautionary measures—organization of civilian life to meet the possibility of air raids which had not yet occurred."

NIGHT LEAD SHIP BREAK

BERLIN, (FROM GERMAN BROADCASTS)-APRIL 8-(AP)-THE GERMAN HIGH COMMAND REPORTED TONIGHT THAT GERMAN PATROL BOATS AND BOMBING PLANES SANK THREE OF THE NORWEGIAN SHIPS WHICH TRIED TO DASH FROM SWEDEN TO BRITAIN AND THAT THREE OTHERS WERE SCUTTLED BY THEIR OWN CREWS.

THE ACCOUNT SAID TWO OF THE SHIPS TURNED BACK TO GOTEBORG HARBOR AND THAT ONLY ONE, A TANKER ESCAPED, AFTER SUSTAINING A BOMB HIT.

THE REPORT FAILED TO SAY WHAT HAPPENED TO THE 10TH SHIP. THE BRITISH ANNOUNCED THAT "CERTAIN SHIPS" OF THE GROUP ARRIVED SAFELY IN BRITISH PORTS, INDICATING THAT MORE THAN ONE ESCAPED).

HERE IS THE SCORE, AS NOW GIVEN BY THE GERMANS:

THE 5,343-TON STORSEN AND 1,235-TON GUDVANG SUNK BY GERMAN PATROL BOATS, AND THE 6,305-TON RIGMOR BY GERMAN PLANES.

THE 12,258-TON WHALER SKYTTER, 6,222-TON TANKER BUCCANEER AND 1,282-TON FREIGHTER CHARENTE, SCUTTLED BY THEIR CREWS.

THE 5,263-TON DICTO AND 5,653-TON LIONEL, RETURNED TO GOTEB.

THE 10,324-TON TANKER B.P. NEWTON, ESCAPED AFTER BEING HIT BY NAZI AIR BOMBS.

APR 9 1942

THIS LIST DID NOT INCLUDE THE 10TH SHIP, PREVIOUSLY IDENTIFIED AS THE 5,069-TON REALF II.)

FROM THE SUNKEN SHIPS DNB SAID THE GERMANS PICKED UP 135 SURVIVORS WHO WERE TAKEN PRISONER.

AN EARLIER ACCOUNT, CREDITED TO OFFICIAL GERMAN QUARTERS, SAID FIVE OF THE SHIPS WERE SUNK BY GERMAN SURFACE CRAFT.

CAIRO, APRIL 8-(AP)-PREMIER MUSTAPHA NAHAS PASHA TODAY ORDERED THE ARREST OF ALI MAHER PASHA, FORMER PREMIER AND POLITICAL ADVISER TO KING FAROUK, "FOR REASONS OF PUBLIC SECURITY."

ALI MAHER PASHA WAS PREMIER FROM AUG. 18, 1939, TO JUNE 23, 1940, WHEN HE RESIGNED TO MAKE WAY FOR A COALITION GOVERNMENT. HE HAD BEEN INVOLVED IN A 1937 POLITICAL QUARREL BETWEEN THE KING AND NAHAS PASHA WHO ALSO SERVED AS PREMIER AT THAT TIME.

APR 9. 1942

NAHAS PASHA BECAME PREMIER THIS TIME ON FEB.6 UPON THE RESIGNATION OF HUSSEIN SIRRY PASHA.

ASMARA, ERITREA, APRIL 8-(AP)-SEVENTEEN HUNDRED ETHIOPIAN PRISONERS OF WAR LEFT ASMARA YESTERDAY FOR DESSYE, ETHIOPIA, IN A BRITISH CONVOY OF MORE THAN 100 VEHICLES. THE MAJORITY WERE CONSCRIPTED BY THE ITALIANS AND OTHERS WERE DESERTERS FROM THE ETHIOPIAN ARMY.

THEY WERE CAPTURED IN THIS ITALIAN EAST AFRICAN COLONY WHEN THE BRITISH OCCUPIED THE REGION. ALL ARE IN BETTER PHYSICAL CONDITION THANAN WHEN CAPTURED.

LONDON, APRIL 8-(AP)-IF AMERICAN WOMEN ARE CALLED UP IT MIGHT INTEREST THEM TO KNOW WHAT WAS ISSUED TO BRITAIN'S FIRST AUXILIARY TERRITORIAL SERVICE CONSCRIPTS:

APR 9 1942

CAP AND BADGE, STEEL HELMET, TWO PAIRS OF SHOES, A PAIR OF GYMNASIUM SHOES, TWO TOWELS, TWO SETS OF PAJAMAS, THREE BRASSIERES, TWO SUSPENDER BELTS, THREE PAIRS OF KNICKERS, FOUR PAIRS OF STOCKINGS, A PAIR OF GLOVES, EIGHT COLLARS, THREE TIES, FOUR SHIRTS, TWO OVERALLS, A PULLOVER GREATCOAT, TWO TUNICS, TWO SKIRTS, THREE VESTS, THREE PANTIES.

A PILLOW, FOUR BLANKETS, TWO SHEETS, EYE SHIELDS, EAR PLUGS, FIELD DRESSINGS, MUG, KNIFE, FORK, SPOON, TOOTHBRUSH, HAIRBRUSH, COMB, CLOTHES BRUSH, KIT BAG.

APR 9 1942

OLD TIMERS WHO HAVE JUST RECEIVED THE FIRST ISSUE OF THE NEW UNIFORM ARE SHOWING OFF. THE TUNICS ARE TRIMLY TAILORED WITH PATCH POCKETS, SQUARE-CUT SHOULDERS, FOUR-GORED SKIRTS, HAVE A GOOD FIT, A SMART HANG AND ARE IN BETTER MATERIAL THAN BEFORE.

ADDED ATTRACTIONS ARE A SILK SHIRT, SILK TIE, AND A NEW LEATHER-BANDED STIFF-PEAKED MILITARY CAP SUITED TO THE HAIRDRESSING STYLE NOW COMMON IN THE "ATS."

A.V.G. HEADQUARTERS IN UPPER BURMA, APRIL 2-(DELAYED)-(AP)-OFFICIALLY BILL MCGARRY IS POSTED AS MISSING SINCE MARCH 24 ON AN AIR RAID ON CHIENGMAI IN WHICH THE AMERICAN VOLUNTEER GROUP WIPED OUT A JAPANESE SQUADRON ON THE GROUND OF THIS THAILAND RAILHEAD, BUT HIS FLYING MATES SWEAR THAT IT'S JUST ABOUT TIME FOR THE LOS ANGELES ACE TO APPEAR OUT OF THE SHAN JUNGLES OF EASTERN BURMA.

30.24 15853

BLACK-BEARDED, IRISH BILL, WHO GAVE UP ART TO BECOME A WAR BIRD, WAS ONE OF FIVE PILOTS BOB NEALE, LEADER OF THE A.V.G. FIRST SQUADRON, TOOK WITH HIM ON THE SMASHING RAID AGAINST CHIENGMAI, WHERE TEN PLANES ARE KNOWN TO HAVE BEEN DESTROYED AND ANOTHER TEN PROBABLY DESTROYED BY THE ARMOR-PIERCING AND TRACER BULLETS OF THE A.V.G.'S TOMAHAWK PLANES. APR 9 1942

IT IS BELIEVED THAT AN ENEMY MACHINEGUN HIT THE TANK CONNECTED WITH THE COOLING SYSTEM OF MCGARRY'S AIRCRAFT.

OBVIOUSLY IN DIFFICULTY, MCGARRY WAS CONVOYED TOWARD BURMA, BUT AT A POINT A FEW MILES FROM THE FRONTIER HE WAS UNABLE TO CONTINUE. HE VEERED OFF NEALE'S FORMATION, FLIPPED HIS PLANE ON ITS BACK, PUSHED OPEN THE C JV6 -,$ 0)7..353$ 975 9! 5£3 :9:(085 285£ £8' 0-4-:£753 903,8,& 178:()6 94 - 1,500-FOOT DROP.

WHEN LAST SEEN HE HAD LANDED SAFELY IN A CLEARING, HAD GATHERED UP HIS CHUTE AND WAS TAKING COVER IN THE TREES. APR 9 1942

IT WAS THE SAME DAY THAT JACK NEWKIRK, OF SCARSDALE, N.Y., LEADER OF THE SECOND SQUADRON, WAS KILLED IN ACTION AFTER A SIMULTANEOUS RAID ON THE LAMBHUN AIRDROME NEAR CHIENG-MAI BY FOUR A.V.G. AIRMEN.

NEWKIRK WAS DISAPPOINTED BY THE LACK OF JAPANESE PLANES AT LAMBHUN, AND WHEN HE SPOTTED ARMORED CARS ON THE ROAD HE DIVED A THOU SAND FEET. HIS TOMAHAWK WAS HIT IN MID-AIR AND CRASHED AND BURNED. APR 9 1942

FOR GALLANTRY AND LEADERSHIP IN THE AIR DEFENSE OF RANGOON NEWKIRK WAS AWARDED THE DISTINGUISHED SERVICE ORDER BY THE RAF A FEW WEEKS AGO.

TEX HILL, OF SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, NOW LEADS THE SECOND.

MEXICO CITY, APRIL 9--(AP)-AS A PRECAUTION AGAINST SABOTAGE AND ESPIONAGE, THE INTERIOR MINISTRY TODAY ORDERED ALL AXIS NATIONALS LIVING ALONG THE GULF OF MEXICO TO PREPARE TO MOVE INLAND AT ONCE. APR 9 1942

THE HUNDREDS OF GERMANS, ITALIANS AND JAPANESE IN TAMPICO, VERACRUZ, TUXPAN, CARMEN AND PROGRESO WERE NOTIFIED THEY WOULD HAVE TO JOIN HUNDREDS OF THEIR COMPATRIOTS EXPELLED EARLIER FROM THE STRATEGIC PACIFIC COAST. APR 9 1942

THE NEW COASTAL CLEANUP WAS INITIATED SOON AFTER THE ARREST OF NEARLY 50 NAZI-FASCIST AGENTS, INCLUDING THE REPUTED HEAD OF THE GERMAN GESTAPO IN MEXICO, WHO WERE INTERNED IN PEROTE. A NATION-WIDE-CHECKUP ALSO NETTED 15 JAPANESE ACCUSED OF OPERATING A CLANDESTINE RADIO STATION IN JUAREZ, ACRISS THE UNITED STATES MEXICO BORDER FROM EL PASO, TEXAS.

FIRES AND OTHER DAMAGE IN THE RICH OIL FIELDS AROUND TAMPICO IN RECENT WEEKS HAVE STIRRED RUMORS THAT AXIS SABOTEURS WERE RESPONSIBLE. APR 9 1942

TAMPICO ALONE HAS 50 GERMAN FAMILIES, 15 JAPANESE BROODS AND SIX HOUSEHOLDS OF ITALIANS.

FEDERAL POLICE IN TAMPICO CONFIRMED REPORTS THAT ERNESTO TRAULSEN, GERMAN CONSULAR AGENT THERE UNTIL GERMANY AND MEXICO CLOSED EACH OTHER'S CONSULAR OFFICES LAST YEAR, HAD BEEN TAKEN INTO CUSTODY AND SENT TO MEXICO CITY UNDER GUARD.

TAMPICO POLICE SAID TRAULSEN, ALSO MANAGER OF A GERMAN SHIPPING AGENCY THERE, HAD "50 COMPROMISING LETTERS" IN HIS POSSESSION.

TAMPICO, MEXICO, APRIL 8-(AP)-FEDERAL POLICE RAIDED THE HOMES AND OFFICES OF GERMAN RESIDENTS IN THIS GULF PORT CITY TONIGHT LOOKING FOR "SUSPICIOUS DOCUMENTS" AND A CLANDESTINE RADIO TRANSMITTER.

APR 9 1942

THEY ACTED AFTER SEVERAL GERMANS ARRESTED EARLIER HAD STATED UNDER QUESTIONING THAT THEY HAD BEEN CARRYING OUT "FIFTH COLUMN ORDERS" RECEIVED FROM BERLIN.

AT LEAST SIX GERMANS WERE TAKEN INTO CUSTODY DURING THE SEARCH.

POLICE ALSO SEIZED ABOUT 300 LETTERS, POSTMARKED GERMANY, AND SAID THAT THESE "SERIOUSLY COMPROMISED" THOSE ARRESTED.

ALTHOUGH THE NATURE OF THE INSTRUCTIONS SUPPOSEDLY RECEIVED FROM BERLIN WAS NOT DIVULGED, FEDERAL AGENTS SAID THE GERMANS APPARENTLY HAD BEEN CHECKING THE MOVEMENTS OF SHIPS, TROOPS AND PLANES.

APR 9 1942

THIS PORT IS AN IMPORTANT TRANSIT POINT FOR UNITS TRAVELING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES, CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE PANAMA CANAL.

THE SEARCH EXTENDED TO GERMAN-OWNED RANCHES OUTSIDE THE CITY. #

MEXICO CITY, APRIL 8-(AP)-THE EXPANDING PROGRAM OF MILITARY-ECONOMIC COOPERATION WITH THE UNITED STATES WILL INCLUDE REHABILITATION OF MEXICO'S TEHUANTEPEC ISTHMUS RAILROAD AS AN ALTERNATIVE SUPPLY ROUTE, AND THE STATIONING OF U.S. NAVAL OFFICERS IN MOST OF THIS REPUBLIC'S IMPORTANT WEST-COAST PORTS, RESPONSIBLE SOURCES SAID TONIGHT.

APR 9 1942

MODERNIZATION OF THE 188-MILE RAILWAY FROM SALINA CRUZ TO PUERTO MEXICO, AT A JOINTLY-BORNE COST OF ABOUT $3,000,000, MAY BE CARRIED OUT THIS YEAR.

U.S. NAVAL OFFICERS ASSIGNED TO LIAISON WORK IN MAZATLAN, MANZANILLO AND SALINA CRUZ ALREADY HAVE ARRIVED, AND OTHERS WILL BE SENT TO GUAYMAS AND ACAPULCO, IT WAS SAID.

THESE MEN ARE ENGINEERS AND IT WAS UNDERSTOOD THEY WOULD STUDY THE CONSTRUCTION IN THOSE PORTS OF FUELING, REPAIR AND SHIPBUILDING FACILITIES. #

APR 9 1942

BUENOS AIRES, APRIL 8-(AP)-THE STATE MERCHANT FLEET COMMISSION INDICATED TONIGHT THAT ARGENTINA STILL OPPOSED PARTICIPATION IN ANY PAN-AMERICAN CONVOY SYSTEM WHEN IT ASSERTED THAT THE NATION'S SHIPS WOULD CONTINUE TO SAIL BY "HABITUAL ROUTES."

HIGH MARITIME SOURCES ALSO DENIED A NEWSPAPER REPORT THAT TWO ARGENTINE FREIGHTERS LOADING AT ROSARIO WOULD BE CONVOYED TOWARD THE UNITED STATES, AND SAID CAPTAINS OF ALL ARGENTINE MERCHANTMEN HAD BEEN ORDERED TO TRAVEL FULLY LIGHTED AT NIGHT.

APR 9 1942

FOREIGN OFFICE OFFICIALS DECLINED TO COMMENT ON THE CONVOY SITUATION WHICH WAS SAID TO BE UNDER CONSIDERATION BY NAVAL AND MILITARY REPRESENTATIVES OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS IN WASHINGTON. #

MONTEVIDEO, URUGUAY, APRIL 8-(AP)-A HUNDRED EXPELLED ATTACHES OF THE GERMAN AND ITALIAN LEGATIONS, HEADED BY MINISTERS OTTO LANGMAN AND COUNT VITTORIO EMANUELE CASTEL BOMPIANO, WILL EMBARK FOR HOME TOMORROW ABOARD THE SPANISH LINER CABO BUENA ESPERANZA.

WITH THEM WILL BE ABOUT 20 GERMAN AND ITALIAN NATIONALS WHO EXPRESSED THEIR DESIRE TO RETURN TO THEIR HOMELANDS AFTER URUGUAY BROKE RELATIONS WITH THE AXIS.

APR 9 1942

THE JAPANESE LEGATION ALSO IS CLOSED BUT NONE OF THE ATTACHES IS RETURNING TO JAPAN BECAUSE ALL RESIDE IN BUENOS AIRES WHERE THEY ARE ALSO ACCREDITED AS THEIR NATION'S REPRESENTATIVES. #

HAVANA, APR. 8-(AP)-THE GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCED TODAY IT HAD REQUISITIONED 10,000 CATTLE TO ASSURE ADEQUATE MEAT SUPPLIES IN HAVANA AND WOULD, IF NECESSARY, EXTEND A 30-DAY BAN ON MEAT EXPORTS.

THE SITUATION AROSE BECAUSE CUBAN CATTLE RAISERS PREFERRED TO SELL TO THE EXPORT TRADE RATHER THAN TO THE CUBAN DOMESTIC PACKERS, WHO WERE SAID TO OFFER LOWER PRICES.

APR 9 1942

CUBA HAS LARGE HERDS OF CATTLE, WHICH HAVE BEEN INCREASED SINCE THIS COUNTRY BEGAN TO EXPORT MEAT TO THE UNITED STATES SEVERAL YEARS AGO.

LONDON, ONT., APRIL 8-(AP)-NORWAY IS WAGING TOTAL WAR AGAINST THE AXIS AND IS "AN EFFECTIVE AND COURAGEOUS ALLY IN OUR BATTLE WITH NAZISM," FRANK NELSON OF WICHITA, KAS., SAID TODAY IN AN ADDRESS TO THE CANADIAN CLUB.

APR 9 1942

NELSON WAS LECTURER IN ENGLISH AT THE UNIVERSITY OF OSLO AT THE TIME OF THE NAZI OCCUPATION AND WAS RELEASED AFTER 7 MONTHS OF INTERNMENT IN EXCHANGE FOR A GERMAN POLITICAL PRISONER.

THE CONTINUED ACTIVITY OF THE NORWEGIAN MERCHANT MARINE AND THE PASSIVE RESISTANCE OF THE NORWEGIANS UNDER NAZI RULE CONSTITUTE "ONE OF HITLER'S BIGGEST HEADACHES TODAY," HE SAID. THE MERCHANT MARINE CARRIES TO BRITAIN 51 PER CENT OF THE OIL AND ONE-THIRD OF ALL FOODSTUFFS REACHING THAT COUNTRY AND A STEADY TRICKLE OF NORWEGIANS ESCAPE FROM NORWAY TO THE FORCES OF THE UNITED NATIONS, HE SAID.

THE GESTAPO IN NORWAY IS BEING DUPED CONSTANTLY BY THE PERSISTENT NORWEGIAN UNDERGROUND WHICH CONTINUES TO MANUFACTURE SMALL ARMS AND TRAIN MEN FOR THE OVERTHROW OF THE NAZIS. A STEADY LEAK OF VITAL NAZI NEWS REACHES NORWEGIAN ESPIONAGE AGENTS WHO PASS IT ON TO BRITAIN OVER THE SHORT WAVE RADIO, HE SAID.

APR 9 1942

NIGHT LEAD GUERRILLAS

OTTAWA, APRIL 8-(AP)-HUNTERS AND TRAPPERS OF CANADA'S FAR WEST, ROUGH AND READY MEN WHO HANDLE A GUN AS EASILY AS MOST USE A TOOTH BRUSH, ARE BEING ORGANIZED INTO SMALL GUERRILLA FORMATIONS WHICH WILL FUNCTION AS WELCOMING COMMITTEES FOR ANY INVADING JAPS.

SOME 40 SUCH GUERRILLA UNITS ALREADY HAVE BEEN ORGANIZED AND AS MANY AS 150 MAY BE FORMED, SAID AN ANNOUNCEMENT BY DEFENSE MINISTER J.L.RALSTON. THEY WILL BE LOCATED IN AREAS WHERE THERE IS NO UNIT OF THE RESERVE ARMY AND THE NUMBER OF MEN IN THEM WILL VARY WITH THE NUMBER AVAILABLE.

APR 9 1942

ENTHUSIASTIC OVER THE ADDITION OF THESE OUTDOOR MEN TO CANADA'S DEFENSES, ONE OFFICIAL RECALLED THEIR GREAT VALUE AS SNIPERS IN THE LAST WAR. HE THOUGHT ANY INVADING JAPS WOULD BE LIKELY TO BE DROPPED IN THEIR TRACKS.

APR 9 1942

"THESE WOODSMEN IN THE LAST WAR NOT ONLY HAD THE HUNTER'S MARKSMANSHIP AND SKILL IN TAKING COVER," THIS OFFICIAL SAID, "BUT THEY ALSO HAD THE PATIENCE WHICH ALLOWED THEM TO WAIT UNTIL THEY WERE SURE OF HITTING THE TARGET.

"THESE WEST COAST MEN WHO HAVE HUNTED GRIZZLIES AND DEER SHOULD FIND IT EASY ENOUGH TO DEAL WITH ANY JAP WHO TRIES TO GET SOMEWHERE IN THEIR BAILIWICK."

APR 9 1942

ALTHOUGH NOT A PART OF THE ARMY, THE GUERRILLAS WILL BE RECOGNIZED BY AND ASSISTED BY THE ARMY. PROBABLY TO BE CALLED "MILITIA RANGERS," THE MEN ARE EXPECTED TO HAVE ARM BANDS BUT NOT UNIFORMS. IN THE MAIN THEY WILL USE THEIR OWN FIREARMS.

THESE IN GENERAL ARE HIGH GRADE WEAPONS.

IN ADDITION TO HAVING A GOOD WEAPON AND BEING ABLE TO USE IT SKILFULLY, THE WESTERN GUERRILLAS ALSO ARE MEN WHO KNOW THEIR OWN BUSH COUNTRY INTIMATELY.

APR 9 1942

IN SOME AREAS LUMBERJACKS ALSO ARE FORMING GUERRILLA UNITS WITH COOPERATION OF LUMBERING COMPANIES.

THE MILITIA RANGERS ARE BEING ORGANIZED UNDER MAJOR T.A.H. TAYLOR, WHO WORKS UNDER COMMAND OF PACIFIC COMMAND ARMY HEADQUARTERS. SUCH FORMATIONS ARE NOT NEEDED ON THE ATLANTIC COAST, IT WAS EXPLAINED, BECAUSE RESERVE ARMY UNITS ARE SCATTERED THROUGHOUT ALL COMMUNITIES THERE.

LONDON, APRIL 8-(AP)-FIRST OFFICER WILLIAM EDGAR, 1305 JEFFERSON AVE., WACO, TEX., OF THE BRITISH AIR TRANSPORT AUXILIARY, WAS KILLED IN A RECENT AIR ACCIDENT.

APR 9 1942

OTTAWA, APRIL 8-(AP)-LANCE CORPORAL PAUL JOHN CARPENTER OF THE ROYAL CANADIAN ARMY SERVICE CORPS, WHOSE AUNT, MISS VERA MCNULTY, RESIDES AT THE PATRICIA CLUB, 2300 WASHINGTON BLVD., CHICAGO, WAS REPORTED AS DEAD OVERSEAS IN A CASUALTY LIST RELEASED TODAY BY THE CANADIAN (ACTIVE) ARMY.

OTTAWA, APR 8-(AP)-MAGISTRATE GLENN STRIKE TODAY RESERVED JUDGMENT UNTIL APRIL 15 IN FOUR CHARGES UNDER THE DEFENSE OF CANADA REGULATIONS AGAINST THE OTTAWA FRENCH-LANGUAGE NEWSPAPER LE DROIT.

THE CHARGES WERE ORDERED MADE BY JUSTICE MINISTER LOUIS ST.LAURENT FOLLOWING PUBLICATION IN LE DROIT OF AN ITEM DEALING WITH BRITISH AIR RAIDS ON RENAULT INDUSTRIES IN THE PARIS SUBURBS AND AN ARTICLE IN THE COLUMN "DAY BY DAY" IN WHICH RAIDS ON OCCUPIED FRANCE WERE DISCUSSED.

APR 9 1942

DEFENSE COUNSEL ENTERED PLEAS OF INNOCENCE TO THE CHARGES.

NEW YORK, APRIL 8-(AP)-IF YOU FIND YOURSELF WITHOUT A CIGARETTE "SOMEWHERE IN THE PACIFIC" AND NAVAL LIEUT. EDWARD H. O'HARE IS AROUND, JUST ASK HIM FOR ONE--HE'S GOT 230,000 OF THEM.

APR 9 1942

THE GRUMMAN AIRCRAFT ENGINEERING CORPORATION ON LONG ISLAND ANNOUNCED LAST NIGHT RECEIPT OF A CABLEGRAM FROM O'HARE ACKNOWLEDGING ITS GIFT OF THE CIGARETTES, SENT AFTER THE NAVY FLIER HAD BAGGED SIX JAPANESE BOMBERS IN HIS GRUMMAN "WILD CAT."

"YOU BUILD THEM," O'HARE CABLED, "AND WE'LL FLY THEM, AND BETWEEN US WE CAN'T BE BEATEN."

APR 9 1942

WASHINGTON, APRIL 8-(AP)-CANADIAN OFFICIALS HAVE ADVISED THE WAR PRODUCTION BOARD THAT INCREASED CANADIAN ALUMINUM SUPPLIES CAN BE SENT INTO THE UNITED STATES ONLY AT THE EXPENSE OF NEWSPRINT PRODUCTION, IT WAS LEARNED TODAY.

ADEQUATE HYDROELECTRIC POWER FACILITIES ARE NOT AVAILABLE TO FILL PRESENT UNITED STATES DEMANDS FOR BOTH MATERIALS, WPB WAS TOLD, AND THIS COUNTRY MUST MAKE A CHOICE.

IN ADDITION TO SUPPLYING MOST OF THE NEWSPRINT FOR AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS, CANADA IS A MAJOR SOURCE OF ALUMINUM AND HAS BEGUN A LARGE EXPANSION OF ITS MAGNESIUM PRODUCTION FACILITIES.

WPB HAS BEEN ASKED TO DETERMINE WHETHER THE PRESENT RATE OF CANADIAN NEWSPRINT OUTPUT IS TO BE CONTINUED, OR WHETHER THIS GOVERNMENT SHOULD REQUEST THAT POWER BE DIVERTED TO BOOST PRODUCTION OF ALUMINUM AND MAGNESIUM PLANTS.

APR 9 1942

THE PROBLEM IS BEING STUDIED BY THE REQUIREMENTS COMMITTEE, HEADED BY WILLIAM L. BATT, WPB MATERIALS DIRECTOR.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 8-(AP)-PRICE ADMINISTRATOR LEON HENDERSON, SEEING PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TODAY FOR THE FIRST TIME SINCE HIS RETURN FROM A TRIP TO BRAZIL AND PUERTO RICO, SAID HE HAD DISCUSSED THE GENERAL PRICE QUESTION AND PRESENTED "GENERAL OBSERVATIONS ON WHAT I WOULD CALL THE ENTHUSIASTIC, COOPERATIVE ATTITUDE OF THE BRAZILIANS TOWARD US."

APR 9 1942

ASKED HOW THE GENERAL SITUATION AS TO PRICES WAS, HENDERSON SAID THAT "THE ONES WE CAN GET TO ARE HOLDING VERY WELL."

HE ADDED THAT "WE ARE ADDRESSING OURSELVES MORE TOWARD THE COST-OF-LIVING ITEMS NOW BECAUSE WE HAVE GOT TO."

30.24 — 158.57

REGARDING HIS TRIP TO BRAZIL, HENDERSON SAID THE WHOLE ATMOSPHERE WAS "GENERALLY GOOD." THE CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN NATIONS AT RIO DE JANEIRO, THE PRICE ADMINISTRATOR DECLARED, "DID A LOT" FOR BRAZILIAN AMERICAN RELATIONS. APR 9 1942

ASKED WHETHER HE HAD GONE TO BRAZIL TO SMOOTH OUT SOME ANGLE OF A RUBBER AGREEMENT, HENDERSON SAID THAT HE HAD PARTICIPATED IN SOME CONFERENCES ON SUPPLY PROBLEMS INCLUDING THOSE INVOLVING MAGNESIUM, BUT ONLY WHEN JEFFERSON CAFFERY, THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR, ASKED HIM TO PARTICIPATE.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 8-(AP)-A REPORT OF JAPANESE PENETRATION IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS WHICH WAS SUPPRESSED FOR NEARLY 20 YEARS WAS MADE PUBLIC TODAY BY SENATOR STEWART (D-TENN), CHAIRMAN OF A SENATE IMMIGRATION SUBCOMMITTEE CONSIDERING LEGISLATION FOR STRICTER SUPERVISION OF ENEMY ALIENS. APR 9 1942

THE REPORT WAS MADE BY A COMMISSION SENT TO THE ISLANDS IN 1923 TO INVESTIGATE LABOR CONDITIONS BUT WHICH FOUND A JAPANESE "MILITARY MENACE" AND RETURNED TO REPORT THAT "THE QUESTION OF NATIONAL DEFENSE SUBMERGES ALL OTHERS INTO INSIGNIFICANCE."

STEWART TERMED THE REPORT "PROPHETIC OF WHAT HAPPENED AT PEARL HARBOR" AND SAID IN CONNECTION WITH ITS SUPPRESSION THAT "APPARENTLY APPEASEMENT OF JAPAN WAS PRACTICED LONG BEFORE THIS ADMINISTRATION CAME INTO POWER." APR 9 1942

ON THE BASIS OF TESTIMONY BY MAJOR GENERAL CHARLES P.SUMMERALL, THEN IN COMMAND OF THE HAWAIIAN ARMY POST, THE COMMISSION REPORTED A HEAVY CONCENTRATION OF JAPANESE SETTLEMENTS AT STRATEGIC MILITARY POINTS AND A PATTERN FOR JAPANESE DOMINATION OF THE ISLANDS.

THE REPORT PREDICTED THAT "WHEN THE INFINITE PATIENCE OF THIS ASIATIC RACE HAS REACHED THE POINT FOR ACTION, THE CLOUD WILL BREAK

30.24 — 15857

[redacted]LL WAKE UP TO THE FACT THAT IT HAS DEVELOPED WITHIN [redacted] TERRITORY A RACE WHOSE SOLIDARITY AND MAINTENANCE OF ASIATIC IDEALS WILL SWEEP EVERYTHING AMERICAN FROM THE ISLANDS." APR 9 1942

IT INCLUDED A MAP WHICH THE COMMISSION HELD "VERY INTERESTING FROM A MILITARY DEFENSE POINT OF VIEW WHEN WE NOTE THAT THE JAPANESE RESIDENTIAL DISTRICTS ARE ADJACENT TO THE VARIOUS FORTS," INCLUDING THE PEARL HARBOR NAVY YARD. THE COMMISSION VIEWED THE SITUATION AS INDICATING "SOME METHOD ON THE PART OF THE JAPANESE TO SEGREGATE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD OF THESE FORTS BECAUSE MOST OF THE FORTS WERE IN EXISTENCE BEFORE THE JAPANESE ESTABLISHED THEIR SEGREGATED DISTRICTS IN ANYTHING LIKE THE PRESENT DENSITY." APR 9 1942

THE REPORT CITED AS "ANOTHER SERIOUS ELEMENT OF DANGER" A FINDING THAT MOST OF THE WATER PUMPING STATIONS AND TELEPHONE EXCHANGES WERE MANNED BY JAPANESE, AND THAT JAPANESE CONTROLLED 90 PER CENT OF THE AUTOMOBILE OR TAXICAB STANDS AND ALL OF THE FISHING BOATS, WHICH HAD A CAPACITY OF 11,000 MEN. APR 9 1942

THE COMMISSION WAS APPOINTED BY JAMES J.DAVIS AS SECRETARY OF LABOR ON CONGRESSIONAL AUTHORIZATION FOLLOWING HEARINGS BY A HOUSE COMMITTEE ON RACIAL LABOR PROBLEMS IN THE ISLANDS. ITS CHAIRMAN WAS L.E. SHEPPARD, THEN PRESIDENT OF THE ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT ASKED THAT ITS FINDINGS BE KEPT CONFIDENTIAL. A LETTER TO DAVIS FROM CHARLES E.HUGHES, THEN SECRETARY OF STATE, SAID IN PART: APR 9 1942

"IT WOULD BE INADVISABLE TO TRANSMIT THE REPORT IN ITS PRESENT FORM TO CONGRESS WITHOUT SOME UNDERSTANDING AT LEAST THAT IT WAS TO BE TREATED AS CONFIDENTIAL AND NOT PRINTED. IT CONTAINS STATEMENTS WHICH MIGHT BE CONSTRUED AS OFFENSIVE AND WHICH IN SOME RESPECTS ARE DIFFICULT OF PROOF. IT ASSUMES, AND THIS IS READLLY THE BASIS OF THE REPORT, THAT THE HAWAIIAN-BORN JAPANESE ARE JAPANESE AT HEART, AND NOT AMERICAN AT ALL, AND INTEND TO SEIZE THE ISLAND FOR THE PURPOSE OF FURTHERING THE CAUSE OF IMPERIAL JAPAN."

STEWART HAD PROPOSED TO RELEASE THE REPORT YESTERDAY BUT SENATOR JOHNSON (R-CALIF) DEMURRED ON THE GROUND THAT IT MIGHT CAUSE MISUNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE LEGISLATIVE AND ADMINISTRATIVE BRANCHES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

MEDICAL OFFICERS

ACHIEVE MARVELS

PANZERS CHARGED

RIGHT THROUGH

AID STATION (800)

BY STEPHEN G.BARBER

(ADVANCE)-WITH BRITISH FORCES IN NORTH AFRICA-(CORRESPONDENCE OF WIDE WORLD)--A SMALL ARMY CAR BOUNCED OVER THE UNEVEN FLOOR OF THE DESERT, FAR FROM THE NOISE OF WAR.

LIEUTENANT GERALD WOOD AND HIS DRIVER, PRIVATE GEORGE NICKS, WERE PROCEEDING TO A CERTAIN UNIT AT A CERTAIN POINT--PROVIDED IT HADN'T MOVED.

A FLASH, A BANG, A CLOUD OF DUST, AND THE TWO MEN WERE HURLED OUT OF THE CAR.

AN OLD AND COMMON STORY--THE RIGHT FRONT WHEEL HAD PASSED OVER A LAND MINE PLANTED BY THE ENEMY BEFORE LEAVING. DOZENS OF VEHICLES HAD SKIRTED IT; THIS ONE TAPPED IT.

APR 9 1942

THE TWO LAY STUNNED ON THE SAND. WOOD'S LEFT LEG WAS DISTORTED BELOW THE KNEE, HIS LEFT ARM SLASHED BY FLYING METAL, HIS FACE CUT AS HE FELL. NICKS HAD A NASTY GASH ON THE FOREHEAD.

THERE THEY WERE, WOUNDED AND BLEEDING. NO OTHER HUMAN BEING WAS IN SIGHT AND 400 MILES OF DESERT SEPARATED THEM FROM THE NILE VALLEY WITH ITS TREES, ITS LAWNS, ITS CITIES, ITS HOSPITALS.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THEM? WHAT HAPPENS TO HUNDREDS OF OTHERS WOUNDED LIKE THEM? THAT IS OUR STORY.

NICKS CAME ROUND ENOUGH TO REMEMBER HIS FIELD DRESSING, AND THOUGH HIS HANDS WERE BRUISED AND NUMB, HE GOT IT OUT AND APPLIED IT TO HIS WOUND. THIS FIELD DRESSING, WHICH ALL SOLDIERS CARRY, CONSISTS OF A PAD OF ANTISEPTIC ABSORBENT ATTACHED TO A YARD OF TOUGH BANDAGE.

APR 9 1942

THEN HE STAGGERED TO THE OTHER SIDE OF THE TWISTED WRECK TO SEE WHAT HAD BECOME OF HIS OFFICER.

"ARE YOU ALL RIGHT?" ASKED THE MUCH-WORSE-WOUNDED OFFICER AS THE PRIVATE APPEARED.

NICKS GRUNTED THAT HE WAS AND QUICKLY IMPROVISED A TOURNIQUET TO STEM THE TORRENT OF ARTERIAL BLOOD GUSHING FROM WOOD'S ARM. TO HELP STOP THE FLOW, WOOD JAMMED HIS RIGHT FIST INTO HIS LEFT ARMPIT, HIS FACE WHITE UNDER ITS MASK OF CUTS AND SAND.

A CAR CAME UP AND ITS OCCUPANTS JUMPED OUT. CARS HAVE A WAY OF COMING OUT OF NOWHERE IN THE DESERT. THEY OFFERED ASSISTANCE, BUT

30.24—15859

ON PERCEIVING THE BEST THING THEY COULD DO WAS TO SUMMON AN AMBULANCE. THE MEN DROVE OFF.

NEWS TRAVELS FAST IN THE DESERT AND BEFORE LONG AN AMBULANCE WAS THERE.

"A NICE ONE," SAID THE MEDICAL ORDERLY. HE GAVE WOOD MORPHINE FOLLOWED BY A SHOT OF ANTI-TETANUS SERUM. NICKS DIDN'T NEED THE MORPHINE, BUT HE GOT THE ANTI-TET.

A BUMPY RIDE AND THE TWO ARRIVED AT A DRESSING STATION--A TRUCK WITH A CANVAS LEAN-TO ATTACHED TO IT. HERE TWO MEDICAL OFFICERS EXAMINED THE PATIENTS.

NICKS WAS FOUND TO HAVE A FRACTURED SKULL AND SLIGHT SHELL SHOCK. WOOD'S LEG WAS FRACURED, HIS ARM WOULD HAVE TO BE OPERATED ON, AND HE WAS WEAK FROM LOSS OF BLOOD. THERE WERE OTHER PATIENTS AT THE STATION WHOSE WOUNDS WERE SO SLIGHT THEY COULD BE FIXED UP RIGHT THERE.

WOOD AND NICKS SPENT AN HOUR AT THE STATION, DURING WHICH THEY RECEIVED FURTHER EMERGENCY TREATMENT, THEN WERE PUT IN ANOTHER AMBULANCE FOR A MAIN DRESSING STATION.

THIS STATION, STAFFED BY A SURGEON, AN ASSISTANT SURGEON, AN ANESTHETIST AND A COUPLE OF ORDERLIES, INCLUDED TWO BIG TRUCKS, THE GIFT OF A NEW YORKER, WHICH COULD BE BACKED AGAINST EACH OTHER TO FORM TWO CONNECTING ROOMS--AN OPERATING THEATER WITH X-RAY, AND A STERILIZING ROOM CONTAINING A GENERATOR PLANT.

HERE WOOD WAS GIVEN A BLOOD TRANSFUSION--BOTTLED BLOOD WAS ON HAND. THEN BOTH WERE CONSIDERED STRONG ENOUGH TO MAKE THE JOURNEY BACK TO THE STILL BIGGER C.C.S.--CASUALTY CLEARING STATION.

AT THE C.C.S. WOOD HAD HIS LEG SET AND HIS ARM SEWED UP. THEY CLAPPED THE LEG, ONCE THE BONE HAD BEEN TEASED TOGETHER AND THE BRUISED TISSUE CUT AWAY, INTO WHAT IS KNOWN AS A "CLOSED PLASTER."

THE CLOSED PLASTER TREATMENT, BROUGHT INTO PROMINENCE BY THE SPANISH SURGEON TRUETA IN THE WAR THERE, HAS PROVED EXTREMELY EFFECTIVE. THE PATIENT CAN BE MOVED PAINLESSLY AND ALMOST IMMEDIATELY, THUS SPEEDING UP EVACUATION OF WOUNDED FROM THE BATTLE AREA.

SULFA DRUGS ARE USED EXTENSIVELY IN WOUND TREATMENT. THEY ARE DUSTED INTO THE AFFECTED PART AND ALSO ADMINISTERED INTERNALLY AS A PROPHYLACTIC.

NICKS' SKULL LOOKED AS THOUGH IT MIGHT BE A TRICKY JOB, AND AS HE SEEMED ABLE TO STAND IT, IT WAS DECIDED TO SEND HIM BACK TO RAILHEAD AND GET HIM TO BASE, WHERE SOME OF THE EMPIRE'S FOREMOST SPECIALISTS IN HEAD CASES ARE WORKING.

HE SOON WAS BEING OPERATED ON BY A SURGEON WHO IN NORMAL TIMES GOT $500 FOR AN ORDINARY OPERATION.

WOOD, WHO ARRIVED AT BASE A DAY LATER, WAS AN ORTHOPEDIC CASE. SEVENTY FIVE PER CENT OF THE CASUALTIES SUFFERED IN THE FIERCER PART OF THE DESERT CAMPAIGN HAVE BEEN ORTHOPEDIC--CONNECTED WITH BONES, JOINTS, TENDONS AND NERVES.

MEDICAL OFFICERS HAVE ACHIEVED MARVELS IN THE DESERT, WORKING UNDER UNPARALLELED HANDICAPS, THE GREATEST OF WHICH IS LACK OF WATER, NEEDED FOR STEAM STERILING AND DILUTING ANTISEPTICS.

DRESSING STATIONS HAVE MOVED FORWARD AND BACKWARD WITH THE COURSE

OF THE CAMPAIGN, OFTEN OUT OF CONTACT WITH STATIONS FURTHER BACK.

ONE NEW ZEALAND CASUALTY CLEARING STATION CHANGED HANDS FOUR TIMES, BUT DOCTORS AND ORDERLIES WORKED ON, OPERATING ON FRIEND AND FOE ALIKE. THE GERMANS DIDN'T INTERFERE, EXCEPT TO TAKE SOME OF THE WATER AND EQUIPMENT. GENERAL ROMMEL HIMSELF LOOKED OVER THE STATION AND SILENTLY WATCHED THE DOCTORS AT THEIR WORK.

A GERMAN TANK FORMATION CHARGED RIGHT THROUGH THE MIDST OF A SOUTH AFRICAN CLEARING STATION. BUT EVEN THE RUMBLING AND CREAKING OF TANKS JUST OUTSIDE THE TENT DOESN'T MAKE A GOOD SURGEON'S HAND TREMBLE.

PLASMA, BLOOD MINUS ITS RED CELLS, KEPT IN DRIED FORM TO BE MIXED WITH DISTILLED WATER, IS USED TO TREAT BURNS. IT IS ALSO INJECTED INTO THE VEINS TO THWART DELAYED SHOCK. DELAYED SHOCK IS THE IMP OF CASUALTIES--IN SOME CASES A PATIENT WILL APPEAR WELL ON THE ROAD TO RECOVERY AND THEN DIE SUDDENLY OF DELAYED SHOCK.

GANGRENE, COMMON IN THE LAST WAR, IS RARE, DUE TO THE USE OF IMPROVED PROPHYLATICS.

IN VAST DESERT DISTANCES, THE AIR AMBULANCE HAS PROVED USEFUL FOR URGENT CASES. MORE THAN 1,000 WOUNDED HAVE BEEN MOVED FROM THE DESERT TO THE NILE VALLEY BY AIR.

SHEER WEIGHT OF ENEMY CRUSHES U. S.-FILIPINO DEFENSE ON PENINSULA

Americans Outnumbered And Exhausted By Long Battle

Fate Of Troops Feared To Be Capture Or Death

APR 10 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 9—The epic of Bataan Peninsula ended today with the Japanese victorious through the sheer overwhelming weight of hordes of fresh troops—and with most of the 36,853 American and Filipino soldiers slain or facing captivity.

Cut off from reinforcements, outnumbered by five, six, seven or even eight to one, tragically deficient in air power and exhausted by short rations, disease and constant battle, a courageous band of fighting men was forced to a bitter but inevitable defeat.

Wave On Wave Of Japs

For days the Japs had been attacking in waves, sending rank upon rank of fresh troops against sleepless and fatigue-ridden men.

Today Lieut. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright, who took command when Gen. Douglas MacArthur was transferred to Australia, reported that the enemy had enveloped his eastern flank, manned by his Second Corps.

APR 10 1942

To relieve the situation he ordered the First Corps to counter-attack. It did, but the "complete physical exhaustion" of the troops made it unsuccessful. In view of these developments, the War Department concluded and announced that "this situation indicates the probability that the defenses on Bataan have been overcome."

"Long But Gallant Defense"

And to this, Secretary of War Stimson added at a press conference:

"Our troops, outnumbered and worn down by succesive attacks by fresh troops, exhausted by insufficient rations and disease prevalent on that peninsula, finally had their lines broken and enveloped by the enemy. . . .

"A long but gallant defense has been worn down and overthrown.

"We have nothing but praise and admiration for the commanders and the men who have conducted this epic chapter in American history."

Will Not Give Up

And he spoke the views of a visibly distressed Capital when he continued:

"This is only a temporary loss. We shall not stop until we drive the invaders from the islands."

With the battle ended, he was able to announce for the first time that urgent efforts had been made to get reinforcements to MacArthur and Wainwright, despite Japanese control of sea and air.

Brig. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, now Minister to New Zealand, had been given the special mission of sending in supplies. Several shiploads arrived, but for every supply ship that reached Corregidor an average of nearly two was lost. Because of those which ran the gantlet successfully, however, the army of Bataan never lacked ammunition, although it had been on short rations for weeks.

End Was Foreseen

The end was foreseen yesterday, apparently, for Stimson said President Roosevelt then sent a message to Wainwright, praising him and his men without limit, and authorizing him to make any decision necessary to meet the developing situation.

Filipino soldiers made up the bulk of the 36,853 fighting men on Bataan, Stimson explained. The American contingent comprised the Thirty-first Infantry Regiment, the crews of two tank battalions, units of self-propelled artillery, air force ground crews and sailors and marines from the abandoned Cavite naval base.

Airforce personnel numbered 5,000 men at the start, but there was a heavy loss of aircraft at the opening of the campaign, and in its later stages some 2,000 Air Corps men fought as infantrymen.

Corregidor, and the other Rocky Island fortresses at the entrance to Manila Bay, were still in American hands, Stimson disclosed, but how long they could hold out was questionable. He foresaw resistance from isolated bands of fighters in northern Luzon.

This, aside from the fact that more than half of the islands in the archipelago were still held by Americans or Filipinos, was all that the United States could salvage from the situation. And it was pointed out that the still unconquered islands are not capable of effective resistance and have not been gobbled up by the Japs only because the Japs do not need them.

Gloom Apparent In Capital

However long the end had been expected it brought gloom and an obvious feeling of depression to the capital. This attitude, however, was mixed with a reaction that this country must tighten its belt and work and fight as never before.

Senator Pepper (Dem., Fla.), for one, said the development called "for something in the nature of total mobilization of American resources and man power." He added that "we have a job ahead of us that challenges the best we can do," and said "the American people are going to demand that we take the leadership in launching an offensive against the Axis on every front."

Blame Laid On Congress

"We'll be back," said Chairman May of the House Military Committee. "When we take Tokyo, the Philippines will be a damn simple matter. If Congress had followed President Roosevelt's advice a year and a half ago and lifted restrictions on where troops could be sent, there would have been no question about holding the Philippines."

Just what happened in the last few days of the battle of Bataan is not yet known in detail, but the generally worded communiques of the War Department had made it obvious that an unremitting Japanese offensive was bringing a crisis near.

Early in the week, the defending army was forced to fall back to new positions. Last night's communique said the Japanese were continuing their drive with "great vigor," and that a heavy attack on the new positions was in progress.

Bombers Were Active

"Dive bombers and attack aircraft are bombing and machine gunning our front lines. Heavy bombers are continuing their attacks on our rear areas near the southern extremity of the Bataan peninsula.

"The present Japanese attack is the longest sustained drive of the enemy since operations began. Waves of shock troops have attacked almost continuously, without regard to casualties, which have been heavy on both sides."

The next chapter came with this morning's communique:

"A message from General Wainwright at Fort Mills just received at the War Department states that the Japanese attack on Bataan peninsula succeeded in enveloping the east flank of our lines, in the position held by the Second Corps. An attack by the First Corps ordered to relieve the situation failed, due to complete physical exhaustion of the troops.

"Full details are not available but this situation indicates the probability that the defenses on Bataan have been overcome."

Stimson's statement followed.

The battle of Bataan began over three months ago. In late December, General MacArthur's men were deployed about Manila, opposing Japanese spearheads thrusting at the city from two directions.

Following a plan which President Roosevelt said was drawn up years before, MacArthur, by a bold and skillful maneuver, consolidated his forces on Bataan peninsula, yielding the Philippine capital to the enemy.

For three months, the army of Bataan not only held its mountainous and jungle-clad stronghold, but worked havoc upon the enemy. Attack after attack by heavily superior troops was beaten back.

Torpedo Boats Also Active

Motor torpedo boats raided Japanese shipping in nearby Subic Bay, a point at which many reinforcements were landed. A few patched-up planes spectacularly raided the shipping there with heavy enemy losses.

By the end of February, the Japs had been fought to a standstill, with losses many times those of MacArthur's men. Disgraced, the Japanese commander in chief, Lieut. Gen. Masaharu Homma, committed ceremonial suicide, it was reliably reported. He was succeeded by Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita, fresh from his conquest of Singapore.

A lull of fully a month followed, while the Japanese landed enormous numbers of reinforcements and supplies, and prepared in every way from the crushing offensive which finally ended today in what, on a basis of the number of men slain or captured, was one of the most severe military reverses ever suffered by American arms in a foreign war.

But the Battle of Bataan cannot be measured in such terms. As an epic of gallantry, of indomitable courage in the face of tremendous odds, it will live with the greatest episodes of America's military history.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 9, (AP)—Radio messages still were being relayed tonight to Corregidor, strong evidence that that island entrance to Manila Bay was holding out in defiance of the Japanese who today crushed the American defenses on Bataan Peninsula.

Radio companies continued to accept messages to Corregidor after the fall of Bataan Peninsula was announced It was confirmed tonight that radio communication with the fortress was being maintained

Bataan Troops May Be on Island

There was a possibility that some of the defenders of Bataan may have escaped to the island.

The last message received by The Associated Press from Dean Schedler, its reporter in the Bataan area, came through last Monday. It was filed Easter Sunday, and told of troops "under the tall, peaceful trees," observing Easter with their chaplains and screaming shells and bursting bombs.

Schedler, born in Stillwater, Okla., in 1914, went to Manila in 1936 and escaped to Corregidor when the capital fell to the Japanese. He has reported news of the fighting for The Associated Press since the departure of Clark Lee, AP's war correspondent who won high praise for his dispatches from the Bataan front. Lee arrived recently in Melbourne, Australia.

Bataan Asked Halt in Hostilities, Say Japs

TOKYO (From Japanese Broadcasts), Friday, April 10 (AP)— The Domei news agency said today that "60,000 Filipino and American Troops resisting the Japanese on Bataan peninsula have begged for a halt in hostilities after six days of fierce Japanese assault."

"Details of the conditions of surrender are not yet disclosed," said the Domei dispatch, "nor is it known yet whether the Japanese forces have decided to accept the terms."

The dispatch was dated Thursday, "with the Japanese forces on the Bataan front."

APR 10 1942

Secretary of War Stimson said that the Bataan defense had been "worn down and overthrown." Details of the end of the defense of the peninsula were not forthcoming immediately.

Berlin Reports Capitulation

BERLIN (from German broadcasts), April 9 (AP).—A Shanghai newspaper report said that Lieutenant General Jonathan M. Wainwright, commander of the American-Filipino forces on the Bataan Peninsula, asked for an armistice today.

This statement appears in a special report from the Bataan front to the Japanese newspaper Tairiku Shimpo.

The Japanese commander asked General Wainwright to meet him for a conference on details of capitulation at Ramao, on the eastern shores of Bataan.

This roundabout Axis report is not confirmed from any other source and does not in itself appear to have any official status.

There is no town of Ramao which would fit the description given in the dispatch. There is, however, a Lamao, on the inner shore of Bataan, facing Manila Bay.

M'Arthur Confers On Action To Follow Fall Of Bataan

He And His Staff, In Australia, Reported Deeply Affected By Disaster In Philippines

APR 10 1942

By CLARK LEE

Associated Press Correspondent

Melbourne, Friday, April 10—Gen. Douglas MacArthur was informed late last night of the fall of Bataan, whose defense he directed on the scene until his transfer to Australia in March.

He went into a conference with his aides and was expected to issue a statement later.

The headquarters staff here was deeply affected by the news because, as one officer said, "all our friends are there."

The officers appeared surprised that the end had come so soon, stating that military operations reports received from General Wainwright in the past twenty-four hours had not indicated any sudden worsening of the American position, although that position had been critical since the all-out Japanese land and air offensive was launched last week.

Inasmuch as reinforcements were not sent, the end would have been the same under MacArthur as under Wainwright or any other commander.

At the time I left Bataan, some supplies already were beginning to run low, especially medicines and certain types of ammunition.

Artillery was beginning to wear out and there was too little artillery to begin with.

Gasoline stocks were dwindling, thus hampering the transport of food and munitions. The lack of fruit and fresh food was causing illness. Most of the troops were eating rice and canned salmon.

There was difficulty in obtaining sufficient rice for the Filipino soldiers, to whom it is a most important food.

There was insufficient wire for entanglements and field telephones, although the Signal Corps did a magnificent job of maintaining communications.

Rescue Difficult

Only a handful of small craft—mostly tugs and launches—were operating between Bataan and Corregidor at the time I left.

Unless evacuation operations were begun some days ago, it is unlikely that many of General Wainwright's troops could have been ferried across from the mainland to Corregidor fortress.

Certainly little of their equipment could be saved, although it is likely that the guns were decommissioned and, if there was time, that all supplies on Bataan were destroyed.

Escape Planned

The distance from Corregidor to Bataan is more than two miles at the nearest point. Strong currents and numerous sharks make it unlikely that many swimmers could make it.

However, many American soldiers and officers had plans to avoid capture if Bataan fell. If successful, they eventually will make their way to unoccupied territory where they hope to live off the country and operate in guerrilla bands.

Force Put At 70,000

While I lack knowledge of the exact number of American and Filipino forces on Bataan, it is estimated that they never exceeded 70,000, of which only a portion were actually combat troops.

The Americans are estimated not to have exceeded 8,000, including the Thirty-first Infantry; Air Corps men, marines and sailors fighting as infantry; anti-aircraft regiments, supply troops, engineers, and the medical corps and nurses.

End Inevitable

The end for Bataan was, of course, inevitable.

Knowing the men of Bataan as I know them, I am sure many of them died firmly believing help was on the way.

Many told me they had rather die than be captured.

Now the survivors can only hope for early American victory to end their ordeal as prisoners.

From press dispatches it appears that the Japanese made a decisive break-through along the Manila Bay side of the American lines.

APR 10 1942

Positions Exposed

This area is pie-shaped, a slice of rice paddies extending into the hills being the only flat portion of the peninsula.

There the American positions were exposed to shellfire from Japanese guns behind Mount Natib and also to low-level dive-bombing and strafing attacks. Japanese tanks and mechanized units also could cooperate there.

If the Japanese now are able to occupy all Bataan, the position of Corregidor will be critical, since it will be under artillery seige from both North and South.

Japanese guns can completely block Manila bay, making it impossible for supplies to reach Corregidor, which either must fall through attrition or direct assault.

As long as its supplies last, however, Corregidor can make any Japanese storming attempts extremely costly.

U. S.-Filipino Defense "Will Never Be Forgotten," Says Daily Mail

Campaign An Operation That "Astonished The World," News Chronicle Writes

[By the Associated Press]

London, Friday, April 10—The American-Filipino defense of Bataan "will never be forgotten," the Daily Mail said today, keynoting a sentiment expressed by the entire London morning press.

The news from Bataan weighed heavily on [illegible], watching the last-ditch de[illegible] closely.

"The whole world of free men," said the Mail, "will join in paying tribute to the magnificent stand made by the American and Filipino troops in the Philippine Islands. They have written a chapter of stubborn heroism which will never be forgotten."

"Of Utmost Value"

"The delaying action in the Philippines has been of the utmost value to the Allies, the Mail said.

"Even now," the paper continued, "their possession of Corregidor will deny the use of Manila to the Japanese as a secure naval base.

"But the fall of Bataan means that the enemy will be able to divert a large body of troops to the battle of Burma and the projected assault on India. The Japanese position is thus materially improved and is further strengthened by the loss of British cruisers."

The News Chronicle called the campaign "a defense that astonished the world."

"Most of the defenders," this paper continued, "have died fighting against overwhelming odds. . . . Wainwright had carried the fight with a skill and determination worthy of his predecessor.

"The long drawn-out resistance will rank with the defense of Malta, Tobruk and Sevastopol among the outstanding episodes of the war."

The people of these islands have been proud of the sturdy fight of the United States and Filipino defenders. The newspapers have had to explain frequently why land and sea reinforcements could not be sent to their aid.

The exploits on Bataan have been used also as the texts of editorial sermons on Colonial policy, writers pointing to the moral of freedom as the impetus which made the Pilipinos fight so hard.

The Military View

Military experts, realizing more fully than average Britons what skill and courage was needed to carry on war under such conditions, assert Bataan may have altered the whole course of the Pacific war.

"They have kept several divisions of crack Japanese assault troops tied up when the Japanese command may have wanted them elsewhere, possibly even for striking at Australia before the defenses there were ready," one said.

"Japan won't get another chance like that."

The best posted observers were confident that Japan now would gain little military advantage from the new developments because they must still maintain a very large garrison on Luzon and reorganize their battered shock divisions.

SIEGE OF BATAAN COMES TO AN END AFTER 3 MONTHS

APR 10 1942

U. S., Filipino Troops Beat Off Numerous Attacks Until Final Battle.

WASHINGTON, April 9.—(AP) The probability that the defenses of Bataan had been overcome was acknowledged by the War department today almost exactly three months after the siege of the Philippine peninsula started.

The immediate preliminary to the epic struggle was General Douglas MacArthur's repulse of a Japanese attack on Jan. 5 at the northeast gateway to the peninsula. At least 700 of the enemy were killed.

Permitted Withdrawal

This engagement in the southwest corner of adjoining Pampanga province, permitted the withdrawal of MacArthur's forces, which had just been reunited after the frustration of the invaders' attempt to trap the American-Filipino troops in or near abandoned Manila.

In Bataan, MacArthur possessed a natural fortress, which both supported and was aided by the island fortifications which denied the foe the use of Manila bay.

For some four decades, President Roosevelt has said, it had been planned if necessary to retire to this position. MacArthur's men, gradually forced southward, beat off at least six major assaults of the enemy before fighting the Japanese to a complete standstill by the end of February.

Lull Ends

After a relative lull of nearly a month, ominous signs of mounting peril to the defenders began to appear late in March when War department communiques began to hint of increasing enemy artillery concentrations. Some guns of medium caliber, probably firing six and nine inch shells, were reported moved to Bataan around the bay from the south shore, where they had been hammering without decisive effect at the bay's forts.

It was MacArthur's effective artillery support, military observers believed, which was largely responsible for smashing the first phase of the Japanese offensive under Lieutenant General Masaharu Homma.

ONE U.S. REGIMENT AIDED IN BATTLE TO HOLD BATAAN

APR 10 1942

31st Infantry, Strongest All-American Unit in Philippines Fight.

WASHINGTON, April 9 — (AP) The colorful 31st infantry regiment, "America's foreign legion," shared in the glory of the three month defense of Bataan.

Only this unit was identified by Secretary Stimson today in disclosing that fewer than 37,000 Americans and Filipinos were left fighting when the Japanese overwhelmed the peninsula.

Sometimes called "Manila's own" because the Philippine capital had been its headquarters since its formation in 1916, the regiment was believed to be numerically the strongest single all-American unit among the defenders.

Never Served in U. S.

It had the unique distinction among all regular army regiments, aside from the Philippine scouts, of never having served in the United States. Until the Japanese invasion, the regiment's proudest memory was of serving in Siberia in 1918-20 and in the defense of the Shanghai International settlement in 1932 during the Sino-Japanese fighting of that year.

The commander at Shanghai was Major General Lorenzo D. Gasser, then a colonel, and now director of civilian protection for the Office of Civilian Defense.

But for the valor of its two thousand or more fighting men, the defense of Bataan might have collapsed weeks ago.

Made 9-Day Stand

For nine days early in January the regiment held off the invaders at Abucay hacienda, in the northwest of the peninsula, at a time when General MacArthur's forces were withdrawing toward the shelter of the Corregidor fortress.

At that time Clark Lee, Associated Press correspondent, reported the commander to be Charles Steel Davidson, but official war records listed the commander as Colonel Irving E. Doane, a native of Hampton, Me.

Another recent commander was Colonel Albert M. Jones. Later promoted to major general, he was put in command of the southern wing of MacArthur's army at the start of the invasion. Along with Lieutenant General Jonathan Wainwright, he received the Distinguished Service Cross.

At the time of the January engagement, the battalion commanders were reported by Lee to have been: First, Major Lloyd G. Moffett, Denver, Colo.; Second, Lieutenant Colonel Edward H. Bowes, San Francisco; and Third, Lieutenant Colonel Jasper Brady, Seattle, Wash.

Heaviest Single Defeat For U.S. in Foreign War

WASHINGTON, April 9. (AP)—The final battle of Bataan appeared likely today to be recorded as numerically the heaviest reversal ever suffered by an American force in a single engagement with a foreign foe.

Qualified military historians said no American force as large as the 35,853 effectives last reported to be still fighting the Japanese had been destroyed in a single battle of any of the nation's foreign wars beginning with the American revolution.

Losses of General John J. Pershing's victorious American expeditionary force were heavier in killed and wounded in the final 1918 Meuse-Argonne offensive but this was a campaign extended over some four months. Heavier losses also were suffered in the Civil war, but not against a foreign foe.

The Philippine area overrun by the Japanese also represent virtually the only major territory wrested from the United States in war.

Military historians noted that American land forces sustained numerous defeats in the Revolution—at Long Island, Brandywine and elsewhere—but the number of troops involved was relatively small.

The same was true for the war of 1812 which was largely a series of disasters for ill-trained and ill-equipped American soldiers until General Andrew Jackson's victory at New Orleans. The wars with Mexico and Spain were won without serious American reverses.

Sayre Declares Fall Of Bataan Is Not The End

Commissioner, Recently At Corregidor, Says Real Fight Is Only Beginning

New York, April 9 (AP)—Francis B. Sayre, United States High Commissioner to the Philippines, said tonight "the fall of Bataan is not the end."

APR 10 1942

Sayre, who returned to the United States recently after living under fire on besieged Corregidor, said "the real fight is only beginning. America will not forget Bataan."

Wendell Willkie said Bataan's loss "brings home to us again the terrible seriousness of this war and a realization of the strength of those we fight. It is going to require our utmost effort, but I believe every American tonight feels a rededication to the cause for which we fight."

Both men made their comments in brief interviews during a dinner here for United China Relief.

Eyewitness Story of Laughter And Death in Bataan Battle

APR 10 1942

American Anti-aircraft Gunners Set World Record—Jap Assaults Repulsed Again And Again—Bitter Warfare Waged In Jungle Country

NEW YORK, April 9. (AP)—The history books will tell it all carefully one day—all complete with dates that the children will perhaps learn; all smoothly integrated, as they say, by men who will then have plenty of the cozy leisure of peace to look at it with that scholastic calm that is a little easier to attain when the bombs are not falling and the guns are not echoing across the tragic slopes.

Written in Haze of Battle

This does not tell it that way; this tells the story of Bataan, of death and laughter, of a cause of splendid hopelessness, as Clark Lee told it whenever and wherever he could write it from the front—Clark Lee of the Associated Press.

This is really a history of fragments, written in the red and often terrible haze of battle. It is also a history of Americans, and of Filipinos, too, of whom it could be said in the greatest martial phrase ever uttered:

They didn't want to live always.

Here is Lee, writing on January 16, eleven days after the big enemy push got started, from his post with the 60th U. S. Coast Artillery on Bataan:

World Anti-Aircraft Record

"The sun has been up less than 40 minutes when the radiophone in the dugout beneath us crackles: 'flash, flash. Six planes flying from the China Sea just above the lower layer of clouds.'

"This battery has set a world anti-aircraft record for the number of planes downed per number of rounds fired . . . It has shot down 12 and is after its 13th.

"In front of us three Japanese planes go into a 45-degree dive and we hear a series of heavy 'whoomps' as the bombs hit. One plane is diving straight at us now too close for the big guns.

"Captain Abston grabs the interbattery phone. 'machine guns open fire,' he orders. 'Take cover!'

"But everybody is too interested to think of safety.

". . . The Japanese give us time for an uninterrupted breakfast, but immediately after they are back again.

". . . The big guns crack and the shells scream skyward.

"Some pray audibly: 'Get him, knock him down!' The first shell bursts within 50 yards of the plane and the pilot does not tarry to do more observing.

". . . These anti-aircraftmen actually pray for enemy planes to come, partly because of the fun of shooting them down, mostly because every plane destroyed is one less to harass the ground forces of the United States armed forces of the Far East.

"They realize that until the arrival of American airplanes, anti-aircraft is the USAFFE's sole means of defense against air attack.

". . . As I leave the post the gunners extract a promise to revisit them 'when something's really popping.'

"In farewell they call out 'Keep 'Em Flying' and I reply with the anti-aircraft gunner's slogan 'Keep 'Em Firing.'"

APR 10 1942

Strong Jap Attack Repulsed

Jan. 23, with U. S. Infantry forces on Bataan:

"American forces fought their third large-scale ground engagement of the war early today, turning back a strong Japanese night attack with heavy losses to the enemy. Dawn showed the ground in front of American barbed wire covered with dead and wounded Jananese . . .

"As the front quieted down, except for occasional American artillery fire, the officer commanding this sector of General MacArthur's defense described the current fighting as 'a combination of the positional fighting of the world war and old-time American-Indian warfare. There are occasional frontal attacks along definite lines, supplemented by infiltration of snipers.'"

Bataan front, Jan. 24:

"... The Japanese attempt to pass American sentries by dressing soldiers in American or Filipino uniforms. The Americans discovered an infallible way to detect them due to the inability of the Japanese to pronounce the letter L, which they say as R. They simply pick a password with numerous L's, such as 'Lollapalooz.'"

Fliers Fight Alongside Infantry

Bataan front, Jan. 29:

"A little inconvenience like the lack of airplanes hasn't stopped the flying men of the United States Army from fighting the Japanese. They have seized rifles, machine guns and grenades . . . many pilots, bombardiers, mechanics and machine-gunners have volunteered with other branches and are now making a grand showing in the mountains and jungles . . .

"A few American planes still roam the skies, engaging in guerrilla warfaré in the air . . . the airmen call the Japanese 'Nips' or 'Japanazys'. . . . the august Japanese Emperor Hirohito is 'Jeeps the Jap.'

Bataan front, Feb. 3:

"In the most spectacular battle yet fought in Luzon, American naval, land, air units early today smashed a strong Japanese attempt to land from the China Sea on the American left flank.

"Many Japanese landing boats were sunk under a storm of American machine-gun and artillery fire and aerial bombing.

". . . Details of the Navy's participation cannot now be disclosed, but the Navy was very much in the midst of the action.

". . The fighting was typical of the biter warfare waged in the jungle areas of Bataan, where ground is contested inch by inch, and where men must kill or be killed.

". . This morning, Captain C. A. Crome, a husky South Carolinian with his arm in a bloody sling, shouted in his fog-horn voice:

" 'Surrender, you ———'s we've got you surrounded.'

"The answer came back in perfect English:

" 'Nerts to you, Joe.'

"So Captain Crome ordered the tanks into action.

". . General MacArthur's troops fanned out with Americans on the flanks and Filipinos in the center and began their creepingly slow advance.

"The Japanese meanwhile dug frantically into foxholes two feet wide and four feet deep and in a network of trenches around the bases of the tree.

"Others climbed trees, lashed themselves to the dimbs and began sniping. They were so well concealed that even when killed their bodies could not immediately be located.

"For some days our troops were able to advance only three to five yards through underbrush that was so thick it was impossible to see an arm's length ahead.

"In these stages of the fighting tanks couldn't be used because the roads were covered by Japanese land mines and anti-tank guns."

Bataan Front, Feb. 9:

"A spot of quiet falls in this war of the jungle and the talk gets around to planes. . . "

Scouts Live Up To Tradition

Bataan Front, Feb. 14:

"The 57th Philippines scouts are living up to the stoic traditions of their profession, none more valiantly than Corporal Pablo Bayangas, who died bravely on the field of battle.

". . . Late in the afternoon he heard the bushes rustling and saw a large group of Japanese crawling through the brush a short distance away. Corporal Bayangas readied his automatic rifle . . . emptied his magazine, killing 13 Japanese with 20 shots. But . . . a Japanese officer crowled up from the other side of the tree as Bayangas was reloading . . . the Japanese officer fired a pistol bullet into the Corporal's head.

"Second Lieutenant Alexander Nininger, Jr., of Lake Worth, Florida, also died surrounded by the bodies of his enemies. He led an anti-sniper volunteer group into the woods, but became separated from his men and died fighting.

". . . Private Bayani reported to his superior officer: 'I met eight Japs in the woods and shot them Sir.' 'How many shots?' Surprised, Private Bayani answered: 'Why, eight shots, sir.'"

APR 10 1942

On Bataan, Feb. 15:

"The trouble with this war is that it's all front and no rear. It's not like Tobruk where the sea lines were kept open, or like Singapore where the back door could have been used advantageously. Here, we are surrounded and the boys have to fight with what was here before war began and eat what was stored here."

On Bataan, Feb. 23: (This was in the last long lull that preceded the savage, sustained and overwhelming offensive by which the enemy's five-to-one numbers at last broke General Wainwright's heroic line):

". . . It is generally believed that the Japanese high command is preparing for further assaults aaginst Bataan."

Collapse Of Bataan On Memorable Day

Appomattox, Va., April 9 (AP)—News of the collapse of the Bataan defenses reached here on another memorable date in American history, the seventy-seventh anniversary of Lee's surrender to Grant.

The situation reached its final impasse shortly after 8 A. M., Palm Sunday, April 9, 1865, for Southern forces.

"There is nothing left for me to do but go and see General Grant," said Lee, "and I would rather die a thousand deaths."

Several notes were exchanged under a flag of truce and the surrender was completed at 3.45 P. M.

Army Now Is Forming Filipino Infantry Group

Grim And Determined Men Hope To Be With MacArthur When He Goes Back

Camp San Luis Obispo, Cal., April 9 (AP)—A small band of grim and determined men, who hope to accompany Gen. Douglas MacArthur when he goes back to the Philippines, form the nucleus of a United States Army Filipino infantry battalion.

"Our destination is the Philippines," said one officer.

Only recently activated by the army and still small in numbers, the battalion is expected to grow. All the enlisted personnel and most of the officers will be Filipinos.

The commanding officer is Lieut. Col. Robert H. Offley, son of Col. Robert S. Offley, USA (retired), who served as Governor General of the island of Mindoro. Other officers are Filipinos.

Wainwright Feared He'd Miss War When Sent to Philippines

By the Associated Press.

DALLAS, Tex., April 9.—When Lt. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright—now leading the American-Filipino forces in Bataan—received orders to go to the Philippines he was disgusted because he was afraid he'd miss the war.

Col. C. A. Dougherty of the Dallas R. O. T. C., an old friend, saw Gen. Wainwright at Fort Clark on the Mexican border just after the general had received orders to report for the Philippines.

"He was regretting those orders," Col. Dougherty said. "He was afraid that something might break over here and there he would be stuck in the Philippines, missing everything."

Parents of Young Men Who Went to Philippines Take the News Valiantly

CARMEL, Calif., April 9 (AP)—"There is a limit to human endurance!" That was the way the wife of Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright reacted today to the sad news from the Philippines.

The words came through her mother, Mrs. Dwight Holley, whose home is here. Mrs. Wainwright, recently ill and under heavy strain, was exhausted, her mother said. Mrs. Holley told solicitous friends Mrs. Wainwright had said:

"What can one say at a time like this? I am naturally very distressed at the news. There is a limit to human endurance!"

140 From Salinas on Bataan

SALINAS, Calif., April 9 (AP)—Salinas waited anxiously today for every new word from Bataan Peninsula, where 140 of her sons were engaged in the battle against overwhelming Japanese forces.

Salinas, a city of around 11,500, watched its 140 sons go into active service only a little more than a year ago. They were members of a National Guard unit mobilized for active service with the regular Army. They were sent overseas to join the forces of General Douglas MacArthur as the Army's first mechanized unit to leave the United States.

CHICAGO, April 9 (AP)—The mothers and fathers of the boys from Maywood and other Chicago suburbs who fought so valiantly in the Philippines took the news today of the fall of Bataan with their chins up.

In Maywood, the home of many members of the old Maywood Tank Corps, which later became a tank battalion, Mrs. Roy W. Merrifield sounded the keynote of the parents' reaction when she reported quietly:

"The mothers and fathers of the boys all are taking the news very well."

"My chin is up and so are the chins of the other parents with whom I have talked," said Joel Baker of suburban Glen Ellyn, an attorney, whose son, Harold, was attached to General Douglas MacArthur's Philippine Headquarters Staff.

CHINS UP IN CHICAGO AREA

Janesville, Wis., Sews On

JANESVILLE, Wis., April 9 (AP)—There was no crushing the Janesville women folk with the news from Bataan. Anxious though they were for the safety of their boys, they literally went on with their sewing.

Tonight was the time for the monthly meeting of the Janesville Tank Company Auxiliary, an organization of ninety-one wives, mothers and sisters of a band of National Guardsmen who helped make history in the Philippines. One of the self-appointed tasks is sewing for the Janesville Child Welfare and the Red Cross. Tonight, the members declared, they would sew.

Albuquerque Mothers Firm

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., April 9 (AP)—Eighty mothers of soldiers in the Philippines expressed their sentiments tonight over the fall of Bataan in these words of Mrs. Howard Meyers, president of the Mothers Service Club:

"We're good soldiers and are taking it with our chins u. We are proud of the fight our troops put up against overwhelming odds. That's the spirit that will win the war."

French In Indo-China Yield 2 U. S. Officers, 3 Sergeants To Enemy

Washington, April 9 (AP)—The Office of Facts and Figures said today that "Vichy-appointed officials in French Indo-China have turned over to Japanese army authorities five American officers and non-commissioned officers who sought refuge in the French colony."

"This act of collaboration with the Axis on the part of the Vichy regime," the OFF said, "was reported in an official Tokyo broadcast recorded today by the Federal Communications Commission.

"The Tokyo radio stated that the Americans were a captain and a lieutenant of the Engineer Corps and three sergeants, all former members of the forces of the Philippines. They had been transporting food and ammunition from Bataan peninsula to Corregidor in a 50-foot launch when a sudden storm swept them out of Manila Bay. They drifted for eight days, the radio anouncer said, and finally reached the French Indo-China coast.

"The French authorities immediately handed over the American party to the Japanese army, the Japanese commentator stated."

Quake Rocks Bataan, Also

San Francisco, April 9 (AP).—An intensive earthquake rocked the whole of Bataan Peninsula during final stages of the battle, a Japanese news dispatch from Bataan, intercepted by the CBS short wave listening station, declared tonight.

The dispatch, transmitte in code, was from a Dome correspondent, and was dated "With the Japanese on Bataan, April 9."

"The main force of the temblors" said the dispatch, "lasted five minutes, causing Filipino huts to crumble and several landslides."

Big Quake Between Japan And China

Bombay, India, April 9 (AP)—An earthquake of great intensity, apparently centering in the Yellow Sea between Japan and the China coast, was recorded here last night at 9.19 P. M. (1.49 P. M., EWT, Wednesday).

Two more shocks of lesser intensity were recorded today at 1.08 A. M. and 5.35 A. M.

The epicenter was calculated to be about 3,160 miles from Bombay, near latitude 35 North, longitude 122 East.

Japs Lose At Least 10 Planes

Naval-air Engagement Follows Raid on British Naval Base On Ceylon.

TWO BRITISH CRUISERS SUNK

Sinkings in Indian Ocean Virtually Open Way for Jap Invasion of India.

COLOMBO, Ceylon, Friday, April 10. (AP)—Allied Indian forces straddled a Japanese aircraft carrier with high explosives yesterday and shot down at least ten Japanese planes and perhaps 16, it was officially announced today.

Japanese bombers, apparently based on the aircraft carrier sought out by the Allied force, first attacked the British naval base at Trincomalee on this island.

Harbor, Airdrome Damaged

The invaders damaged harbor and airdrome facilities at Trincomalee and "there were a few casualties amongst the dockyard civil and naval personnel," the communique said.

The British said that "near misses" were scored in the attack on the Japanese aircraft carrier which apparently was the mother ship for the planes attacking Trincomalee.

The communique referred to "our bombers" in telling of the naval-air engagement. It was not disclosed whether U. S. airmen, based in adjacent India, participated in the raid at sea.

In the Japanese raid on Trincomalee the British said six of the invading craft were destroyed definitely, six others probably destroyed, and two damaged.

'Some' British Planes Missing

The other four planes, fighters, were shot down in the ensuing attack on the aircraft carrier.

"Some of our aircraft are missing," the British said, and gave no further details of the action.

The town of Trincomalee itself was not damaged nor were there any civilian casualties there, the communique said.

"A large force of bombers and fighters" roared in from the sea to drop their bombs in the developing fight for the mastery of the Indian ocean of which Ceylon is an important outpost blocking the way from the Bay of Bengal into the Arabian sea.

(Two British cruisers already have been lost to the Japanese raiding along the coasts of India, and U. S. airmen last week set afire a Japanese cruiser and a troopship, in an attack on the Andaman Islands which recently were seized by the Japanese.)

Naval Base on Ceylon Bombed by Japanese; Planes Over Colombo

No Civilian Casualties, British Report; Attack Second on Island

By the Associated Press.

COLOMBO, Ceylon, April 9.—The city of Trincomalee, where the British have a naval base, was bombed this morning, it was officially reported today.

A British communique said first reports indicated no civilian casualties.

At the same time, two enemy planes were sighted over Colombo, but no bombs were dropped.

Trincomalee is on the northeast coast of this island off the southern tip of India.

The raid was the first reported on the important naval base in Ceylon, but it was the second attack by the Japanese against the island. Japanese planes bombed Colombo Easter Sunday in a surprise raid which the British declared boomeranged and cost the raiders heavily.

The text of the communique follows:

"An enemy air attack developed over Trincomalee this morning. Further details will be given later. First reports indicate no civilian casualties.

"At the same time two enemy aircraft were sighted over Colombo. No bombs were dropped."

Japanese Planes Sink Two British Cruisers

LONDON, April 9 (AP)—Japanese planes have blasted the British heavy cruisers Dorsetshire and Cornwall to the bottom of the Indian Ocean, thus virtually opening the way for an invasion of India.

The Ganges Basin now is left undefended at sea save for light forces, well-informed observers declared as the Admiralty announced the loss of the two heavier warships.

Other British communiques reported that the Japanese bombed the Ceylon naval base of Trincomalee this morning and that several Allied merchant ships had been destroyed by combined naval and air attacks in the Indian Ocean, thus making ominously apparent the scope and strength of the Japanese thrust across the Bay of Bengal.

The 9,975-ton Dorsetshire—whose torpedoes supplied the coup de grace to the battleship Bismarck in the Atlantic last May—and the 10,000-ton Cornwall apparently were seeking the Japanese naval squadron whose carriers launched planes against Colombo on Sunday.

"Aircraft from those very carriers found them and destroyed them before they were able to close to gunnery range," declared one London source.

Over 1,100 Men Saved

The date and place of the sinkings were not given, but a Japanese radio announcement said the cruisers were destroyed in operations up to April 7. The British announced that more than 1,100 of the crews had been saved, indicating that the action either was close to shore or other fleet units. The cruisers normally would have carried a total of about 1,400 men.

The broadcast Japanese communique also claimed destruction of 21 Allied merchantmen and severe damage to 23 others in the Bay of Bengal. An announcement from New Delhi said only that several ships had been sunk and that 400 to 500 survivors had been landed on the coast of Orissa, Indian province.

Aircraft alone were mentioned in destruction of the cruisers, but it was apparent that a strong Japanese naval force including aircraft carriers was on the prowl in the Bay of Bengal. It was assumed to be operating from the Japanese-occupied Andaman Islands, about 800 miles east of Madras.

Some hope was expressed in London that a British squadron described March 28 by the Italians as two battleships, two aircraft carriers, a cruiser and light forces might in fact be heading for the Bay of Bengal to halt any Japanese invasion of India.

There was no confirmation by official sources of any such squadron.

Big Naval Batile Predicted

London naval reporters, however, asserted with possibly a touch of hyperbole that "the biggest naval battle in all history seems about to blaze up in the Bay of Bengal between the Japanese and British fleets."

A German radio broadcast, attributing its information to Tokyo sources, said a Japanese expeditionary force supported by cruisers and destroyers had landed Sunday on the coast of the Bay of Bengal but did not specify the exact site of the landing.

30.24 —— 15865

30.24 —— 15865

No other quarters have reported such a landing, and the Japanese themselves have avoided mentioning invasion of India.

Systematic Japanese air scouting is in progress over the Bay of Bengal, however, and the Japanese have claimed their submarines are operating off Madras and in the Ganges estuary.

It is believed here that Japan's immediate objective is occupation of India's eastern coastal provinces plus stoppage of Allied supply routes through the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf.

One informed naval source speculated on the possibility that the Japanese might soon detach light naval units to try to blockade the Mozambique channel between Africa and Madagascar in an effort to halt Allied supplies to the Middle East and Russia.

The Trincomalee bombing this morning indicated, however, that the Japanese still were busy in the Bay of Bengal area. A British communique said first reports indicated no civilian casualties. Two Japanese planes were sighted over Colombo, but no bombs were dropped there, where the Japanese attackers of Sunday took such a terrific beating.

Japanese Sink 2 British Cruisers In Bengal Bay

APR 10 1942

1,100 Crew Members Saved; Landing or Burma Reported

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 9.—Two British 8-inch-gun cruisers, the 10,000-ton Cornwall and the 9,975-ton Dorsetshire, whose torpedoes finished off the German battleship Bismarck little less than a year ago, have been sunk by Japanese bombers ranging the Bay of Bengal and battering at thin-stretched British naval communications to India, the Admiralty announced today.

From New Delhi it was announced also in a communique that combined enemy naval and air attacks had resulted in the sinking of several Allied merchant ships in the Indian Ocean area. The communique said 400 to 500 survivors had landed on the Orissa coast.

The shock of the loss of the two powerful ships rubbed the gilt off the Admiralty's announcement two hours earlier that a British submarine had sent a 10,000-ton Italian cruiser to the bottom of the Central Mediterranean.

The sinking of the Cornwall and Dorsetshire was a blow to the British naval strength immediately available to cope with Japanese aircraft carriers and warships reported increasing their activities astride the sea lanes to Calcutta in the bay between the bombed coast of India and invaded Burma.

Landing Also Reported.

Japanese broadcasts quoted imperial headquarters claims that in addition to the cruisers Japanese forces sank 21 Allied merchantmen in the Bay of Bengal up to last Tuesday, and badly damaged 23 other ships.

Heard, too, but without any other confirmation, was a Berlin broadcast quoting dispatches, purportedly from Tokio, that Japanese expeditionary forces supported by cruisers and destroyers landed last Sunday on the Burma west coast and were within 30 miles of the Bengal border of India. That would place them between the border and the big Burma port of Akyab.

Earlier roundabout reports that the Japanese had forced their way ashore at Akyab have been denied by the British headquarters at New Delhi.

1,100 of Crew Saved.

The Admiralty's announcement did not say when the Dorsetshire and Cornwall were sunk.

There was no intimation what other warships were operating with the cruisers. The fact that 1,100 crew members were saved indicated that other ships were on hand.

"It is known that more than 1,100 survivors, including the commanding officers of both ships, have been picked up," the Admiralty said.

The commanders were Capt. E. W. S. Agar of the Dorsetshire and Capt. P. C. W. Mainwaring of the Cornwall.

The Rome radio reported that the remaining units of the British squadron were engaged in a running sea fight with stronger Japanese naval forces.

Observers here said survivors of the cruiser sinkings might have been taken to the naval station at Trincomalee, target of a renewed Japanese air attack on Ceylon today.

Informed sources believed the British Indian Ocean naval squadron probably was operating from Trincomalee, or at least might have made for the base to await reinforcement after the smashing aerial attack which cost the two cruisers.

Subs in Ganges Estuary.

Systematic Japanese air reconnaissance is being maintained over the Bay of Bengal and, according to the latest reports, Japanese submarines are operating in the Ganges Estuary.

Tokio authorities avoid mention of an offensive against India and state that these operations are being carried out with the objective of securing the flank of the Japanese forces fighting in Burma.

Informed sources refused to comment on a Rome radio report that a strong British naval formation rounded the Cape of Good Hope March 27 en route to the Indian Ocean.

The Daily Herald noted that strong Japanese units had moved into conquered Rangoon's harbor. Others were said to be at Port Blair in the Andaman Islands, where United States flying fortresses bombed a cruiser last week.

21 Allied Merchantmen Also Sunk, Japs Claim

TOKIO (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 9 (AP).—Japanese forces have sunk two British cruisers and 21 Allied merchantmen in operations in the Indian Ocean up to last Tuesday, a Japanese headquarters communique reported today. Twenty-three other ships were reported badly damaged.

The Japanese said 60 Allied planes had been shot down to five lost by the Japanese. They declared there was no damage to Japanese warships.

The text of the imperial headquarters announcement follows:

"During naval operations in the Indian Ocean up to April 7 the Japanese have sunk two British cruisers, one of the London type, 9,850 tons, and one of the Cornwall type, 10,000 tons.

"Forty-four merchantmen have been either sunk or damaged and 60 enemy planes have been shot down.

"The merchantmen included 21 vessels approximating 140,000 tons sunk and 23 others approximating 102,000 tons badly damaged.

"Three hangars and one repair factory and other important enemy facilities were seriously damaged.

"During the operations the Japanese forces lost five planes but sustained no damage to warships."

British In Burma Prepare To "Scorch" Yenanma Oil Wells

[By the Associated Press]

Chungking, Friday, April 10—The American Volunteer Group of flyers reported today the destruction of ten out of twenty Japanese fighter planes in an air battle Wednesday afternoon over Leiyun, in southern Yunnan province. The AVG suffered no losses.

Two other Japanese planes were so severely damaged that they were not expected to be able to reach their base, said the AVC communique, issued at headquarters "somewhere in Yunnan." All the Japanese planes were of the navy "Zero" type.

British Ready To Blow Up Oil Wells in Burma

Japs Only 30 Miles Away —U. S. Fliers Score New Success

APR 10 1942

LONDON, April 9—(AP)—With the Japanese only 30 miles from the Yenanma oil fields on the Burma front, the hard-pressed and outnumbered British defenders of the Irrawaddy river valley were prepared tonight to burn and blow up the wells.

Although bad atmospheric conditions interfered with radio communications, a well-informed source here said the British were ready to "scorch" the oil properties if the Japanese and rebellious Burmese continued their flanking progress. The British were described as outnumbered three to one on the ground and 10 to one in the air.

Lack Air Support

Delayed dispatches direct from the front referred to the complete absence of Allied air support for ground troops.

From the eastern end of the Burma lines, held by Chinese forces, the Chinese reported that they were in contact with the Japanese but that there had been little activity in the past 24 hours.

The Chinese continued fighting on the east-west road between Toungoo and Mawchi and said there were other minor patrol engagements along the Siamese border.

No News From British Front

LONDON, April 9 (AP)—

Advices from Burma said Chinese forces holding the eastern flank of the Allied line were heavily engaged with Japanese troops on the highway between Toungoo and Mauchi.

A Chinese communique issued at New Delhi, however, said that "on the Toungoo front there has been little activity during the last 24 hours."

APR 10 1942

There was no news, however, from the opposite end of the front, where the British are holding a position north of Thayetmyo. Atmospheric conditions have interrupted radio communication, military quarters said.

Chungking, April 9 (A. P.).—A four-day-old attack on Chinese advanced positions on the Burma front, south of Yedashe, by a Japanese detachment that moved northward from Toungoo was reported in today's Chinese communique. Sharp fighting ensued, but the result was not given.

As for China's own fronts, the Chinese said many prisoners and much booty were captured in ejection of Japanese troops ffom Sutzekow, northeast of Nanchang, in Kiangsi Province, while in an engagement in the West River district of Kwangtung Province the Chinese destroyed two armored launches and a large quantity of gasoline.

rillas out of the area north of the Central China Yangtze port of Shansi, and said the enemy had started a southward drive at Hankow, where guerrillas likewise were active.

Reinforcements Are Sent To Indo-China by Japs

By the Associated Press.

CHUNGKING, April 9.—The Japanese have dispatched reinforcements to Northern French Indo-China, facing Southeastern China, apparently to discourage any large allocation of Chinese reinforcements to the Burma front, a Chinese Army spokesman said today.

He said the Japanese had built defense works in Burma.

The spokesman also said Japanese air raids recently on strategic points of Chekiang and Kiangsu Provinces were dictated by fear that they might be used as bases of Allied attacks on Japan.

He said 3,000 Japanese troops had been busy for the last week, attempting to clear Chinese guer-

'No Raid Shelters . . . No Planes for Defense Mandalay a Holocaust of Screaming Victims

(Alfred Wagg, war correspondent in Burma, reported Monday in a special radio dispatch to The Star that the storied city of Mandalay had been all but leveled in a three-hour bombardment by 36 Japanese bombers on April 3. The following dispatch, of which the first part has not been received yet, possibly because of communication delays, refers presumably to the same Japanese attack.)

APR 10 1942

BY DANIEL DE LUCE,
Associated Press War Correspondent.

ALLIED ARMY HEADQUARTERS IN BURMA (delayed).—The drone of enemy planes almost overhead was the only warning that Mandalay's quarter million inhabitants received of impending danger. Sticks of bombs exploded with earsplitting thunder before more than a few persons could dive into narrow slit trenches which provide inadequate shelter from air attack.

Bomb fragments rained down on the squalid, teeming Indian and coolie refugee camps on the north side of the railway yards. Two corners of a big brick civil hospital and the buildings near the station were blasted into dusty rubble.

A line of bungalows behind the hospital were smashed to bits. The tile roof of the Princess of Wales Hospital in the same street was blown in.

One wave of bombers finished their work and as fires mushroomed in scores of wrecked buildings a second wave came over. There was no opposition.

The hot breeze that usually fans dusty, sprawling Mandalay at midday spread the flames swiftly through block after block of the dense wooden tenements of Chinatown and into palm-fringed Buddhist monasteries where blazing timbered shrines crashed down on recumbent statues of Buddha.

The fire spread eastward into a district of elegant two-story bungalows owned by rich Burmans. Lepers fled from the Wesleyan and Catholic asylums.

Blazes sprang up around the Methodist and Baptist churches and the Catholic cathedral. They all were soon smothered in leaping flames, which left only the walls standing.

Inside the Mandalay fortress the hospital and barracks in the southeast corner caught fire. Sweating Indian riflemen bore the wounded to safety on their backs.

Under a rain of embers, screaming, burning men, women and children flung themselves through the purple water hyacinths into the fortress' shallow moat.

Engineers, in fierce heat, planted dynamite charges and blew up buildings in an attempt to limit the holocaust before all Mandalay was destroyed.

Freight Cars Saved.

APR 10 1942

British Army engineers and British and Indian crews saved hundreds of freight cars. Wounded men helped carry out the salvage job.

A British captain with a bomb splinter in his right arm filled my jeep with gasoline opposite a burning two-story Indian food store and told me of a detour which would let me deeper into the fire area.

"You can sling a stretcher across the jeep," he said. "There are people lying around in the streets in the middle of that bloody thing."

I drove through an alley near the fire-cloaked civil telegraph headquarters and raced along the east side of the native bazaar which had not yet burned, although shops across the way were crackling and the jeep had to dodge hot sheets of tin roofing falling on the sticky asphalt road.

The bodies of dead bullocks swollen drumhead tight littered the way. By a tangle of wires under a telephone pole I saw the bodies of two Indians. Their legs were burned to stumps.

A decapitated Burman woman lay sprawled by the drain in front of a native teashop.

Priests Look on Mutely.

Two priests, protecting their shaven heads with flaps of their orange robes, stood by a garden wall staring mutely at the disaster.

Near the American Baptist Boys' School, at the edge of the southern limits of the fire, another jeep rolled up driven by another, smoke-grimed British captain.

"I'm with the sappers but got separated from my unit," he said, "so I started ambulancing."

A thousand yards into the fire, at the corner of Eightieth street and Thirty-first road, two wounded, staggering Chinese appeared. One held up the fingers of both his hands. He was telling me there were 10 more in the neighborhood.

Both floors of the American Baptist Mission's little memorial hospital were filled with victims, Indians, Burmans and Chinese. More arrived in what seemed to be an unending procession of horror.

In the corridors and in every room lay unwhimpering rows of gray-bearded Indians, coolies in dirty loin cloths, naked Burmese children and pantalooned Chinese girls with seared faces and smashed heads and limbs.

D. O. Smith, a missionary teacher from Long Beach, Calif., lifted from a stretcher an Indian boy who had just died.

Gordon S. Jury and his wife, elderly medical volunteers from Hamilton, Ohio, knelt on their knees sponging blood from the wounded.

No Warning Given.

The wounded driver of a Burma government civil defense ambulance, whose own wife and child were killed in the raid, followed me into the hospital yard.

"One little bit of warning would have saved hundreds of lives," he stormed. "No real air-raid shelters. * * * No planes to defend us. * * * We are left at the mercy of those Japanese. A handful of volunteers are about the only people standing between the wounded and death. Why is it that the poor and the helpless are the ones killed in this war?"

A young Burmese mother nursed her infant daughter as Fred Dickson, another missionary teacher from Worcester, Ohio, disinfected a gash in the baby's hip.

Burma-born Miss Lucy Wiatt, whose family lives in Santa Barbara, Calif., and Miss Mary Laughlin of Huron, S. Dak., arrived at the hospital with small packets of medicine and bandages they had found.

Lack of Air Power Fatal In Burma

Ruined Allies Chance to Hold Prome, Report

(Editor's Note: Although long delayed in transmission, the following dispatch from Burma casts light on the losing struggles of the British and Chinese to hold, respectively, Prome and Toungoo, western and eastern anchors of the United Nations' Burma line, which the Japanese since have rolled back northward toward the rich oil fields of inner Burma.)

APR 10 1942

BY DANIEL DE LUCE

Headquarters of the Allied Armies in Burma, April 3—(Delayed)—(AP)—The strangulation of Allied communications in Burma and India is being continued by the Japanese who, winning Prome, have now advanced nearly 200 miles north from captured Rangoon in less than a month.

Complete absence of Allied air support for the ground troops cost a British armored column the opportunity to exploit a stunning, 25-mile charge through the Japanese lines in the Irrawaddy valley early this week.

Had it been successful, it might have saved Prome indefinitely. As it was, the failure contributed to the Chinese decision to delinquish Toungoo after an heroic one-week siege.

The grave effect of the Japanese two-day assault on the Royal Air force and American Volunteer group base in central Burma last March 21 and 22 is no longer minimized even in Chinese and British communiques.

Few Allied Planes In Air Against Japs

The Allied soldiers in the front lines of Burma for the past two weeks have seen as few of their own planes as the British expeditionary force in Crete saw in 1941.

By pushing back what was a fresh Chinese army from Toungoo and outflanking the British along the Irrawaddy opposite Prome with the help of thousands of recruited rebel Burmese, the Japanese kept the initiative for a new application of their favorite infiltration and encirclement tactic.

The new Japanese positions along the Irrawaddy have blocked still another Burma seaport for supplying the Allied armies.

Controlling Burma's Bay of Bengal coast, the enemy is at liberty to send new forces cross-country, striking far in the British rear.

Sea-borne troops, if they were set ashore, actually would be closer to the coveted Yenangyaung oil fields in the Irrawaddy valley than the British army north of Prome.

Japs Try To Strangle Routes of Supply

One unofficial estimate of transport potentialities on the road being built into Burma from Assam differs with the publicized view that these soon will be adequate for the traffic required by the British and Chinese armies.

If the oil fields a little over 100 miles from the Japanese—(Editor's note—Reduced to about 75 miles now)—were destroyed or lost, gasoline would become more precious in Burma than water on the western desert and 1,000 trucks would be immobilized.

The enemy has undertaken this week to wreck landing fields. However, it is believed that only uneconomical, widespread air assaults could break aerial communications between India and Burma—and then only temporarily as long as any part of Burma remains in Allied hands. Until the rains come in mid-May, new runways can be created overnight simply by steam-rolling the ridges of vast rice fields.

High officers describe the problem of supply as the greatest of the Burma campaign. They express belief the enemy is relying on strangulation of the supply routes by land and sea as the surest weapon for eliminating Allied resistance in this theater of war.

Traitors Aid Japanese In Burma Drive

APR 10 1942

Guerrilla Army of Over 4,000 Burmese Harassing British.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Treachery in Burma, a knife in the back of the British, was foreshadowed—but not forestalled—last Jan. 18 when the British announced the arrest of Premier U Saw for conspiring with the Japanese. Now the following dispatch from the thick of the fighting for the British colony, highway to India, details the treachery there that helps the Japanese invaders.

By DANIEL DE LUCE

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN BURMA, April 5 — (Delayed)—(AP)—A guerrilla army of Burmese traitors mustered from jungle robber gangs armed by the Japanese now is raiding the west side of the Irrawaddy river as far as 60 miles above Prome.

Constituting the left flank in the Japanese campaign to conquer central and upper Burma, this native force is fighting under the protection of Japanese planes and with a spy network operating behind the British lines.

The British officially took note last week of the existence of a guerrilla army of more than 4,000 men. But it is a menace that cannot be measured in numbers.

With the explanation by a British Army communique that a factor in the withdrawal of the imperial forces from the Prome sector was the hostility of the native population, the cloak was officially dropped from the subject of Burmese treachery on a great scale.

Burma, where the fires of rebellion against British rule flared as long ago as 1931, is one of the few places in Asia where the Japanese invaders were received with open arms.

High Crime Record

The chief tools of the Japanese are Thakins, members of violently extremist political party which was unsatisfied with a gradual realization of the policy of Dobamaw—Burma for the Burmans. They propose to force it by a reign of terror.

One Thakin who fled Rangoon when it still was held by the British is haranguing the nation nightly from the Tokyo radio. The melodious voice of the Burmese wife of a Japanese official is another radio propagandist from Bangkok, capital of Japanese-occupied Thailan.

Marauding banditry is a traditional feature of life in many villages in the rural sections of Burma. The Tharrawaddy and Henzada districts of the Irrawaddy delta had the highest crime record in all the British Empire.

Listening to silver-tongued politicos, the young hoodlums came to believe they were serving an undercover army of patriots from which 10,000 fighting men would spring into action when the hour of liberty struck.

The small, brown muscular Burmese wear silken shirts, bright scarves tied around the head and loll much of the time in tea shops smoking mammoth cheroots; but history confirms that they are tough soldiers.

Relatively few, however, joined the army after World War Burma battalions were organized by the British, who depended on Chins, Shans and Kackins from the hill tribes and Indian immigrants for the bulk of recruits. Relatively few Burmese fought alongside the British when the Japanese invasion knifed in from Thailand.

British Wounded Slain

Behavior of the Burmese population before the fall of Rangoon was officially described by the British as a "mixed affair." During the long retreat back from the Salween, Bilin and Sittang Rivers there were reported cases of British wounded whose thoats were slit by Dacoits. This was balanced by instances of friendly help to prisoners escaping through the Japanese lines.

APR 10 1942

But the situation was serious enough to draw a public warning by the British military authorities that perpetrators of atrocities would be punished summarily.

Even reticent army communiques have given evidence since then that relations have gone from bad to worse. In order to stamp out espionage, the Chinese army declared martial law on the Toungoo valley front.

Severe measures had to be taken by the British along the Irrawaddy. Some villages behind the Allied lines have been gutted by native firebugs. It is unsafe to travel the highways after nightfall unless armed.

The unbroken series of Japanese successes inspires a spreading wave of treachery. The position of the Allied troops is this: the enemy armies are in front of them, the Japanese air force is master of the skies over them, and traitors with long knives are at their backs.

British and Indian Leaders Reported to Have Come to Terms—Bombay Paper Calls American Envoy a 'Super Cripps.'

M H R STIMSON

NEW DELHI, India, April 9. (AP)—Britain and the Hindu leaders of India were generally reported tonight to have come to terms on the delicate, danger-fraught question of independence for India. The influence of the United States appeared to have weighed heavily in the final bargaining.

Johnson Helps Shape Compromise

Apart from the still open question of adherence to the compromise plan by the Moslem League, there appeared to be lacking little more than the formalities of signature and promulgation to give India a national government now, guarantee her dominion status after the war, with a dominion's right of secession, and place her in the front as an Asiatic bulwark of the United Nations.

The successful formula compounded by Britain's negotiator-in-chief, Sir Stafford Cripps, and leaders of the dominant All-India Congress Party, with the helpful influence of President Roosevelt's personal emissary to India, Louis Johnson, was reported to provide for a clear division of functions under the projected national government for India.

Wavell To Retain Post

General Sir Archibald P. Wavell, British commander for India, it is said, would be supreme commander for conduct of the war under an Indian war cabinet whose defense minister would be an Indian.

Both Cripps and Johnson were believed to be eager that Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, past president of the Congress Party and one of its ranking leaders, take the defense portfolio.

The consolidation of Indian and British direction of India's war effort, as envisaged, was believed to have composed the sharpest difference between the congress party and the British. The original plan carried by Cripps to New Delhi last month provided that responsibility for the Indian defense remain in British hands.

Late last week, amid signs of a breakdown over the British plan and the Congress party's rejection, Johnson arrived at New Delhi. Tonight Indian commentators were calling him the hero of the hour. Although the precise part he played in the negotiations was not known, a Nationalist newspaper, the Bombay Sentinel, dubbed him a "Super Cripps."

Statement by Nehru

Nehru, in a statement on Johnson's role for the United States, declared:

APR 10 1942

"Col. Louis Johnson has taken a friendly interest in our problem of today, and we are grateful to him for it, but it would be unfair to him and unfair to us to imagine that the burden of any decision or of intervention is cast on him.

"In this world situation, fraught with peril, it is right that we should consult each other and find out a way to the common advantage of the common cause, but I want to make clear that we have issued no appeals to anybody, not asked for anyone's intervention.

"For my part I admire President Roosevelt and consider that he is shouldering the greatest burden worthily.

"I think that he will inevitably play a great part in the future, but we have not asked for his intervention in our problems, for we realize that the burden is ours and we must meet it.

"We have shouldered it against the might of a great empire during these last 22 years and we have not bowed down to superior might, despite pains and penalties.

"We propose to stand erect in the future also, whatever happens.

"We realize that the achievement of freedom for India, which we have desired so passionately and worked for these long years is our business. If we are strong enough to achieve it we shall do so—if not, we shall fail."

Nehru took exception to some comments in the American press, saying, "I can only understand them on the basis of American ignorance of conditions in India. xxx The advice of friends is always welcome and worthy of consideration, but we are not used to patronage from any country or people, and we do not shape our policy on the basis of superior homilies or threats."

Nehru also said: "Lord Halifax, whom we know well in India, continues to sermonize as of old (he once was viceroy of India) and tell us how significant we are in this great land of India.

"Perhaps so. Then why trouble to come to us with proposals? Lord Halifax is pleased with what his people have done.

"Let him live in his complacent world and leave us to our resources and sorrows.

"We have had sufficient experience with British statesmanship in India and elsewhere.

"Whatever the war may have done, there has been little difference in the tone or voice of the most eminent of British leaders.

"But whatever happens, we will not give up our objective of independence and complete freedom for India.

"Our allegiance is to the Indian people and to no one else, and in their service and for India's freedom we shall labor and, if necessary, die."

General Agreement In Dispute in India Appears at Hand

APR 10 1942

Louis Johnson Hailed As 'Hero of Hour' In Negotiations

By the Associated Press.

NEW DELHI, India, April 9.—A general understanding on the main points at issue between the British and politically articulate Hindus appeared to be at hand today, with reported assent by leaders of the All-India Congress Party and the Hindu Mahasabha to establishment of a national government for India.

Such a Government would serve India pending the post-war dominion status offered by Britain.

Britain's chief negotiator, Sir Stafford Cripps, was understood to have telegraphed Vinayak Damodar Savarkar, president of the Hindu Mahasabha, asking if that organization of political moderates had any objections to joining a national government.

No Objections to India.

Savarkar was understood to have replied through the Governor of Bombay, Sir Roger Lumley, his organization had no objection even though it still opposed a clause in the British plan allowing provinces to remain outside the proposed Indian union.

It was reported that the Mahasabha would get two seats in the national government.

Reports on the status of the negotiations with the Congress Party, the dominant political group, varied between statements that "a general understanding is nearly reached" and that it was "as good as reached."

As a result of reports circulated throughout the country that the British government and the Congress Party had finally come to terms, President Roosevelt's personal minister to India, Louis Johnson, was characterized by commentators as "the hero of the hour."

Press Lauds Johnson.

Mr. Johnson, who arrived late last week, took an increasingly prominent part in the negotiations and this evening's issue of the nationalist newspaper, the Bombay Sentinel, described him as a "super Cripps."

Throughout his talks with Cripps and nationalist leaders, Mr. Johnson's attitude was reported to have been to this effect: "Better to pay the price for Congress' co-operation than to risk the future."

The formula on the defense issue reportedly reached by Cripps, Mr. Johnson and Congress leaders was said to provide for a clear division of functions, with Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, now British commander for India, to be supreme commander for conduct of the war under a war cabinet, while an Indian defense minister acting under the authority of the projected Indian national government would be War Minister.

Both Cripps and Mr. Johnson were believed to be eager that Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru of the Congress Party agree to be defense minister.

India's Own Problem, Nehru Says.

Nehru, in a statement on the United States' position regarding the Indian question, declared:

"Col. Louis Johnson has taken a friendly interest in our problem of today, and we are grateful to him for it, but it would be unfair to him and unfair to us to imagine that the burden of any decision or of intervention is cast on him.

"In this world situation, fraught with peril, it is right that we should consult each other and find out a way to the common advantage of the common cause, but I want to make it clear that we have issued no appeals to anybody, nor asked for any one's intervention.

"For my part I admire President Roosevelt and consider that he is shouldering the greatest burden worthily.

"I think that he will inevitably play a great part in the future, but we have not asked for his intervention in our problems, for we realize that the burden is ours and we must meet it.

"We have shouldered it against the might of a great empire during these last 22 years and we have not bowed down to superior might, despite pains and penalties.

Takes Exception to Press.

"We propose to stand erect in the future also, whatever happens.

"We realize that the achievement of freedom for India, which we have desired so passionately and worked for these long years is our business. If we are strong enough to achieve it we shall do so—if not, we shall fail."

Nehru took exception to some American press comments on the Indian situation, saying, "I can only understand them on the basis of American ignorance of conditions in India. We have had long homilies and patronizing advice as to what is good for us and what is not. There has been sometimes an element of threat in case we do not accept that advice. The advice of friends is always welcome and worthy of consideration, but we are not used to patronage from any country or people, and we do not shape our policy on the basis of superior homilies or threats."

TOWN HOLDS KEY POSITION IN SOLOMONS

Attacked By 5 Bombers Foe Occupies Lorengau On Manus Island

Allied Flyers Counter With Another Blow At Rabaul

APR 10 1942

By C. YATES McDANIEL
Associated Press Correspondent

Melbourne, April 9—A Japanese air raid on the Florida Island capital of Tulagi, administrative center of the Solomon chain across the coral sea from northeastern Australia, stirred fears anew tonight that the Japanese might be clearing the way for a stab closer to the vital supply lane from the United States.

Reports from Port Moresby said Allied bombers countered quickly with an attack of their own this afternoon on Rabaul, Japanese-held base on New Britain, which serves the invaders as a stepping stone from their foothold on New Guinea to the Solomons.

Jap Planes Destroyed

Many Japanese aircraft, caught on the ground in the surprise blow at the Rabaul base, were said to have been destroyed.

Casualties were reported inflicted by strafing of enemy personnel.

Heavy bombers struck at shipping in Rabaul harbor and airdrome installations and hangars. The raiders dived to low levels to get at their targets, Port Moresby dispatches said.

The exchange of air blows came on a day when the defenders of Australia learned of a further spread of the Japanese grip on the scattered islands to the north.

Lorengau Occupied

A communique said aerial reconnaissance revealed that the Japanese, probably landing some time ago, had occupied Lorengau on mountainous Manus Island, largest of the Admiralty group 350 miles north of Lae, Japanese-seized capital of northeast New Guinea.

Prime Minister John Curtin announced that five Japanese planes took part in the raid on Tulagi, sweeping over at 5,000 feet and dropping thirty to forty bombs.

Some damage was done, but no casualties were reported.

Sea Lane's Importance

The imperative need for safeguarding the sea lane to the United States was underscored by Ronald H. Cross, British High Commissioner for Australia, who said "I am unable to envisage the time during this war when ships carrying troops will be able to come from Britain to Australia."

"Shipping dictates the source from which men and materials can be sent to Australia," Cross said, "and the United States is the nearest source of supply."

Moving to increase still further Australia's air-striking power, 18-year-old cadets will be transferred soon from the training corps to the RAAF.

6,000 In Training Camps

The training corps, now fifty-eight squadrons strong, comprises some 6,000 youths from 16 to 18.

Problems created by the arrival of large United States forces and the recall of Australian expeditionary force veterans from other war fronts prompted the formation of a special man-power committee on which labor and the fighting services will be represented.

The committee will deal with production and supply of equipment, clothing and food for fighting forces. There were signs that early consideration would be given to the employment of women on a scale beyond anything heretofore contemplated.

Many Enemy Aircraft Destroyed in Allied Air Raid on Rabaul

Five Jap Planes Drop 30 to 40 Bombs on Isle in Solomons

APR 10 1942

By the Associated Press.

MELBOURNE, April 9.—Five Japanese bombers flying at 5,000 feet raided Tulagi, in the Solomon Islands, this morning and dropped between 30 and 40 bombs, Prime Minister John Curtin announced.

Tulagi lies almost 500 miles southeast of Japanese-occupied Buka, at the tip of the Solomon chain, across the Coral Sea from Australia.

The communique said some damage was done to buildings, but that there were no casualties.

(A Reuters dispatch from Port Moresby, New Guinea, said many aircraft were destroyed on the ground and others damaged in an Allied raid this afternoon on Japanese-held Rabaul, New Britain.)

Lorengau Seizure Confirmed.

Japanese occupation of Lorengau, on Manus Island, the largest of the Admiralty group north of New Guinea, has been confirmed by aerial reconnaissance, an Australian communique reported.

The communique said Allied planes saw yesterday that the Japanese had occupied the island, but the date of the landing was not known. It was added that the Japanese probably landed some time ago.

Lorengau is about 350 miles north of Lae, capital of New Guinea, where the Japanese have a base.

Meanwhile, Japanese planes attempting to raid Port Moresby, New Guinea, were reported driven off by Allied fighters yesterday and several invading craft were said to have been damaged.

ALLIES IN HEAVY RAID ON RABAUL

Many Jap Planes Reported Destroyed on Ground.

London, April 9 (A. P.).—A Reuters dispatch from Port Moresby, New Guinea, said that many aircraft were destroyed on the ground and others damaged in an Allied raid this afternoon on Japanese-held Rabaul, New Britain.

Shipping Put Up to U. S.

SYDNEY, Australia, April 9 (AP)—Ronald H. Cross, British High Commissioner for Australia, said today that "I am unable to envisage the time during this war when ships carrying troops will be able to come from Britain to Australia."

"Shipping," he said, "dictates the source from which men and materials can be sent to Australia, and the United States is the nearest source of supply."

Melbourne, Australia, April 9—(AP)—Two of 15 passengers were killed today when an empire airways flying boat sank in alighting at Darwin harbor.

Laborites Spurn Coalition

Wellington, New Zealand, April 9 (AP)—A Labor party conference rejected today a proposed national government, and decided to prepare for a general election.

49 U. S. Diplomats To Be Sent Home From Hong Kong

By the Associated Press.

TOKIO (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 9.—Domei reported today that 63 diplomats captured at Hong Kong, including United States Consul General Addison E. Southard, would be sent home under an exchange agreement Japan has reached with the United States and Britain.

Forty-nine of the diplomats are Americans, two are Dutch, five Belgians, three Norwegians and four Canadians, Domei said.

REDS CRACK 2 NAZI DIVISIONS

German Surprise Counter-Attack On Kalinin Front Meets Disaster

Moscow Says Enemy Suffered Heavy Losses And Then Retreated

APR 10 1942

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 9—Red army troops were reported tonight to have broken two German divisions on one sector of the northwestern Kalinin front after the Nazis had attempted a surprise counter-attack.

The Moscow radio said the Germans suffered heavily, and then retreated.

A supplementary Russian communique also said that 900 Nazis were slain on this front, but it was not clear whether this referred to the same engagement. In the western sector toward Smolensk, the Russians said their troops had occupied forty more Nazi dugouts.

Aerial Victory Scored

The regular midnight Soviet communique said no substantial changes occurred on the front today, but that the Soviets scored a 25-to-6 aerial victory Wednesday over the Germans.

Junkers bombers fresh from the factories of Germany are being rushed to the Eastern front and put into immediate operation, [redacted], it was disclosed today in official Russian dispatches which told of bitter fighting for every inch of the thawing Russian battleground.

A Tass dispatch from Moscow said anti-aircraft gunners on the Kalinin front, in the region south of Lake Ilmen, shot down a Junkers-88 plane numbered 6,719, "released from the factory Feb. 26, 1942."

"A few days later," the dispatch continued, "anti-aircraft gunners of the same battalion shot down three more planes released from the factory in March, 1942."

The appearance of these brand new Nazi planes seemed to be another indication that Hitler is concentrating all the strength he can possibly spare on the eastern front in preparation for the Soviet offensive.

Reds Fighting Bitterly

Bits of information here and there in the Russian reports from the front indicate that the Russians are fighting bitterly in every sector, either to keep the Germans on the defensive or to prevent even the smallest Nazi offensive operation.

Today's Russian communique told of fighting for one populated place on the front west of Moscow after which "the approaches to the village were littered with the bodies of the Hitlerite soldiers."

In another sector more than 300 Germans were killed, and in still another sector, on the Kalinin front, Russian stretcher bearers afield after a bitter encounter "counted 450 bodies of enemy officers and men on the battlefield."

A Red Star correspondent reported a fight on the Smolensk front, west of Moscow, in which more than 1,000 Germans were killed and several fortified positions were captured by the Soviet forces.

Stockholm dispatches, unconfirmed elsewhere, said the ice now was gone from the Caspian Sea and that many shiploads of American-built planes now are steaming northward to the Caspian port of Astrakhan for shipment to the Russian front. These planes reached the Caspian southern shore during the Winter by shipment through the Persian Gulf and Iran.

Nazis Rush Tanks and Planes.

Kuibyshev, Russia, April 9 (A. P.).—Soviet flyers and ground gunners were reported today to have destroyed 139 Nazi transport planes assigned to supply isolated northwestern front units in three days of a ten-day period which cost the Germans a total of 545 aircraft. The Russians admitted losing 117.

Evidence that Germany is rushing new aircraft into war service was announced in a communique.

"Anti-aircraft men of one unit shot down a Junkers 88 [dive-bomber] which was released from the factory on February 22, 1942, No. 6,719," it said. "Men of this group a few days later shot down three more planes released by the factory in March, 1942. One airman who bailed out was captured."

Infantrymen on a Kalinin front sector, attacked by numerically superior forces, were declared to have crippled several Nazi tanks by well organized fire and then routed the Germans with a bayonet attack.

"Our orderlies counted on the battlefield 450 dead German officers and soldiers," the communique said.

It said German troops were driven from a central front village after fighting which left the approaches littered with their dead. At least 300 Germans were killed, three tanks were destroyed and four were captured in running condition, it reported, in the repulse of an armored counter-attack on another sector.

Both land and sea activity also was officially noted.

Transports Sunk

The Soviet Information Bureau said Axis efforts to get fresh troops and munitions into the arctic Murmansk sector suffered another setback with sinking of two transports, rated at 5,500 and 10,500 tons, by Red navy units in the Barents Sea.

On the southwestern front the Germans were said to be throwing tanks into battle in groups of from five to ten—many of them of 1942 make and all bearing war paint designed to blend with a greening countryside in the spring campaign.

The newspaper Red Star said that sixteen invasion transport planes were shot down and 123 demolished on the ground from last Friday through Sunday in the Soviet effort to win full control of the Lake Ilmen area, where the Sixteenth German Army is declared encircled.

Red Star quoted a captured Nazi lieutenant, Erich Fros:

"Landing grounds in the neighborhood of Lake Ilmen became a cemetery for German Junkers 52s."

APR 1 0 1942

[The Junkers 52 is a three-motored monoplane intended to carry from fourteen to seventeen soldiers or an equivalent weight in supplies.]

Other prisoners taken in the same area reported heavy aircraft had been transferred from France and North America to help relieve the food and munitions shortages at key bases.

Aid Rising Says U. S. Envoy

Admiral William H. Standley, new United States Ambassador to the U.S.S.R., told reporters at the secondary capital that only American fleet needs ranked ahead of aid for Russia in the United States and that the supply program should be up to schedule by the end of April.

APR 10 1942

Fresh Balkan differences were reported by the Moscow radio.

It said Budapest had protested to Berlin and Rome against formation of a Rumanian-Croation-Slovakian union, declared to be aimed at preventing further territorial encroachments and regaining of land already lost to Hungary.

Red Gains Near Smolensk.

Moscow, April 9 (A. P.).—The Moscow radio broadcast a Red Star correspondent's report today that more than 1,000 Germans had been killed on the Smolensk front west of Moscow in a fight in which several fortified positions were captured by the Soviet troops. Red Star is the Soviet Army newspaper.

"In spite of the enemy's stubborn resistance," the dispatch said, "our troops pierced his defense system and forced him to fall back to new defense lines.

"From them the Germans launched a counter attack supported by tanks, but it was repulsed."

Reds Break Through Northeast of Orel, Germans Admit

Line Restored, However, After Several Days of Fighting, Nazis Say

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 9.—A break-through by massed Russian infantry and tanks in German lines northeast of Orel was reported today by the Berlin radio, but it said that several days of hard fighting had restored the German line.

The daily high command communique said only that "in the central and northern sectors of the eastern front various powerful attacks by the enemy were repulsed."

Orel is about 200 miles south of Moscow and slightly west.

The radio said the Russians managed to push back the Germans' advanced lines by pressure on three sides.

The radio, quoting the high command on still other action not included in today's communique, said isolated attacks by reinforced German infantry units had succeeded against Russian fortified positions, including one which lasted four days in which 100 fortified points were taken and a wooded area cleared of the Red Army.

Russian attacks in the Gulf of Finland on the island of Tytarsaari, occupied by German and Finnish troops, collapsed and the Russians lost 270 dead, the German communique said.

APR 10 1942

On the Caucasian coast, the Germans said, Nazi bombers successfully attacked harbor installations and an oil refinery.

Between March 13 and April 8, the communique added, 133 enemy tanks were destroyed by gunfire on the eastern front.

Heavy German fighter planes bombed a Soviet oil port of the Caucasus yesterday, the high command said. "Notwithstanding violent anti-aircraft defense, the inner port was attacked," it said, and "extensive fires broke out in an oil refinery."

London, Friday, April 10—(AP)—Rumanian naval units have sunk a Soviet submarine in the Black Sea, the Vichy radio said today in quoting a Bucharest dispatch.

Reds Report On Berlin Typhus

Moscow, April 9 (AP)—More than 1,250 cases of typhus have been registered in Berlin in the past two weeks, creating an epidemic that is "daily assuming more threatening proportions," Tass reported today.

At Kuestrin, Germany, Nazi military authorities were compelled to delay the dispatch of reinforcements to the front because of an outbreak of typhus among the troops, the Soviet news agency declared.

Moscow, April 9 (AP)—More than 1,000 publications of the United States War and Navy departments, the National Advisory Committee on Aviation and other American institutions went on display today as an American technology exhibit at the State Polytechnical Library.

The purpose was to popularize American industrial and military methods.

HAMBURG HIT BY RAF RAID

Docks At Le Havre Also Are Attacked By Far-Ranging British Plane

APR 10 1942

Germany Now Believed Using More Than Half Her Aerial Strength

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 9—A large number of British bombers defied bad weather last night to attack the important North German port of Hamburg and other objectives both in northwest Germany and in German-occupied France.

Docks at Le Havre were one objective in France. Six bombers lost in the raids.

The Air Ministry disclosed also that the torpedo bombers of the coastal command attacked a convoy of enemy supply ships off the coast of Jutland yesterday afternoon. The results were not observed. Two British planes were lost.

500 Planes Over Malta

Germany, it was stated authoritatively in London today, is using more than half of her bomber and fighting-plane strength in the Western European and Mediterranean theaters, employing an especially heavy force in the persistent and strong attacks on Malta.

A fleet of 500 planes, probably half of them bombers, is taking part in the assault on Malta, it was estimated. At least once, more than 200 bombers attacked in a single day.

The Germans, it was said, are straining their crews and aircraft probably as heavily as they have done in the Battle of Britain in their effort to crush Malta.

Bad Weather Doesn't Halt RAF Attacks

Hamburg and Other Objectives in Northwest Germany Bombed.

LONDON, April 9—(AP)—A strong force of R. A. F. bombers, daring bad weather to resume their nightly assaults on Germany, attacked the key port of Hamburg and other objectives in northwest Germany last night, the Air Ministry reported today.

Docks at the German-occupied French port of Le Havre also were bombed, the communique reported.

Reports indicated some attackers were forced to turn back or bomb alternative targets because of the dirty weather. The weather conditions had stopped the bombings Tuesday night.

Six bombers were lost in the forays, it was said.

Torpedo bombers of the coastal command yesterday afternoon attacked a convoy of enemy supply ships off the coast of Jutland but the Air Ministry said results of the attack could not be observed. The British said they lost two coastal command planes.

Hospital Bombed in England.

A South Coast Town, England, April 9 (A. P.).—A German bomber swooped in from the sea early today, dropped a stick of bombs which damaged a hospital and a park pavilion and then machine gunned the streets before heading back across the coast.

One person was killed and several injured, but damage was reported slight.

Nazi High Command Admits British Raids

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 9—(AP)—The German High Command said today that British bombers last night attacked some places in the North German coastal area and carried out nuisance raids all over eastern and southern Germany.

An earlier semi-official statement said residential property was damaged and there were civilian casualties in dead and injured in the bombing of district of northwest Germany.

The communique said four British bombers were downed.

The raids on east and south Germany were carried out by single British planes, the report added.

On the offensive side, the Germans said German fighters damaged one British patrol boat by bombs during armed reconnaissance over the English Channel, while a transmitter station on the English south coast was bombarded with good effect.

Workers Of Plymouth Warned Of Heavy Raids

Plymouth, England, April 9 (AP). The workers of Plymouth were warned by Herbert Morrison, Home Secretary, today that heavy raids could be made again on this southwest coast city as they were a year ago.

During two night raids on Plymouth in March of last year the German air force sent over 250 planes and killed 290 persons, Morrison said. During five nights of air attack in April, 1941, more than 750 planes participated and, he said, 549 persons were killed.

"We could have quite substantial raids over Britain at the present time," Morrison continued. "It could be done by the enemy, but on the whole he has preferred at the moment to confine himself to our ships and to making hit-and-run raids on coast towns."

British Place Nazi Air Power

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 9—More than half of Germany's strength in bombers and fighting planes is being used in the western European and Mediterranean areas, informed sources said today.

In addition, it was said, the British are fighting the whole Italian air force and a large portion of the Japanese.

Malta is under frequent attack by a fleet of 500 planes, of which half probably are bombers. The Nazi effort reached its peak Tuesday when more than 300 individual bomber sorties were made against the island fortress in addition to fifty or more individual actions by fighters.

Italian Cruiser Is Sunk By British Torpedoes

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 9.—The Admiralty reported today that a 10,000-ton Italian cruiser had been torpedoed and sunk by a British submarine in the Central Mediterranean.

APR 10 1942

An Admiralty communique said:

"An Italian cruiser of 10,000 tons, armed with 8-inch guns, has been torpedoed and sunk in the central Mediterranean by a submarine under command of Lt. Comdr. E. P. Tompkinson, D. S. O., R. N.

"The cruiser was escorted by destroyers and aircraft.

"Eight minutes after being hit by torpedoes the Italian cruiser was heard to break up and sink. A destroyer was later seen picking up the survivors."

Informed persons said Italy now had only two of the seven 10,000-ton cruisers with which she entered the war 22 months ago.

British, Axis Forces Spar in Libyan Desert

APR 10 1942

London Reports Sinking of 10,000-ton Italian Cruiser—British See No Indications of Big-scale Land Operations.

CAIRO, April 9. (AP)—A British column of all types of arms including tanks was testing strength tonight with Axis armored forces at Sidi Bregisch, 60 miles southwest of Tobruk, in a fight for control of the wide Libyan desert no man's land.

Jockeying for Positions

As both sides jockeyed for position in the North African sands, the Admiralty announced the sinking of a 10,000-ton Italian cruiser by a Brtiish submarine in the Central Mediterranean on the Axis' vital supply lane to the battle-front.

Naval observers said in London that loss of the ship, which sank eight minutes after the torpedo explosions, left Italy with only two of the seven 10,000-ton cruisers she had at the outset of the war.

Despite the flare-up of fighting in the desert, with the Germans and Italians throwing in "quite strong forces," informed sources saw no tangible evidence that a large scale offensive was taking form.

British military observers said the Axis units might be trying to set up strong forward points to guard their badly battered airport at Martuba, or simply were feeling out the lineup of British troops opposite their positions.

A communique announced that "the enemy did not attempt to advance further" during the day after having struck forward suddenly last Tuesday.

The war bulletin reported the capture of a number of Axis troops "trying to establish a strong point between Tmimi and El Gazala," some 20 miles apart.

This was taken as an indication that Axis detachments were trying to dig in at several points ahead of their Tmimi-El Mechili line but still far short of the main British defenses stretching south from El Gazala.

After claiming initial advances in their communiques yesterday the German and Italian high commands said today only that British attacks on their new-won forward position were repulsed.

Malta withstood another day of almost endless air attacks yesterday.

An RAF communique said "there was some damage to service property. Four Junkers 88 bombers and four Messerschmidt-109 fighters were shot down and many other enemy aircraft were probably destroyed or badly damaged, a communique said. Two British planes were listed as missing.

British Reported Repulsed

ROME, April 9 (From Italian broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press)—British attacks on advanced Axis positions in Eastern Libya were reported by the High Command today to have been repulsed.

One British plane was shot down in an air attack against the garrison of Gialo, an oasis outpost 250 miles west of the Egyptian frontier, the High Command said.

"German and Italian air formations have again bombed Alexandria with great effect," the communiqué reported.

British air bases at Luca, La Venicia and Valletta, all on Malta, were said to have been heavily attacked by German squadrons.

British Capture Libya Troops

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, April 9—British headquarters announced today that a number of Axis soldiers had been captured from a detachment "which was trying to establish a strong point between Tmimi and Ain el Gazala."

(Ain el Gazala is forty miles west of Tobruk and Timimi twenty miles further west).

Engaging Enemy

"One of our columns is engaging the enemy at Sidi Bregisch," the British communique said, indicating swift counter action to meet the threat of a new drive by Field Marshal Erwin Rommel's German and Italian army.

Sidi Bregisch is twenty-six miles south of Tmimi.

The communique declared that "the enemy did not attempt to advance further yesterday."

The R. A. F. told of continued heavy Axis air attacks against bomb-battered Malta throughout yesterday and said that there was some damage to service property. Four Junkers 88 bombers and four Messerschmidt-109 fighters were shot down and many other enemy aircraft were probably destroyed or badly damaged, a communique said. Two British planes were listed as missing.

Advanced Axis Troops Captured in Libya, British Report

Air Attacks on Malta Appear Now at Peak; Italy Claims a Success

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 9.—Axis efforts to knock out the British Island of Malta with mass raids appeared today to have reached their peak coincident with the resumption of activity in Libya by the forces of German Field Marshall Erwin Rommel.

The German-Italian raids on Malta, staunch bar to Axis plans for domination of the Mediterranean, have been on the increase for 16 days and nights, ever since the last British convoy eluded the Italian fleet and sailed into port on the island.

The city of Valletta and its suburbs were said to show acres of dust-strewn ruins—but still the island forces fought back against the endless shattering bombing assaults.

Nazi Planes Continue To Smash at Malta

VALLETTA, Malta, April 9, (AP)—The German Air Force made two heavy attacks on this island today, and the second was still in progress as [illegible] was written, at 7:15 p. m.

APR 10 1942

The first raid about midday was centered principally on the harbor, but airdromes also were bombed.

A number of dive-bombers were used in the attacks.

Last night air alarms were sounded as single raiders successively crossed the coasts, dropping explosives and incendiaries. Three of the planes were shot down and another was listed as probably destroyed.

Tobruk Reported Attacked

CAIRO, April 9—The Associated Press listening post heard the German radio broadcast a high command report that port facilities and war material stores were attacked yesterday at British-held Tobruk, Libya, by low-flying German fighter-planes. The Germans said that airmen also strafed inland columns of British motor cars.

Istanbul Germans Say They'll Get French Fleet

"Final Settlement" Involving Transfer Of African Points, Too; Return Of Prisoners Talked Of

Istanbul, Turkey, April 9 (AP)—Informed German circles in Istanbul today were talking about "a final settlement between Germany and France" which, they said, would involve cession of the entire French fleet to the German navy.

This talk began with the return to Turkey of Franz von Papen, Germany's Ambassador, from a brief trip to Berlin.

In addition, according to this story, the Germans want France to sign over both Casablanca in Morocco and Dakar in Senegal. Germany, in return for these major concessions, would release all French prisoners of war, allow Marshal Petain's Government to return to Paris and sign a peace treaty.

(Recent Vichy developments, notably markedly better relations between the Petain regime and the United States indicate strongly that Petain would not hear of such a deal at present, even though it may have been broached to the Marshal in his recent inconclusive talks with Pierre Laval, France's leading "collaborationist.")

Fight to End Is Promised By Churchill

APR 10 1942

'We Shall Never Give in,' Declares British Prime Minister.

LONDON, April 9. (AP)—Prime Minister Churchill, in accepting a check from the Free Danes at No. 10 Downing street, declared today: "We shall never give in, we shall never pause in our struggle; nor will our great American and Russian allies."

Of Denmark he said, "I have very little doubt that the day will come, perhaps sooner than it would be prudent or sensible to hope, when Denmark will be free from the grip in which she has been held, and when she will resume her independent, honored and ancient place among the free peoples and states of Europe."

The Danish check, for the equivalent of $153,000, will be used to purchase Spitfire fighters to be flown against the German-occupied continent by Danish pilots in the R. A. F., and Churchill said of this:

"Good weather is needed to turn this splendid check into the first heavy thunder drops of the storm which is to beat out this odious tyranny."

Churchill Speaks to Danes

LONDON, April 9 (AP).—On the second anniversary of the German occupation of Denmark and invasion of Norway, Prime Minister Churchill accepted today $153,200 from Free Danes to buy warplanes, while Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden broadcast a tribute to the still-fighting Norwegians.

"We shall never give in, we shall never weary, we shall never pause in our struggle; nor will our great American and Russian allies," Churchill told the Danes. He added that only good weather was needed to increase the Royal Air Force's aerial pressure on the German forces in Scandinavia.

"I have very little doubt that the day will come, perhaps sooner than it would be prudent or sensible to hope, when Denmark will be free from the grip in which she has been held, and when she will resume her independent, honored and ancient place among the free peoples and states of Europe," Churchill said.

Eden informed the Norwegian people in his broadcast that in two years their navy had grown from the two destroyers, one submarine and small craft which survived the German conquest, until now it numbered sixty warships.

Five hundred Norwegian merchant ships totaling more than 3,500,000 tons "ply night and day in your countrys' cause," he said, adding that the "day will come" for Norwegian land and air forces to act.

By way of contrast, the German radio broadcast a report, purporting to come from Copenhagen, that Danish papers said "Denmark is much better off than most countries of the world, owing to her collaboration with Germany."

(The Stockholm radio, in a broadcast heard in New York by CBS, quoted the Swedish Labor Party paper as expressing admiration for the "physical and spiritual bravery" of the Norwegians and predicting, "the day of a free north will once again return.")

Roosevelt Tells Haakon Norse Faith Stirs U. S.

Greets King 2 Years After Nazis Overran Country; Eden Pledges Liberation

WASHINGTON, April 9 (AP).—President Roosevelt today, on the second anniversary of the Nazi invasion of Norway, sent a message of encouragement to King Haakon VII at London.

"On April 9, two years ago," said the message, "Nazi hordes shocked the civilized world by invading without any provocation your peaceful and law-abiding country.

"Your majesty's faith and the faith of the Norwegian people in the cause of democracy and the ultimate victory of the forces resisting aggression has been and continues to be an inspiration to the peoples of the United States."

It was the German attack on Norway which ended the so-called "phony war" and ushered in a series of all-out German drives culminating in the fall of France less than three months later.

"Resisting More Fiercely"

Montreal, April 9 (AP)—Just two years ago today Adolf Hitler launched what had been planned as an "overnight" conquest of Norway, says the local information office of the Norwegian Government in exile, but he is still opposed by ninety-nine per cent. of the 3,000,000 population.

"Every week, every day brings new evidence that the Norwegian will to resist grows steadily more firm and more fierce," said an anniversary statement.

"Cost what it may, the Norwegian people will not surrender. The continuous, grim, unarmed but unyielding opposition of the 'home front' in Norway has made it necessary for the Germans to maintain there a greater army of occupation, in proportion to population, than in any other occupied country."

27 At Paris Accused Of Slaying Policemen

Paper Asserts Alleged Reds Before Nazi Court Were 'Animated By Ideology Of Evil'

Vichy, April 9 (AP)—Twenty-five men and two women on trial before a German military tribunal at Paris were accused today of killing many policemen before they were captured along with a miniature arsenal.

"In not one of them (the defendants) does one sense the slightest feeling, the slightest regret," reported the German-controlled Paris newspaper Cri Du Peuple. "They are all animated by an ideology of evil."

Exhibits at the trial, ranged on tables on either side of the judges' bench, consisted of various bombs and all types of pistols, new and old. These, the prosecution said, were seized from the defendants who are alleged members of a "special Communist organization known by the initials O.S."

Fatal Riot at Trial.

Vichy, April 9 (A. P.).—Twenty-seven men on trial before a German military tribunal at Paris as accused terrorists fought gun battles costing the lives of many policemen before they were captured, it was charged today as the proceedings entered the third sitting.

The prosecution, summing up the accusations, said that if the charges were upheld and if a previous trial of seven persons were counted, German courts would have accounted for "practically two-thirds of the terrorist attacks."

Paris Papers Continue Attacks On Petain

Deat Says Nations, Unlike Individuals, Can Change Their Heads

Vichy, France, April 9 (AP)—German-controlled Paris newspapers, complaining that Marshal Petain's Government was following a "wait-and-see" attitude regarding the war instead of jumping on Germany's side, today hinted that this policy might undergo a change "perhaps in the near future."

Rene Chateau suggested this in La France Socialiste, while Marcel Deat called upon the unoccupied zone to change its leadership.

"The first remedy is to cure the head," Deat declared. "Luckily, nations are not like individuals—they can change their heads."

One curious incident in this feud between the two zones occurred today when Le Matin quoted Pierre Laval as saying that he did not seek to reenter the Vichy regime when he talked with Petain recently here.

"I saw Marshal Petain and outlined to him the very serious situation in which France found herself," the former Premier was quoted as saying. "I did not ask for powers or solicit a portfolio."

Friends of Laval, who is a foremost proponent of collaboration with Germany, promptly denied this story here, but did not elaborate.

3 GERMANS CONDEMNED

APR 10 1942

BERN, Switzerland, April 9. — (AP) A Berlin report to Die Tat of Zurich today said three Germans were sentenced to death for food law violations and that 17 other black marketers were sent to hard labor for up to seven years.

Refugees At Haifa

Jerusalem, April 9 (AP) — The Swedish ship Radmanso, under charter to the Red Cross, arrived today at Halfa, Palestine Mediterranean port, with Greek women and children bound for South Africa. The Radmanso sailed from Haifa for Greece.

Rothschild Wine Estates Confiscated

Vichy, April 9 (A. P.).—Three great wine estates owned by the Rothschild family were confiscated by the Government to be used as agronomical schools and experimental stations.

They were the Chateau la Fite, Mouton Rothschild and Mouton d'Armailhacq, which cover, in all, almost 1,000 acres of the finest wine-producing soil in France.

SWEDEN TO INCREASE FLEET AND AIR FORCE

STOCKHOLM, April 9.—(AP)—The Swedish government presented to the Riksdag today a five-year defense budget totalling 3,800,000,000 kronor (about $950,000,000).

The building program includes cruisers, several destroyers, submarines and torpedo boats.

The air force is to be expanded, armored regiments organized, the present bicycle regiments reorganized.

Allied Staff Chiefs Confer

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 9—Gen. George C. Marshall, United States Army Chief of Staff, conferred throughout this morning with Lieut. Gen. Sir Alan Francis Brooke, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, presumably on grave developments in the eastern Mediterranean area and on the Burma front.

Harry Hopkins, chairman of the British-American Munitions Assignments Board, conferred with William A. Harriman, war production representative in Britain, and talked with Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden.

APR 10 1942

President Sees Winant

Washington, April 9 (AP)—President Roosevelt discussed today with John G. Winant, his Ambassador to England, the mission which took Gen. George C. Marshall and Harry L. Hopkins to London.

Winant said afterward he expected to leave for England next week.

Bismarck Attacker Made Admiral

London, April 9 (AP)—The Admiralty announced today that Sir James F. Somerville, 60, has been "promoted to admiral on the retired list."

For a seadog officially retired since July, 1939, Sir James has been very active.

As vice admiral, he took a lead-in part in the evacuation from Dunkirk, was in charge of the operation against the French fleet at Oran and was given major credit for the pursuit and destruction of the German battleship Bismarck.

261 Greeks Lost at Sea

Storm Wrecks Two Ships Fleeing Nazi-Occupied Aegean Islands

LONDON, April 9 (AP).—The lives of 261 Greek men, women and children were reported today to have been lost in a Mediterranean storm which smashed two small vessels in which they were fleeing from Axis-occupied Aegean Islands to Turkey.

A Reuters dispatch from Smyrna said one of the vessels, bearing 236 persons, had been dashed to pieces on a reef near Kanliada Island, thirty miles off the Turkish coast. Only twenty-nine of those aboard managed to reach land.

All but twenty-seven of eighty-one passengers aboard the other craft perished in the same storm, the news agency said.

Mexico Acts to Take Fifth-Column Menace From Gulf Coast

Homes and Offices of German Residents Are Raided in Tampico

By the Associated Press.

MEXICO CITY, April 9—(AP)—Mexico has launched a sweeping campaign to eradicate any fifth-column menace from the Gulf shore.

Soon after the Interior Ministry ordered all Axis nationals to prepare immediately to move inland, federal police last night raided the homes and offices of German residents in Tampico.

At least six Germans were taken into custody, and they, along with about 300 seized letters bearing German postmarks, are to be sent here.

The lead for the Tampico raid came from Germans previously arrested, who had admitted carrying out "fifth-column orders" from Berlin. One object of the search was an undercover radio transmitter.

Besides being an important port in itself and a transit point between the United States, Central America and the Panama Canal, Tampico is in an area where Mexico's rich oil fields and most important refineries are concentrated.

The expulsion order will affect hundreds of Germans, Italians and Japanese in Tampico, Veracruz, Tuxpan, Carmen and Progreso. It follows a similar edict removing their compatriots from vital Pacific Coast zones.

All suspected of hostile activity, the immigration office said, will be sent either to a concentration camp or to a penal colony off the Pacific Coast.

Chilean Says Nitrates Are Assisting Axis

Ocampo Declares Copper Also Is Being Transferred To Spanish Ships In Buenos Aires

Santiago, Chile, April 9 (AP)—Salvador Ocampo under secretary of the Chilean Federation of Workers, said in a statement today that Chilean nitrates and copper were finding their way to Axis countries by transfer from Argentine freighters to Spanish ships at Buenos Aires.

"A thick layer of wheat was placed on top of the nitrates which doubtless went to Germany or Italy," Ocampo said.

Brazil to Increase Army to 1,200,000

Rio de Janeiro, April 9—(AP)—To meet "the heavy new duty of the army in the maintenance of public order and national defense," President Getulio Vargas signed a decree last night which may boost Brazil's army from fewer than 100,000 to 1,200,000.

Besides enlarging the army with trained reserves, Brazil — which broke relations with the Axis last January — called for voluntary enlistments under the presidential decree.

URUGUAY TO ELECT PRESIDENT NOV. 29

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, April 9—(AP) The advisory council of state appointed by President Alfredo Baldomir after he dissolved Congress to thwart a coup Feb. 21 unanimously voted tonight that the government should hold a presidential election next Nov. 29.

The election originally scheduled for March 29 was set aside when Baldomir seized absolute power against "obstructionist tactics" of the opposition party headed by Luis Alberto Herrera, enemy of Pan-American cooperation.

Baldomir is understood to have agreed to the council's proposal for the election late this year.

Ship Leaves Uruguay With Axis Diplomats

Germans And Italians Sail From Montevideo Aboard Specially Marked Liner

Montevideo, Uruguay, April 9 (AP)—The Spanish liner Cabo Buena Eperanza, with the word "Diplomats" painted in large white letters on her sides, sailed tonight for Europe with the German and Italian Ministers, attaches and employes who were ousted when Uruguay broke with the Axis.

Headed by Ministers Otto Langmann and Count Vittorio Emanuele Castel Bompiano, the group totaled 164 of whom 105 are Germans and fifty-nine Italians. The task of checking their luggage delayed departure until late tonight while a heavy guard around the pier kept on the alert against any disorders.

German and Italian diplomats accredited to Paraguay failed to arrive from Asuncion as expected and the ship got away without them. The first stop will be Rio De Janeiro but none will be allowed to land.

Italian Submarine Lists Toll

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 9 (AP).—The Berlin radio said today that reports from Rome credited a single Italian submarine with sinking six merchant ships totaling 32,000 tons during operations off the American coast.

These reports said the ships were a 5,000-ton United States vessel, a Dutch steamer, two British steamers and two ships of unspecified nationality.

Another Italian submarine was said to have sunk three ships totaling 22,600 tons, two of them tankers and the third a 7,000 ton U.S. merchantmen.

Ships in Collision

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., April 9—(AP)—Chester B. Koontz, Hampton Roads manager for C. H. Sprague and Son Company, ships owners, said tonight that an American merchant ship and an Argentine vessel collided early today in Chesapeake Bay, the latter sinking.

There were no lives lost, he reported.

SHIPPING SITUATION BECOMES SERIOUS

Sugar Piles Up in Puerto Rico Warehouses, Food Supply Dwindling.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, April 9.—(AP) C. S. Taussig, American co-chairman of the Anglo-American Caribbean commission, said today that the food situation in the Caribbean "is much more acute than is generally realized" because of shipping problems which may force a readjustment of this island's plotted sugar crops.

Governor Rexford Tugwell backed up this statement by saying "we really are close to a definite emergency."

With all Puerto Rico's warehouses packed to capacity with 450,000 tons of sugar and more still being ground, Taussig said he had asked Washington to furnish a prompt estimate on what tonnage would be available to move the crop to the United States.

"Until we get that (estimate) we can't do anything here," Tugwell said, indicating that it may be necessary to readjust the island's sugar problem which originally contemplated a production of 1,200,000 tons this year. Since Jan. 1 it was disclosed, shipments averaged only 75,000 tons monthly where as a minumum of 175,000 tons must be needed to keep pace with the mills.

Taussig said the advisory committee was going to recommend "a maximum interchange of food products within the Caribbean area during the war period, making maximum use of inter-island transportation, principally schooners."

New Nazi War Prisoners Taken To Canada Camps

Several Hundred Germans Are Brought Across Atlantic Under Heavy Guard

Ottawa, April 9 (AP) — Several hundred new German prisoners of war, including airmen, sailors and soldiers, have arrived for distribution to prison camps in Canada.

Brought across the Atlantic under heavy guard, the prison ship had an uneventful voyage, although the threat of lurking U-boats forced it to zigzag continually.

Among the prisoners were a large number of naval officers and men, some survivors of the ill-fated Bismarck, and large numbers of submarine crew members.

Tourists' Gas Imports Curbed by Canada

By the Associated Press.

OTTAWA, April 9.—The customs division of the National Revenue Department announced today that tourists entering Canada in automobiles from now on will not be permitted to import any gasoline in excess of what is in the tanks of their cars at the time of entry.

A provision whereby tourists had been permitted to bring in with them gasoline sufficient for 300 miles' travel without payment of duty has been withdrawn.

Schedule

We and our allies can and will build two and one-half times as many planes as all our enemies put together," he said, speaking at a Texas unity rally.

"Without divulging military secrets I can say that one factory alone is turning out each day an entire trainload of tanks."

Every element of the nation's war production effort "right now is either up to or ahead of the program that has been outlined."

Rayburn characterized the building of the nation's munitions industry as "the most remarkable accomolishment in all history."

Cautions Against Over-Optimism

The speaker, however, cautioned the cheering crowd against too much optimism, asserting he came to the meeting to assure the people that their leaders in Washington were not letting them and their sons down in the war effort.

Other figures he said he could not give because of their military nature, but said "it is not true that our men are training with broomsticks."

Rayburn was introduced by Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.) who said the principal battlefield of the war "is in American public opinion."

"The whispering in newspapers and in hotel lobbies is from the enemies of our government," Patman asserted. "If we possess unity of purpose, there can be no defeat. We must have faith in our leadership and national unity before we can have victory."

The unity rally was called by a group of Sulphur Springs citizens who demanded in a resolution several weeks ago that the nation have "unity instead of indignation." Special trains and buses brought several thousand persons here for the meeting, despite weather conditions.

U.S. Output of Planes Now 3,300 a Month

U. S. Troops on World Fronts Now Six Times Number Pershing Had in AEF After 10 Months, Says Rayburn.

SULPHUR SPRINGS, Tex., April 9. (AP)—Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn said today the United States now is making more than 3,300 planes a month and that it already has on worldwide fighting fronts six times as many soldiers as General Pershing had with the AEF after 10 months of the first World War.

Most Production Ahead of

There must be an uninterrupted flow of war production, Rayburn said in discussing labor.

Urges 48-Hour Week

"There must be no strikes, no lockouts, no stoppages. I believe we should have a 48-hour week in war production, without overtime or double time, and that will come.

"This is no time for capital to be greedy and labor to be unreasonable. Production must be uninterrupted in every quarter."

Rayburn said "lack of unity and of confidence have hampered our efforts and cost us priceless time and lost us much valuable ground."

The time, he went on, cannot be regained, "but we can and will recover the lost ground.

"Some speakers and some writers and some others, unwittingly, I trust, have endeavored to create the impression that our war effort has broken down. Impatience and insufficient knowledge concerning war preparation have been disquieting to some, yet production has proceeded with a minimum of hindrance."

Present production rates "indicate 125,000 planes in 1943, 100,000 of which will be combat planes," Rayburn said.

President Presents Gold Star To Stark In Lieu Of New DSC

Washington, April 9 (AP)—Admiral Harold R. Stark, former chief of naval operations and now commander of American naval forces in European waters, received a surprise from President Roosevelt today—a gold star in lieu of a second Distinguished Service Medal.

The White House said Stark did not know why he was given an appointment with the President until Mr. Roosevelt made the presentation.

The citation read:

"For exceptional meritorious service to the Government of the United States in a duty of great responsibility during his tenure of office as chief of naval operations from 1939 to 1942, when he was charged with the responsibility of building and administering the largest peacetime navy in the history of this country.

"Due to his exceptional qualities of leadership and his outstanding ability, full reliance was placed upon his advice and counsel by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Congress and by the President of the United States as evidenced by the Executive and legislative measures adopted for the naval service to effect a high state of training for war and the building of a 'two ocean navy.'"

Canadians in U. S. Draft May Join Own Services

Exchange of Notes With Ottawa Made Public by Welles

WASHINGTON, April 9 (AP).—Canadians subject to the draft in the United States will be permitted to serve in their own armed services, if they so elect, the State Department disclosed today.

The department made public an exchange of notes between the Canadian and United States governments, setting forth that Canadians, and also aliens of other nationalities residing in the United States, will be able to choose service in their respective armed forces.

In a note addressed to the Canadian minister, Leighton McCarthy, by Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles, it was noted that in the last war the United States signed conventions with certain associated powers on this subject.

Under existing circumstances, however, it is believed the same ends may be accomplished through administrative action.

The United States, therefore, is prepared to initiate a procedure whereby aliens who have registered under the selective service act, who are nationals of co-belligerent countries and have not declared their intention of becoming American citizens, may elect to serve in the forces of their respective countries.

It is emphasized that no threat or compulsion will be exercised by any co-belligerent government to induce any person in the United States to enlist in the forces of a foreign government.

The agreement is in line with an arrangement announced on March 18 whereby Americans now serving in Canadian and British forces, may elect to be transferred to units of the United States Army or Navy.

NEW ENGLAND AREA BEGINS SPY VIGIL

Army Commander Warns Enemy May Land from Submarines.

APR 10 1942

BOSTON, April 9 — (AP) Maj. Gen. Sherman Miles said tonight an attempt might be made to land enemy agents from Axis submarines "operating off our shores" as he issued "an alert" to New Englanders.

The First Army corps area commandant asked that New Englanders living near the seaboard be on the watch for any such attempt.

"If you see a strange face in an unlikely spot and have sound reason to believe the person is acting suspiciously," the alert stated, "notify your local police at once."

Referring to enemy agents that might attempt such a landing, the statement read:

"Such agents would carefully avoid attracting attention but may betray themselves through their unfamiliarity with the locality."

At the same time the general urged care and "common sense" upon the civilian watchers.

"But good judgment and common sense," he said, "should govern your actions in this matter and you should be careful not to start a spy-scare or witch-hunt."

ARMY GETS QUALTERS

President's Bodyguard to Be Captain in Air Corps.

Washington, April 9 (A. P.).—Thomas J. Qualters, a fellow who is always at President Roosevelt's elbow when the Chief Executive appears in public, is going into the Army Air Corps May 1 as a captain in the Intelligence Service.

The former Notre Dame football player didn't tell "the boss" about his commission until he actually had received it, so now the Chief Executive will have to find a new personal bodyguard in the next three weeks.

Qualters, who is "Tommy" to Mr. Roosevelt and every one else at the White House, also is assistant supervising agent of the secret service detail assigned to protect the President. He will be assigned to Bolling Field in his new post.

Qualters, 37 years old and married, became Mr. Roosevelt's bodyguard in December, 1936, succeeding Gus Gennerich, who died suddenly at Buenos Aires during a presidential trip to South America.

Qualters's home is at Somerville, Mass., and he served with the Massachusetts State police for several years.

Economic Warfare Unit Ordered Reorganized

Washington, April 9 (AP)—A complete reorganization of administrative machinery of the Board of Economic Warfare was ordered today by Milo Perkins, its executive director, to bring about a "more effective" functionery of this war agency staffed by 1,400 persons.

The board was created last September primarily to control exports so they would not reach the enemy and to obtain from Latin America and other friendly countries raw materials needed by the United States.

Heart Attacks Kill Seven in Coast Blackout

Warden Hurt in Fall From 2-Story Building During Long Los Angeles Alert

APR 10 1942

LOS ANGELES, April 9 (AP).—Seven persons died of heart attacks and an air-raid warden fell off a two-story building as the Los Angeles area blacked out an hour and 51 minutes last night. The warden was injured critically.

The blackout was ordered because of the "presence in the Los Angeles area of unidentified planes which later were identified as friendly," Lieutenant General John L. DeWitt, of the Western Defense Command, at San Francisco, reported.

There was no gunfire, as in Los Angeles' last blackout on Feb. 25. Los Angeles and Orange Counties, the only ones blacked out, doused their lights quickly and nearly 100 per cent.

Thousands of aircraft workers continued making warplanes in blacked out buildings, but all shipyards halted production from 9:03 p. m. until the all clear at 10:54 p. m.

Roars and howls of wild animals gave a thrill to some 4,000 persons blacked out in a circus tent. Near the close of the show, the master of ceremonies announced the blackout. Every one laughed, but then out went the lights.

"That's all right, folks," shouted an usher. "The animals think the show's over. They do that every night."

The band struck up a lively air. A few spectators went outside.

The band and performers did their best to entertain. At last, as the crowd was growing restless, came the all clear and loud sighs of relief.

In Long Beach, Dorothy Maynor Negro soprano, was concluding the first number of a concert before a crowd of 5,000 when the blackout sirens wailed. She promised to sing until the all clear, or her voice gave out. Her voice lasted, and the crowd got forty-five minutes more entertainment than was programmed.

The blackout was preceded by a radio blackout at 8:35 p. m., and within half an hour Los Angeles and its suburbs were almost completely dark.

APR 10 1942

Just as a dentist injected a pain-deadening drug for Harvey Berk's impacted wisdom tooth, the blackout sirens began to wail. The dentist, Dr. A. R. Greenberg, pulled his blinds, but an air-raid warden ordered lights out. Drafted for the emergency, the warden held a tiny diagnostic lamp, smaller than a fountain pen, while the tooth was extracted.

NELSON DISCOUNTS WORK STOPPAGES

Puts Low Estimate on Man-days Lost.

Washington, April 9 (A. P.).—Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board, reported today that 101,140 man days of work were lost through war production stoppages in January and February and said this loss constituted "less than one-fifth of 1 per cent of the labor which went into war production during these months."

He supplied the information in a letter saying that both Government authorities and the National Association of Manufacturers were wrong about the time lost in war industries during January and February.

Senator Maybank, Democrat, of South Carolina, placed the letter in the Senate record with the comment there had been fewer strikes than reported by the N. A. M. but that he was "distracted that there were any strikes while we were at war."

Mr. Nelson told the Senators that he had ordered a careful recheck upon all work stoppage data from both Government agencies and the N. A. M. and found that the "preliminary figure of the inter-departmental conference (Government) erred on the low side of the actual situation, and the figures of the national association were even more greatly in error on the side of excess."

The WPB listed twenty-five stoppages during January in war industries that involved 9,620 men and loss of 20,310 man-days. Its February total was forty-eight stoppages and 22,010 men and 80,830 man-days.

Mr. Nelson said the manufacturers association had reported forty-three strikes for January involving 15,512 men and loss of 82,747 man-days and seventy-six strikes in February involving 70,905 men and loss of 253,603 days.

Sewanee Confers Degree On Halifax

British Ambassador Says Hope Of World Is In Joint Action Of His And American People

Sewanee, Tenn., April 9 (AP)—Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States, said today he saw very little hope for the world unless the American and British peoples could work together as one in the solution of problems now and after the war.

The Ambassador, accompanied by Lady Halifax, came here to receive an honorary degree of doctor of civil law at a special convocation of the University of the South.

"If we can truly work as one, we shall reach an end which we can feel not unworthy of the price which shall have been paid," Lord Halifax said in a brief extemporaneous address before the degree was conferred upon him.

SEEKS CHANGE IN DRAFT CLASS

Lew Ayres, Of Dr. Kildare Movies, Wants To Perform Non-Combat Service

APR 10 1942

Film Star Now In Conscientous Objectors Camp In Oregon

[By the Associated Press]

Sacramento, Cal., April 9—Lew Ayres, film star sent to a conscientious-objector camp because he refused to bear arms, has applied for reclassification for non-combatant service in the army, the State selective service headquarters said today.

APR 10 1942

Selective service authorities said the final decision would be left to Ayres' local draft board in the event the National Director of Selective Service agreed to reopen his case.

The star of the Dr. Kildare screen series applied for a change of his classification to 1AO, which would permit him to drive an ambulance and perform other non-combatant work, a little more than a week after his arrival at the conscientious objectors' camp at Cascade Locks, Ore.

Wanted To Go In Medical Corps

In an interview here en route to the camp, Ayres said he had wanted to go in the Medical Corps when his draft number was called, but "they wouldn't take me." He said however, he was happy about being assigned to the Oregon camp.

At Los Angeles Brig. Gen. J. O. Donovan, State Director of Selective Service, said he had forwarded Ayres' application to Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national director, "with my recommendation that it be granted and that Ayres be assigned to the Medical Corps of the United States Army.

"It is my earnest hope that this action will follow," General Donovan said.

Eager To Serve Country

"Like the selective service local board in Beverly Hills which handled the case and the FBI which investigated it, I am convinced that Ayres is and has been most sincere and that he showed great courage in making his decision, although a better understanding by him of the situation would have averted the adverse publicity given the case.

"My personal investigation discloses that from the start Ayres has been eager to serve his country according to his capacity and his conscience."

WPB Officials To Talk With Canada On Power

Conference Today Will Take Up Shortage Affecting Aluminum And Pulp Mills

Washington, April 9 (AP) — War Production Board officials and 30.24—15873

30.24—15873

Canadian representatives will confer tomorrow on a proposal involving a possible increase in Canadian aluminum production by diverting power from pulp and paper mills.

One WPB source said the plan contemplated a reduction of "roughly ten per cent." in the amount of power furnished Dominion mills supplying American newspapers with most of their newsprint.

"If the only question is that of sacrificing newsprint to get more aluminum, we'll have to take the aluminum, of course," another high-ranking official declared.

No contract has yet been signed for the additional aluminum, which would be furnished by Canadian plants of the Aluminum Company of America.

Gas Supplies To East Again Cut By Ickes

Rationing May Be Avoided If Limitation Program Succeeds.

APR 10 1942

WASHINGTON, April 9.—(AP)—Another deep cut in gasoline consumption in the East and Pacific Northwest, was ordered today, and Petroleum Coordinator Ickes said that if the public cooperated fully in this limitation program rigid rationing by coupon books might be avoided.

Effective April 16, motor fuel supplies to filling stations in 17 eastern states, the District of Columbia, Oregon and Washington, will be reduced 33 1-3 per cent below normal, as compared with the 20 per cent cut now effective.

"If this works satisfactorily," Ickes said, "we may go to Mr. Henderson (the price administrator) and say there is no need for card rationing."

Station Operations Limited

Under the present curtailment system, the oil companies limit the supplies to some 100,000 service stations in the affected area by whatever percentage the government orders, and the individual station operators are given the responsibility of apportioning the short supplies equitably among their customers. The stations also are limited to operations for only six 12-hour days a week.

Ickes said this system was working "surprisingly well, with very few complaints," but he indicated the situation might be different when the motorists "feel the pinch" of the one-third reduction. Meanwhile, he said, Henderson's preparations for card rationing will go forward, to be applied if needed.

The coordinator told his press conference he would support a proposal by the petroleum industry war council that the industry, with government financial help, produce at least 300,000 tons of synthetic rubber a year for civilian use, in addition to the 700,000 tons now planned by government agencies.

Effectiveness of the industry in providing essential war materials such as aviation gasoline, lubricating and fuel oils, might be impaired, he said, if the operation balance of the industry were upset through the shrinkage of gasoline demand below certain levels.

"If all the cars go off the roads," he told the newsmen, "there will be no market for gasoline, and if we can't refine gasoline we won't have by-products to make aviation fuel."

Sen. Bunker Charges Defense Plant Fraud

Claims Defense Plant Corporation Entered Into 'Sinister' Deal on Magnesite Refinery —Quickly Denounced By Jones.

APR 10 1942

WASHINGTON, April 9. (AP)—A charge that the Defense Plant Corporation had entered into a "sinister" war profiteering contract with a Cleveland magnesium firm was made in the Senate today by Senator Bunker (D., Nev.) and promptly was denounced by Jesse Jones as "false" and "unworthy of a United States senator."

Hints at Malfeasance

The Defense Plant Corporation is a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which, in tun, operates under the Commerce Department headed by Jones.

Bunker declared that the Defense Plant Corporation had agreed to lease a $63,000,000 magnesite refinery at Las Vegas, Nev., to Basic Magnesium, Inc., on terms "so sinister as to indicate that some officials in our government are guilty of malfeasance."

If the agreement, he added, represented "a cross section of conduct on the part of the Defense Plant Corporation, I can come to only one conclusion: We are tolerating the existence of an agency of the government that is so corrupt as to make profiteering in the last war look like petty larceny by comparison."

Bunker said Basic Magnesium, Inc., was a child of the "fertile promotional brain" of Howard P. Eels, Jr., of Cleveland, president of Basic Refractories, Inc.

Basic Refractories transferred to the subsidiary magnesium firm development rights on 36 mining claims on the public domain in Nye county, Nevada, Bunker said, adding:

"These claims, on which Basic Refractories admittedly expended less than $50,000, represented the sole asset of asic Magnesium, Inc., the corporation to which Defense Plant Corporation is giving $63,000,000 to build a refinery at Las Vegas.

"Prior to the formation of Basic Magnesium, Inc., and prior to the signing of the contract, Basic Refractories claimed to have expended in the promotion of this enterprise and the negotiation of the contract, the sum of $211,000. This no doubt includes Eells' numerous trips to Washington and entertainment at the [illegible] Hotel. This sum is now being repaid by the Defense Plant Corporation to Basic Refractories.

"In other words the government paid the corporation for promoting its officials out of $63,000,000. x x x

"And finally, remember this! The prduct of the plant is not to be furnished the government at cost. The contract provides that the product shall be sold at a reasonable price designed to yield a fair margin of profit."

Jones Claims Charges Untrue

When word of Bunker's assertions reached Jones, the latter issued a statement saying the speech contained "false and misleading statements" which Bunker "must know are untrue" and which took "no courage to make under his cloak of immunity."

The plant, Jones declared, would cost about $70,000,000, would have an estimated annual capacity of 112,000,000 pounds of metallic magnesium, was contracted for at the request of the Office of Production Management and the War Department, and "the government's interest is fully protected."

"Nine separate contractors are participating in the construction," Jones said. "The fees to be paid these nine contracting and engineering firms, together with the fee to Basic Magnesium, Inc., for its engineering plans, supervision and 'know how' will aggregate less than two per cent of the total cost of the plant.

APR 10 1942

"The operating or management fee of the plant is to be one-half cent per pound of magnesium produced which is approximately two per cent of the estimated cost. The royalty for the ores will not exceed one-quarter cent per pound of magnesium metal produced.

"No irregularities have been discovered in the construction of the plant that would warrant the irresponsible statements made by Senator Bunker. The plant is wholly owned by the government and will be operated for its account. All expenditures in connection with the construction of the plant as well as its operation are carefully audited as the work progresses."

Bunker, discussing what he termed the "international angle" of basic magnesium, said 45 per cent of the stock in the firm was given to Magnesium Elektron, Ltd., of England, which furnished a refining process obtained under a licensing agreement from the I. G. Farbenindustrie of Germany.

The remaining 55 per cent of stock, he said, was held by Basic Refractories.

Last week Bunker read into the Senate record a list of what he called "extortionate" salaries paid to 42 officials of Basic Magnesium, and said the firm stood to make a 4,280 per cent profit on an "admitted" investment of less than $50,000.

Senator Thomas (R. Idaho) congratulated Bunker on his speech and expressed hope that he would not drop the matter.

"Those fellows who are looting the United States Treasury," Thomas declared, "should not be investigated; they should be prosecuted, they should be jailed."

Defense May Yet Prove Vital in War on Japs

Hitler Still Bent On Caucasus Drive As Major Effort

By DEWITT MACKENZIE

If this means the end of the gallant defense by the men who have been fighting our battle from the fox-holes on the Bataan peninsula—and latest reports indicate that they are being driven back to the harbor fortifications—we can say pridefully that our boys have done a grand job in the face of overwhelming odds.

This amazing feat by the tiny army of Americans and Filipinos amidst the Luzon jungles has played an important part in delaying the Japanese offensive in the southwest Pacific. Indeed, when the final day of reckoning comes it may be found that this operation vitally influenced the outcome of the war with Japan.

So salute to a great bunch of fighters! And good luck to them in reaching the harbor fortresses and holding them!

Marshall's Trip To Plan Offensive, Is Belief

The unexpected and therefore sensational arrival of American Chief of Staff Marshall and Harry Hopkins in London rather obviously has to do with coordination of the Allied effort in the great offensives which already are getting under way and may make this the decisive year of the war.

In view of the lack of specific information it probably is natural that civilian thoughts should turn to the possibility of opening up a new front somewhere in western Europe to support the Soviet effort in the titanic struggle which already is under way along the Russian steppes. The hope of such a project is something which burns hot in the hearts of all the Allied peoples.

Probably we are justified in believing that something of the sort might develop in due course, but we have no facts which justify us in jumping to conclusions. Suffice it to say that the Allies definitely are bent on offensive action and are determined to use all justifiable initiative.

Meanwhile, Hitler's spring song of hate is taking the old, familiar form of his already blood-drenched project for gaining control of the Caucasus and the while Middle East by a huge pincers movement

Prelude to Axis Drive in Africa Seen

The fierce Nazi bombing of the British key naval bases at Malta and Alexandria and the way in which that wily desert fighter, German Field Marshal Rommel, is feeling out the British lines in Libya, would seem to presage an Axis offensive there. There are many indications that the heavily reinforced marshal is maneuvering into position for another drive against Egypt if and when his master gives the sign.

At the same time the Nazis are flinging themselves against the Russian southern flank in a sanguinary effort to get strategically set for another atempt to break into the Caucasus. Both sides have brought up heavy reinforcements and one of the most destructive battles of the war is in prospect.

Hitler's calculation is that the two offensives will crush the Allies betwen them, as mill-stones crush grain, making him lord of the resources which will enable him to replenish his shrunken supplies and carry on the war indefinitely. While supposed to press westward acros this is boiling up, the Japanese are the Indian ocean, perhaps attempting an invasion of India, to form a junction with Hitler in the Middle East, thereby making a triple squeeze on the Allies.

News From India Encouraging to Allies

Actually the Japs have increased their activity in this theater until London naval reporters today forecast the possibility of the biggest naval battle of history in the Bay of Bengal between the Nipponese and British fleets. In view of this, the Allied powers will welcome the report from New Delhi that the British-Indian negotiations over the proposed dominion form of government appear to have reached a general understanding.

Hitler's trick is a grand one if he can do it and, as the stage juggler would remark, it's a grand trick if he can't. The Fuehrer's persistence in this strategy isn't dut to any lack of ingenuity bu rather to far-sighted realization o the uncomfortable fact that victor for him can lie only in this dire tion, barring some wholly unfor seen long-shot.

This is true, as I have kept i sisting, because has has no hop of winning the war unless he breal through to new fields of supply There is only one Garden of Ede available to him—the cornucopia Caucasus and the Middle Easter countries.

British Official Offers Civilian Defense Tips

People Must Be Taught to Face Danger, Says Morrison—Regards Vast Raid Shelters As Impracticable.

APR 10 1942

By Russell Landstrom

LONDON, April 9. (Wide World)—The forthright teaching of the people to face danger is the key to effective civilian defense—

That's the advice of Herbert Morrison, home secretary and minister of home security, to the United States in fortifying its home front against aggression.

Must Run Front Line Risks

"Civilians are in the front line," Morrison said in an exclusive interview for Wide World.

"They must run front line risks. To argue otherwise or to make plans on a basis of 100 per cent safety would be like trying to run an army on the principle of safety first.

"If you take the whole civil population right out of the battle—which you can't—morale goes to pieces. Morale in this country never was better than when we were getting hell bombed out of us.

"It's bad to base civil defense on the idea that not a hair of the people's heads shall be endangered. The people mustn't be led that way. Civil defense requires them to be exposed to danger not silly needless danger, but the kind practically all of us must meet at one time or another in modern war."

In this battle, Morrison continued, a nation must "beware of developing too much defense feeling.

"When passive defense psychology predominates there is a risk of upsetting the fighting spirit of the people. The people must be imbued with the spirit that death is better than defeat."

To proposals—which recur from time to time even at this stage—that vast subterranean shelters be constructed to house all, the home secretary has replied that such refuges are impractical, uneconomical, bad psychology and not always as safe as might be fancied.

"It would be impossible to put the whole civil population in deep shelters," he said. "And even going down deep would give no complete assurance of safety. Many such shelters might become tombs. For there are the fire bombs and tons and tons of debris to be considered. Cities could not be abandoned thus to the enemy blitz."

"It is doubtful, of course," he went on, "that the United States would be—or even could be—as hard hit, at any point, as Britain was at the peak of the air attacks. Raids against the United States mainland probably would be hit and run affairs and not very dense.

Incendiaries to Be Feared

"Incendiaries, however, could cause you a lot of trouble, if your country weren't ready for fire raids. Therefore, I think that it is of the utmost importance that the United States look to its fire services, both fire prevention and fire fighting.

"One British mistake was to leave in existence 1,400 independent local fire brigades in our small country, but we had to wait to catch our second breath before undertaking the complicated task of reorganizing them on a national basis. In this respect, the United States has the benefit of our experience.

"The magnitude of the fire risk, where actual fire-fighting was concerned, was not greatly underestimated here. But fire prevention was. We should have had a vast army of fire guards. When we did get going, we had the wrong approach. We paid citizens to do the job. That was wrong. Although a nominal compensation is now paid to fire-watchers, the old faulty practice has long been discontinued.

"Mobilize the American millions, and organize to get the fire bomb at the start—that's what I should say to the United States."

Morrison said the matter of keeping emergency water supplies on hand was "well worth looking into" by the United States. Britain has many millions of static water supplies—created after problems such as bursting water mains taught the need of installing reservoirs.

The minister cited also the improvement in the service of public utility repair squads made possible, he said, by forms of cooperation which many persons previously had thought impossible.

In this, and in the inauguration of various regional civil defense organizations designed to streamline diffused home efforts, there was shown "a remarkable example of the British faculty of voluntary cooperation provided there are good-will and a great reason on the government's part."

APR 10 1942

Morrison, who has visited the United States and is not unfamiliar with its potential civil defense problems, observed:

Cities Have Natural Protection

"The large American cities, especially New York, have much natural protection. The steel-framed buildings would afford excellent shelter. My advice would be to leave the upper eight to 12 floors unoccupied, and use those down to the second or third floor. Of course, special provision would have to be made for the poorer sections, particularly in New York and San Francisco.

"It would be folly to try to use the New York subways for shelters. They are not deep enough. It would be asking for death and disaster if New York tried to follow London's example."

Presently, Morrison said, it appeared that America's inland cities had negligible civil defense problems, although he emphasized that it was essential none fall prey to carelessness, overconfidence or complacency because of its relatively safe position.

Morrison said he thought it unlikely that the United States ever would be obliged to impose, except possibly in certain danger belts, so strict a blackout as Britain has endured for nearly three years.

A consistent opponent so far of schemes for temporary lifting of the blackout, or even for any appreciable modification, said the frequently suggested master switch plan presents numerous difficulties.

APR 10 1942

For one thing, he amplified, "Britain is a small country, and the enemy gets here in a hurry, for he is very close. Too, there would be a strong chance of error in calculation, or enemy bombers might change their course—as they often do. We should have no reasonable guarantee that we would not be taken off guard.

"An enormous amount of electrical work would be intailed. We cannot spare the men for it.

"Moreover, it is our policy to maintain the regular flow of traffic—buses, trams, service vehicles, private cars. If we switched suddenly from light to darkness there might be a pile of street accidents.

Different in America

"It is different in the United States. The master-switch plan doubtless would be the best bet there. But I'd suggest that the authorities consider carefully the possibility of serious traffic confusion and accidents."

Surveying Britain's civil defense, the minister asserted "on the whole our anticipation on the problems we might have to face was quite intelligent. Some things were underestimated or overlooked, but that was inevitable."

"In the beginning," he continued, "our idea was that we would be bombed in the daytime, probably for a half hour at a time and frequently, with people going to the shelters at those times. Originally, also, it was intended that the civil defense staffs, as well as other civilians, go to the shelters.

The battle of Britain settled that; we beat the day raids.

"But we underestimated the probability of the Germans going in for long night bombing. When they did, it created a whole new set of problems.

"One of the most pressing of these was that of getting a place for people to spend the night. Most of them, as it turned out, stayed in their own beds—and that was fine of them. We found that the lower middle-class people were not less courageous and helpful than the workers, the poorer workers who showed such good spirit under fire.

"For reasons of safety, sanitation and morality, we had to divide up shelter space. We had to strengthen many shelters.

"Sanitation, indescribably bad in a few shelters, was vastly improved. Morale, on the whole remained good. We provided proper medical aid, and set up food canteens in the crowded shelters.

"We had to deal—and so may the United States—with all manner of well-meaning persons who wanted to organize classes, courses, meetings, parties and entertainments for shelterers, much of which, it was felt, would not be in their best interests."

He said "another tremendous problem concerned the aftermath of raids—the work of setting a town straight the morning after the night before, getting the people to go on with life as normally as possible."

'Morning After' Tasks

Typical tasks of the "morning after" crews include:

Reestablishing gas, water and electric services, setting up communal kitchens and bringing in mobile canteens; caring at the rest centers for those at loose ends or slightly wounded billeting; salvaging; disposing of unexploded bombs; providing financial help for all those needing it — pretty much the entire process of getting life going again.

"Few things are more valuable than the practice of watching minutely and imaginatively what happens during each incident and immediately afterward, and of insisting upon knowing precisely what went wrong and why," he concluded.

JANUARY 22--RENEWING ATTACKS ALL ALONG THE LINE, JAPANESE LANDED HEAVY REINFORCEMENTS NORTH OF BATAAN IN LINGAYEN GULF AND SUBIC BAY.

JANUARY 24--THREE DAYS OF CONTINUALLY HEAVY PRESSURE WON FOR THE FOE SEVERAL POSITIONS ON THE PENINSULA'S WEST COAST.

JANUARY 25--A HEAVY ATTACK ON MACARTHUR'S LEFT FLANK FORCED THE DEFENDERS BACK, BUT A COUNTER ATTACK ON THE OTHER END OF THE LINE FORCED THE JAPANESE INTO A DISORDERLY RETREAT. APR 10 1942

JANUARY 27--TWO OF MACARTHUR'S PURSUIT SHIPS DOWNED TWO JAPANESE DIVE BOMBERS AND DISABLED A THIRD, AND TWO OF HIS MOTOR TORPEDO BOATS FIRED AT AND HIT ATTACKING BOMBERS. GROUND FIGHTING ON BATAAN HAD SUBSIDED.

JANUARY 29--ARTILLERY FIRE BROKE UP HEADLONG JAPANESE INFANTRY ASSAULTS ON BOTH FLANKS OF THE BATAAN LINE.

JANUARY 30--THE JAPANESE DROPPED LEAFLETS OVER BATAAN, URGING MACARTHUR TO SURRENDER, AND WARNING THE PHILIPPINE TROOPS THAT "YOU ARE CONDEMED TO THE DOOM."

FEBRUARY 1--SEVERAL STRONG THRUSTS AT THE BATAAN LINE WERE REPULSED WITH LARGE ENEMY LOSSES, AND THE BIG GUNS OF THE ISLAND FORTS DESTROYED AN ENEMY FORCE ASSEMBLED AT TERNATE ON THE CAVITE SHORE OF MANILA BAY APPARENTLY TO ATTEMPT A LANDING ON THE HARBOR FORTIFICATIONS.

FEBRUARY 2--ATTACKS ON BOTH FLANKS OF THE LINE REPULSED IN HARD FIGHTING, AND DETACHMENTS OF PICKED JAPANESE SHOCK TROOPS ATTEMPTING LANDINGS ON THE WEST COAST WERE THROWN BACK OR DESTROYED.

FEBRUARY 3--TWO MORE ATTEMPTS TO LAND ASSAULT TROOPS ON THE WEST COAST DURING THE NIGHT WERE BROKEN UP WITH HEAVY ENEMY LOSSES. MACARTHUR LAUNCHED A COUNTER ATTACK ON HIS RIGHT FLANK WHICH OVERRAN THREE LINES OF JAPANESE TRENCHES. APR 10 1942

FEBRUARY 26--AFTER NEARLY THREE WEEKS OF DESULATORY SKIRMISHES, MACARTHUR LAUNCHED A SUDDEN ATTACK WHICH FORCED THE ENEMY BACK FROM ONE-HALF TO FIVE MILES ALONG THE ENTIRE LINE.

MARCH 4--MACARTHUR REPORTED THAT HIS SMALL AIR FORCE, IN A SUDDEN ATTACK ON JAPANESE SHIPPING IN SUBIC BAY, DESTROYED FOUR ENEMY TRANSPORTS AND TWO LARGE MOTOR LAUNCHES, AND SET FIRES ON THE DOCKS. THOUSANDS OF ENEMY SOLDIERS WERE DROWNED OR KILLED IN EXPLOSIONS.

MARCH 8--ARTILLERY FIRE FROM CONCEALED BATTERIES DESTROYED 29 TRUCKS OF AN ENEMY INFANTRY REGIMENT MOVING TO THE FRONT NORTH OF ABUCAY IN BATAAN. MACARTHUR RELAYED REPORTS THAT GENERAL HOMMA HAD COMMITTED HARA-KIRI.

MARCH 9--LIEUTENANT GENERAL TOMOYUKI YAMASHITA, CONQUEROR OF MALAYA AND SINGAPORE, WAS REPORTED TO HAVE SUCCEEDED HOMMA.

MARCH 17--MACARTHUR ARRIVED IN AUSTRALIA, AND LIEUTENANT GENERAL JONATHAN M.WAINWRIGHT SUCCEEDED TO DIRECT COMMAND OF AMERICAN-FILIPINO FORCES. A SUDDEN RAID AGAINST THE BATAAN LINE AF-TER SEVERAL DAYS OF INACTIVITY WAS REPULSED EASILY BY WAINWRIGHT'S TROOPS.

MARCH 22--YAMASHITA DEMANDED SURRENDER OF WAINWRIGHT.

MARCH 24--FIFTY FOUR JAPANESE HEAVY BOMBERS RAIDED CORREGIDOR, RESUMING LARGE SCALE ENEMY AERIAL BOMBARDMENT AFTER LAPSE OF ABOUT TWO MONTHS.

APR 10 1942

MARCH 28--ENEMY LAUNCHED HEAVY ATTACK ON THE RIGHT CENTER OF WAINWRIGHT'S LINE, BUT WAS REPULSED WITH HEAVY LOSSES.

APRIL 1--A HEAVY ATTACK AGAINST THE RIGHT CENTER OF THE LINE WAS RESUMED BY SEVERAL WAVES OF ASSAULT TROOPS WHICH SUCCEEDED IN TAKING SOME ADVANCED POSITIONS.

APRIL 4--THE FINAL SUSTAINED DRIVE AGAINST WAINWRIGHT'S FORCES WAS STARTED BY A HEAVY INFANTRY ASSAULT,SUPPORTED BY ARTILLERY, BOMBERS, AND TANKS, AGAINST THE RI[illegible] CENTER OF THE LINE.

LONDON--ADD MALTA-LIBYAN X X X THE MIDDLE EAST.

DESPITE REPORTS OF INCREASED ENEMY ACTIVITY IN LIBYA, A BRITISH MILITARY COMMENTATOR SAID TODAY IT WAS NOT YET EVIDENT WHETHER THIS WAS PRELIMINARY TO A LARGE SCALE ATTACK.

TWO OR THREE COLUMNS WERE BELIEVED OPERATING IN THE AREA IN FRONT OF THE BRITISH LINES AND THERE WAS SPECULATION WHETHER THESE WERE TRYING TO PENETRATE THE "OUTER CRUST" OF BRITISH DEFENSES FOR INFORMATION OR PREPARE THE WAY FOR A FULL SCALE OFFENSIVE.

THE MILITARY COMMENTATOR APPEARED TO DISCOUNT THE CHANCES OF A LARGE AXIS ATTACK, BUT OTHER SOURCES CONTINUED TO ASSERT THAT ROMMEL'S ACTIVITY WAS PART OF A GERMAN SPRING OFFENSIVE AIMED AT EGYPT AND THE ALLIES' VITAL LAND JUNCTION BETWEEN EUROPE, ASIA AND AFRICA.

ONE REASON FOR THE EVIDENT BRITISH REFUSAL TO CONSIDER THIS IS BELIEF THAT THE WEATHER AFTER MID-MAY IS TOO HOT FOR FIGHTING WITH LARGE ARMORED FORMATIONS.

APR 10 1942

IT WAS RECALLED THE SAME SOURCES SAID LAST AUTUMN THAT IT WAS TOO COLD IN RUSSIA FOR FIGHTING AFTER NOVEMBER.

THE MILITARY COMMENTATOR PUT THE AXIS FORCES IN LIBYA AT THREE GERMAN DIVISIONS--TWO ARMORED AND ONE "LIGHT OR MOTORIZED" AND SIX ITALIAN DIVISIONS, ONE ARMORED AND FIVE INFANTRY.

THE TOTAL FORCES WAS ESTIMATED AT "SOMEWHERE BETWEEN 120,000 AND 130,000" EFFECTIVES.

OTTAWA, APRIL 9-(CANADIAN PRESS)-CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS OF A NUMBER OF GROCERY ITEMS ARE REQUIRED TO REDUCE THEIR PRICES ON AND AFTER NEXT MONDAY TO NOT MORE THAN THE HIGHEST PRICES CHARGED DURING THE MONTH OF JUNE, 1941, UNDER AN ORDER OF THE WARTIME PRICES AND TRADE BOARD ISSUED TODAY.

"MANUFACTURERS' PRICES OF THESE GOODS HAD INCREASED BETWEEN JUNE AND OCTOBER AND THUS CREATED A CONSIDERABLE 'SQUEEZE' ON WHOLESALERS AND RETAILERS, A SUBSTANTIAL NUMBER OF WHOM HAD BASED THEIR SELLING PRICES ON THE COST OF PURCHASES MADE SOME TIME PRIOR TO THE BASIC PERIOD AND WERE NOT ABLE TO PAY THE HIGHEST PRICES ESTABLISHED BY MANUFACTURERS DURING THE BASIC PERIOD," A BOARD STATEMENT SAID.

"THE PRESENT ACTION HAS ACCORDINGLY BEEN TAKEN IN ORDER TO KEEP REPLACEMENT COSTS OF WHOLESALERS AND RETAILERS AT A LEVEL WHICH IS, ON THE WHOLE, REASONABLE IN RELATION TO THEIR OWN MAXIMUM SELLING PRICES.

"ON THE OTHER HAND, THERE WILL BE SOME DISTRIBUTORS WHO WILL FIND THAT THEIR COSTS HAVE NOW BEEN REDUCED BELOW THE LEVEL ON WHICH THEY MASED THEIR MAXIMUM SELLING PRICES DURING THE BASIC PERIOD LAST AUTUMN. IN SUCH EVENT, THEIR MAXIMUM SELLING PRICES MUST BE REDUCED PROPORTIONATELY."

PROVISION HAS BEEN MADE FOR PAYMENT OF A SUBSIDY TO MANUFACTURERS BY THE COMMODITY PRICES STABILIZATION CORPORATION TO COMPENSATE THEM WHERE NECESSARY FOR THE ENFORCED REDUCTION IN LAWFUL SELLING PRICES. AS IN THE CASE OF ALL SUCH SUBSIDIES, CONTINUATION OF THE SUBSIDY ON GROCERIES WILL BE SUBJECT TO FURTHER INVESTIGATION OF NEEDS AND OF THE POSSIBILITY OF REDUCING COSTS.

THE AMOUNT OF THE SUBSIDY WILL BE CONTROLLED BY THE PROVISION THAT IT WILL BE REDUCED BY THE AMOUNT, IF ANY, BY WHICH EACH MANUFACTURER'S PROFITS FROM HIS ENTIRE BUSINESS, AFTER TAXES, EXCEED HIS STANDARD PROFITS, AFTER TAXES, DURING THE PRE-WAR STANDARD PERIOD USED FOR THE PURPOSES OF THE EXCESS PROFITS TAX ACT.

American Torpedo Boats Sink Enemy Cruiser In Invasion Fleet Headed For Cebu; Tribute Paid To Island Defenders

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 10—The sailors and marines—originally some 3,500 of them—who manned the beaches of Bataan and fought off dozens of furious Japanese landing attempts have been withdrawn to Corregidor, and the American flag still flies over that stubbornly unyielding fortress.

This was the gist of announcements made today by the army and navy in the aftermath of the smashing of Lieut. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright's exhausted last-stand army by the far more numerous Japanese forces.

Cebu Radio Goes Off The Air

At the same time the army disclosed that the Japanese, pounding Corregidor with tons of explosives, were simultaneously extending their conquest to the island of Cebu, some 375 miles to the southward.

The Cebu radio, which had been functioning throughout the war, stopped responding to calls. In the invasion operation, swift-darting American motor-torpedo boats sank a Japanese cruiser.

Another large Japanese ship of war, described as either an "auxiliary cruiser or a large tender," a vessel "heavily armed," was officially reported meanwhile to have been sunk in the Celebes Sea by an American submarine.

Americans Destroy Vessels

In addition, the navy disclosed that a United States submarine tender, the Canopus; a minesweeper, the Bittern; a naval tug, the Napa, and the Dewey floating dry dock which had seen service at and about Corregidor and Bataan had been destroyed by American forces to prevent their use by the enemy, if captured.

While these announcements were being made, tributes to the gallant defenders of Bataan were accumulating. Notably, there was one from Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who until a few weeks ago commanded the army of Bataan.

APR 11 1942

"So Much With So Little"

"The Bataan force went out as it wished—fighting to the end of its flickering forlorn hope," the general said at his headquarters in Australia. "No army has ever done so much with so little. Nothing became it like its last hour of trial and agony.

"To the weeping mothers of its dead, I only say that the sacrifice and halo of Jesus of Nazareth has descended upon their sons and that God will take them to himself."

At a press conference, President Roosevelt announced the receipt of a message from General Wainwright at Corregidor, saying that "our flag on this beleaguered island fortress still flies." The message, not made public in full, was in response to one from the President unstintedly praising Wainwright and his men and authorizing the general to make any necessary decisions.

Bataan Strategy Revealed

The original strategy of Bataan was revealed, meanwhile, in fuller detail by a dispatch from Clark Lee, Associated Press correspondent, who spent many weeks covering the fighting there.

It never was intended, he said, that after retiring to Bataan American and Filipino forces should hold out indefinitely, but only for the sixty days that it was estimated it would take to get reinforcements to them.

This strategy was upset, however, by the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, widespread destruction of American planes in Manila and the development of Japanese command of the air and sea.

Sea Fighters' Part

Simultaneously with its disclosure that surviving naval and marine personnel had largely been evacuated to Corregidor, the navy made public some details of the part which the bluejackets and the marines took in the Battle of Bataan.

These men were originally stationed at the Cavite and Olongapo naval stations. When those points had to be evacuated, however, they were formed into a fighting unit.

The marines, who included the Fourth Regiment, transferred from Shanghai to Manila before the war started, were commanded by Col. Samuel L. Howard. The naval contingent was under Capt. Kenneth M. Hoeffel.

Part Of Beach Defense

"During January and February," the navy said, "the naval and marine forces functioned as a part of the beach defenses of Mariveles and Corregidor, manning guns and operating in cooperation with the army. In the third week of February the naval battalion was shifted from Mariveles to man the beach defenses of Fort Hughes (another island fort at the entrance to Manila Bay).

"Up to this time the naval battalion had been assigned the defense of a sector of the Bataan front. The month of March found the Fourth Marines and the naval battalion an integral part of the harbor defenses, and they continued to fight at the side of army units until General Wainwright's order to move to Corregidor."

Jap Attacks Increase

Describing the fighting activities of the marines and bluejackets, and their evacuation from Bataan to Corregidor, the navy said:

"Early in April the scale of enemy attacks increased and furious fighting was reported in the front lines and along the beaches. Attempted landings by the Japanese from barges on the various beaches were repulsed by army artillery units and by naval and marine beach defense units in hand-to-hand fighting.

APR 11 1942

"When it became increasingly apparent that Bataan could not continue to hold, General Wainwright ordered navy and Marine Corps personnel to Corregidor under cover of darkness."

Heroism Acclaimed

The navy's statement also reviewed the exploits of the motor torpedo boats which harassed enemy shipping about Japan and carried General MacArthur, his staff and his family over the first stage of their journey to Australia. In addition it mentioned several officers and men for outstanding heroism:

Lieut. Jerry A. Steward, of Streeman, Texas, the only survivor of a bomb hit on the Cavite power plant, although wounded, remained at his post throughout the bombing, fighting fires and securing the machinery of the plant.

Ensign R. W. Granston, Seattle; Chief Pay Clerk O. C. Bruun, of Purcell, Ark., and Pay Clerk C. A. Hanson, Tyler, Minn., removed official funds from the navy yard to a place of safety, despite exploding bombs and burning buildings.

Perilous Assignment

Later, Bruun, Hanson and Lieut. Carl F. Faires, Jr., of Atlanta, obtained funds from Manila "under hazardous circumstances to pay off 6,000 former navy yard employes." Their trip was made during an "intensive bombing."

Commander Francis J. Bridget, South Orange, N. J., and Lieut. John D. Bulkeley, Long Island City, N. Y., "distinguished themselves in action" and were cited for "extraordinary heroism." Bulkeley commanded a motor torpedo boat which sank a Japanese vessel in Subic Bay.

Others Are Cited

Lieutenant Colonel Adams, Lieut. Com. R. T. Whitney, Escanaba, Mich.; Lieut. Thomas K. Bowers, Annapolis, Md.; Lieut. (junior grade) Malcolm M. Champlin (no address given); Lieut. (junior grade) T. E. Donaldson, Seattle, and Chief Boatswain James C. Oster, North Vassalboro, Maine, were also cited for "distinguished service" under bombardment. All the men named have been awarded Navy Crosses.

Word of the progress of events on Corregidor came early in the day from General Wainwright. The army's communique said:

"General Wainwright reported this morning that all communication between Corregidor and Bataan had been cut off for nearly twenty-four hours. However, it is apparent that fighting on the peninsula has ceased.

All Possible Was Done

"The general sent a message to the President in which he expressed his appreciation of the confidence placed in him by his commander in chief. He said everything possible had been done to hold Bataan with the limited number of combat soldiers under his command.

"The overwhelming air and artillery superiority of the Japanese finally overcame the dogged resistance of the hungry and exhausted defenders. General Wainwright declared that our flag still flies on the beleaguered island fortress of Corregidor.

"Corregidor was raided frequently throughout April 9 by heavy Japanese bombers. Enemy batteries in Bataan and on the south shore of Manila Bay repeatedly shelled our island forts. No material damage resulted.

Could Not Return Fire

"Our guns did not return the fire of the enemy artillery in Bataan, because the exact positions of our troops in that area was not known and it was desired to avoid the chance of subjecting them to our own fire.

"The enemy is apparently landing troops in Cebu. A fleet of five warships and ten transports is off that island. Our torpedo boats attacked the enemy vessels, sinking a Japanese cruiser."

Bataan's Fighters and Nurses Swam and Rowed to Corregidor

Braved Bombs and Machine Guns of Enemy Planes in Crossing Two-Mile Shark-Infested Channel, Then Stumbled Ashore Weary and Hungry

APR 11 1942

By Dean Schedler

CORREGIDOR FORTRESS, April 9 (AP) (delayed).—All night long last night nurses dazed with fatigue and war-weary fighters braved Japanese bombers and shark-infested waters to escape stricken Bataan for the comparative safety of Corregidor fortress in Manila Bay.

(This is the first cabled news dispatch to reach The Associated Press directly from Corregidor since the fall of Bataan.)

Across the two-mile channel which separates Bataan peninsula from Corregidor came civilians, as well, all who could or dared make the trip to the fortress. They came across in rowboats, mostly. Some of them swam and were picked up in mid-channel by other small craft. All the while Japanese bombers dropped their bombs or viciously machine-gunned the channels.

I talked to soldiers who had gone many nights without sleep or had little to eat during the final days while they fought so valiantly against overwhelming odds.

They tried to oblige by relating little bits of information concerning those awful last hours in which they stood and retreated bit by bit in the face of terrific machine-gun, cannon and aerial bomb fire. But they were interested in only one thing—sleep.

The nurses arrived in small boats, stumbling ashore with weariness after days and long nights of work in hospitals under constant fire.

The soldiers, safe at last from sharks and aerial machine-gun fire, could hardly impart their thoughts to me. Their experiences of the last few days and their situation still were unclear to them. It was as though they were groping for consciousness in a maelstrom.

They only knew that they were hungry and tired—and sleepy.

Meanwhile, during the night we could look across the water toward Bataan and hear tremendous explosions and see myriad-color fires as munition dumps were exploded and men carried out the last defiant orders of the scorched-earth policy.

The drama of the arrival of these refugees from the hell-fire of Bataan surpassed only the aching scene on Corregidor itself when soldiers and officers heard over the radio from the United States the story of the last of Bataan.

Seasoned soldiers, veterans of many a heavy bombing attack on this staunch island fortress, wept openly as the radio announcer, "The Voice of Freedom," broadcast by short wave from San Francisco the words:

"Bataan has fallen!"

"Filipino and American troops of this war-ravaged, bloodstained peninsula have laid down their arms," the voice said.

Then soldiers listened in reverent silence.

"With heads bloody, but unbowed, they have yielded to the superior force and numbers of the enemy," the voice continued.

"The world will long remember the epic struggle the Filipinos and Americans put up in the jungle fastness and along the rugged Bataan coastline. They have stood up without complaint under the constant and grueling fire of the enemy for more than three months.

"Besieged on land and blockaded from the sea, cut off from all sources of help, these intrepid fighters have borne all that human endurance could bear," the voice intoned.

There was continued silence amongst us, but we could hear the firing which we knew then was the last gallant struggle of Bataan.

"But what sustained them through all these months of incessant battle was a force more than physical," the voice continued.

"It was the thought of their native land and all it holds that is most dear to them, the thought of freedom and dignity, and pride in these most priceless of all human prerogatives."

We listened in silence, but in the heart of us all, I am sure, arose an "Amen."

Famed U. S. Floating Dry Dock In Philippines Is Destroyed

Dewey, Built At Sparrows Point And Towed 13,000 Miles, Wrecked In Japs' Path

APR 11 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 10—The navy announced today the destruction, before the fall of Bataan, of its famous floting drydock Dewey to prevent its use by the Japanese.

Launched on June 10, 1905, the Dewey was towed 13,000 miles from the Chesapeake Bay to the Philippines. Its safe arrival at Olongapo, P. I., on July 10, 1906, was hailed by the navy at the time as the completion of "the most difficult and trying feat of seamanship ever attempted."

The drydock was built by the Maryland Steel Company, Sparrows Point, Md. Towed to anchorage off Solomons, Md., near the mouth of the Patuxent river, it underwent official trials, docking the armored cruiser Colorado, later named USS Pueblo, and the battleship Iowa.

A special squadron was assigned to tow the Dewey from the Chesapeake Bay to the Philippines, and she was taken in tow December 28, 1905. The route was by way of the Canary Islands, Gibraltar, Malta, the Suez Canal and Singapore to Olongapo.

Designed for docking cruisers and large auxiliaries, the Dewey was 500 feet long, 99 feet wide and 30 feet deep. Its cost was $1,125,000.

Presence Of Enemy Fleet At Second Philippine City Reported

Radio Goes Off Air After Keeping Contact All Through War

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 10—The appearance of an invasion fleet off Cebu, reported today by the War Department, was believed in military quarters to spell the doom of the Philippines' second city.

One cruiser was sunk by a daring American motor torpedo boat, but the Japanese were reported nevertheless to be landing troops at or near the historic city, which is located on an island of the same name.

Suspicion that Cebu might already have been occupied was aroused when the powerful trans-Pacific radio station there became silent after 11.50 A. M. It was the first time since the start of the Pacific war that contact with this station had failed, the Radio Corporation of America reported at San Francisco.

City Of 142,912

Credited in the 1940 census with a population of 142,912, the city of Cebu before Pearl Harbor was second only to Manila in size and commercial importance and rivals the capital in historical interest.

The island of 1,695 square miles on which it is situated is the most densely populated province of the entire archipelago. It was on the island of Mactan, just offshore from the city, that Ferdinand Magellan, first to circumnavigate the globe, was killed in a fight with natives on April 27, 1521. The Spanish explorer's tomb is a showplace there.

Cebu for years has been an important foreign trade port, shipping sugar, copra and other Philippine products direct to the United States and to Europe, as well as being an interisland trading point.

Little Resistance Expected

Little effective opposition was expected from the city's defenders against strong and veteran enemy forces. Just what means of defense were at the disposal of the Philippine army reserve units believed stationed there was not disclosed; but virtually all the artillery in the islands was understood to be concentrated on Luzon.

Until yesterday, Cebu, along with most of the other major islands, had escaped invasion. The Japanese centered their force on Luzon, although making landings at various points on the islands of Mindanao, Masbate, Mindoro and Jolo.

However, the city had been shelled from the sea by Japanese warships which presumably intended to put the radio station and an airplane landing field out of commission and to discourage interisland traffic.

Cebu Wireless Silent.

San Francisco, April 10 (A. P.).—Wireless communication with Cebu, where a Jap invasion force has gathered, was suspended at 8:50 A. M., Pacific war time (11:50 A. M. New York time), the Radio Corporation of America said today.

A fleet of ten transports, supported by five warships, was off the Island of Cebu, the War Department had announced.

The RCA radio station is in the city of Cebu. When the powerful station went off the air it was assumed here the city was under siege. It was the first time since start of war that the Cebu station could not be reached.

Japs Say Bataan Town Still Held By Americans

TOKYO (From Japanese Broadcasts)—April 10 (AP)—Japanese dispatches said tonight her forces had occupied Cabcaben, on the southeast shore of Bataan Peninsula, and were advancing towards the last enemy-held town, Mariveles, on the south coast.

Mariveles was reported in flames set by United States forces as they fell back. Everywhere on the Bataan coast huge columns of smoke arose, the Domei News Agency said, and the Americans appeared to have destroyed every single military installation on the road below Cabcaben.

The dispatches said Japanese naval units were at the entrance of Manila Bay to prevent the United States General Wainwright from removing his troops to the island fortress of Corregidor aboard some small vessels he had collected at Cochinos Point, the extreme southernmost tip of Bataan.

Domei said Corregidor was bombed twice yesterday and that the roar of Japanese planes over the entire area was incessant.

It said several thousand United States and Filipino troops were captured in earlier operations at Limay and Lamao.

Domei expressed the belief that the prolonged resistance on Bataan was possible only because Japanese Imperial Headquarters wished to terminate operations on other fronts before launching a general offensive in the Philippines.

It said the big push started at 9 a.m. April 3 with bombardment of American positions by several hundred Japanese cannon, and that six hours later the infantry charged.

It quoted a Japanese general staff officer as asserting that in this onslaught up to April 5 the Japanese lost only 500 men.

Japs Tell of Fighting.

Tokio (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 10 (A. P.).—Japanese troops moving south along the east coast of Bataan have occupied the town of Cabcaben, the last settlement before the outpost of Mariveles on the extreme tip of the besieged peninsula, frontline dispatches said today.

Airdromes and other military installations at Cabcaben and on the road to the south have been destroyed by retreating American and Filipino troops, the dispatches said.

The occupation of Cabcaben followed the Japanese advance down the east coast in which the towns of Limay and Lamao were taken. Japanese dispatches said that everywhere on the south coast of Bataan huge columns of smoke may be seen.

The Japanese news agency earlier declared that the United States stronghold at Corregidor had been raided twice yesterday and that fighting still was going on on Bataan Peninsula, despite previous reports that the American and Filipino troops on the peninsula had asked for a truce.

The Japanese took Limay early in the morning, Domei reported, and then drove into Lamae, four miles further down the coast.

This advance forces American and Filipino troops to flee in the direction of Mariveles, on the southern tip of the peninsula, the news agency said.

It added that after heavy Japanese dive bombing several thou-

Cavite Navy Base Docks Repaired, Domei Says

5 Former American Ships Raised From Bottom Of Bay And Moored There, It Is Claimed

Tokyo, April 10 (AP)—The Associated Press records the following Tokyo broadcast:

"A Domei correspondent reported after a tour of Cavite navy base in Manila Bay today that workmen are bustling to put the docks and machine shops in readiness for use in future naval operations.

"When work was begun January 11, he said, the navy yard was shambles with virtually everything leveled to the ground.

"The machine shop has been rebuilt and the docks are now being used to repair ships, he said.

"Five steamers, former American ships raised from the bottom of the bay, were moored to the docks, flying the Japanese flag and two of them had been equipped with salvaged American cannon, the correspondent said."

sands troops in the Limay and Lamae region surrendered.

Mariveles is lamost 15 miles from Lamae around the curve of the peninsula tip.

Domei said tons of explosives were unleased on military installations on Corregidor Island.

"Serious damage was believed to have been inflicted on the island as huge columns of smoke were seen spreading over Manila Bay," the news agency reported.

The dispatch said the Japanese bombers flew through a furious barrage of anti-aircraft fire to attack Corregidor.

Berlin Hears of Evacuation.

Berlin (From German Broadcasts) April 10 (A. P.).—Japanese dispatches from Bataan Peninsula reported today that Lieut.-Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright has assembled a few small transport ships at Los Cochinos in an attempt to evacuate American and Filipino troops to Corregidor, five miles across Manila Bay.

"Japanese naval units, however, are operating at the entrance to the bay in order to destroy this last chance of retreat," the dispatches added.

American General Captured, Say Nazis

BERLIN (from German broadcasts), April 10 (AP)—The German radio quoting Japanese reports said tonight that among the American and Filipino troops captured by the Japanese on Bataan was the commander of the 22nd Division.

140 Enemy Craft Blasted U. S. Warplanes Lined Up on Two Fields Awaiting Orders

(How the Japanese Air Force crippled the United States air strength in the Philippines is told in the following dispatch by Clark Lee, Associated Press war correspondent, who lived through the battle of Luzon and most of the siege of Bataan before going to Australia. He saw much of the action in the fight waged by the outnumbered United States and Filipino forces.)

By CLARK LEE,

Associated Press War Correspondent.

MELBOURNE, Australia, April 10.—The fate of Luzon and Bataan was sealed just before 1 p.m. on December 8, some 10 hours after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Our main bomber force was lined up on Clark Field, 40 miles north of Manila on Luzon Island, with the crews standing by awaiting orders to take off and bomb Japanese air and naval forces on the island of Formosa.

Most of the pursuit planes were at nearby Iba Field.

The pursuits and some bombers had been aloft during the morning, but had returned to the ground for orders.

While these instructions were being issued, the Japanese struck.

Fifty-four heavy enemy bombers roared over Clark Filed at 10,000 feet and showered the grounded planes, runways and hangars with explosives.

Eighty-six Japanese "Zero" fighters came in their wake and strafed the planes, ground forces and anti-aircraft batteries in low level attacks.

Simultaneously other bombers and fighters dived on the parked planes at Iba Field. They left a roaring hell of flames at both airdromes. Some of our planes were saved, but the main strength of our air force was gone.

After midnight that night Japanese bombers came in over Manila Bay and, aided by flares and fires set by fifth columnists on the ground, attacked Nichols Field on the outskirts of Manila, where planes assigned to defend Cavite naval base were stationed.

Earlier Monday the Japanese air force had struck at American outpost air fields strung on the western and northern coasts of Luzon, even some supposedly secret fields completed only a few days before. At each some planes were destroyed on the ground in perfectly co-ordinated attacks.

Japanese planes had been flying over Luzon several nights prior to the war. They had been picked up by detectors and once a flight of pursuits attempted to intercept them, but missed.

The bombers used in the December 8 raids apparently came from Formosa and Hainan and the fighters probably from two carriers.

On the same day the Japanese forces landed at Aparri and seized a large landing field which had been previously prepared by their agents. It was disguised as a rice field.

Within a few days Japanese planes were operating from this field. On December 10, about noon, the Japanese attacked Cavite with devastating success. Without anti-aircraft or pursuit interference their bombers criss-crossed the naval base for several hours.

Damage Widespread.

The first bomb hit the power plant, the second a fire station. Damage was widespread, casualties were heavy and the Asiatic fleet thus lost its sole effective operating base in the Philippines.

American submarines continued to operate for some days in island waters, attacking several enemy ships. But it was found necessary to withdraw most of the fleet to Java.

Two weeks later the Japanese hit in force, landing almost without sea or aerial opposition in Southeastern Luzon and in Lingayen Gulf.

Most of Gen. Douglas MacArthur's Army was green and untested. American officers did their best to fight the Japanese on the beaches, but the enemy's air control and overwhelming numbers quickly overcame the opposition. Lacking effective air or sea support, Gen. MacArthur was forced to fall back on the strategy of withdrawal into Bataan.

The Bataan withdrawal had been prepared years previously. It naturally did not call simply for the withdrawal of forces into Bataan only to fight until overwhelmed.

The force was to hold until reinforcements arrived, estimated to take 60 days.

Plans Nullified.

Unfortunately the development of the Japanese air power and blows to Pearl Harbor made the dispatch of reinforcements impossible.

In Bataan they felt that help could have been sent, and that American forces could have fought their way through to relieve the peninsula.

When it did not come day after day some officers began to realize it was not coming. The majority of the Army, however, refused to believe this.

Day after day heartening reports spread among the troops that help was on the way. The most frequent rumor was that aircraft carriers were landing planes to operate from Bataan airfields.

Once when a number of small vessels were moved from the southern side of Corregidor to the north to escape shellfire and thus could be seen from Bataan, word quickly spread that a convoy had come. Soldiers who refused to believe a convoy had come were extremely unpopular.

Men waited daily for reports that Tokio was bombed. They momentarily expected reports of some smashing American victory. American officers who knew the truth had the heart-wrenching job of sending young Filipinos to death on the battlefield in a lost cause. Young American officers who led them fought courageously until their own death.

M'Arthur's Tribute

APR 11 1942

Melbourne, April 10 (AP)—Gen. Douglas MacArthur said today of the defenders of Bataan: "No army has ever done so much with so little."

The supreme commander, hero of Bataan's first successful defense, said:

"The Bataan force went out as it would have wished—fighting to the end of its flickering, forlorn hope.

"No army has ever done so much with so little.

"Nothing became it more than its last hour of trial and agony.

"To the weeping mothers of its dead I only say that the sacrifice and halo of Jesus of Nazareth has descended upon their sons and that God will take them unto Himself."

The supreme commander wrote this tribute to the Bataan defenders in his hotel suite.

It was read to newspapermen from a ruled sheet of paper on which the words were written in pencil in the general's own hand.

BATAAN'S DEFENSE IS ACCLAIMED

Wellington, N. Z., April 10 (A. P.).—The defense of Bataan "will live in history as long as men value courage, heroism and sacrifice," Prime Minister Peter Fraser of New Zealand declared today. "The defenders of Bataan," he said in tribute to the little American-Filipino army, "covered themselves with imperishable glory, providing a shining example of the spirit animating the soldiers of democracy."

Chinese Promise Vengeance.

Chungking, April 10 (A. P.).—The defenders of Bataan were saluted today in sympathetic sadness and for once the news of a defeat for the United Nations was received without discordant criticism.

"Chinese armies are determined to avenge the American losses on the Bataan peninsula," said a statement issued by War Minister Gen. Ho Ying-chin.

"China has been fighting against great odds for almost five years and we are determined to continue to fight shoulder to shoulder with our Allies against our common foe until final victory is achieved.

"The Filipinos and Americans of Bataan won world-wide admiration and respect by holding out for four months against absolutely superior enemy land, naval and air forces. Since the outbreak of the Pacific war, Bataan peninsula is the only place where the defender has been able to put up a prolonged resistance against the repeated victorious enemy onslaughts."

"Although they have been overcome," said the newspaper Ta Kung Pao, "the Philippine-American forces went down in glory."

The communist New China Daily News said that the stubborn fight of the defenders of Bataan immobilized as many as 200,000 Japanese and had not been surpassed in heroism in the course of the war.

Mother Of Capt. A. W. Wermuth, Jr., Sure Japs Would Mistreat Son Who Killed 116

Philadelphia, April 10 (AP)—The mother of Chicago's "one-man army," who was still on Bataan when it fell, said today she would "rather have him fight to the end than be captured."

"I'm sure the Japanese hate him and would mistreat him," Mrs. A. W. Wermuth, Sr., said of her son, Capt. Arthur W. Wermuth, Jr., who was credited with killing 116 Japanese up to February 16.

Wermuth's fate is not known.

shot up, his pants blown off and his face and head bandaged like a mummy's.

Erect and clear-eyed, Capt. Art Wermuth, the "one-man army," whose destruction of more than 100 Japanese soldiers made his almost a living legend, stands with his aide in another picture. Capt. Wermuth is shown holding a submachine gun; he has grown a trim mustache and a trick beard that just covers the under part of his chin.

One view, showing soldiers listening to a small radio, might have been taken in peacetime maneuvers, so unconcernedly do the men lounge about.

The familiar pictures of devastated towns, bombed and set on fire are in the series, too. Other pictures include Japanese dead, sprawled grotesquely on the ground, and one of a wrecked 105-mm. Japanese field gun at the edge of a clearing.

Bataan Photos Tell Tale of Fight Against Great Odds in Jungle

WASHINGTON APRIL 10

By the Associated Press.

Official War Department photographs tell their own story of the horror and rigors of war as it was fought in the jungles and clearings of Bataan.

The pictures, taken over a period of time, were released coincidentally with the department's sad conclusion that, in the words of Secretary of War Stimson, "a long and gallant defense has been worn down and overcome."

How that defense was so long maintained is illustrated in part by photos showing American soldiers, dirt-streaked and strained, crouching in their foxholes and baby trenches alert to stop a Japanese tank with gun or bottle bomb.

Especially dramatic is the view of a stubble bearded Army captain giving a wounded enemy a drink of water from his canteen. The Jap, lying amid boulders, has been badly

Nurses In Australia, By Way Of Corregidor

Girls In United States Army Corps Are Veterans Of War In The Philippines

Melbourne, April 10 (AP)—Some girls of the United States Army Nursing Corps—already veterans of the war in the Philippines—have arrived in Australia by way of Corregidor after doing an "around-the-clock job" for the wounded defenders of the Philippines.

The unit is under the command of First Lieutenant Floramund A. Fellmuth, of Chicago. All were reticent about their work in the Philippines. Miss Fellmuth said simply:

"We started to work early in the morning and just when we were feeling tired and ready for bed the raids started."

Manila Utility Case Carries On Despite Conquest Of Bataan

APR 11 1942

Washington, April 10 (AP) — Despite the fall of Bataan, the Manila Gas Corporation asked the Supreme Court today to pass on a decision by the Philippine Supreme Court.

The Japanese invasion was taken into consideration by the petition, however, in these words:

"If it is considered that because of existing conditions in the Philippine Islands it is considered inopportune presently to grant the relief herein prayed, we respectfully suggest that action upon this petition be deferred."

The decision appealed from a $32,292 income-tax assessment against the company for 1934, 1935 and 1936.

Japs Laid Corregidor Accuracy to Secret Weapon, Sayre Says

Commissioner Recounts Details of Two Months In Foul Island Tunnel

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 10.—The story of how he lived, worked and dodged Japanese bombers for two months in a foul-smelling tunnel on Corregidor where "life was stripped to its essentials" was told last night by Francis B. Sayre, United States High Commissioner to the Philippines.

Mr. Sayre, who returned recently to America, told a United China Relief dinner he moved into the tunnel, where "cots were jammed end to end," with his family and part of his staff on Christmas eve after a breath-taking exodus from Manila.

Tunnel Bore Name.

"For the next two months," he recalled, "we lived on Corregidor in the tunnel—one of the tunnels—which was known as Malinta tunnel.

"The air was foul, fetid, hot—even in December. Two or three days after we got over there the Japanese put on a show—started bombing us—rained bombs down on Corregidor, smashed the buildings on the top of Corregidor.

"Casualties were heavy because our men hadn't as yet gotten accustomed to the bombing and didn't have their fox holes ready.

"* * * Hospitals crowded with bloody stretchers being brought in, and with the dying * * * Tunnels shaking under those bombs * * * Lights all out * * * You sit in the dark and wonder what's going to come next * * *.

Marksmanship Improved.

"But at the end of the day, although some damage had been done, there was no irreparable damage other than the casualties. The guns were still in commission. The anti-aircraft batteries were learning under fire how to hit Japanese planes. Every time the Japanese came across they improved their marksmanship * * *. The Japanese press began to say, 'In Corregidor there is some secret kind of weapon—a new secret weapon.'"

Then the enemy cut down on air bombings and began "to plague us with shell-fire," Mr. Sayre went on.

"When the shells came, although the havoc wrought was not as great, you never could tell where they would hit * * *.

"We preferred the bombs."

Wainwright Foresaw Philippine Attack, Note to Kin Shows

'Awful Responsibility' His, Bataan Defender Wrote Son's Wife

APR 11 1942

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 10.—Some weeks before the Japanese swept down on the Philippines last December, Lt. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright wrote his daughter-in-law:

"I have been shot at a lot before now, but that is simple compared with the awful responsibility of preventing a hostile landing in force, but I will do my best and I hope I will not fail.

"John is in the war zone, too, and I know he will carry on."

John—Jonathan M. Wainwright, 5th, son of the defender of Bataan—sat with his pretty wife last night in their three-room apartment in the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn and read the last letter they had received from Gen. Wainwright.

Son Was in Africa.

When the letter arrived November 16, addressed to the daughter-in-law, Jonathan Wainwright, the son, was in Africa on a trip from which he returned in January.

An employe of the American-South-African Lines, young Wainwright said he held a second mate's license and was now taking examinations to become first mate.

Although born on a military reservation at Monterey, Calif., and the son of a famous Army man, he took to the sea 10 years ago as a cadet on the S. S. Manhattan. Since then he has made 25 trips to South America, seven trips to Europe and six to Africa.

Nearly everything in the Wainwright's modest living room is nautical—a three-master sailboat clock, pictures of lighthouses and ships, pilot wheel ash trays and even drapes with sailboat designs.

Both "Seafaring People."

"That's entirely up to her," young Wainwright said of the motif as he turned to his wife, who was born in Norway and whom he married two years ago on Easter Day.

"We are both seafaring people," commented his wife.

In a wedding anniversary message last Sunday, young Wainwright's mother wired them from California:

"Father is well and strong. He asks how we are and where and how you two are."

Of the man who led the last-ditch struggle on Bataan at the head of 36,000 American and Filipino troops, his son said:

"I have a great deal of confidence in my father's ability and I trust he will see safely through those men under his command."

Vichy Asked to Help Free Americans in Indo-China

U. S. Acts for Release of Five Soldiers Held by Japanese

WASHINGTON, April 10 (AP).—The United States has instructed its Ambassador at Vichy to urge the French government to continue efforts to obtain the release of five Americans seized on Indo-Chinese soil by Japanese troops.

The Americans—an Army captain, a lieutenant and three air force sergeants—went ashore at Tourane Bay March 22, acording to information received by the State Department through French authorities. The captain remained with a launch, but the four other men encountered Japanese troops, who arrested them and took them to Japanese barracks near by. The Japanese, despite a French protest, then seized the launch and arrested the captain.

Wavell Girds for Jap Drive Against India

APR 11 1942

Counts on U. S. Flying Fortresses to Meet Invasion Attempt—British Aircraft Carrier Sunk in Bengal Bay.

By Drew Middleton

LONDON, April 10. (AP)—Britain's Wavell marshaled every available man-o-war, airplane and soldier tonight for the defense of the Ganges Basin of India, menaced by a Japanese air and naval fleet which had sunk the British aircraft carrier Hermes and two heavy cruisers in a four-day battle in the Bay of Bengal.

Naval Defenses Crippled

The hard-hitting flying fortresses of the American Major General Lewis H. Brereton were believed to be the chief reliance of the commander in chief for India, General Sir Archibald P. Wavell, in his attempt to find and strike the Japanese invaders before they are able to make landings.

With British naval defenses crippled by Japanese air power, the Allies were placing ever-growing reliance in these huge American B-17's.

The Japanese paid a heavy price for the destruction of the three British ships—the 23-year-old aircraft carrier Hermes and the heavy cruisers Dorsetshire and Cornwall. An informed observer placed enemy aircraft losses at 75 in the actions.

Moreover, a British communique announced that 21 Japanese planes were destroyed for certain yesterday in an enemy raid on the British naval base at Trincomalee, Ceylon; that 12 other enemy planes were probably destroyed and two more damaged.

The sinking of the Dorsetshire and Cornwall had been announced yesterday, but not until today was it disclosed that the Hermes had gone down. She sank about 10 miles off Ceylon, the site of the Trincomalee British naval base protecting India at the western side of the Bay of Bengal.

Bombers Sank Hermes

An authoritative source disclosed that bombers and not torpedo planes sank the 10,850 tons Hermes, the oldest carrier in British service. It was believed in London that she fought without support from shore-based aircraft and it was presumed that the 20 planes she carried were overwhelmed by waves of Japanese bombers.

The Japanese naval power which has smashed this opening in the British naval wall protecting India springs from aircraft based on at least two regular carriers and probably one auxiliary carrier as well, a well-informed source said.

Most of these planes are fighter bombers and it is probable that the Anglo-American air force will not attack in great strength until the Allied bombers can be escorted by shore-based fighters.

From the hill country of the north and from the flat naked plains British Indian troops are concentrated at strategic points from which mobile columns could be launched to strike at an invader. India's coastline is too long to allow the British to rely on linear defense.

While British losses at sea had been heavy and punishing, they had been by no means as severe as Tokyo had alleged.

The Japanese claimed that aside from the Hermes, Dorsetshire and Cornwall, two additional British cruisers had been sunk off Trincomalee naval station.

To this the Admiralty returned the specific, official denial:

"The Japanese claim is known to be quite untrue."

Action Light in Burma

On the Burma front, action apparently was light along the British-held right only 30 miles below the central Burmese oil fields, a headquarters communique saying only that there was "nothing to report."

On the left, held by the Chinese above Toungoo, a Chinese communique reported:

"A Japanese unit this morning renewed the attack on the Chinese precautionary line to the north of Toungoo after a week's lull.

"The Japanese unit was engaged by the Chinese expeditionary force and the fighting still was in progress after dark.

Another communique from Chungking said the Japanese were sending forward three columns in an effort to envelop the Chinese positions north of Toungoo but that a fourth flying column sent across the Sittang river to outflank the Chinese at Tedusha had been repulsed.

Westward, in the center of the Burma line fighting also continued, the communique said.

BRITISH PLANE CARRIER SUNK BY JAP FLYERS

APR 11 1942

Loss of Hermes Off Ceylon Announced at London by Admiralty.

FOE LOSES 75 AIRCRAFT

Tokio's Claims of Great Victory in Indian Ocean Are Branded as Lies.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 10.—Britain's first aircraft carrier, the 23-year-old Hermes, has been sunk in Japan's unabated effort to beat down the sea and air shield against invasion of India, but the enemy's total claims of victory are too extravagant, the British Admiralty said today in a communique.

Japanese planes sank the 10,850-ton Hermes about 10 miles off Ceylon, a pivot of British strength at the tip of India on the western side of the broad Bay of Bengal.

Could Carry 20 Planes.

The Hermes was involved deeply in developing the navy's air arm. She was the first vessel especially designed by the Admiralty as a carrier and could carry 20 planes, as compared with the 60 or 70 of newer carriers.

The British Navy was especially fond of its first-born Hermes. Typical is a general note recorded by Jane's Fighting Ships: "Splendid sea boat, very steady, with remarkably little rolling propensity."

In announcing the loss, the Admiralty said "it is probable a large proportion of the ship's company" has reached land. The Hermes had a normal complement of about 700 officers and men.

The loss of the Hermes came soon after the sinking of the heavy cruisers Dorsetshire and Cornwall, acknowledged yesterday, in the same area. The cruiser losses had seriously crippled British protection of the sea road to India. Now, in the loss of the Hermes, the Royal Navy has been stripped of another formidable weapon.

Thus Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton's hard-hitting American Army bomber force in India was left with still greater responsibility in the defense of the subcontinent.

One informed source said the attacks in which the Hermes, Dorsetshire and Cornwall were sent to the bottom cost the Japanese fully 75 planes. He said the Hermes was sunk by bombs, not plane-launched torpedoes.

Japs Claim Greater Successes.

The Japanese, however, claimed even greater successes in the flaming, intermittent battle which has become perhaps the war's greatest test of sea power versus air power.

A Japanese naval communique said that besides the Hermes a 9,100-ton cruiser of the Birmingham class and a 7,550-ton cruiser of the Emerald class were sunk yesterday off Trincomalee Naval Station, Ceylon.

APR 11 1942

To this the London Admiralty countered:

"The Japanese claim to have sunk cruisers off Trincomalee is known to be quite untrue."

Yesterday the Japanese claimed 21 merchant vessels and the two cruisers had been sunk in Indian Ocean operations up to April 7.

Others Added to Claim.

Today's claim added the Hermes, two cruisers, a detroyer, a patrol vessel and six other ships to the Japanese list of sinkings, but of these the British confirmed only that of the Hermes. The Japanese also said a cruiser of the 7,270-ton Leander class was damaged.

The Japanese account of the battle said her forces lost 10 planes, Tokio said. The British lost 51 planes over land and sea. The Japanese report indicated Trincomalee was heavily raided.

The British Navy, already committed to guarding much of the North Atlantic as well as the Mediterranean, was spread thinly over eastern waters. Observers said the Japanese in the last few days had won temporary air and sea control of the Indian Ocean, of which the Bay of Bengal is the principal arm.

Pending the issue of the battle of the sea approaches, land forces on the Burma approach to India's eastern frontier appeared to be marking time. British headquarters at New Delhi summed up the situation on the Burma front as of yesterday with "nothing to report."

30 Miles From Oil Fields.

The Japanese land forces were only 30 miles from the Yenanma oil fields of Burma. The British, clinging to positions in the Irrawaddy River valley on the western end of the Burma line, while Chinese defended the eastern end, were preparing to burn and blow up the wells on materialization of the Japanese threat.

The Hermes was the eighth major ship lost by the British Navy in this war, the first of such importance to go down since the battleship Prince of Wales and the battle cruiser Repulse were sunk by the Japanese off Malaya last December 10, and the fourth British aircraft carrier sent to the bottom.

She was the eighth major ship lost by the British Navy in this war, the first of such importance to go down since the battleship Prince of Wales and the battle cruiser Repulse were sunk by the Japanese off Malaya last December 10, and the fourth British aircraft carrier sent to the bottom.

The other carriers sunk were the 22,000-ton Ark Royal, the 22,500-ton Courageous and the 22,500-ton Glorious.

The British navy started the war with 10 aircraft carriers and two scheduled for completion during 1942.

The Hermes was begun January 15, 1918, but was not fitted out completely until 1924. She was refitted in 1933-34.

Two Cruisers Also Sunk, Japanese Declare

TOKIO (From Japanese Broadcasts), April 10 (AP).—The Hermes—Britain's first aircraft carrier—two cruisers, a destroyer, a patrol vessel and six other ships were destroyed yesterday by Japanese forces in the Indian Ocean, a naval communique said today.

It located the action off Trincomalee and indicated the British naval station on the island of Ceylon off India's Bay of Bengal coast also was heavily raided.

The communique said Japanese naval and air units participated in the action.

Besides the ships sunk, the communique said, another British cruiser was damaged and 52 planes were destroyed—six aground and 46 shot down.

"Heavy damage was also inflicted on military establishments," it added.

"No damage was sustained by the Japanese forces."

The naval communique said:

"Japanese units operating in the Indian Ocean yesterday sank the 10,850-ton British aircraft carrier Hermes, a 9,100-ton cruiser of the Birmingham class and a 7,550-ton cruiser of the Emerald class as well as having damaged a 7,270-ton cruiser of the Leander class in the course of operations off Trincomalee, Ceylon."

CHINESE IN BURMA MENACED BY JAPS

APR 11 1942

Enemy Columns on Move Near Toungoo.

Chungking, April 10 (A. P.).—Chinese forces north of Toungoo on the east end of the Burma line are threatened by three columns of Japanese moving northward in an effort to envelop the Chinese positions, according to a communique issued here today. Yet a fourth flying column sent across the Sittang River to outflank the Chinese at Tedusha has been repulsed, the communique said.

Fighting also continued in the center of the front, it was said.

This flare-up in fighting on the Chinese-held east flank in Burma was reported in the communique, which said the Japanese renewed their attack this morning.

"The Japanese unit was engaged by the Chinese Expeditionary Force," the war bulletin said "and fighting still was in progress after dark."

Christmas Island Seized

Japan Reports British Possession in Indian Ocean Occupied

TOKIO (From Japanese broadcasts), April 10 (AP).—Imperial headquarters announced today that Japanese forces completed occupation of British-owned Christmas Island, 225 miles south of Java in the Indian Ocean, on March 31.

(Christmas Island, which has been under British control since 1888, has an area of about sixty square miles and a population of some 1,300, mostly Chinese and Malays. It is of strategic importance because it gives the Japanese another base from which to strike at sea lanes between Australia and India.)

Many Jap Planes Felled.

Colombo, Ceylon, April 10 (A. P.)—Twenty-one Japanese planes were destroyed for certain, twelve others probably were destroyed and two were damaged in yesterday's air raid on Trincomalee, a British communique reported tonight.

The price the attackers paid for their blow at the British naval base thus approached that at Colombo on Sunday, when twenty-seven Japanese planes were listed as definitely shot down.

The revised tabulation on Trincomalee followed announcement that British planes searching the floating lair of the Japanese raiders had straddled an enemy aircraft carrier with bombs and had shot down four of its planes.

The Japanese damaged harbor and airdrome buildings in the Trincomalee raid, it was said. "There were few casualties among the dockyard civil and naval personnel," the communique said. "There were no civilian casualties and no damage to the town itself."

"* * * Our bombers * * * scored near misses on one aircraft carrier," a communique declared. "Some of our aircraft are missing."

The Japanese damaged harbor and airdrome buildings in the raid, it was said.

"There were few casualties among the dockyard civil and naval personnel," the communique said. "There were no civilian casualties and no damage to the town itself."

Beyond the brief reference in the communique to the attack on the enemy squadron, the British gave no details of that action.

It is possible the squadron under attack was the same from which planes flew to sink two British cruisers in the Indian Ocean.

AVG Downs 11 Out of 20 Jap Raiders

Enemy Runs Into Disaster In Attack on Burma Airdrome.

APR 11 1942

CHUNGKING, April 10. (AP)—The redoubtable American Volunteer Group won its second smashing success in two days when probably 11 out of 20 Japanese Navy Zero planes were shot down over Northern Burma Thursday afternoon.

Seven of the Japanese planes were shot down for certain, and to these the AVG added four more probables.

All the AVG's returned to their base undamaged.

Reinforced and Reequipped

Recently reinforced and reequipped after smashing Japanese successes on their base in Central Burma a few weeks ago, the AVG rose magnificently to the occasion when the Japanese tried to attack an airdrome in Northern Burma.

The attack came after the Japanese radio had repeatedly threatened to blast the AVG from the sky.

Before this raid the Japanese attempted to attack at dawn.

In this dawn attack the Japanese planes succeeded in strafing the airdrome and damaging two or three grounded planes, but caused no casualties.

Jap Marksmanship Poor

The Japanese marksmanship was poor as most of the bullets pitted empty spaces in the field.

On Wednesday the AVG intercepted 20 raiders and shot down 10 of them.

Thus for the second time in two days the Americans probably succeeded in accounting for half the raiding party.

Three India-China Routes Laid Out to Carry War Materials

APR 11 1942

Thousands of Animals and Laborers Toiling With Lease-Lend Supplies

By the Associated Press.

CHUNGKING, April 10.—Three strong transportation routes are being laid out between India and China to carry vital war materials to China until the full-fledged India road is completed, a Chinese government statement said today.

Large numbers of elephants are carrying building materials for the three routes, over which thousands of pack animals and laborers already are toiling with lease-lend supplies diverted from the Japanese-occupied Rangoon terminal of the Burma road.

The northernmost route is 440 miles long, running through a maze of sparsely inhabited mountains across Upper Burma and Yunnan Province of China.

Next, below it, is a 375-mile route through less mountainous territory.

The third is farther south and easier to build, but a bit closer to the threat of Japanese invading Burma.

One or more of these routes probably will merge with sections of the India road now under construction.

The laborious progress of supplies over the emergency lanes is indicated by an estimate that it takes 25 men, 12 horses, seven camels or one elephant to haul a ton of goods 18 miles a day.

American Envoy Strives Desperately to Prevent Complete Collapse of Talks.

By Hal Foust

NEW DELHI, India, April 10. (AP)—Final rejection by the All-India Congress Party of the British plan for post-war dominion status was reported late tonight.

(The Reuters News Agency indicated that the final differences had arisen over a transitional government system to be employed until after the war, when Britain has offered full dominion status.

Cripps to Broadcast Today

(Reuters said the Congress, in a 1,500-word letter to the British negotiator, Sir Stafford Cripps, said it was prepared to participate and take office in a central government only if it was a truly national government with cabinet responsibility, and not merely an extension of the Governor General's Executive Council.)

(Cripps was expected to leave New Delhi Sunday, the London News-Chronicle said, and has ordered his plane for then, "not as a result of agreement, but because it had become apparent that the Congress finally was determined on rejection of the British plan.")

(Cripps will make a broadcast from New Delhi at 9:30 p. m. Indian Summer Time (11 a. m. Eastern War Time) tomorrow, Reuters said.)

Thus negotiations over the Indian question, which only yesterday appeared to have received its answer in a general agreement, appeared almost certainly to have broken down amid Hindu charges that Sir Stafford Cripps, the British emissary, had been hamstrung by the London War Cabinet.

TWO B

Louis Johnson, President Roosevelt's personal emissary to India, who had been hailed by the national press as "The Hero of the Hour" and a "Super Cripps" for the part he played in the complex negotiations, was believed to be ardently striving to prevent complete collapse of the talks, but without the assent of the big Hindu bloc this appeared almost certainly hopeless.

Gandhi's Influence Seen

The wizened little spiritual leader of the Hindus, Mohandas K. Gandhi, who went back to Wardha and his silence last week after advising against acceptance of the British offer of post-war dominion status, appeared to have left the imprint of his counsel on a majority of the working committee of the All-India Congress Party.

In a four-hour session today, it was reported, President Maulana Abul Kalan Azad and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru told their colleagues that as a result of their talk with Cripps last evening a satisfactory settlement on the defense of India issue was improbable.

It was understood that the Congress, after examining the new British formula for Indian defense, had rejected it as "inadequate and therefore unsatisfactory."

(Authoritative London quarters said they had no word of any actual rejection, but that this would appear to be a logical development).

Nehru Eager For Settlement

Despite this, Nehru was reported eager to come to terms with the British. He was joined, it was said, by a fellow committee member, Chakravarthi Rajagopalachariar, the Congress Party leader in Madras, but they were reported to have been out-voted by a majority more in line with Gandhi's wishes.

Objections re-emerging in the committee deliberations pivoted on the question of defense and other proposals on which it was previously reported that understanding was in sight.

The British appeared to have offered a compromise on the defense plank, reportedly proposing an Indian defense minister in an Indian cabinet but with a Briton, in supreme military command for conduct of the war. But evidently this did not satisfy the native leaders.

Azad told reporters he was sending the committee's resolution to Cripps, the chief British negotiator, and that he hoped to issue its text and a supplementary statement tomorrow.

APR 11 1942

The first Congress Party reply to the original British offer—a detailed resolution of rejection—was forwarded by Cripps to London last week and presumably the war cabinet's response to the detailed rejections had constituted the basis of the amendments advanced by Cripps after once postponing departure for home.

Significantly the Moslem League, still likewise to publish its formal reply, seemed to have concluded definitely that the British offer, with amendments, failed to satisfy the Moslem leaders on their demand for a separate Moslem state.

However, Cripps called tonight on the Moslem League president, Mohammed Ali Jinnah, to discuss further proposals.

It was understood that Jinnah would report to his committee tomorrow and would give the league's final reply to Cripps before noon.

BRITISH OFFER ON INDIA RULE TURNED DOWN

APR 11 1942

Dominant Hindu Congress Ends Recent Hopes for Amended Plan.

DOMINION STATUS ASKED NOW

Gandhi's Opposition Prevails as Working Committee Reaches Decision.

New Delhi, April 10 (A. P.).—The All-India Congress party has given a final and unfavorable answer to the British plan for Indian independence, it was reported late tonight.

All reports confirmed earlier fears that the negotiations between the Congress and Sir Stafford Cripps, the British Cabinet emissary, had broken do and that the big Hindu political group's position was definitely unfavorable to Sir Stafford.

The working committee of the dominant Hindu Nationalist political organization, in fact, was reported to have voted against continuing negotiations on the asserted ground that Sir Stafford was being hamstrung by the London war Cabinet of which he is a member.

Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, president of the party, and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, a past president, were said to have told the committee that as a result of their talk last evening with Sir Stafford a settlement on the defense issue is improbable.

The principal divergence on the offer of post-war dominion status for India in return for solid war collaboration now is supposed to have been over Great Britain's original insistence on control of refense.

Louis Johnson, President Roosevelt's Minister to India, who has been playing a prominent part in the negotiations, was believed to be trying ardently to dissolve or prevent a deadlock.

Mohandas K. Gandhi's advice against acceptance of the offer at this time seemed to have persuaded a majority of the Congress Committee to outvote Nehru and Chakravarthi Rajagopalachariar, Premier of the Madras Government, who were eager to come to terms.

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru told Indians that their duty, "whatever the results of negotiations with Sir Stafford Cripps," was to "serve and defend India to the uttermost." The potent leader of the All-India Congress party made his exhortion to his countrymen in opening a campaign to rally Indians to the defense of their country—another omen that the delicate, complex negotiations to give India Dominion status after the war are nearing success.

Fresh Obstacles Reported.

Reports were heard of fresh hitches in Sir Stafford's negotiations. Certain members of the All-India Congress Party Working Committee were said to have found changes in the original British proposals unsatisfactory now that these have been fully explained.

The committee conferred today for four hours and called another session for tomorrow.

A prominent member of the committee afterward told reporters:

"The sky may be overcast and the weather may be cloudy. Do not go by the weather. We are meeting tomorrow."

The Working Committee of the Moslem League also continued discussions on the reply it intends to give Sir Stafford, and after the day's session its president, Mohamed Ali Jinnah, conferred with the British negotiator.

Moslems Ready to Join.

The All-India Moslem League, strongest voice of the Moslem minority, was said toda to be ready to associate itself with a national government also, provided its people were given an effective share of power and authority.

Saying that many Indians abroad had expressed the desire to return home, Nehru declared "it is the duty of every Indian who can do so to return" and "I trust that those in authority will facilitate this return."

He did not say whether he referred to Indian army units.

"Let each one of us stick to the post of duty," he urged, "whatever befalls. * * * There is going to be no evacuation for us from this dear country of ours or from one place to another."

"Perhaps so. Then why trouble to come to us with proposals? Mark that Lord Halifax is pleased with what his people have done.

"Let him live in his complacent world and leave us to our resources and sorrows.

"We have had sufficient experience with British statesmanship in India and elsewhere.

"Whatever the war may have done, there has been little difference in the tone or voice of the most eminent of British leaders.

"But whatever happens we will not give up our objective of independence and complete freedom for India.

"Our allegiance is to the Indian people and to no one else, and in their service and for India's freedom we shall labor and, if necessary, die."

Hindu Refusal Reported

APR 11 1942

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 10—Reuters reported today from New Delhi that it understood the All-India Congress party had rejected British proposals for Indian independence.

The dispatch said Sir Stafford Cripps called a press conference for noon tomorrow and was expected then to announce the final result of his mission as bearer of the British offer.

Moslem Reply Awaited

He has not yet received the reply of the Moslem League, second largest of the Indian parties, Reuters said.

The news agency reported that the decision of the Congress party—presumably an action by its working committee—was unanimous.

Reuters said it was believed that the Congress party committee resolution expressed willingness to form a "truly national" government, but took the position that the offer as explained by Sir Stafford did not permit the scope for such a government.

Compromise Was Sought

(The Congress party was reported late last week to have drawn up a reply rejecting the British proposal, but this was not made public pending discussions of a possible compromise in which India might be given a greater voice in the direction of her own defense.

(It was not clear immediately whether the Congress party action reported today reflected that original decision or indicated that efforts to work out an agreeable compromise had been unsuccessful.)

U. S. Visit Discussed.

London, April 10 (A. P.).—Exchange Telegraph, a British news agency, said in a dispatch tonight from New Delhi that political observers there expressed belief that some high American quarters had suggested that Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, one of the ranking Indian Nationalists visit President Roosevelt.

The Exchange Telegraph said that in these quarters it was believed such a meeting might be more fruitful than the discussions

Nehru [illegible]th Louis Johnson, M[illegible]'s personal minister to India, on the problem of Indian independence.

Nehru, however, vetoed the suggestion, the agency said it was understood, on the ground that he could not afford to leave India under present conditions.

Washington, April 10 (A. P.).—Withholding comment on negotiations in progress between India and Britain, President Roosevelt told a press conference today that he had received no reports since yesterday morning from Louis Johnson, his personal representative in India. These reports, he said, contained nothing that has not been published already.

Next Three Months Held Crucial Period For Allied Navies

APR 11 1942

Desperate Battle Faced To Stop Axis From Taking Key Bases Over World

By DREW MIDDLETON,
Associated Press War Correspondent.

LONDON, April 10.—The United States and Great Britain face a desperate battle in the next three months to maintain dominion of the seas because of steady Axis progress in picking off key bases throughout the world, an informed naval observer said today.

Bataan's conquest fits into the Axis pattern since it raises the imminent possibility that Manila Bay will be opened up to aid Japan's lunge toward India and the threatened junction with Germany somewhere in the Near East, this source declared.

"We must face the facts," he said gravely. "The Japanese, German and Italian fleets are nearing numerical superiority, if they have not yet achieved it.

"Every Allied loss, such as the sinkings of the British cruisers Dorsetshire and Cornwall in the Bay of Bengal, cuts whatever edge we have in guns and ships.

"The great naval bases on which Anglo - American sea supremacy rests either have been [illegible]tacked, or are continu[illegible]by the adroit Axis use [illegible]air and sea power."

Called "Too Good to Miss."

The Axis opportunity to take over the French fleet was described by this source as "too good to miss." He believed it would be seized and combined with the Italian navy to support an Axis offensive against Egypt and points east, and thus prepare the way for a blow at Russia's Caucasian flank.

Air power, "the cheapest form of attack," has been used wherever possible by the Axis to sink isolated Allied flotillas and heavy units, he declared, and added:

"The great surface units of the Nazis, the battleship Tirpitz and the battle cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, the Italian battle squadron, and the entire Japanese first battle line are being husbanded carefully against the day when the Axis forces major sea battles in both the Pacific and Atlantic."

The Axis, he said, counts on victory in these forthcoming battles because of greater air power, fresh crews, and the time factor in American armament production.

Learned Lessons in War.

"Victory would mean the virtual closing of all the important maritime communications among Russia and the United Nations across the Atlantic, through the Indian Ocean and around the North Cape.

"The Germans learned a lot of lessons from the First World War. Not the least was at Jutland. They believe that the battle there decided the fate of the old German empire, but that the new Jutland, to be fought off Norway, New York or Calcutta, will defeat the British Empire and confine the American war effort to North America."

Axis world strategy, up to now, he continued, has been based on the Nazi idea of geopolitics. This held that land power, plus air power, could conquer Europe and nullify American and British sea power.

But Nazi reverses in Russia, the constant stream of Allied troops to Australia, the Near East and Britain and the prodigious scale of Allied material aid to Russia, have demonstrated that sea power is a necessary adjunct to any plan for world conquest.

Cutting of Lines Is Cited.

"Increased German preoccupation with supplies to Russia around the North Cape is an obvious sign that they realize the Soviets cannot be defeated decisively unless their lines of communications with Britain and the United States are cut," the observers said.

He pointed out, too, that the Japanese are striking across the Indian Ocean to cut the supply lines through Mozambique Channel which lead to India, the Near East and Southern Russia.

The British loss of the Prince of Wales, the Repuse and now two heavy cruisers under Japanese air attacks, he asserted, brings the Nipponese blockade of this East African channel "within the scope of the imminent developments of the war at sea."

"The ultimate objective of the German U-boat campaign off the Eastern United States coast," he said, "is to pin American destroyers and cruisers in home waters, thus depriving important convoys to Britain of these escorts."

The observer expressed belief that interference with American coastal trade is only a "limited objective" of the undersea campaign.

Recapitulates Strategy.

He recapitulated the world ocean strategy thus:

Japan commands the Asiatic coast and now is plunging toward India; Germany controls the west European coast with Britain remaining the vital springboard for an Allied European counterstroke. Italy still carefully shields her main naval strength, relying on airplanes and submarines in the Mediterranean. But that is enough to force Britain's convoys around the tip of Africa, losing precious time.

Gibraltar, Malta, Murmansk, Sevastopol, Alexandria and Pearl Harbor all have been attacked but still hold. They must hold to speed the hoped-for Allied counter-offensives around the world.

The use of Vladivostok or other Siberian bases in Russia is denied to the United States thus far because of a delicate neutrality pact between Japan and Russia.

Blows at Merchantmen.

"The sooner we realize the Axis is not engaged in a haphazard war at sea, the better it will be for us," this source said.

"The American naval expert Mahan once told us that the greatest and most vulnerable basis of seapower was the merchant fleet.

"Well, today the Axis is striking at Allied merchantmen all over the world and, meanwhile, builds up its warship strength for a final blow at the Allied battle fleet—the last obstacle between the Axis and total destruction of the merchant fleets and interallied communications.

"Replacements in British and American navies will make up for all losses through April 1—but not until the end of this year. So the next three months is our critical period."

Air Offensive Seized By U.S. and Australia

APR 11 1942

More Equipment Needed for Sustained Drive, Declare Allied Chiefs—Flow of Planes, Supplies From U. S. Increasing.

By CYRUS McMANUS

MELBOURNE, Australia, April 10. (AP)—United States and Australian airmen whose experience and equipment are increasing steadily have seized the offensive and intend to keep it, but a great deal more is required before the Japanese can be driven back by a full-scale sustained drive, the highest chiefs of the United Air Forces declared today.

Offensive Will Be Stepped Up

Lieut. Gen. George H. Brett, the American who commands the combined air corps in this theatre, declared:

"We've taken the offensive against the Japanese in the air and we'll continue to increase it. Our only limitation is equipment."

Australian Air Minister Arthur Drakeford, however, warned:

"It would be fatal to think that the Japanese have been brought to a halt, although Australian and Allied air blows north of Australia in the past month have been spectacular."

Moresby Again Raided

As if to substantiate his words, seven Japanese bombers accompanied by fighters again raided Port Moresby, New Guinea. Little damage was reported and the raiders sped away when Allied fighters rose to challenge them. At least one hostile bomber was believed shot down.

One fighter also was reported shot down by the defenders.

It was reckoned that the Japanese had lost 40 planes in the last six days in the New Guinea area.

Drakeford said that 126 Japanese planes had been positively knocked out of action in the past month and that the losses probably were far greater, but that it was essential for the Allies not to overestimate these drains on the enemy's resources near Australia.

Japanese bases behind the occupied arc of islands north of Australia are maintaining a steady supply of planes to the forward fields, he added.

Gen. Brett said his "plans were clearcut."

"I was assigned the task of unifying and commanding the Allied air forces," he said, "the goal of my unified command is to smash Japan in the air. Of the three forces under Gen. MacArthur's command, the Allied air force is organizing and carrying the fight to the enemy's camp.

Steady Stream of New Planes

"Planes and equipment are flowing here at an ever-increasing rate. They have to come a long way, but they are coming with equipment.

"The machines already in hand are laying a first-class foundation for air war against the Japanese and, simultaneously, are doing their best to hold the Japanese where they are, north of Australia."

Supply Is Big Problem

Brett said the big problem he was tackling now was supply, noting that "the average consumption of gasoline by an airplane is fifty-five gallons an hour."

The United States and Australian forces were handicaped at first by lack of experience, he stated.

"Many pilots operating against the Japanese in the north went into battle for the first time. We were lucky. Some of our American lads got into a scrap over Java on the way. It increased their value, because they know now what it is all about. It's like having a tooth pulled or getting married."

Strange Equipment

Bret said many Australians were going into their first combat with equipment new to them.

"When we get them through their first fight they become first-rate fighters," he asserted. "When we know these initial disadvantages and limitations of equipment, you cannot but realize how well our air fighters are doing up north. They have got what it takes."

Brett conceded that the United Nations were not yet able to drive the enemy out of New Guinea and Timor, but declared "we are holding him, giving ourselves invaluable time to build up for essential action on a mass scale."

Jap Advances Still Menacing

Noting Japanese occupation of new spots, such as bases in Admiralty and the Solomon Islands, Air Minister Drakeford said, "It is essential that the man in the street should appreciate the reality of the threat of these continued Japanese advances."

He conceded that the Japanese had not yet felt the full force of Allied air power, but cautioned "Ourselves and Americans must beware of regarding potentialities as actualities."

The Port Moresby correspondent of the Sydney Herald said nine known Japanese air bases threaten Australia:

Salamaua, Lae and Finschhafen on New Guinea; Rabaul and Gasmata on New Britain; Kavieng on New Ireland; Buka and Fais Islands in the Solomons; and Lorengau on Manus in the Admiralty Islands.

He named Rabaul as the key base, saying, "If we smash Rabaul we smash the whole Japanese chain in waters northeast of Australia, and by retaking Rabaul we ourselves would obtain a vital base."

Allies Take Offensive In Air Against Japs, Gen. Brett Asserts

APR 11 1942

Australian Air Chief Dampens Hope, However, For All-Out Attack

By the Associated Press.

MELBOURNE, April 10.—The United States and Australia have taken the offensive in the air, but are yet unable to lay the groundwork for a total counter-drive, it was stressed officially today while the Japanese consolidated a further gain in their arc of bases facing this continent.

In actual warfare, seven Japanese bombers, fighter escorted, raided the strategic New Guinea harbor of Port Moresby for the 25th time and were believed to have lost at least one bomber.

The first reports of the 20-minute raid mentioned no damage or casualties. The attackers once more encountered Allied interceptor planes. Defending airmen pitched their resistance on a note struck by Lt. Gen. George H. Brett, air chief and deputy commander under Gen. Douglas MacArthur in the Southwest Pacific.

"We've taken the offensive against the Japanese in the air and we'll continue to increase it."

Moderating any hope that such air initiative could be broadened into all-out offensive action, by land, sea and air, Australia's Air Minister A. S. Drakeford declared that despite successes of the air arm, the Allied air strength falls short of what would be required to lay the basis for total action.

Japs Now Have Nine Bases.

The Japanese occupation of Lorengau, on Manus Island, largest of the Admiralty group, north of New Guinea, which was confirmed yesterday in an aerial reconnaissance report, increased to at least nine the number of possible air bases the Japanese hold from the Admiralty group in the west to the Solomons in the east, the Port Moresby correspondent of the Sydney Herald reported.

It remains to be seen, he observed, whether establishment of such bases is a movement for encirclement of Port Moresby to tie-up with a future drive from Timor or the Moluccas through the Arafura Sea to the Gulf of Carpentaria or a "stepping stone" move to bypass Port Moresby for a drive toward New Caledonia and possibly New Zealand.

The Port Moresby dispatch said it was known that besides Lorengau, the Japanese occupy Finschhafen, Lae and Salamaua, all in New Guinea, across the mountains and jungleland from Port Moresby; Kavieng, New Ireland; Rabaul and Gasmata, new Britain, Buka Island and Fais Island.

This chain of bases extends more than 1,000 miles, which means the invaders must be supplied from centers like the Truk or Palau Islands of the Japanese Caroline group.

Rabaul on New Britain, the Port Moresby account said, remains the key to the situation.

"If we smash Rabaul we smash the whole Japanese chain in waters northeast of Australia and by retaking Rabaul, we ourselves would obtain a vital base."

In an interview, Gen. Brett said "our only limitation is equipment. My plans are clear cut. I was assigned the task of unifying and commanding Allied air forces. The goal of my unified command is to smash Japan in the air.

"Of the three forces under Gen. MacArthur's command, the Allied air force is organizing and carrying the fight into the enemy's camp.

"Planes and equipment are flowing here at an ever-increasing rate. They have to come a long way, but they are coming with equipment.

"The machines already in hand are laying a first class foundation for air war against the Japanese and, simultaneously, are doing their best to hold the Japanese where they are north of Australia."

Gen. Brett said the United Nations still were not in position to drive the enemy from his bases in New Guinea and Timor, but were "holding him, giving ourselves invaluable time to build up for essential action on a mass scale."

His statement coincided with a warning from Mr. Drakeford that Japan's air power has not been diminished and that the turning point for Australia's defenders still is to be reached, although 126 Japanese planes were knocked out of action in the last month.

Japs Not Brought to Halt.

"It would be fatal to think that the Japanese have been brought to a halt, although Australian and Allied air blows north of Australia in the last month have been spectacular," Mr. Drakeford said.

In the month up to Wednesday, he said, 66 Japanese planes were wrecked, 20 more probably were destroyed and another 40 badly damaged.

Since then, nine more enemy planes—the bag of two air sweeps yesterday on Rabaul, New Britain—have raised the total of definitely destroyed planes to 75.

Despite these successes, Allied air strength in North Australia is "far short of what is required to lay the basis for an offensive," Mr. Drakeford declared.

Curtin Deplores War News.

Prime Minister John Curtin, evidently referring to United Nations' setbacks in the Pacific—Bataan, Britain's two lost cruisers in the Bay of Bengal and lost ground in Burma—issued a statement bluntly calling the war news "bad."

"It urgently makes manifest the formidable task of the United Nations in this supreme and probably decisive period," he said.

"Nothing less than all we have is enough for Australia. The Allies have a duty to each other. Australians have a duty. Now is the time to practice it."

Results Satisfactory

General Brett said the United Nations still were not in position to drive the enemy from his bases in New Guinea and Timor but were "holding him, giving ourselves invaluable time to build up for essential action on a mass scale."

"I believe the results already achieved by Allied airmen in the north are very satisfactory," he said, "considering that our air force is only in a formative stage.

"The RAAF and American Air Force are in the fight together. The RAAF is my baby too.

Unified Force Demanded

"There must be one unified air force to strike against the enemy just as there must be one land and naval force. You can't fight the war with an Australian, American or Dutch air force.

"What we are doing today is to pave the way for all our lads to go out and come back with the best equipment we can give them.

"When we send them up to fight we want to know that the fight depends on their ability and not on the machine or ground organization."

He is Lt. J. H. Hague of Adel, Iowa, who is credited officially with shooting down one Japanese Zero fighter which he picked off the tail of a flying mate in the nick of time.

With a laugh, Hague told how a Japanese caught him at a tactical disadvantage one day and chased him "all the way across Bali." The American plane was faster, but it was a merry chase. Another time he was on the other end of a chase. It also was merry.

Ran Into Nine Bombers.

"Green as I was," he related, "I got lost from my flight—and ran smack into nine Japanese bombers. I followed them across Java calling for the others to come on up and play, but they didn't hear me and the Japs got away.

"They had a good trick. They were in 'V' formation and when I'd go in toward one side, that side would drop slightly so the firepower of the whole formation could be turned on me. The same thing happened on the other side."

Lt. Hague said "the best man we had was our squadron commander, Maj. Bud Sprague, who was among 10 who didn't come back."

"He was a big fellow, 28, and had a big boyish grin and flew most of the time without a shirt," Lt. Hague went on.

"He was the most eager man among us, always cussin' because he couldn't contact more Japs. I hope Bud's hiding in the bush somewhere but there's not much chance.

DOUGHBOY BANTER PLEASES AUSSIES

Americans Crack Jokes About 'Toy' Trains And Helmeted Policemen

APR 11 1942

By VERN HAUGLAND
Associated Press Correspondent

United States Army Headquarters in Australia, Saturday, April 11—Australians like a joke, and American soldiers, accustoming themselves to life in the continent "down under" in an amazingly short time, are quick to exchange banter with their Aussie friends.

For a few hours they act like tourists. Then they realize that Australia is not a strange land at all, and become an integral part of the steadily growing military population.

Just as the soldiers themselves lose no time assimilating the Aussie environment, the authorities waste no time transplanting the soldiers into Australian encampments. When water transport is involved in these movements between bases, long passenger trains steam right onto the piers to simplify the unloading.

Great Speed Shown

Soldiers can be disembarked from Australian trains, with their many exits, at great speed.

The other day there was an extensive troop movement to one encampment. The trains arrived, one on the heels of the other from 8 A. M. until 5 P. M. The men, burdened with barracks bags, tin hats, rifles and other equipment, piled out at great speed all the while.

"What's that—a toy train?" yelled one soldier when he sighted one of Australia's passenger coaches with its multiple doors opening flush with the station platforms. "You don't expect us to ride that trolley, do you?"

Banter And More Banter

A high-spirited private called to a tall helmeted policeman, "Is that a regular police uniform, or a masquerade?"

Another asked a waiter for an apple-pie malted milk.

If the trip on cross-country trains is long the sergeants hand out sandwiches.

Private Charles Kenney, of Seattle and Grants Pass, Ore., is never one to turn down a handout, but clutching a barracks bag in one hand and a violin case in the other, he grinned at the sergeant and cracked, "What you think I am—octopus?"

Praise From A Chaplain

A number of other men are from the Northwest. Lieut. Col. Raymond Attebery, chaplain, of Seattle, remarked that Australian cities seem cleaner, with more parks and flowers, than American cities.

Lieut. Kenneth Reed and Sergeant Kenneth Morley, both of Livingston, Mont., said the climate and scenery reminded them of the military reservation at King City, Cal., where they trained.

The arrival of the Americans at a newly established camp was a big day for the people at a nearby town. The populace turned out to cheer and wave, and the Americans waved and cheered from the train.

Boys Crowd Around

The minute the train stopped, small boys crowded in from all directions asking for souvenirs—American coins, match covers, etc.

As soon as the men had set up camp they got a few hours leave and descended upon the town where they quickly bought out the candy, ice cream and soft-drink stocks.

ARMY ENDANGERED BY LACK OF QUININE

Shortage Anticipated Because Java Was Chief Source of Supply.

NEW YORK, April 10.—(AP) United Nations forces in the East Indies and Australia face the dangers of malaria with an impending shortage of quinine, chief remedy for the disease, an expert in chemical warfare declared tonight.

Dr. Marston Taylor Bogert, professor of organic chemistry at Columbia university and a consultant to the U. S. Army Chemical Warfare service, asserted in a prepared address that the fall of Java, which produced about 95 per cent of the world's supply of quinine, left the United Nations dependent on their reserves.

In the United States the total stockpile of quinine reserves has not been revealed, Dr. Bogert declared, adding that Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones recently announced the purchase of about 5,000,000 ounces. The annual peacetime consumption was estimated at 4,500,000 ounces.

Dr. Bogert disclosed that for the last two years a group of chemists under his supervision at Columbia have been working on a synthesis of new organic compounds which, he said, "we hope will be of some value in the treatment of malaria."

Synthetic remedies, he said, were more potent than the natural product manufactured from the bark of the cinchona tree, but could be administered only under medical supervision.

Russia's efforts to halt a German drive for the Caucasus oil fields might be hampered by the prevalence of the disease in the Black sea area, Dr. Bogert asserted. He added that Russia was "intensely malarious" in the southern regions ovsky, said "all sorts of things for war" were coming from the United States, "but precisely in what quantities is a secret.

"All the supplies we produce and those from the outside are used to convert the German Army into corpses, and it goes successfully."

He said that the Germans claimed Russian losses had reached 20,000,000, but that this figure was preposterous. He noted that the Germans had stopped reporting their own casualties.

"I suggest," he said "that they create a new category—the slightly killed."

The Russian communique said that 4,470 were killed in one small part of the Kalinin Line and that the armored Nazi counter-attack soon was shifted back to a defensive because of "enormous losses in manpower and equipment."

More than 1,500 other Germans were listed as slain on another unidentified sector, where the Red Army took over several dozen additional settlements.

One strongly-fortified community in the Lake Ilmen area was reported recaptured after 860 Germans were killed.

Germans Admit Line Broken

(The German radio admitted that Russian troops and tanks had broken the German line north of Lake Ilmen and dislodged advanced German detachments, but claimed these Soviet forces later were cut off.

(In addition, Vichy dispatches via Stockholm said Soviet forces had crossed into White Russia between Vitebsk and Nevel in an area 75 miles northwest of Smolensk, and were continuing to advance.

(German accounts via Stockholm also said Soviet pressure was increasing in the southern regions of Orel, Kharkov and Sevastopol. London quarters, noting German reports that they had readjusted their lines by "penetrating to near Belgorod," 50 miles north of Kharkov, said this probably meant that Belgorod was in Russian hands.

Kharkov is one of the most heavily fortified German positions, but London experts said the long-awaited Russian assault on it was near.)

The regular midnight Soviet communique said there were no significant changes on the front today, but a supplement said guerrilla forces still were dealing severe blows to German troops in the Bryansk sector northwest of Orel.

During several months of operations there bands killed 4,270 Nazi soldiers and 257 officers, besides destroying 19 airplanes, 38 tanks, 88 bridges, 355 lorries, eight ammunition dumps, and derailing 19 troop trains, the communique said.

Reds Claim Fortified Town

A strongly fortified community of the Kalinin front, where operations center about Lake Ilmen, was said to have been captured by Red army units in fighting that cost the Germans 860 casualties, dead and wounded.

The Moscow radio earlier reported that two German divisions, counter-attacking on the Kalinin front with tanks and planes in support, had been routed after a fierce battle.

Front line dispatches said that during a heavy artillery barrage the Russians blew up staff headquarters of the Five-hundred and nineteenth Infantry regiment, killing its commander and six staff officers.

The position, described as a central point covering the German rear, was taken by simultaneous Soviet attacks from two directions. Tanks were active.

Gain Frees 8,000 Civilians

In another sector of the western front, the Russians were reported to have taken two large villages where the Germans has assembled 8,000 Soviet civilians preparatory to sending them to Germany. They were freed by Red army troops.

Izvestia published pictures showing an acre of captured German, French, Czech and Polish tanks and armored cars being repaired for Soviet use in spring operations.

The work was being done in a former derrick factory which, when opened in January, was empty but which was operating to capacity three months later with captured Axis vehicles.

Thaw Flooding Trenches

The Soviet Information Bureau perhaps referring to the engagement described above, said that "o a sector of the Kalinin front our units killed up to 900 German soldiers and officers."

(Russian advices received in London declared the invaders were being flooded out of trenches, dugouts and ice forts a. many points by thaws, even as far north as Leningrad.)

Forty Nazi dugouts, three field guns and eleven machine-guns were declared captured in an attack on the central front, west of the capital. The information bureau said many Germans were killed.

Guerrillas Cut Railroad

Tass said several guerrilla units operating in the Leningrad region had cut a railway line, blown up a large ammunition dump, a river bridge and supply depots and destroyed thirteen strongly fortified blockhouses in a mass raid on a Nazi district center. Theatened by a punitive expedition, the news agency declared the guerrillas slew fifty soldiers and routed the remainder.

Supplies Being Used to Convert German Army Into Corpses, Says Lozovsky—Communique Says 4,470 Nazis Killed on Kalinin Front.

KUIBYSHEV, Russia, April 10. Kuibyshev, Russia, April 10—Soviet troops were officially declared today to have slain 4,470 Germans in repulsing one phase of a Kalinin front counterattack and killed more than 1,200 more in other engagements over the long fighting zone.

Nazi reserves recently arrived from deep in the rear, bolstering the German lines for the counter-attack a few days ago, the Soviet Information Bureau said.

'On one small part of the front alone the Germans lost 4,470 soldiers and officers dead," its communique reported. "Suffering enormous losses in manpower and equipment, the Hitlerites were compelled to go over to the defensive."

Soviet to Liquidate Germans This Year, Spokesman Asserts

'All Sorts' of War Supplies Arriving From America, Lozovsky Declares

APR 11 1942

By the Associated Press

KUIBYSHEV, Russia, April 10.—The Red Army will liquidate the German Army in Russia in 1942, S. A. Lozovsky, Soviet Vice Commissar for Foreign Affairs, told his press conference today, adding that United States supplies are reaching the Russian forces and being "used to make Nazi corpses."

Asked how United States supplies are arriving, Lozovsky, official press spokesman, said "all sorts of things for war" are being received, "but precisely in what quantities is a secret."

"All the supplies we produce and those from the outside are used to convert the German Army into corpses," Lozovsky went on, "and it goes successfully."

Nazi Reports Ridiculed.

He ridiculed German reports (evidently not circulated generally) that Russian losses have reached 20,000,000, saying that any one knows that only 10 to 12 per cent of a nation's population can be mobilized for the army. (Russia's population, by official estimate in 1940, was 193,000,000.)

Lozovsky said the Germans had stopped giving information on their dead and wounded.

"I suggest," he said, "that they create a new category, the 'slightly killed'."

Asked to amplify the statement that the Red Army would liquidate the Germans on Soviet soil, Lozovsky said he could not go into battle plans. Asked if his liquidation prediction was based on establishment of a second European front, he replied that a press conference was not the proper place to discuss a second front

Offensive Declared Delayed.

Lozovsky asserted that the Germans had dropped talk of a spring offensive and now talk about a summer offensive.

Touching on a recent trip to Berlin by Boris of Bulgaria, the official spokesman declared the Germans were seeking additional "cannon fodder" for the Russian front.

"The Bulgar rulers are going too far," Lozovsky said. "In their humbleness toward Hitler they forget Bulgaria's fate of 1918 and are preparing for the same fate as will befall Hitler Germany."

Lozovsky said the Russian-British pact for Iran was successful in helping Iran.

"This drives Hitler mad. He spreads fantastic reports that Britain has ceded Iran to the Soviet Union and that the Red Army is moving toward Iraq. This is a sheer lie. These lies are spread to conceal aggressive plans toward Iran's neighbors."

Nazis Report Kerch Victory

BERLIN (from German broadcasts), April 10 (AP).—German forces defending their ground on Kerch Peninsula in the Crimea have beaten back strong Russian attacks supported by tanks and planes and have destroyed or put out of action eighty-two tanks, the German high command reported today. The Germans said fifty-six Russian tanks were destroyed and twenty-six put out of action.

In other sectors of the eastern front the German offensive operations were declared successful. A Russian group on the Volkhov River, which links Lake Ilmen and Lake Ladoga, on the Leningrad front, was said to have been encircled and annihilated.

The Berlin radio reported that Soviet troops, attacking with many tanks and material superiority, had broken through the ecnter of the German defense line north of Lake Ilmen and dislodged advanced Nazi detachments. The supply route of this Soviet wedge was cut, however, so that neither supplies nor reinforcements could reach it, the broadcast said.

The action presumably was in the region of Novgorod, a German base 100 miles south of Leningrad, toward which Russian divisions have been moving in a drive correlated with the Staraya Russa encirclement maneuvers below Lake Ilmen.

Red Troops Reported Entering White Russia

LONDON, April 10 (AP).—The Vichy radio quoted reports from Stockholm today that Soviet troops had crossed the frontier into White Russia between Vitebsk and Nevel in a sector 75 miles northwest of Smolensk and were continuing their advance.

The broadcast, heard by Reuters, said that if the drive could be maintained it would be a serious menace to the important Vitebsk defenses guarding the Nazis' Smolensk spearhead toward Moscow.

The Vichy radio, quoting a D.N.B. dispatch, also said Soviet pressure against the Germans had increased during the last 24 hours in the Orel and Kharkov regions south of Moscow and around Sevastopol, the Russian-held Crimean naval base.

Volga Breakup Signals End of Russian Winter

Crack, Crack, Boom of Ice Is Mistaken by Reporter for Anti-Aircraft Guns

APR 11 1942

By Eddy Gilmore

KUYBYSHEV, Russia, April 10 (AP).—The long Russian winter is over officially, because the ice in the Volga River here began breaking up last night with thundering cracks, which we thought at first were anti-aircraft guns.

A Russian friend and I were sitting in the hotel when it first came—crack, crack, boom.

"What's that?" I asked.

"Sounds like anti-aircraft guns," he answered. "Let's go out and see."

We dashed through the lobby, pausing to ask the girl at the desk. But she didn't know, and from her worried face we surmised she thought it might be "AA" fire, too. Outside in the still night it was going on more loudly—crack, crack, boom. We looked for searchlights or shell bursts. There were none.

"What are the guns shooting at?" we asked an old man. "Have you heard a plane?"

"Oh, no," he replied. "It's 'lyod tronulsya' (the ice is on the move)."

"Lyod tronulsya," gasped my friend. "Why, then, winter is over."

"Of course," laughed the old man. "No matter what the calendar says, no matter what the weather bureau says—we know winter is over. Lyod tronulsya."

"Far over there," my friend said, pointing, "the Zhiguli mountain people hear it. It means the long, bitter fight against the elements is over."

We heard it resound all along the river as we went home. Crack, crack, boom.

LITVINOFF CALLS FOR UNITED EFFORT TO DEFEAT HITLER

Make Nazis Guess Where Attack Will Come, Says Red Envoy.

APR 11 1942

PHILADELPHIA, April 10.—(AP) The time has come, the Russian ambassador declared tonight, "to make Hitler rack his brains and wonder where his enemies will direct their next blows" instead of others guessing where Hitler will strike next.

"Isn't it time to compel him to scatter his forces a little?" asked Maxim M. Litvinoff in an address prepared for delivery before the American Academy of Political and Social Science. "That is what united efforts are needed for, and not united efforts in the abstract, or at some future date.

Wants United Effort Now

"I mean united efforts now, for the definite purpose of inflicting defeat on Hitler on the only front where this is now possible. Victory may be long in coming if one state has to exhaust its major forces in today's military operations, while another harbors them for possible operations at some indefinite time in the future. Our efforts must be united for simultaneous action."

Litvinoff said that the infliction of defeat and the attainment of victory could not be the ultimate aim.

"United efforts are required also," he said, "for the final eradication of the Nazi-Fascist tree with its poisoned fruits, for the healing of the wounds suffered by humanity in this blood-thirsty war, for the creation on a new basis of future economic and political international relations."

Poses Problems

The ambassador said that for institutions like the academy, devoted to the study of political and economic sciences, there was still one problem which had not been studied in all its intricacy.

That, he said, was "the question of how it happened that governments, peoples, and the scientific societies concerned, could, for a period of six years, look on calmly and indifferently at the birth and development of the theory of Hitlerism, poisoning as it has the whole of international life, spreading anguish, death and destruction, at first in its native land, then in the countries nearest, and finally throughout all continents, the whole world."

Litvinoff said that it was this question which would perplex historians of the future.

He noted, however, that "indifference and apathy to Nazism and the dangers it represents have not been quite universal."

"There have of course been people—journalists, statesmen and even governments, who have understood the ominous significance of Hitlerism," he said. "I must single out the government of the Soviet union which, in the very first stages of the development of Hitlerism, realized the necessity for the united efforts of many countries for the aversion of the catastrophe which Hitler intended to and did bring upon humanity."

Report British Invasion Views Studied by U.S.

Marshall, Hopkins Seeking To Determine If Stand Against Blow Now Is Justified

APR 11 1942

NEW YORK, April 10—(AP)—The New York Times says that the principal mission of Gen. George C. Marshall, United States chief of staff, and Harry Hopkins, President Roosevelt's representative, in London is to determine whether the British Government "is justified in the stand it has taken against invading Europe this Summer."

(The White House announced earlier in the week that the trip was a "perfectly normal wartime mission.")

Arguments Against Invasion

In a Washington dispatch, the Times reports that the chief argument advanced by the British is that there are not enough ships available to transport and maintain an expeditionary force across the English Channel or the North Sea.

A British Expeditionary Force in France, the London government reportedly contended, would have to overcome at least 30 completely equipped German divisions totaling about 600,000 troops with all auxiliaries counted.

The Times says the British have informed Marshall and Hopkins that to guarantee success an expeditionary force should be from one and a half times to twice as large as the German defenders, and that eight tons of shipping per man would be required, with this shipping under incessant attack from the German Air Force and Navy.

Because of the shipping situation, the Times reports, the British felt that the United States would be unable to send a large enough AEF in the near future. British government and military leaders reportedly argued, the paper said, that it would be better to wait until Britain has accumulated all the equipment needed.

Argument for Invasion

Proponents of invasion, the Times says, claim that there is nothing to indicate that the shipping position of the United Nations will be any better next year than in 1942, with sinking and replacement figures indicating that the best to be hoped is that the situation will be no worse.

If the British government were to agree to an invasion, the paper reports, it would ask certain guarantees from the United States and particularly for guarantees of more American naval aid.

Large sections of the British public reportedly were pressing for an offensive, and this pressure led, according to the Times, to the sending of General Marshall and Hopkins to London to ascertain what could be done.

Brest Told to Prepare For State of Siege

By the Associated Press.

VICHY, April 10.—German authorities notified the population of the coastal city of Brest on the English Channel today to be ready for a proclamation of a state of siege without advance notice.

The state of siege would be proclaimed because of "the existence of elements * * * which might, when the moment appeared favorable, permit themselves to engage in manifestations which could have unpredictable repercussions," the German notice said.

(The tenor of the German announcement indicated it was concerned with subversive activities among the French population of the German-occupied city, rather than in preparation for meeting a possible invasion attempt by Allied forces.)

The declaration, published in the newspaper Depeche de Brest, said the state of siege, if proclaimed, would last indefinitely.

RESIDENTS OF BREST PREPARE FOR SIEGE

VICHY, France, April 10—(AP) Residents of the important German-occupied port city of Brest were informed by the Nazi authorities today to be ready for a state of siege without preliminary notice.

The proclamation, published in the newspaper Depeche de Brest, said the emergency, if proclaimed, would last indefinitely and gave as the reason "the existence of elements which might, when the moment appeared favorable, permit themselves to engage in manifestations which could have unpredictable repercussions."

(This appeared to be a precautionary measure against a British Commando raid on the naval port. Only two weeks ago German-used harbor installations were destroyed in such a raid at St. Nazaire, below Brest on the Brittany peninsula.)

Nazis Warn Serb Guerillas

London, April 10 (A. P.).—A German warning for Yugoslav guerrillas to surrender or see their families held as hostages APR 11 1942 has been published in the Nazi-controlled Belgrade newspaper Novo Vreme, the Yugoslavia Government-in-exile announced today.

"Police authorities invite Gen. Draja Mihailovic (guerrilla leader) and all commanders in Serbia to surrender within five days," the newspaper was reported to have published on April 2. "Should they not comply with this order, members of their families will be taken as hostages and held responsible for all they may do."

Swedes Honor Norse Patriots.

The Swedish radio reported today that on the second anniversary of Germany's invasion of Norway, "the memory of the Norwegians who have fallen in the battle for their country was celebrated yesterday with services in a number of Swedish churches." The Columbia listening station here recorded the broadcast.

GREEKS HARRY ITALIAN SOLDIERS

London, April 10 (A. P.).—A Rome radio report that Italian casualties in the Balkans during March totaled 352 killed and 358 missing was interpreted in British circles today as indicating that Greek patriot forces were giving Premier Mussolini's Army of Occupation considerable opposition. These circles said that it was probable that most Italian casualties were incurred in Greece, because there were comparatively few Italian troops in Yugoslavia.

4 More Axis Ships Sunk In Mediterranean

Developments May Impel Rommel to Strike in Force, British Believe.

LONDON, April 10. (AP)—British submarines were credited tonight with new inroads on the Axis supply line to North Africa, and reliable British sources predicted these developments might impel Nazi Marshal Erwin Rommel to strike in force with his available desert army, rather than wait for more help.

One of the British submarines slipped through the destroyer screen of an enemy convoy and sank one large and one medium-sized supply ship. In a separate attack, other submarines sank two schooners, one of them known to have been loaded with sugar and other stores for Tripoli.

Only yesterday the Admiralty announced the sinking of a heavy Italian cruiser by a British submarine.

Desert Sparring Continues

In the desert some 100 miles west of Tobruk Rommel meanwhile was sparring in force but with caution. Two of his columns, equipped with tanks, clashed yesterday with British forces, and some of the Axis tanks were damaged. Fighting also spread to the enemy's southern flank, but at the nearest point the enemy still was 15 miles from the British Gazala line.

In Cairo the present Axis activity was interpreted as an attempt to establish strong points in front of the Tmimiel Mechili trail.

Rommel, however, has an estimated 125,000 men in the desert and there have been several indications he is preparing for a definite major offensive, despite the uncertain weather. He has strengthened bomber forces in preference to fighters, established advanced fuel and ammunition dumps and has moved Italian units to the front, while training fresh German troops in the desert warfare in rearward areas.

The aerial give-and-take continues in spring tempo over a wide Mediterranean area. The RAF announced new raids on Crete and Libyan objectives and said Axis dive-bombing attacks on Malta continued through Thursday.

British Subs Sink 4 More Axis Ships In Mediterranean

Two Schooners and Two Supply Vessels Listed By London Admiralty

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 10.—British submarines, in one case defying a convoy's destroyer escort, have sunk four more Axis ships—two schooners and two supply vessels—in the Mediterranean, the Admiralty announced today.

One of the schooners, a communique said, was laden with sugar and other stores bound for Tripoli, the Axis' chief supply port in Libya.

Both supply ships were reported sent down by a submarine commanded by Lt. Comdr. P. S. Francis, which slipped up on a convoy despite its warship protection, ramming home two torpedoes on one large supply ship and also sinking another of medium size in the same attack.

Two Sunk By One Sub

Both supply ships were reported sent down by a submarine commanded by Lieut. Cmdr. P. S. Francis, which slipped up on a convoy despite its warship protection, ramming home two torpedoes on one large supply ship and also sinking another, of medium size, in the same attack.

British Middle East general headquarters in Cairo, meanwhile, announced fighting with Axis columns in the Libyan battlefield yesterday in which some tanks and other vehicles were hit and set on fire. One engagement was fought north of Tengeder, thirty-five miles south of El Mechili.

The communique noted that during the last two days Axis forces haven't attempted to approach the British forward positions.

RAF headquarters at Cairo disclosed new air raids Wednesday night on the Germany-occupied island of Crete, together with bombings of Bengasi and Martuba in Libya. Axis air attacks on Malta continued yesterday, a communique said.

The sinking of four additional Axis ships, which followed closely on the sinking of an Italian heavy cruiser in the Mediterranean, may force Field Marshal Erwin Rommel to move faster than expected against British positions in Eastern Libya, a usually well-informed London source said.

He expressed belief the German leader would strike now with armored and infantry forces available—estimated as high as 125,000 men—rather than wait for reinforcements which might become the prey of British submarines.

Imminent Axis offensive action was said to be indicated by three developments:

1. Strengthening of Axis bomber forces in preference to fighters.
2. Establishment of fuel and ammunition dumps in advanced positions.
3. Placing of Italian units in forward areas while new additions to the Afrika Korps are schooled in desert warfare behind the lines.

British in Libya Seize Initiative, Engaging Two Axis Columns

Enemy Tanks Set Afire; Success in Fighting Claimed by Italians

APR 11 1942

By the Associated Press.

CAIRO, Egypt, April 10.—British columns seizing the initiative in the renewed Libyan fighting were reported today to have engaged two Axis columns yesterday and set some of their tanks on fire.

The communique indicated the Axis had not attempted to come to closer grips with the British since their initial push earlier this week.

Airdromes in Crete and military objectives at Bengasi and Martuba were bombed Wednesday night, R. A. F. Near East headquarters announced today.

The Axis forces had 20 tanks in one engagement yesterday, the British said, and some of these were hit by British fire.

British casualties were reported light.

Another Axis column was contacted north of Tengeder and some enemy vehicles were set on fire, it was reported.

Tengeder is 35 miles south of El Mechili, which is 100 miles west of Tobruk.

DIVE-BOMBERS RETURN TO BLAST AT MALTA

APR 11 1942

VALLETTA, Malta, April 10—(AP) German dive-bombers again pounded this rocky British island's harbor and airport facilities twice today, the second attack continuing tonight with the British rolling up a four-day toll of at least 17 Axis airplanes.

A number of persons were killed and injured, and civilian property, including a church, were damaged as high explosives ripped the surface below which civilians were huddled in rock shelters.

British fighter planes still were taking off to engage the invaders, and anti-aircraft batteries also gave the raiders a hot reception.

Advantage Is Gained, Italian Command Says

ROME (from Italian broadcasts) April 10 (AP).—New fighting on the revived Libyan front between advanced Italian units and the British have won results "to our complete advantage," the Italian high command reported today.

Several British tanks were destroyed in the course of mopping up operations in the Libyan desert, the Italian communique reported.

Axis planes have inflicted considerable damage on supply lines in the British rear, the Italians said.

Strong formations of Axis planes renewed their heavy attacks on the British island base of Malta, it was reported, "bombing successfully harbor shipping, harbor installations and military objectives, causing heavy destruction."

Five R. A. F. planes were shot down by German fighters in the Malta action, the Italians said.

British Cars and Guns Destroyed, Nazis Say

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 10 (AP).—Several British armored patrol cars and guns were destroyed or captured in combat between reconnaissance units on the Libyan front, the German high command said today.

Its communique declared also that day and night attacks by German dive bombers and fighter planes on Malta continued, with the Nazi airmen scoring direct hits on harbor and dock installations and on an airdrome.

Italian Casualties

ROME (From Italian Broadcasts) —(AP)—Total Italian casualties of 1,031 killed, 2,798 wounded and 17,271 missing during March in the army, navy and air force were announced by Fascist headquarters today.

The casualties included members of the armed forces in three war theatres—North Africa, Russia and the Balkans.

British Cruiser Limps Into Gibraltar Harbor

LONDON, April 10 (AP)—Reuters reported in a dispatch from Vichy tonight that the British cruised Hermione arrived in Gibraltar yesterday, damaged and with wounded aboard. Reuters said a dispach from Ceuta to the Vichy news agency reported that the wounded were disembarked at once. The dispatch said it believed the cruiser had been engaged in a sea and air battle near Malta.

R.A.F. FLIES CHANNEL, SHOOTS DOWN 6 NAZIS

LONDON, April 10.—(AP) R.A.F. fighter squadrons shot down six Axis fighting planes in a sweep over the Calais-Boulogne area of France this evening, the Air Ministry announced.

Five of the British planes which went across in relays failed to get back.

German night raiders dropped bombs on a south England coastal area but there were no casualties or damage reported.

AIR ACTIVITY LESSENS

R. A. F. Raid on Germany Is Not Confirmed.

London, April 10 (A. P.).—The Vichy radio, quoting the German news agency DNB, said today that British bombers had attacked a number of localities in northern Germany last night and the civilian population suffered some casualties. The Exchange Telegraph agency heard the broadcast.

However, informed sources said that the R. A. F. was unable to make a major attack on Germany last night and the Vichy radio broadcast was believed to have referred to Wednesday night's attack.

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), April 10 (A. P.).—Light German bombers blasted a gas works on the English southeast coast and severe damage was caused in adjacent factories by the resultant explosion, the High Command said today. Naval artillery was declared to have shot down three British bombers over Helgoland Bight.

QUISLING ORDERS CLERGY TO YIELD OR GO TO PRISON

4 Norwegian Bishops Placed in Concentration Camp, Others Get Ultimatum.

STOCKHOLM, April 10. — (AP) Vidkun Quisling struck back with concentration camp and ultimatum today at the clergymen of Norway who resigned en masse rather than submit to the Nazi regulations which the puppet-premier is trying to impose upon the church in that conquered country.

Swedish dispatches from Oslo disclosed that yesterday—on the second anniversary of the German assault on Norway—four bishops, among them Bishop Fivind Berggrav of Oslo—had been imprisoned, and that 1,100 other clergymen who quit in the mass protest had been given until 2 p. m. Saturday to go back to their work.

Drafted Easter Statement

Bishop Berggrav and his three colleagues, who were taken to a concentration camp, were accused by the Quisling police of having originated the Easter-eve statement read in Norwegian churches—which the puppet regime called a "rebellious act." This announced the mass resignations.

Earlier the enraged Quisling had declared that his plans were being endangered "by treasonable machinations of Norwegian bishops such as Bishop Berggrav."

The others imprisoned were Bishop Indreboe, Bishop Ingband B. Carlsen and Bishop H. E. Wisloeff.

Quisling's church department insisted it had nothing to do with these arrests "which are the business of the state police." But the church department itself issued the ultimatum to the other pastors. The alternative to returning to work was not stated.

Both Quisling and the church department have issued statements disclaiming any desire to interfere in religious activities of the clergy, but they have said in the same breath that there must be a state church and that the pastors "must not misuse the church and Christians for political purposes."

On Wednesday Quisling said he was being compelled to "annihilate" bishops and others who, he said, were "provocative trespassers and wirepullers."

Among the things the clergymen are protesting against are Quisling's plans for Nazification of child education and restrictions on church attendance.

Quisling Warns 1100 Clergy

Says He Will Oust All Bishops and Pastors —Nazis Threaten Serb Guerrillas.

APR 11 1942

Stockholm, April 10 (A. P.).—The Norwegian church conflict intensified today with reports of the arrest of Bishop Eivand Berggrav of Oslo and three other bishops and an ultimatum giving 1,100 other clergymen until tomorrow afternoon to reconsider their recent resignations or to be ruled out of the church.

Oslo dispatches to the Tidningen agency said that Bishops Berggrav, Indrepoe, Ingbald B. Carlsen and H. E. Wisloeff were taken into custody yesterday on the second anniversary of the German invesion of Norway. The dispatches said that they were sent to a concentration camp near the Norwegian capital, charged with writing the Easter Sunday message announcing the mass resignation of the clergy in opposition to Major Vidkun Quisling, Premier of the German-sponsored Government of Norway.

That message and the resignations were described as an "act of rebellion" directed against the freedom and independence of Norway by Quisling's Nasjonal Samling party. The dispatch added that Quisling's ecclesiastical department said that it had nothing to do with the arrests of the bishops and described that as the business of the State police.

The department said that the Government wished to leave the Church free to preach the word of God and devote itself to good works, but that the Norwegian church should remain a State church.

and three other Norwegian churchmen have been interned in a concentration camp for opposition to Major Vidkun Quisling, Premier of the German-sponsored Government, the Vichy radio reported today in a broadcast heard here by Reuters. Only a few days ago, Quisling issued a statement in Oslo berating the clergy and declaring that his goals were "endangered by treasonable machinations of the Norwegian bishops, such as Bishop Berggrav."

Bishop Berggrav was reported to have resigned early in March with five other bishops in protest against Quisling's efforts to Nazify the education of Norwegian children and police restrictions on church attendance. Quisling has contended that Berggrav was dismissed, but there has been no information concerning his whereabouts for some time.

Ali Maher Described As One Of Fifth Column Leaders That Provoked Disorder

Cairo, April 10 (AP)—Informed quarters said today that the arrest of Ali Maher, Egyptian Premier at the outbreak of war, was ordered by Premier Nahas Pasha as "an example to fifth columnists in Egypt."

The former Premier was arrested Wednesday night.

Informed quarters said there was no doubt that Ali Maher was one of a small group at the head of fifth columnists who provoked disorders in the first week of February when street cries of "long live Rommel," the German commander of the North Africa corps, were heard.

PANAMA FORCE ON THE ALERT

APR 11 1942

Canal Defenses Increasingly Razor-sharp.

By CHANDLER DIEHL.

Quarry Heights, Panama, C. Z., April 10 (Wide World).—Every man of the United States forces on the isthmus at Panama is on active duty—manning anti-aircraft posts, or making patrols, or on maneuvers—as Lieut.-Gen. Frank M. Andrews and his staff strengthen the protection of the Panama Canal life line. A trip of only fifty miles into the interior of Panama discloses activity everywhere along the way—infantrymen on maneuvers, armored units whirring along jungle roads, engineers on maneuvers and on vital road construction.

One sees Signal Corps companies installing additional telephonic communications; infantry and coast artillery posts on the alert, trigger fingers ready; planes landing and taking off from a desert dispersal field, and supplies going forward to advance outposts where detectors stretch their mechanical ears to pick up any buzz of alien propellers. One sees all this—and more—in just fifty miles.

Steady, Hard Work.

Panama appears alive with Uncle Sam's soldiers operating under Major-Gen. William E. Shedd, deputy commander of the Panama Canal Department, and the men are becoming seasoned, toughened warriors under the steady, hard work in a stern climate over rugged terrain. The variety of terrain and climate is appreciable on even a 50-mile trip.

Soon after our party left a headquarters post, our jeep was purring along a road backdropped with light jungle growth and heavy with military truck traffic. Supplies were moving forward for men's dinners and for construction projects. Trucks were swinging off onto side roads which wind through marshy lowlands and up steep hillsides to outposts.

Along the way were lookout positions of two kinds: Those where khaki-clad, helmeted sentries walked open beat, and those where only the keenest eyes could pierce jungle and camouflage to detect gun emplacements. Anti-aircraft positions and other outposts behind such emplacements, we were assured, were free to concentrate all their energy on throwing a steel-jacketed curtain of defense over the vital canal, and the "jungle-mudders" under Brig.-Gen. Homer Oldfield are just itching to try this death-dealing job on an Axis armada.

Jungle for Defense.

In the vicinity of town "X" we passed a road-block—formidable series of mechanical devices and bristling emplacements where blue-denimed soldiers were ready to turn a high-speed highway into a high road of hell for any enemy. Our route for the day moved into heavier jungle and a temporary maneuvers area.

Mechanized cavalry units, motorized infantry, jeeps and anti-tank guns were speeding hither and yon, and even into the surprised precincts of town "Y"—apparently the prize of the day's "combat." Panama's mobile force under Brig.-Gen. Robert H. Lewis, we understood, was working out a tactical problem set to Panama scale on the basis of actual battle plans for the jungle-lands of the Orient.

The soil was steaming a bit from an overnight rain and beyond town "Y" we found our route in the class of a quagmire. Here army engineers had heavy construction equipment at work on an all-weather crossing and our reconnaissance car bulled through on its own four-wheeled power and the driver's skill.

Air Corps Is Ready.

Then we reached a roadway, where the engineers had been before us, and we sped along to a dispersal airfield just as two observation planes came gliding in after a bit of ocean-scanning. Attack pilots at this field were doing the alert shift—waiting within reach of their planes for any call.

The air corps, under Major-Gen. Davenport Johnson, too, was ready (and hoping) for a chance to show its fighting power. The dry season was apparent when we stopped next to visit a signal company headquarters.

We went to see the work first hand—at a point some twenty miles from camp—where mountains sheer off toward sandy lowlands. Again we were in maneuvers area, on the heights above town.

Infantrymen were whizzing to the "front" in trucks. Others moved along the road on foot before cutting aside to join comrades scaling a rough-rocked hill.

A pack train of mules jogged by; artillery was moving into position. An engineers' convoy was waiting in the natural camouflage of a grove of trees—its equipment extending even to pontoons.

An ambulance sped by to care for a "casualty." Every arm and every service of the United States Army in Panama was in action—and, step by step, as men became seasoned to war conditions in the tropics, defense of the Panama Canal became ever more noticeably razor-sharp.

Subs Torpedo, Shell 3 U. S. Cargo Vessels

47 Are Dead or Missing—Crews of 2 Craft Reboard Vessels and Save Them.

APR 11 1942

CAPE MAY, N. J., April 10 (AP)—A small American freighter was torpedoed and sunk off the Atlantic coast a week ago, the Fourth Naval District announced tonight, with the possible loss of 37 of its complement of 53 crew members and passengers.

Sixteen survivors were landed here on Wednesday after sailing their open lifeboat more than 200 miles by dead reckoning. They spent five and a quarter days in the lifeboat, a Navy spokesman said. All suffered from exposure, but none was injured seriously.

Attacked Without Warning

The undersea boat attacked without warning about 5:50 a. m. (E.W.T.), Third Mate Philip W. Babcock related, and within 15 minutes the ship went down.

The survivors scrambled into one lifeboat, and Second Mate Parke M. Ward of Brooklyn, a veteran of 40 years afloat, and 26-year old Babcock took charge.

Babcock, a Blairstown, N. J., resident, who spent two months in a navigation school and then "picked up the rest myself," recounted that he and Ward steered the tiny lifeboat by sun and stars and dead reckoning until a Navy patrol boat picked them up on April 8.

2 Ships Reach Port After Attacks By Subs

NORFOLK, Va., April 10 (AP)—The crews of two American merchant ships one torpedoed and the other attacked by submarine shellfire off the Atlantic coast, abandoned their vessels but later reboarded their craft and saw them brought safely to port, the Navy disclosed tonight.

The crew of one vessel, a United Nations cargo ship, abandoned her under shell fire from a submarine the night of April 2, but reboarded the vessel several hours later and manned her until she was towed safely to an undisclosed east coast port the following day.

Two members of the ship's 34-man crew were killed by the raider's shells, seven were missing and four of the 25 survivors were hospitalized for treatment of serious wounds, the fifth naval district said in announcing the attack today.

The known dead were second assistant Engineer Durham L. Long and Oiler Fred A. Dansereau, (addresses unavailable.)

The torpedoed ship of medium size, was attacked early Monday morning. She made an east coast port under her own power and with only one member of her 33-man crew missing, Second Mate Hehnen.

Motor torpedo boats took on the eight injured men and rushed them to the Newport Naval Hospital. Their injuries were found to include fractures and lacerations, but none was regarded in a critical condition.

The accident was said to have been caused by a short circuit aboard a motor torpedo boat, one of the type recently used with spectacular success in the Philippines, while the craft was engaged in practice exercises.

The Capella, a 4,070 ton vessel, was launched at Hog Island, Pa., in 1920. She is 401 feet long and 54 feet, 2 inches beam. She normally would carry a compliment of about 117 officers and men.

Says Sub Killed U. S. Seamen in Cold Blood

LINTHICUM HEIGHTS, Md., April 10 (AP)—Maryland's Governor Herbert R. O'Conor disclosed tonight that an Axis submarine recently "shot down in cold blood" American seamen as they crowded into lifeboats after their ship was sunk "at our very doors."

Bodies of 13 seamen were taken to Ocean City, Md., O'Conor said in an announcement prepared for delivery at a women's club defense forum.

The Navy Department's official announcement of the sinking, O'Conor explained, did not include full details "in order not to disclose to the enemy important information as to locations."

"Now that a sufficient period has elapsed," he said, "I am authorized by the Navy Department to announce that the bodies of 13 Americans came to our shore following the sinking."

Navy Cargo Ship Hit By Runaway Torpedo

Accidentally Discharged From Motor Torpedo Boat in Narragansett Bay—8 Men Injured, None Seriously.

NEWPORT, R. I., April 10. (AP)—An outlaw torpedo which ranged undirected almost six miles in Narragansett Bay after it was accidentally discharged from a motor torpedo boat, struck and damaged the Navy cargo vessel Capella and injured eight of her crew, the Navy announced today.

Short Circuit Blamed

None of those injured was in a serious condition, the Navy asserted in disclosing the unusual accident which occurred last evening.

Detonation of the torpedo against the Capella's side shook dwellings along the shore. How seriously the ship was damaged was not disclosed, but Navy tugs aided the Capella to shoal water as she was settling by the stern.

U.S. AND CANADA TIGHTEN JOINT WAR EFFORTS

APR 11 1942

Will Facilitate Seasonal Movements of Farm Labor and Equipment.

TARIFF STRUCTURE TO STAND

Dominion to Increase Crops of Barley, Flax and Oats—U. S. to Stress Oils.

Washington, April 10 (A. P.).—Canada and the United States, knitting their war efforts more closely together, agreed today to facilitate seasonal movements of farm labor and machinery across the border and to increase the production of several important crops.

The two joint arrangements affecting the agricultural economy of the neighboring nations were recommended by joint economic committees of the two countries. Approved by President Roosevelt and by Canadian Prime Minister W. L. MacKenzie King, the agreements were disclosed simultaneously here and in Ottawa.

One provides for increasing the production of oil bearing crops in the United States and of oats, barley and flax in Canada. The second covers the utilization of farm workers and machinery to facilitate the harvests in both nations.

APR 11 1942

The White House Statement.

A White House statement asserted:

"The approval of these joint arrangements marks one of the first positive actions on the agricultural front to further closer economic collaboration between the two nations in the common war effort. Without changing the existing tariff structure, these arrangements provide for more effective utilization of the joint agricultural resources of the two countries for the production of certain farm products needed in the war effort."

Seasonal shortages of labor and farm machinery, the statement declared, threaten to impede the war-time agricultural programs in both countries. The agreement provides only for the movement of used agricultural equipment, with operators or normal crews, across the international boundary without payment of duty, with a minimum of restrictions, and with such regulations as may be deemed necessary to insure the return of machines and crews within a specified time.

Fats and Oils Running Short.

Because of the loss of imported supplies, increased war requirements and need of turning over substantial quantities to our allies, the White House said, both Canada and the United States are confronted with a shortage of fats and oils.

The increase in the Canadian acreage of oats and barley, it said, not only will provide more adequate feed supplies for the dominion's expanding livestock program, but also will permit a greater expansion this season of soybean production in the corn belt. This will be by reason of the fact that crop acreage which otherwise would be used for feed grain will be shifted without impairing feed resources.

The Canadian Government, the statement said, has adopted a definite program of encouraging a shift of surplus wheat lands into oats, barley and flax. The arrangement, the White House said, further strengthens the oil crop production goal program set up in this country.

Speedup in Fall.

President Roosevelt has ordered all affected Governmental agencies to "take all possible action to give effect to the joint arrangements."

Effective beginning next autumn, it was agreed that Canada should facilitate the delivery in the United States, at prices then current in this country, of any flaxseed, oats and barley it can spare. This country is to refrain from imposing additional import restrictions on these products.

The United States, in return, agreed to facilitate the sale to Canada, at United States prices current at the time, whatever vegetable oils or vegetable oil seeds it may be able to supply, with the domination imposing no additional import restrictions.

The agreement on farm labor and machinery noted that especially in adjacent areas of the Dominion and the United States, seasonal labor requirements occur ordinarily in a time sequence providing opportunity for the movement of labor, particularly at planting and harvest periods, when labor shortages arising from the war might seriously affect farm output in many localities on both sides of the border.

The recommendations for the joint steps were made on February 27 by the joint economic committees and were signed by Alvin H. Hansen, chairman of the United States Committee, and W. A. Mackintosh, Canadian chairman.

INFLATION FIGHT BEING PRESSED, SAYS ROOSEVELT

APR 11 1942

President Reveals General Line of Attack Is Being Mapped.

WAGE FREEZING STUDIED

Higher Taxes, More Extensive Rationing Under Consideration.

FISCAL ADVISERS MEET

Problem Also Discussed at White House by Labor War Board.

APR 11 1942

WASHINGTON, April 10.— (AP) President Roosevelt disclosed today that further steps to combat inflation were under consideration and informed quarters said certain officials had suggested the freezing of wages at some recent level.

The chief executive himself would not discuss possible types of action when he told a press conference that a general line of attack on inflation was being mapped.

Price Control Studied

Along with wage controls, it is understood, however, that higher taxes and more extensive rationing and price control have been advanced by one or more officials as ways of dealing with the problem.

Just before the press conference, fiscal advisers of the President held a three-hour meeting at the White House, although they said later that the President did not participate in the meeting. Those attending this discussion included Vice President Wallace, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Price Administrator Leon Henderson, Federal Reserve Chairman Marriner S. Eccles and Budget Director Harold D. Smith. All declined to reply to questions from newsmen about the meeting.

William Green, A.F.L. president, who saw Mr. Roosevelt later at the weekly White House meeting of the C.I.O.-A.F.L. Labor War board, said the whole problem of inflation was touched on "to some extent" but that nothing was said of wage control or higher taxes.

Money Plentiful

Officials suggesting wage control argue that, while spending money is becoming more plentiful, curtailment of civilian production is reducing the number of things people can the number of things people can buy. This theoretically, increases their willingess to pay higher prices for whatever goods are available.

The idea is something like this: A man who has the money to buy an automobile but can't get one may use the money to buy furniture or clothing. Other people have the same problem, creating an unusual demand for these articles. Merchants can, if permitted, increase prices while the customers, having few other uses for their money, become more willing to pay higher prices.

Five Proposals

To prevent such situations, steps which some officials think might be undertaken, either separately or at the same time, include:

1—Wage controls—to limit increases in the amount of spending money.

2—More taxes—beyond the $9,000,000,000 of new revenue and social security levies already asked—to soak up money which might otherwise be spent to bid up prices.

3—Freezing or placing a ceiling on all prices. At present, prices of relatively few articles are regulated, and, in most cases, only at wholesale.

4—More extensive control of retail credit. At present, only installment sales of about 25 items are regulated.

5—More extensive rationing of scare goods. So far, official plans have been made only to ration sugar, although gasoline and oil are possibilities.

PRESIDENT ORDERS WAR PLANTS AUDITS

APR 11 1942

Moves to Curb 'Unreasonable Profits' and 'to Avoid Waste of Government Funds'

WASHINGTON, April 10 (AP)—Six government agencies were designated by President Roosevelt today to inspect plants and to audit books and records of firms with war contracts "to prevent the accumulation of unreasonable profits," avoid waste of government money and to implement measures taken to forestall price rises and inflation.

In accordance with a provision of the Second War Powers Act the Chief Executive named these inspection agencies in an executive order: the War Production Board, War, Navy and Treasury Departments, the Maritime Commission and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Inspections and audits, and the determination whether any given contract is a war contract as defined by the Second War Powers Act, may be made in the case of any prime contractor with whom a war order has been placed by any of the six agencies, or by any corporation created or organized by the RFC since Sept. 8, 1939. The inspections also may be made in the case of any subcontractor performing work required by a war contract.

Donald M. Nelson, WPB chairman, was charged with formulating rules and regulations and establishing policies pertaining to the inspections and audits.

The President provided for protection of secret, confidential or restricted information which might be obtained in [illegible] inspection or audit.

The heads of the [illegible]ix agencies or persons acting for [illegible]m were empowered to administer oaths and issue subpoenas.

Wheat Conference Accord on Postwar Program Reported

Plans Mapped for Relief Feeding and World Trade Stabilization

Washington, April 10 (AP)—The International Wheat Conference is expected to announce soon an agreement on a twofold post-war program providing for relief feeding of destitute nations pending their reconstruction and for stabilization of world trade in wheat.

Participating in the conference, convened here nearly a year ago, have been representatives from Argentina, Australia, Canada and the United States, the world's major wheat-exporting nations, and Great Britain, one of the biggest importers.

APR 11 1942

Decision Before End Of Month

While delegates adhered strictly to a conference rule prohibiting outside discussion of its closed proceedings, sources close to the American representatives said a general agreement had been reached and that it was expected to be signed before the end of April.

The conference, one of several held since 1933 when low wheat prices and surpluses plagued exporting nations, was called to develop a plan for sharing the world markets on an equitable basis and for maintaining prices on a basis reasonable to consumers and producers alike.

Discussions broadened to take in the problem of feeding the hungry people of Europe and other continents until they are able to resume peacetime production.

What Importing Countries Need

The nations participating in the conference hold a record supply of wheat sufficient to meet the normal requirements of importing countries for more than two years. That supply has been estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture at 1,471,000,000 bushels. The largest single portion, 632,000,000 bushels, is held by this country.

The agreement is expected to commit the exporting nations to crop-control programs similar to those in effect in the United States. Each country would adjust its production to a level designed to provide grain for its own needs, for its share in the world market and for a reasonable reserve for use in event of crop failure or other emergency.

Depends Upon United Nations' Victory

Inauguration of the wheat program would be contingent, of course, upon victory for the United Nations.

The United States has started informal discussions with cotton-producing countries looking toward a similar program for this important international crop. It has assured Brazil and Peru, South American cotton-producing countries, that it has no desire to stage a post-war competitive fight for world cotton markets.

In line with this policy, the Government is sending Oscar Johnston, a special representative of the Agriculture Department and president of the American Cotton Council, to the Southern American countries to arrange financial plans to help them tide their cotton industry over the war period.

POWER SHORTAGE FEARED IN CANADA

APR 11 1942

Curtailment of Newsprint Production Seen Later This Year.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—(AP) William L. Batt said today establishment of new war industries in Canada might cause a power shortage there late this year affecting production of newsprint.

Batt, chairman of the United States - Canadian materials coordinating committee, told reporters of this possibility after a conference with Canadian officials. He said that rainfall in Canada would determine the extent of the power shortage and what curtailment of newsprint production would be necessary.

The Canadian newsprint industry, one of largest power consumers in the Dominion, supplies about 70 per cent of this country's newsprint.

New aluminum and chemical plants to be built at the request of the United States will require the bulk of Canada's available power.

However, the War Production board reported that newsprint stocks in the United States now are at a high level. On Jan. 31, mill stocks totalled 154,904 tons and, by Feb. 28, had increased to 169,371 tons. Publishers' stocks on January 31 were 366,236 tons and, by Feb. 28 had risen to 425,537 tons—a figure representing approximately 55 days supply.

ECONOMIC WAR BOARD SHAKEN UP

APR 11 1942

Perkins Acts to Increase Agency's Efficiency.

Washington, April 10 (A. P.).—A complete reorganization of administrative machinery of the Board of Economic Warfare was ordered today by Milo Perkins, its executive director, to bring about a more effective functioning of this war agency staffed by 1,400 persons.

Effective immediately, Mr. Perkins abolished the board's eleven-man policy committee composed of board officials and representatives of other war agencies, and turned its work over to a group made up exclusively of board personnel.

Mr. Purkins's order also abolished the Office of Operations, and transferred most of its functions to a new Office of Exports, to be headed by Col. Royal B. Lord, assistant director of the board and former chief of operations. This office was charged with responsibility for the control of goods, other than arms, ammunition and implements of war (under control of a separate agency), leaving the United States.

Named Trouble Shooter.

J. C. Foulis, former fiscal officer for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, was named chief of office under Col. Lord, or the latter's trouble shooter.

The new office will have three branches—export control, requirements and projects.

Col. Francis R. Kerr of Newport, R. I., was named chief of the export control branch, a job he had under the old set-up.

J. A. Panuch, a New York lawyer formerly with the Securities and Exchange Commission, was named chief of the requirements branch. Its function is to ascertain the needs of Latin American and other friendly countries and see if and how they can be met.

Directs Projects Branch.

E. Kelso Peck, a California[illegible] and former foreign representative for the General Motors Acceptance Corporation, will direct the projects branch. This has to do with financing of projects abroad to facilitate obtaining strategic materials for this country.

The four geographic divisions of the agency, along with the engineering and raw materials divisions, were placed under the supervision of Morris Rosenthal, a former New York importer. He has been acting chief of the European and African division, a post which was given in the new set-up to John S. Fischer, former Washington newspaper man and recently an official of the Farm Security Administration.

George Reynolds, former assistant administrator of the Surplus Marketing Administration, was named acting chief of the raw materials division.

U. S. SETTING RECORDS FOR WAR PRODUCTION

NEW YORK, April 10 — (AP) The United States today is producing war materials "as no other nation in the world has ever produced," Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production board, declared tongiht.

"The figures for March show that you have really taken off your coats," Nelson told more than 3,000 employes and guests of the Carl L. Norden Company, Inc., makers of the Norden bomb sight, at the presentation of a Navy "E" flag to the company for plant efficiency.

Congratulating all Americans for "doing your part," Nelson informed his audience that "you are helping this nation to produce as no other nation in the world has ever produced."

U.S. Outstrips Axis in Planes

Royal Oak, Mich., April 10 — (AP) U. S. Sen. Prentiss M. Brown (D-Mich) told a Jefferson day banquet gathering of Democrats last night that the United States "now — not on order, not in six months, but now — is producing more airplanes than Germany, Italy, Japan and all the conquered countries together."

The speaker told his audience he was reminding them of production figures because confidence, not an attitude of defeatism, is the nation's need.

"I greatly deprecate the attitude of some in the administration who think they can spur our workers to greater effort by telling them how much superior the Germans and the Japs are," Sen. Brown said. "It isn't so."

A battleship, two cruisers, 18 destroyers and five submarines have been launched since Pearl Harbor, he added, as well as 112 merchant ships. Merchant ships now are being completed at the rate of one or two a day, he pointed out.

Norden Bombsight Still Secret From Nazis

President Of Firm Manufacturing That Instrument Denies Rumors

New York, April 10 (AP)—With navy permission it was revealed today that the secret of the deadly Norden bombsight, one of the most valuable of wartime instruments possessed by the United States, is still a secret from the German Nazis.

Theodore H. Barth, president of Carl L. Norden, Incorporated, closely guarded manufacturers of the instrument, said there was no truth in the frequent rumors that the Germans had gotten possession of the secret. These rumors have gained circulation since Herman Lang, a former Norden foreman, was recently sentenced to eighteen years in prison for dealing with the enemy.

The bombsights which have been captured from the Germans are crudely made devices and haven't the slightest resemblance to the highly perfect Norden sight, Barth said.

(Washington sources said that there were about 200,000 United States soldiers in France under General Pershing on Feb. 6, 1918.)

Full U. S. Production Will Bring Victory In War, Halifax Asserts

APR 11 1942

New Orleans, April 10 (AP)—Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States, predicted here today that when the United States "gets in full stride" in plane production, the Allied nations will have a great advantage which would lead to ultimate victory over the Axis powers.

"When that time comes this country is going to be producing more planes in one month than the Japanese can produce in a year," he said. "This is a solid reason why we'll win the war."

Lord Halifax, accompanied by his wife, arrived here today to view defense industries.

"The Japs are going to give us a lot more trouble before we are through with them," the Ambassador said. "And so are the Germans. However, even giving the Japanese the benefit of doubt of our estimate of their production, the Allies eventually will win, and this will come about when the United States has its full stride in production."

Voluntary Enrollment Of Women Weighed

APR 11 1942

May Ask 42,058,000 Women in 18-65 Bracket To Register for Possible Call to Help War Effort.

WASHINGTON, April 10. (AP)—The 42,058,000 American women in the 18-to-65 age bracket may be asked to register for a possible call to help with the war effort

Matter Still Undecided

President Roosevelt said at a press conference today that the administration was giving serious consideration to their voluntary registration but that right now, the whole matter was undecided because of the mechanical difficulties involved. With a huge number of women ready to come forward, he observed, it would be a tremendous task just to prepare registration cards.

Although there has been some talk of enrolling women on April 27, the date for registering men 45 to 64, inclusive, under the Selective Service Act, Mr. Roosevelt indicated a later date would be set if it was decided they should be enrolled.

As to what the women registrants might do, he was indefinite. But suggesting that something might be worked out for them later, the chief executive made clear that, in his vocabulary, the term "manpower" now embraces "womanpower" too.

Probably the women, first of all, would be sent questionnaires which would enable the government to ascertain where they might fit most advantageously into the war program.

Still to be settled, too, is the issue of mobilizing men for work in war plants or on the agricultural front, but the chief executive said a decision might be made in a week.

A cabinet committee which has been at grips with the problem, he said, has submitted only an oral report. But manpower mobilization, he added, comes up for discussion at cabinet meetings every week. It was touched on at a cabinet meeting today, as well as at a regular weekly conference Mr. Roosevelt held with the AFL-CIO Labor War Board.

One of the principal problems, Mr. Roosevelt said, is determining whether to set up a completely new federal agency to handle the mobilization or to let agencies now allocating and using manpower continue to do so under some sort of centralized supervision.

The largest of these, he said, is the Federal Employment Service. But he mentioned also the National Youth Administration, which has a training program in operation, and the War Production Board's labor division. Organized labor, through the Labor War Board, has urged that the Labor Department be given control of manpower mobilization. Some government officials, however, have indicated a preference for placing responsibility with the Federal Security Agency, while others want it lodged into the WPB labor branch.

PUBLISHER JAILED FOR SPURNING JURY

Refused to Answer Query at Propaganda Inquiry.

APR 11 1942

Washington, April 10 (A. P.)—Charles B. Hudson of Omaha, Neb., publisher of a series of publications entitled "America in Danger" began serving a three-month conditional jail sentence for contempt of court today as his wife was called to testify before a District Grand Jury before which he had declined to answer a question.

Justice Jennings Bailey sentenced Hudson yesterday to three months in jail, with the right to purge himself of the contempt within ten days by answering the question put to him by the Special Grand Jury investigating foreign propaganda and agents.

The official court reporter taking notes of the Grand Jury sessions testified that Hudson refused to answer a question as to who printed cards he allegedly distributed opposing war prior to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Hudson told the judge that he did not think his friends should be drawn into the matter and he had "a hunch that this is the beginning of a series of questions." The judge ruled that the Grand Jury had a right to ask the question.

In addition to Mrs. Hudson, witnesses subpœnaed to appear before the Grand Jury today included: Guenther Hansen-Sturm of the Romanoff Caviar Company, New York city; H. D. Kissenger of Kansas City, Mo.; Gerald Winrod of Wichita, Kan., said to be the publisher of the Defender, and Mrs. David Stanley of Cleveland, Ohio.

MEN IN FORCES KEEP BENEFITS

McNutt Pledges Social Security Will Be Retained By Those In Service

Administrator Says Means Has Already Been Given Consideration

APR 11 1942

[By the Associated Press]

New York, April 10—Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator, said tonight that means for protecting the social security benefit rights of men in the armed forces had been considered and "they shall be protected in full."

In an address before the fifteenth national conference of the American Association for Social Security, McNutt said that the coverage of a worker who joined the armed forces was an extension of the normal problem of covering men who shifted from various employments, some not covered by old-age insurance.

"Every worker and every worker's family must be protected regardless of where he works," he said.

Fewer Than Predicted

Reviewing the status of social security, McNutt told the association that old-age rolls did not include nearly so many beneficiaries as actuaries predicted a few years ago—a proof, he added, of the conservation upon which the system was built.

"The second silver lining lies in the fact that the bugaboo of America's psychological destruction has been permanently laid," he said.

"The skills of men of experience are needed on the production lines of our war industries. Men of 65 are staying on the job. Men of 65 already retired have gone back to work and taken their names, temporarily, from the old-age and survivors insurance rolls.

Calls It Labor's Answer

"That is the answer of American labor to the slander of those who declared that only insecurity would make a man work."

The load will be increased with peace when many will retire to make way for young men now in the armed forces, McNutt pointed out, but the United States has "a well-managed Federal system of social insurance to rely on."

Walter D. Fuller, chairman of the board of the National Association of Manufacturers and president of the Curtis Publishing Company, declared that "we can save America from social insecurity only by more and more production" to win the war.

Terms Production Solution

"And when the war finally is won, we can find greater security for society only through and as a result of production," Fuller asserted. ". . . Unless we win this war, we can expect nothing better than a number in a concentration camp to replace our social security registration."

Calling for management-labor cooperation, Fuller reiterated that "all of us would die rather than let our daughters and granddaughters come into the hands of the Jap slave-dealers or under the heel of the Nazi slave-drivers. . . . This world first must be made safe for humanity."

Jap Control of Sea and Air Made Relief Of U. S. Forces on Bataan Impossible

By DEWITT MACKENZIE,
Wide World War Analyst.

Now that the blow of Bataan has fallen it may be well—lest there be a feeling that aid ought to have been sent to our beleaguered forces—to emphasize that there has been no possible way of relieving them.

Mackenzie.

That fact long has been patent, but there has been a general reluctance perhaps too much reluctance—to discuss such an unhappy situation in detail. For one thing such talk lends comfort and possible aid to the enemy. Then, too, there always has been the faint hope that the defense might hold out until some fortuitous circumstance gave our forces a break.

I raise the subject now because queries I have been getting indicate that a lot of folk haven't wholly understood the position. It may ease minds to know that everything apparently has been done which could be done, since the outbreak of the war.

The Japs have controlled the sea and air about the Philippines. We have lacked the striking power to break through that blockade at such a vast distance from our home bases, for it would have required great naval and air forces which weren't available.

Cases Not Parallel.

It's true that recently we have established considerable fighting strength in Australia, and that this strength is being augmented. But it's equally true that we couldn't have utilized this base if the Nipponese had controlled the air and waters about Australia as they do about the Philippines.

In short, we haven't sent to Australia anything which could have been put in the hands of our men on Bataan as they wrote an indelible chapter of glory in American history.

While we are on the subject of Allied weakness in the Southwest Pacific it may be useful to warn against big expectations of a major offensive by our forces in the near future. We are employing increasing initiative, but it will be a long time before we are able to undertake big-scale attacks. Meanwhile our operations must be more or less what they have been on Bataan—defensive.

This column ventured the view long ago that when we finally smash the Japs we shall do it largely by direct attack on Japan proper from the air. There will be naval and land operations, of course, but there will be no necessity of going through the arduous preliminary of reconquering each of the territories which Nippon has annexed. When we have blasted Tokio and Osaka and other great cities sufficiently, the Japs will be glad to give up their ill-gotten gains in order to escape punishment.

Open to Air Attack.

There are numerous ways in which we shall be able to get at Japan from the air when the time comes, all depending on the circumstances of the moment. It can be done when we have the resources.

Meanwhile, it is increasingly and urgently apparent that apart from holding in the Orient, we must devote the greater part of our energy to the key theater of the whole war, and that is the Russo-German battleground. Hitler is getting set for the greatest effort he has yet made. He is sowing dragon's teeth with both hands, and vast armies are springing up. The Muscovites tell us that already he is flinging fresh equipment—including warplanes and tanks made in the past few weeks—into the lines in an effort to improve his position for the coming drive.

I have been asked frequently of late whether it looks as though the Reds can hold the German war machine. The answer is that they probably can do the holding if we can furnish enough warplanes and tanks and other badly needed equipment. And if Hitler can be held through the summer, his goose is cooked.

Presumably this crisis is what has taken Chief of Staff Marshall to London. There is not a moment to lose in rushing equipment to the European theater. It may even be that we shall be called on to aid in the opening of a new front in Western Europe. In any event, this life-or-death affair with Hitler must be settled before we can stage any major offensive in the Orient.

(Editors' note: S.A. Lozovsky, one-time blacksmith who is Russia's official spokesman, is holding press conferences again after an unexplained lapse of three months. Whatever the reason for the period of silence, it apparently has not hurt his gift of phrase-making, as evidenced by Friday's Kuibyshev dispatches.

Here is how Lozovsky and his conferences appear to Eddy Gilmore, Associated Press Correspondent, who is somewhat of a connoisseur of press conferences, having served previously in both Washington and London)

BY EDDY GILMORE

Kuibyshev, Russia, (Correspondence of the Associated Press)--A striking feature of Kuibyshev press conferences is the similarity to conferences in London and Washington. S.A. Lozovsky, Vice Commissar for Foreign Affairs, usually holds his conferences on Tuesday and Friday, like President Roosevelt, And yet, there is a certain marked difference.

As at the White House or the British Ministry of Information, the correspondents first must be passed upon by guards. This is done efficiently and courteously, and the correspondents enter a big, well-heated room to wait for the announcement that the Vice-Commissar will see them.

In London, the room was big and drafty; In Washington it was smaller and more crowded.

Lozovsky being ready, the correspondents sit at a long desk in front of him. He sits at a white oak desk of his own, with a pretty blonde interpreter beside him.

Although he is an accomplished linguist, with a fine command of English, French and German, this gray-bearded spokesman answers questions only in Russian.

Lounging comfortably in a high-backed chair, Lozovsky flicks his beard with his big but expressive hands, runs his fingers through his hair--which is dark for his 64 years--and announces, in Russian, that he is ready for questions.

Confronted with inquiries of a sort to make many a government spokesman flinch or fume, he listens with about the same expression he'd have if you asked him what he'd eaten for breakfast.

He may rub his eyes a moment; they look tired, but can twinkle on occasion. Then he answers --always in Russian.

The busy blonde interpreter writes out the answer in English. APR 11 1942

It's seldom yes or no; it usually is a carefully-phrased but nonetheless interesting and idiomatic.

He is always kind, polite and intelligent, so he definitely tries to help give out the news. He is clever, too, and he knows the uses of his own wry humor.

If the question is a tough one, he still manages to answer it in the way he wants to and keep everybody happy.

(Friday, for example, when asked pointedly abou the American supplies arriving in Russia, Lozovsky replied they included "all sorts of things for war, but precisely in what quantities is a secret." But he sold his tory with a declaration that the German Army in Russia would be liquidated this year with the help of the American supplies and that everything the Russians could get was "used to convert the Germany army into corpses.")

(Noting that the Germans had quit reporting on their casualties, he remarked Friday, "I suggest that they create a new category--the slightly killed.")

(Asked if his prediction of liquidating the Germany army might be based on establishment of a second European front, he mildly replied that a press conference was not the place in which he could discuss a second front, but he called to the attention of correspondents that the Germans had quit taling about a spring offensive and were talking about one in the summer.

(Asked about the visit to Berlin by King Boris of Bulgaria, Lozovsky said the Germans were merely looking for new cannon fodder.

(He managed to give Turkey a deft warning when a question was raised about German rumors that Russia had designs on Iran and Iraq.

(These lies are spread to conceal aggressive plans toward Iran's neighbors," he asserted)

Lozovsky is a man who knows his job. APR 11 1942

He was little known outside Russia before the war, but he long has been popular in Russian literary circles and held a position in the State Publishing House before he was named to the foreign commissariat in May 1939. Before the Russian revolution he lived for some time in France as an exile.

Lozovsky manages to do a lot of things, such as answer his telephone and straighten out censorship problems, even while his press conferences are going on.

But he doesn't hurry the reporters. When the questions are over, he asks twice if there are any more, then bids everyone goodbye.

As you amble out, you ask yourself, after all, is there any big difference between a press conference in Kuibyshev and in Washington? Yes, there is one.

If Lozovsky is busy when the correspondents arrive at the appointed time, you just wait; if Roosevelt is busy, you wait too, but if you have to wait very long someone is likely to kick on the president's door.

Nobody kicks on Lozovsky's door--or Brendan Bracken's in London either. Yes, they both keep you waiting longer than Roosevelt does.

London, Saturday, April 11-(AP)-A 19-year-old Norwegian girl, searching for her missing soldier lover believed to be in England, was aboard one of the Norwegian ships which last week dashed through a German gauntlet of bombs and shells to reach Britain from Goteberg, Sweden.

APR 11 1942

Escaping from Norway to Sweden by night on skis, the girl made the perilous journey across the North Sea, and today inserted an advertisement in London newspapers.

Did her missing lover recall the sunny day in Oslo, she asked, when he wrote "Jeg Elsker Dig (I love you)" in the dust on the side of a bus?

Bern, April 10-(AP)-The Rome radio station reported Italian casualties on all fronts for March at 1,132 killed, 2,753 wounded and 12,278 missing in a broadcast tod y. The list included losses not reported previously which apparently accounts for 16,495 Italian soldiers reported as missing in Northern Africa.

Other losses in North Africa were 174 dead and 138 wounded. In Russia, 439 were reported killed, 2,093 wounded and 196 missing. In the Balkans (Yugoslavia & Greece), 353 were killed, 358 wounded and 130 reported missing. The Italian Navy listed 37 dead, 121 wounded and 279 reported missing, and the Air Force, 29 dead, 43 wounded and 184 missing.

Colombo, Ceylon, April 10-(AP)-Sir Don Baron Jayatilaka, Home Minister and Leader of the State Council, declared in a broadcast tonight "the Japanese have brought war to this island of ours which has been enjoying peace for a century. We should not take it lying down."

He urged workers in essential services to stick to their jobs, assuring them the government would make arrangements for their security and the well-being of their families.

Ottawa, April 10-(AP)-Prime Minister W.L. Mackenzie King announced today that the Canadian government has approved two arrangements with the United States for the more effective utilization of joint agricultural resources.

One arrangement provides for increasing the production of oil-bearing crops in the United States, and of oats, barley and flax in Canada "to meet the war-time needs of both countries."

The other provides for facilitating the seasonal movement of farm labor and machinery across the international boundary.

Increased Canadian production of oats and barley will provide more feed supplies in Canada and allow more soy bean acreage, that otherwsie would be devoted to these cereals, in the United States, it was explained.

Facilitating the movement of labor and machines across the border will lessen seasonal shortages, it was said. Neither arrangement changes existing tariff structures. #

RED CROSS FEXKDHM

APR 11 1942

TRIBESMEN (450)

(ADVANCE LATAKIA, SYRIA, APRIL 10-(WIDE WORLD)-THE AMERICAN RED CROSS IS DISTRIBUTING FLOUR, BEANS AND POWDERED SOUP TO A HUNDRED THOUSAND RAGGED, HALF-STARVED MOUNTAIN TRIBESMEN OF THE ALOUITE DISTRICT IN NORTHWEST SYRIA.

THE HARDEST WINTER IN 20 YEARS MADE ROADS AND TRAILS THERE

IMPASSABLE FOR MONTHS, ISOLATING THESE PEOPLE. THEY GROW A LITTLE WHEAT, BUT DEPEND ON THE SCANT REVENUE FROM THEIR FLOCKS TO BUY FLOUR.

WHEN THE SNOWS MELTED, THEY CAME DOWN TO THE VILLAGES--TO FIND FLOUR SCARCE AND PRICES SO HIGH THEIR MEAGER FUNDS WOULD BUY ONLY A FEW MOUTHFULS OF BREAD WHEN IT COULD BE OBTAINED.

APR 11 1942

LOCAL LEADERS DECLARE THAT SYRIA'S WHEAT SHORTAGE IS DUE ALMOST ENTIRELY TO HOARDING AND SPECULATION.

IN THE LAST WAR MORE THAN 25,000 PERSONS STARVED TO DEATH IN THIS COUNTRY, BUT WHEN THE BRITISH ENTERED UNDER GENERAL ALLENBY THEY FOUND HOARDED STOCKS WHICH WOULD HAVE FED THE ENTIRE POPULATION.

THIS WAS HAS BROUGHT NOTHING AS BAD AS THAT--NO ONE HAS YET STARVED TO DEATH IN SYRIA--BUT PROFITEERS STILL SEEM TO EXIST.

FLOUR NOW IS SELLING ON THE BOOTLEG MARKET AS HIGH AS TEN TIMES ITS NORMAL PRICE.

THE BRITISH RECENTLY IMPORTED 60,000 TONS OF WHEAT AND SOLD IT AT THE MARKET PRICE IN THE BELIEF THIS WOULD RESTORE NORMAL CONDITIONS. SOLD IN TEN-TON LOTS, SOME OF IT APPARENTLY WENT TO SPECULATORS' HOARDS.

APR 11 1942

A NEW DECREE COMPELS A REPORT OF STOCKS, IMPOSING SEVERE PENALTIES FOR FAILURE TO DO SO. HOWEVER, IT IS DIFFICULT TO ENFORCE LAWS IN A COUNTRY WHERE AUTHORITY IS DIVIDED AMONG THREE ELEMENTS--THE BRITISH, THE FREE FRENCH AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

ESTIMATED BRITISH IMPORTS PLUS THIS YEAR'S CROP ASSURE ENOUGH WHEAT FOR THE COUNTRY FOR A WHOLE YEAR, BUT THE PROBLEM IS TO GET IT AWAY FROM THE HOARDERS.

HOWEVER, SYRIA IS EXPERIENCING SUCH A WAR BOOM THAT EARNINGS IN MANY REGIONS HAVE MOUNTED WITH THE PRICES. ONLY REGIONS LIKE ALOUITE HAVE REPORTED REAL SUFFERING, AND THE AREA WHICH THE RED CROSS ENTERED IS THE ONLY ONE WHERE PEOPLE HAVE BEEN FOUND HUNGRY.

THE FOOD DISTRIBUTED BY THE RED CROSS ORIGINALLY WAS INTENDED FOR GREECE BUT ARRIVED AFTER GERMAN OCCUPATION OF THAT COUNTRY. THE BRITISH AND AMERICAN GOVERNMENTS DECLINED TO LET IT GO THERE, FOR FEAR THE GERMANS WOULD GET IT, BUT ARRANGEMENTS RECENTLY WERE MADE TO PERMIT OTHER FOOD SUPPLIES TO REACH GREECE, WHERE DISTRESS IS MUCH WORSE THAN HERE.

APR 11 1942

FOOD WAS CARRIED TO THE ALOUITE REGION BY BRITISH AND FREE FRENCH ARMY TRUCKS. AMERICAN FIELD SERVICE AMBULANCES WERE THE ONLY VEHICLES ABLE TO GET OVER SOME MOUNTAIN ROADS. SEVERAL TRUCKLOADS WERE SEIZED BY BANDITS.

AS TRUCKS REACH THE MOUNTAIN HAMLETS, HUNGRY MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN DESCEND ON THEM, MILLING, PUSHING, FIGHTING AND YELLING TO GET THEIR BAGS OF FLOUR. LOCAL SHEIKS FREQUENTLY HAVE BEEN CALLED ON TO QUELL DISTURBANCES--THEIR HENCHMEN PROMPTLY STRONG ARMING THE MOBS INTO ORDERLY LINES.

APR 11 1942

RED CROSS RELIEF SUPPLIES REACHING HERE INCLUDE A LARGE QUANTITY OF NEW AND WORN CLOTHING DONATED IN THE UNITED STATES--SUITS, COATS, FURS, GOWNS, SILK UNDERWEAR AND LAYETTES OF GOOD QUALITY.

B.D. MACDONALD, IN CHARGE OF THE RED CROSS HERE, DECIDED IT WOULD BE GROTESQUE TO DRESS THE TRIBESMEN IN SUCH CLOTHING, SO IT IS BEING DISTRIBUTED INSTEAD TO WHITE COLLAR WORKERS HERE WHOSE WAGES HAVEN'T KEPT PACE WITH SKYROCKETING PRICES.

CEBU FORCES BATTLE

12,000 JAPS

Enemy Suffers Heavy Loss In Landing

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 11—Japanese hammered at beleagured Corregidor fortress from the air today while striving for a quick occupation of Cebu, the Philippines second largest city.

An invasion force estimated at 12,000 started landing yesterday on the island of Cebu on which the city is situated, the War Department reported, but met with stubborn resistance from a small American-Filipino defending force and suffered heavy casualties.

Although supported by fire from warships and dive bombers and by tanks, the invaders at no point were able to advance more than a few miles.

Army's Fate Shrouded

Reporting that communications between Corregidor and Bataan Peninsula remained severed, Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright failed to shed further light on the fate of his army of nearly 37,000, which was crushed on the peninsula.

The War Department's first communique in twenty-four hours thus left unanswered whether the troops who remained had surrendered.

However, considering their plight and also in view of President Roosevelt's authorization to Wainwright to act as he saw fit in the circumstances, some credence was placed in reports of a formal surrender on Bataan.

The army's communique said that Corregidor, General Wainwright's headquarters, and near-by Fort Hughes were subjected in the past twenty-four hours both to intensive air attack and to intermittent artillery cross-fire from enemy guns on the peninsula and from siege batteries on the south shore of Manila Bay. Casualties were declared to be few, however, and the damage inflicted slight.

Dive-Bombers Used

The communique, Number 185, based on reports received up to 9.30 A. M.

APR 12 1942

"1. Philippine theater:

"Despite fierce resistance by the small American and Philippine force, the enemy was able to effect a landing on the island of Cebu on April 10. The Japanese force now debarking on that island is estimated at 12,000. The landing is being supported by dive-bombers and a heavy fire from hostile naval vessels. Tank units have been landed by the Japanese.

"The defenders continue to resist stubbornly and the invaders have been unable to advance inland more than a few miles at any point. Enemy casualties have been heavy.

Forts Attacked Heavily

"Corregidor and Fort Hughes, in Manila Bay, were subjected to intensive air attacks during the past twenty-four hours. However, our casualties were few and the damage inflicted was slight.

"Our fortified islands were under intermittent fire from enemy artillery in Bataan and on the south shore of the bay.

"There is no communication between our troops in Bataan and those in Corregidor.

"2. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Corregidor Fights On

American soldiers and sailors on Corregidor kept up the fight today, charged with exacting the highest possible toll from the Japanese invaders.

The garrison consisted of survivors of the 3,500 Bataan sailors and marines General Wainwright ordered to the island stronghold in the closing hours of the peninsula fight and the American and Filipino soldiers who had manned its guns for weeks.

JAPS ON CEBU DECLARED HELD NEAR COAST

APR 12 1942

Six Landings On Philippine Island Are Admitted By Army

Forts In Manila Bay Blasted By Planes And Shore Guns

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 11 — Japanese forces have made at least six landings on the Philippine Island of Cebu, but a small band of Americans and Filipinos has been holding them close to the coast and inflicting heavy casualties upon the invader.

An army communique made this announcement late today, and reported also that big guns of Corregidor were engaged during the day in a duel with enemy artillery on the south shore of Manila Bay. Corregidor and the other island forts of Manila Bay were repeatedly bombed from the air.

The army's late day communique said fighting continued on Cebu, although the Japs had established beachheads at Cebu city, Argao, Pinamungajan, Naga and Talisay. Thus far, it added, "little progress inland has been made," and "Japanese losses are reported to be mounting."

Supplements Earlier Report

The announcement supplemented an earlier communique which told of heavy Japanese casualties at Cebu, and of savage attacks on the Manila Bay fortresses yesterday, with part of the enemy's artillery fire coming from Bataan Peninsula where the Japanese were finally victorious on Thursday.

The communique gave no further word on the fate of Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright's overwhelmed army on Bataan peninsula.

Cebu is a narrow, mountainous island well to the south of Manila, 130 miles long and nowhere more than 20 wide. The city of Cebu, with a population of 143,000, is second in size only to Manila among the towns of the Philippines. It has been an important trade center.

Sets Force At 12,000

The earlier communique said:

"Despite fierce resistance by the small American and Philippine force, the enemy was able to effect a landing on the island of Cebu on April 10. The Japanese force now debarking on that island is estimated at 12,000. The landing is being supported by dive bombers and a heavy fire from hostile naval vessels. Tank units have been landed by the Japanese."

Tokyo broadcasts reported violent street fighting in the city and said it was "shrouded in smoke" as Americans and Filipinos endeavored to apply a scorched earth policy by firing "vessels in the bay, oil tanks and other establishments."

The Tokyo radio also broadcast a report that two days ago Maj. Gen. Edward P. King, commanding American-Filipino forces on Bataan, and a group of his officers appeared at Limay under a flag of truce and handed a written surrender to a Japanese commander. The latter was said to have "refrained from giving a definite answer." General King, 57, is a native of Atlanta.

No such word had been received here, but military quarters regarded it as not improbable that there had been a formal surrender on Bataan.

Japanese Lost Chance to Take Bataan Sooner

Clark Lee Relates Story of Battle and Foe's Waste of Thousands of Lives

APR 12 1942

By Clark Lee

MELBOURNE, April 11 (AP). — Japanese officers spent the lives of their troops prodigally to break the defense of Bataan by sending them down open roads under artillery fire. Recklessness and caution were oddly combined in the campaign. Thousands were killed by shell bursts from defense guns and hundreds of other Japanese piled into American barbed wire and died under machine-gun fire.

The Japanese might have avoided the entire costly operation if they had pressed their attacks late in December at the right time. They might have smashed the American-Filipino forces before they ever reached the mountainous peninsula. Early in the invasion they could have landed on Bataan, then virtually unmanned, behind General Douglas MacArthur's forces and blocked the approaches. Instead, they moved cautiously and lost the opportunity.

Not Enough Equipment

Equipment available to the defenders proved its worth, but there was not enough of it. The Army seemed to have only one or two pieces of the United States' most modern equipment—one radio direction finder, one fully equipped anti-aircraft battery, one squadron of torpedo boats, one group of mounted 75's.

The movement to Bataan was so well screened that the Japanese apparently failed to detect it. Otherwise, their spies and agents had proved an important factor in aiding the enemy attacks on Luzon. Beams from concealed radio sets had guided Japanese planes to the Cavite naval base and Clark Field.

Numerous Japanese agents were detected and shot during the early days of the war. One was an attractive half-Japanese girl employed at Cavite, who was caught red-handed.

The movement toward Bataan really began Dec. 12, soon after the Japanese landed at Antimonan and Mauban, in southeastern Luzon. Our forces there, small and inexperienced, withdrew under orders.

Many defense units were cut off, whereupon the officers disbanded the Filipino troops and buried their rifles. The officers continued the trek toward Manila, destroying bridges behind them.

Enemy Advances Quickly

The withdrawal from the north began Dec. 21, the day the Japanese landed on the eastern shore of Lingayen Gulf. The enemy advanced quickly despite terrific losses and threatened to turn General MacArthur's left flank.

Some American units were trapped on the mountain road leading to Baguio, the summer capital. Part of these succeeded later in rejoining their units. Others took to the mountains, where they have been fighting in guerrilla style ever since.

The foe's main forces, including tanks, were diverted by the 26th Filipino Scout Cavalry. The 26th fought the Japanese stubbornly for five days, gradually withdrawing to the south and east.

This brilliant delaying action gave Lieutenant General Jonathan M. Wainwright, then second in command (and a major general), time to draw his army back from Lingayen Gulf toward Bataan with nearly all its guns and supplies.

What couldn't be carried was destroyed. On Christmas morning, 100,000 gallons of aviation gasoline and all ground supplies at Clark Field were set ablaze. Navy men set fire to the undefended Cavite naval station. Fort Wynn, guarding Subic Bay, was destroyed, as well as the Olangapoo naval station.

Military installations around Manila were dynamited and set afire. Japanese planes, instead of attacking the American forces on the roads, concentrated on undefended Manila.

On Dec. 29 they made the first heavy raid on Corregidor.

By 3 a. m. New Year's morning the movement to Bataan was completed. The last blacked-out truck convoy from Manila, in bright moonlight, crossed the bridge south of San Fernando on the road to Thermos and General Wainwright's men blew up the bridge.

The Bataan troops moved into positions previously prepared a considerable distance down the peninsula. The first front line ran from Moron to Abucay, with secondary positions below Pilar, criss-crossing the trans-peninsula road.

Huge bulldozers cut two runways out of the rice fields behind Cacabean for the remnants of General MacArthur's air force—a handful of pursuit planes. Two hospitals were opened, one indoors at Limao and the other in the open air near little Baguio. Anti-aircraft guns were installed overlooking Corregidor and Manila Bay. The Navy, with its few remaining boats, including mine-tenders and three Yangtse River gunboats, established patrols in Manila Bay while Lieutenant John Bulkeley's torpedo-boat squadron of six craft worked offshore.

The first land attacks on Bataam began about Jan. 15. They were partly successful, both of General MacArthur's flanks being beaten back and Moron and Abucay lost. General MacArthur ordered counter-attacks and both positions were retaken and the line restored.

In the mean time the Japanese attacked the eastern slope of Mount Natib and drove a salient a half-mile square into General MacArthur's defenses. American infantry counter-attacked successfully and drove the Japanese from the salient but so many snipers had infiltrated that General MacArthur withdrew his forces about Jan. 26 to the second main line.

This was the first phase of the battle and, although General MacArthur withdrew, the Japanese were beaten and lacked the strength to push an offensive.

From mid-January until near the end of the month, our artillery kept up an almost constant night-long fire on enemy forces. Some artillery positions had been hacked out of the jungle on the western flank, but the terrain made widespread use of big guns impossible and, anyway, there weren't enough big guns.

After smashing Japanese frontal and flanking attacks at the end of January, there was a lull during which life on Bataan was calm.

In early February the Japanese attacked frontally near the left-center of the line, but were driven back. About the same time a new threat appeared with the installation of enemy artillery on the southern shores of Manila Bay, where they could pound Corregidor and other island forts. An attempt by the Japanese to assemble a fleet of small boats was smashed by Corregidor's guns.

At the time I left Bataan, the situation was stabilized and most of the Japanese pressure was off our front. However, it was obvious that, unless American reinforcements arrived, that the Japanese could crack Bataan any time they wished to pay the price, as they have done.

Japs Report Americans' Offer To Surrender

Tokyo—

New York, April 11—The Associated Press listening post today heard the Japanese radio report that Japanese bluejackets newly landed upon Cebu, a central island of the Philippines, now are engaged in violent street fighting with the defenders of Cebu. Domei news agency was quoted.

Cebu city, the capital, was reported by the Japanese as "shrouded in smoke as the enemy set fire to vessels in the bay, oil tanks and other establishments."

Japs Report "Surrender"

The Japanese news agency, according to the Tokyo radio, said it had received a description of the purported surrender of American forces from its correspondent with the Japanese forces at Limay, one of the occupied coastal towns.

The Domei story of the surrender said:

"An unpretentious, small open car displaying a white flag, speeding along a military highway early on the morning of April 9 in the direction of the Japanese lines in the vicinity of Limay signaled the surrender of beleaguered Filipino and American troops in Bataan within six days after the launching of the all-out Japanese offensive.

"Japanese soldiers who hailed the car to stop found an elderly American general, attended by six American soldiers, all with somewhat frightened looks.

"On being questioned, the American officer revealed that he had been dispatched by American headquarters to arrange for an interview between representatives of the Japanese and American forces in Bataan.

"The matter was immediately reported to headquarters of the Japanese forces and a meeting was arranged for 11 A. M. between the commander of an undisclosed Japanese unit and the American general in residence, in front of the Lamao Agricultural Research Station.

APR 12 1942

Identified As King

"On being introduced to the Japanese unit commander, the elderly American officer identified himself for the first time as Maj. Gen. E. P. King, commander of American forces in Bataan, and introduced his aide as Lieut. Col. E. P. William, chief of staff, who subsequently produced a written formal surrender.

"The Japanese commander, however, refrained from giving a definite answer to the American officers."

The Cebu landings were effected at the capital and Argao, 40 miles to the south on the east coast facing Bohol Strait, and at Barili, on the west coast, the Japanese said.

The Japanese radio said that frontline dispatches to Domei from Bataan reported that advance units of Japanese forces had planted their flag on the tip of the besieged peninsula.

Japanese bombing planes and warships combined in "devastating" attacks on American positions at Corregidor fortress at the same time that Japanese troops were moving southward along the eastern coast of Bataan, the Japanese claimed.

Flight Reported

Domei said the air and sea assault was an "all-out offensive to exterminate Lieut. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright's beleaguered Filipino-American forces."

"It is learned that large numbers of boats filled with Filipino and American troops fleeing from Bataan, Corregidor and Caballo and unable to flee elsewhere, are facing annihilation," Domei reported.

Japanese Report Captures

TOKYO, April 11 (From Japanese broadcasts recorded by The Associated Press in New York)—Domei reported tonight that Japanese naval units had overtaken and captured six United States ships in waters around the Philippines while land troops carried the Rising Sun banner to the southern tip of Bataan Peninsula and Japanese landing detachments battled for control of Cebu Island.

Three of the ships were described as transports. Domei said they were caught trying to leave Bataan Peninsula last Thursday. Near tiny Fortune Island, outside Manila Bay, Domei said, a high speed motor boat was captured. A motor torpedo boat was reported caught after a chase to the shores of Northern Luzon Island, and another was said to have been overtaken south of Cebu.

Domei said a seventh ship—which it identified as a swift motor boat—was damaged badly in a running fight south of Cebu.

It said Japanese bluejackets landed at Cebu City, capital of Cebu Island and second largest city in the Philippines, and were battling with defense forces in streets "shrouded with smoke as the enemy set fire to vessels in the bay, oil tanks and other installations."

The Japanese news agency reported that other landings on the islands had been made at Argao, on the east coast forty miles south of the capital, and at the west coast town of Barili.

Describing action on Bataan up to late last Thursday, Domei said, advancing Japanese troops "planted the Rising Sun flag within enemy defense lines around Mariveles, strategic city at the tip of the peninsula."

A Domei correspondent on Bataan reported that two American officers whom he identified as Major Gen. E. B. King [Major Gen. Edward P. King Jr.] and Colonel E. P. William, arranged a meeting Thursday with a Japanese commander and produced a formal written surrender of Bataan defense forces.

"The Japanese commander, however, refrained from giving a definite answer to the American officers," Domei's correspondent said.

[There was no word from Washington of a formal surrender of defense forces on Bataan.]

Domei said Corregidor was being battered fiercely by Japanese bombers and warships.

The Japanese news agency said it had received a description of the purported surrender of American forces from its correspondent with the Japanese forces at Limay, one of the occupied coastal towns. The Domei story of the surrender said:

"An unpretentious, small open car displaying a white flag, speeding along a military highway early on the morning of April 9 in the direction of the Japanese lines in the vicinity of Limay, signaled the surrender of beleaguered Filipino and American troops in Bataan within six days after the launching of the all-out Japanese offensive.

"Japanese soldiers who hailed the car to stop found an elderly American general, attended by six American soldiers, all with somewhat frightened looks. On being questioned, the American officer revealed that he had been dispatched by American headquarters to arrange for an interview between representatives of the Japanese and American forces in Bataan.

APR 12 1942

"The matter was immediately reported to headquarters of the Japanese forces and a meeting was arranged for 11 A. M. between the commander of an undisclosed Japanese unit and the American general in residence, in front of the Lamao Agricultural Research Station.

"On being introduced to the Japanese unit commander the elderly American officer identified himself for the first time as Major Gen. E. B. King, commander of American forces in Bataan, and introduced his aide as Lieut. Col. E. P. William, Chief of Staff, who subsequently produced a written formal surrender.

"The Japanese commander, however, refrained from giving a definite answer to the American officers."

FILIPINOS TO FIGHT ON, QUEZON DECLARES

APR 12 1942

Says his People will Stand by Allies to Bitter End

Melbourne, April 11—(AP)—Declaring the loss of Bataan had not ended the war in the Philippines, President Manuel Quezon said today that "the Filipino people will stand by America and our allies to the bitter end."

Quezon, who arrived recently in Australia, said he was proud of the part the Filipino forces have taken in this epic battle."

"I am profoundly grateful to the whole army, which has thus vindicated the honor and right of the Filipino people to become an independent nation," Quezon added. "Their countrymen will consider every man who took part in this battle a national hero and will feel undying gratitude for the service they have rendered."

Quezon pointed out that Corregidor fortress, the Visaya Islands and Mindanao still are fighting the Japanese, and said:

"I am certain that all these places will be defended as long as there are means wherewith to defend them."

Secret Radio Cheers Corregidor Through the Roar of Bombs

APR 12 1942

By DEAN SCHEDLER

CORREGIDOR FORTRESS (Delayed) April 9 (AP)—Amid the swish and roar of bombs and shells, tired, blood-stained Filipino-American forces heard the radio "Voice of Freedom" assuring them last night they had done far more than could be humanly expected in the epic siege of Bataan.

Men and nurses who had fought to the last and then run a two-mile gantlet of Japanese bombs and machine gun bullets and Manila bay sharks to get from Bataan to Corregidor island received the praise in varying fashion—some with tears, others with fixed stares, some without signs of emotion.

This "voice of freedom," which has been broadcasting encouragement to the defenders from some undisclosed place in the Philippines ever since the Japanese overran the Luzon island, delivered a stirring word salute even while the men of Corregidor still were fighting back at the invaders and wondering what had become of their 30-odd thousand comrades trapped on Bataan.

"Bataan has fallen," said the Voice of Freedom. "The Filipino and American troops on this war-ravaged, blood-stained peninsula have laid down their arms.

The World Will Long Remember

"With their heads bloody, but unbowed they have yielded to the superior force and numbers of the enemy.

"The world will long remember the epic struggle they put up . . . They have stood up uncomplaining under the gruelling fire of the enemy for more than three months.

"The adversary in the pride of his power and triumphs will credit our troops with nothing less than the courage and fortitude his own troops have shown in battle.

"Bataan has fallen—but the spirit that made it stand—a beacon to all liberty-loving peoples of the world—cannot fall."

Looking across the two-mile stretch of water toward Bataan, the men of Corregidor heard great explosions throughout the night and saw huge puffs of smoke and flame, indicating that the last of the defending forces were blowing up their own munition dumps, carrying out the scorched earth formula to cheat the enemy of military spoils.

We on Corregidor can only imagine the variety of hell these last men are going through. Bataan has been pounded incessantly by planes never opposed by anything but a fire. The exhausted Filipinos and Americans can only fight back with what they have and take what the Japs are giving.

Dash Across Channel

All night long I saw small boats creeping across the channel with the few soldiers and civilians able to make the perilous dash for the comparative safety of Corregidor.

Japanese planes bombed and machine-gunned their course actively, but that was nothing new to them. The main thing they were interested in was sleep.

Action has been so fast and parts of the situation so veiled in confusion that it is difficult to envision a full picture of what has happened in these last hours, but I hope some day to be able to pass on the story which has been written in blood to make a unique page in history.

Bombs on Hospital

One striking phase of it can be reported. Japanese planes unloaded a stick of bombs on the defenders' base hospital on Bataan. Granting Tokyo the benefit of the doubt, Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright expressed the belief that the attack on the hospital was unintentional, since the area was well marked.

Bombs tore into some of the exposed wards, among wounded men and nearly exhausted nurses.

Throughout this ordeal Dr. Erwin R. Nelson of the Hospital Corps operated without a letup. Circumstances required that his hand be steady even when a bomb came screaming down near by during an amputation or the administering of a spinal anaesthetic.

A bomb came so close that Dr. Nelson ducked, just once—under the operating table. He asked his patient if he wanted to be put on the floor, but the half-anaesthetized man said he would take his chances on the table.

Two nurses, Rita G. Palmer of Hampton, N. H., and Rosemary Hogan of Chattanooga, Okla., were slightly injured and were brought to Corregidor. Dr. Nelson, who accompanied them, expressed amazement at the courage they had shown under fire.

Before Bataan Fell

In a dispatch before Bataan fell Dean Schedler wrote: April 7—

CORREGIDOR FORTRESS (AP)—More bombs have been falling on Corregidor than any other place in the world, in proportion to area.

Sideroads of this small island fortress are a picture of no-man's land. Trees, stripped by explosions, seem to outline a cold winter sky. Shell craters are everywhere.

Yet, there is surprisingly little military damage. Deserted barracks and garages long since vacated have been shattered by 500-pound bombs and at other places incendiaries have started small fires, easily extinguished.

Japanese observation planes now skirt the outer edges of Corregidor, wary of murderous anti-aircraft fire. Occasionally a "zero" fighter unloads a bomb or two. The bigger craft—medium and heavy bombers—have deserted us to give the Bataan front lines and rear areas a working over, and to support attacks against the hand-fighting Filipino and American defenders.

General Cheers Men

During a lull in activity I made an inspection trip of Corregidor with Maj. Gen. George F. Moore of College Station, Tex., and his aide, Maj. Robert Brown of Erie, Pa. General Moore has gained the highest respect as a leader. Since the start of the raids he has been one of the first to tour the bombed areas, passing cheering word to men in gun positions and other vital jobs.

At one of the big gun positions men were busily at work, some doing washing, others building chairs. Battalion Comdr. Herman Hauck of Valley Falls, Kan., climbed down from atop a bombproof position to report that morale was high throughout his battery. The mess sergeant invited us to remain for dinner, offering as a special inducement a dash of raisins added to the rice for dessert.

Carabao for Dinner

Col. Chester Elmes of San Francisco, hard-working quartermaster for the harbor defense, deserves considerable credit for supplying men in remote positions. A veteran of the World War, he knows his job well.

Men busily working the trucks get carabao for dinner. This animal, a type of water buffalo, is tasty when well-cooked.

"All it needs is onions to taste like a real T-bone," Elmes said.

Returning to General Moore's headquarters we kept our eyes cocked for any sign of enemy planes, for some had appeared at this time yesterday.

Operation Continues As Japanese Bomb Bataan Hospital

'Nightmare' Scenes Related by Doctor Who Survived

APR 12 1942

By DEAN SCHEDLER,
Associated Press War Correspondent.

CORREGIDOR FORTRESS, April 8 (delayed).—Shortly before 10 a.m. yesterday three heavy Japanese bombers unloaded big bombs on a base hospital at Bataan, scoring direct hits on exposed wards and wounding numerous soldiers, doctors and nurses.

Weary, grim Filipino and American soldiers, wounded in the bitter front-line fighting, were bombed out of their hospital beds.

Only recently Japanese planes dropped stick bombs on the hospital base, clearly marked by white sheets forming crosses. American protests drew an apology from the Japanese high command at Manila, which called it unintentional.

Operation Continues.

Edwin R. Nelson of Huntington, W. Va., who had been working night and day in the operating room treating wounded soldiers, was in the midst of an amputation. The patient was under a spinal anesthetic, and Nelson's aides were trying to comfort him with assurance that the bombers were a safe distance away.

A bomb struck the ward, and the surgeon and his staff dropped to the floor. The operating room was a shambles.

When the dust cleared, Nelson resumed the operation, though his instruments and gloves were no longer sterile.

Through it all the patient never complained, although the anesthetic had worn off.

Nelson described the bombing as a "nightmare I never want to see again."

Patients in triple-tier beds were scattered about like toy soldiers. Doctors and nurses sought frantically to restore order, calm the hysterical, give aid where possible, sometimes operate on the spot.

A nurse, Rita G. Palmer of Hampton, N. H., on duty when the bombs first struck, related:

Nurse Tells of Experience.

"All morning long bombers were roaring about dropping bombs. I was under the table most of the time at first, then I realized I should be about my duties.

"Suddenly I heard the swish of a big one coming. There was a terrific blast. The air was dark and cloudy from thick dust and powder smoke.

"I don't remember just what happened next—I guess I passed out."

She suffered only a couple of scratches.

Nurse Rosemary Hogan of Chattanooga, Okla., who also suffered only slight injuries, was thrown to the floor by one concussion.

"The noise and confusion were terrible," she said. "The air was thick with patients calling for help, unable to get up."

Weary Fighters And Nurses Reach Corregidor Amid Bullet Hail

(Editor's Note—The following dispatch is the first to reach the Associated Press directly from the fortress of Corregidor since Bataan fell. Dean Schedler escaped to Corregidor when the Japanese occupied Manila, and from there reached Bataan.)

APR 12 1942

By Dean Schedler, Associated Press Correspondent

Corregidor Fortress, April 9 (Delayed)—Nurses and soldiers of Bataan, dazed with the shock of battle, sought rest and sleep today within the walls of Corregidor fortress, itself battered by Japanese bombs.

They came last night, brave refugees from the long battle that was gloriously lost, swimming through shark-infested waters of the channel between Bataan and this Manila Bay fortress, or rowing pitifully small boats through bombs and vicious machine-gun blasts from enemy planes.

Almost Too Tired To Walk

Nurses, fatigued after days and nights of service in Bataan's hospitals under constant fire, stumbled ashore from the boats so weary they could hardly walk. Civilians, too, any who dared to risk the trip from Bataan, were among the arrivals.

Those who swam were picked up in mid-channel by other small craft, saved from the sharks but still harassed by the machine-gun fire of diving enemy planes.

I questioned soldiers who had gone night after night without sleep and who had eaten but little durin those final days when they faced overwhelming odds.

They had stood and fought, then retreated to stand and fight again but while they tried to be obliging and tell of Bataan's last hours they wanted only one thing now—sleep.

Gripped by this desire to sleep their memory of experiences was not clear. They only knew they were hungry, tired and sleepy.

During the night we looked across the channel toward Bataan and heard booming explosions and saw many-colored fires as the defenders, in their last defiant action destroyed munition dumps and fuel, and anything else that might be valuable to the ever-pressing enemy.

We on Corregidor had heard over short-wave radio of the fall of Bataan, after the defenders' gallant three-month stand.

The soldiers of Corregidor, themselves veterans of scores of pounding Japanese bombing raids, wept unashamed at the announcer's words:

"Bataan has fallen."

The broadcast was from "The Voice of Freedom," a secret transmitter hidden in the hills of one of the many islands.

"Heads Bloody But Unbowed"

"Filipino and American troops of this war-ravaged, blood stained peninsula have laid down their arms," the announcer said.

The soldiers listened in reverent silence.

"With heads bloody but unbowed, they have yielded to the superior force and numbers of the enemy," the radio continued.

"The world will long remember the epic struggle the Filipinos and Americans put up in the jungle fastness and along the rugged Bataan coast line. They have stood up without complaint under the constant and gruelling fire of the enemy for more than three months.

"Besieged on land and blockaded from the sea, cut off from all sources of help, these intrepid fighters have borne all that human endurance could bear."

We remained silent, listening, but we also could hear the firing which we now knew as the end of the valiant fight on Bataan.

"But what sustained them through all these months of incessant battle was a force more than physical," the voice said.

"It was the thought of their native land and all it holds most dear to them, the thought of freedom and dignity, and pride in these most priceless of all human prerogatives.

APR 12 1942

"Unscrumlled Pages Of History"

"The adversary in his pride and power and triumphs will credit our troops with nothing less than the courage and fortitude his own troops have shown in battle."

While much has been said of these Filipinos and Americans and their leaders fighting on Bataan, those who have seen them in action hope to be able some day to inform the world to the fullest of their performance which, with pen dipped in blood, wrote unequaled pages of heroic history.

Shut Eyes, Prayed, Says N. J. Colonel

APR 12 1942

CORREGIDOR FORTRESS (AP) (Delayed)—Col. Joseph Kohn of Chatham, N. J., telling Dean Schedler, Associated Press correspondent, how he had just observed enemy dive bombers at work across the bay, while the Japanese were attacking two small boats under his command, said:

"I closed my eyes in silent prayer and my men were afraid to look at the results."

Then the men leaped overboard and tossed a few good-sized fish onto the decks, he said. That night the monotonous menu of corned willie was changed.

Col. Joseph P. Kohn's wife has been living with her sister, Mrs. Edwin Beck of Chatham, since leaving the Philippines last spring, but last week went to Georgetown, S. C.

Colonel Kohn, a graduate of Syracuse, has been stationed at Fort Mills, in the Philippines, since 1939. He has served in Honolulu and Panama, as well as in the United States. He was instructor of military tactics at Fordham University for a four-year period ending in 1938.

Corregidor Scribe Once Sold Stocks

APR 12 1942

Bought Seat on Exchange in Philippines

By the Associated Press

"We remained silent, listening... We could hear the firing which we knew was the end of the valiant fight on Bataan..."

Behind the bomb-scarred walls of Corregidor island fortress, in Manila bay, 28-year-old Dean Schedler flurried the keys of his typewriter, graphically depicting the last, tragic hours of the battle of Bataan peninsula in the Philippines.

For the young Associated Press war correspondent, it was a far cry from his native Stillwater, Okla.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Schedler, who are still living in Stillwater, Schedler had experienced a varied career, ranging from high school band leader to youngest member of the Manila Stock Exchange, before he joined the Associated Press to chronicle the heroic adventures of Bataan's defenders early this year

After a year at Oklahoma A. & M. College, he went to Washington, D. C., where he attended night school at George Washington University, played in the college band and got a clerical job with the old NRA.

Bought Seat on Exchange

When the NRA folded, an older brother, Edmund W. Schedler, who was in the securities business in Manila, wired Dean to come to the Philippines. That was about six years ago. Young Schedler went, in his first year there reaped a modest fortune selling gold stocks and bought a seat valued in four figures on the Manila Stock Exchange.

When adversity set in, Schedler got a job editing the house organ of a Dutch import-export firm, and, incidentally, his first whiff of printer's ink, which grew stronger during the next three years as he worked on the Manila Bulletin—until the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Besides his brothers, Edmund, now back in the United States, and Carl, assistant director of the U. S. Conciliation Service in Washington, Dean has a sister, Leah Schedler, who is registrar at his alma mater, Oklahoma A. & M. College, at Stillwater.

"Huge" Numbers In Hospital On Bataan, Red Cross Told

Report Made February 5 Is Received From Nurse. Word Lacking From 3 Other Philippine Workers

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 11—A letter from a Red Cross nurse received here today disclosed that as early as February 5 the population of hospitals on Bataan peninsula was "huge."

The American Red Cross said it had received two reports from Miss Catherine L. Nau, a field director, who was "presumed to have been with the personnel of Field Hospital No. 2, to which she was assigned when it was captured." Miss Nau, 45 years old, is the daughter of Mrs. F. C. Nau, Lima, Ohio.

The whereabouts of three other field workers in the Philippines has not been known since the fall of Manila, the Red Cross said. They are James W. Cullens, Ozark, Cal.; Harold W. Graybeal, West Los Angeles, Cal, and Miss Marie Adams, San Francisco.

"Greetings From Front"

One report from Miss Nau was dated January 17, the other February 5. Across the top of one she wrote in longhand to her associates here:

"Greetings from the front. We got into war before I could get much of a report off to you and these reports don't give you much more than an outline of our busy days, 7 to 7 o'clock; and then a good night's sleep fixes you up and we're ready for more. See you later."

Tells Of Supplies Given Out

In her January 17 report, Miss Nau said supplies were being given to patients in the outdoor, bamboo-sides hospital known as Field Hospital No. 2 on Bataan. Tooth brushes, razor blades, tooth paste and shaving cream in limited quantities were still available then, she wrote.

But on February 5 she wrote that some of these supplies were used up, cigarettes were being rationed and the supply of games was running short because "the hospital population is so huge and shifts in location of patients so frequent."

Red Cross Has Trouble Getting Manila Delegate

Washington, April 11 (AP)—Red Cross officials said tonight that difficulty in securing an International Red Cross delegate in Manila apparently was holding up an agreement permitting it to dispatch supplies to Americans held prisoners by the Japanese in the Philippines.

The Red Cross announced some weeks ago that negotiations for an agreement were under way through the International Red Cross in Geneva.

The international delegate, who must be a citizen or subject of a neutral country, would oversee the distribution of the supplies in the Philippines.

Officials said that if no one was found in Manila who could or would undertake the task arrangements might be made for some suitable persons to go there.

The negotiations, they pointed out, are between the International Red Cross and Japanese authorities.

Malta, Corregidor Are Similar Targets

APR 12 1942

By the Associated Press

Malta, island bastion of Britain in the Central Mediterranean, and Corregidor, fortress isle of the United States in Manila bay, have one thing in common apart from their insular similarity — they are targets of some of the fiercest air attacks of modern warfare.

Corregidor, site of Fort Mills, is about two square miles in area, within three miles of Bataan shore. In peacetime it was inhabited by some 8,000 people.

Malta, where Britain has her Valletta naval base and several airfields, has an area of 95 square miles and has more than a quarter million inhabitants. It is only about 55 miles south of the large Italian island of Sicily.

Malta is the most bombed spot on earth. About 2,000 air-raid alarms have sounded there and there have been nearly that many attacks, first executed by the Italians and, when they faltered, by the Germans based on Sicily.

The Maltese, like the troops on

Tokyo Names Chief for Borneo

Jap View:

All The World Part Of Asia

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 11—It develops, the Office of Facts and Figures said today, that the Japanese idea of the geographical area of Asia includes: America, Australia, Africa, Europe, all the oceans.

The OFF said a broadcast to the Japanese by Dr. Tsunekicki Komaki, of Kyoto Imperial University, included some of the following reasoning:

"When Columbus set foot on the American continent, had it been unpopulated for centuries? No, there had been Indians living in the country. Thus it is obviously reasonable for us to term America an eastern Asia." (Apparently a reference to the ethnological theory that Indians came from Asiatic stock.)

And All The Rest

"Australia is part of Asia. Europe occupied this country only a few centuries ago. There were once a million natives living in Australia. They were Asiatic people. . . .

"Africa is also part of Asia. In ancient Greece it was considered a part of the Asiatic continent. The Mediterranean was so considered by Alexander the Great.

30-24. 15907

30.24-15907

"In northern Europe there is Asiatic blood running thick in the veins of the inhabitants. In southern Europe, we find many ancient tools formerly used by the people of Asia. Therefore we may also consider Europe as a part of Asia.

"Great Japanese Sea"

"The Pacific Ocean is a sea for Asia and this must be the new idea in the new era. The Indian Ocean must also be a sea for Asia.

"The Atlantic Ocean is also a part of Asia. There are no seven seas, but only one sea and it is connected to Japan, where the sun is rising. All oceans are to be regarded as a great Japanese sea."

DESTROYER, TRANSPORT AND 7,000-TON MERCHANT VESSEL INCLUDED IN LIST

Toll Of Underseas Boat In Vicinity Of Christmas Island And Bali Increased By Full Report. Another Freighter Possibly Sunk

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 11—American submarines, prowling the Western Pacific, have sunk four more Japanese vessels including a destroyer and a large transport, the navy announced today.

The other ships sent to the bottom were a 7,000-ton merchant vessel and a submarine chaser. In addition, hits were scored on a cruiser, another large transport and a 4,000-ton freighter. The latter vessel, a communique said, possibly sank.

Operations Of Two Submarines

The communique covered operations by two submarines. It said one had sunk the merchant ship and the sub chaser and hit the freighter.

Some operations of the other submarine had been reported in a communique a week ago. Today's announcement, revising and enlarging the earlier report, added the transports ,the destroyer and the cruiser to its score, but withdrew an earlier announcement that this submarine had hit two seaplane tenders. One of the transports, the navy said, was mistakenly identified earlier as two teaplane tenders.

One Undersea Boat Lost

Against these successes the navy had to report that the submarine Perch was a month overdue and was presumed to be lost. She was last reported, a communique said, in the Java Sea.

The Perch was the fourth submarine reported lost or missing since the war began and the twenty-ninth American naval ship announced as lost.

A six-year-old 1,330-ton craft, the Perch was commanded by Lieut. Com. David Albert Hurt, 38, of Pounding Mill, Va., and normally carried a crew of fifty. The navy said the next of kin had been notified.

The submarine which bagged the Japanese destroyer announced in today's communique netted a total of one cruiser, one destroyer and one transport sunk, and two cruisers, a transport, a supply ship and an unidentified vessel damaged in the course of a single patrol in the southwest Pacific and the Indian Ocean.

APR 12 1942

All On Single Patrol

After referring to damage it had reported a week ago was inflicted on th eenemy by submarines, the navy said, "it is now known that all the results," except the damaging of one supply ship in waters near Lombok "were achieved by one submarine on a single patrol."

The damage inflicted by that submarine was listed as follows:

(a) One light cruiser was sunk in the vicinity of Christmas Island, south of Java.

(b) One light cruiser was damaged and is believed to have sunk and a third cruiser was damaged in the vicinity of Christmas Island.

(c) One large transport was damaged near Bali.

(d) One supply ship was damaged in waters near Lombok Island.

(e) One destroyer and one large transport were sunk in the vicinity of Bali and an unidentified vessel was damaged.

In previous reports of the action the navy had stated that in the vicinity of Christmas Island submarines had sunk one light cruiser and scored two direct hits on another light cruiser.

New Information Received

New information showed that at Christmas Island the single submarine sank one light cruiser and damaged two others.

The original report also told of one barge transport and one unidentified ship damaged by one torpedo hit each. The recapitulation showed that in that phase of the action near Bali one destroyer and one large transport definitely were sunk and an unientified vessel were sunk and an unidentified vessel was damaged.

Paris Radio Says Japan Has Four New Carriers

London, April 11 (A. P.).—The Paris radio broadcast a Domei dispatch from Tokio today that four new aircraft carriers soon would be put into service with the Japanese navy. The broadcast said they would carry respectively 35, 40, 50 and 55 planes.

U. S. Submarine Believed Lost In Java Sea

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 11 — The United States submarine Perch has been overdue for a month and presumably is lost in the western Pacific, the navy announced today.

The Perch, commissioned six years ago, last was reported operating in the Java sea.

She was under command of Lieut. Com. David Albert Hurt, 38, Pounding Mill, Va.

Fourth Sub Lost

She was the fourth submarine reported lost or missing by the Navy Department since the war began. The others were the Shark, reported overdue in the Western Pacific; the S-26, which went down after a collision off Panama, and the Sea Lion, demolished at Cavite in the Philippines.

Loss of the Perch brought to twenty-nine the number of naval vessels announced as lost since December 7.

Text Of Communique

The loss was announced in the Navy Department's communique, No. 70, based on reports received up to 10.30 A. M. today:

"Southwest Pacific:

"1. The United States submarine Perch has been overdue for more than a month and must be presumed to be lost.

"2. The Perch was one of the United States submarines operating in the vicinity of Java and her last position report placed her in the Java Sea.

"3. The next of kin have been notified.

"4. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Normal Crew Of 50

Normally, the crew of the Perch numbered fifty.

Commander Hurt was graduated from the Naval Academy in June, 1925. His first assignment to sea duty was in the U. S. S. Raleigh. In 1928 he was transferred to submarines and assumed command of the Perch in May, 1939.

Soerabaja Naval Base Blasted When Abandoned

By the Associated Press.

PERTH, Australia, April 11.—The last Dutch warship to leave Soerabaja has arrived safely in an Australian port and her commander declared today that the big Java naval base had been blasted to bits before it was abandoned to the Japanese.

Oil storage tanks and docks were dynamited, the officer declared, and several large ships and many smaller vessels were sunk in the harbor to render it virtually useless.

When the officer last saw Soerabaja, it was covered with a huge pall of smoke which extended far out to sea, he said.

To escape detection on the voyage to Australia, the Dutch vessel was decked out with foliage by her crew of 59 until she resembled a veritable floating island.

The camouflage was discarded after the ship had run through 6-mile wide Atlas Strait between Lombok and Soembawa Islands east of Java.

Distinguished Flying Cross For 29 Officers And 46 Enlisted Men

APR 12 1942

Washington, April 11 (AP)—Twenty-nine army officers and forty-six enlisted men have been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for "extraordinary achievement" in ferrying a flight of bombers from Honolulu to the Philippines a few months before the war with Japan, the War Department announced today.

Four of the awards were made posthumously, including those to Capt. Colin P. Kelly, who sank a Japanese battleship, and Staff Sergeant William J. Delehanty, of Brooklyn, N. Y., member of Kelly's crew, who, like Kelly, died when Japanese fighters attacked the American bomber as it returned from its mission against the battleship. Kelly already had been given posthumous awards of the Congressional Medal of Honor and the Distinguished Service Cross.

The two other posthumous awards of the Flying Cross were to Staff Sergeants James L. Cannon, of Schertz, Texas, and William C. Jones, of Mankato, Kan., both killed in the Pacific area in December.

Hawaii Now Prepared To Meet Any Gas Attack

400,000 Masks Go to Adults; Rush Shields for Children

HONOLULU, April 11 (AP).—The Hawaiian Islands now may be considered the best protected place on earth against gas attack, Colonel George P. Unmacht, chemical warfare officer, reported today.

In an interview disclosing a portion of the Army's broad anti-gas program, begun immediately after the attack on Pearl Harbor, Colonel Unmacht said more than 400,000 gas masks had been issued for adults. Others of children's size and "bunny masks" for infants are being turned out rapidly.

Gas-alarm gongs have been established 1,000 feet apart all over the islands and are to be sounded by air-raid wardens in the event of danger of that kind.

A survey of air-conditioned buildings and rooms so that they can be equipped with proper filters is nearing completion. Doors and windows of schools and other public buildings have been made so they can be sealed against gas. More than 7,000 persons have been trained to detect military gases.

Expects Japs To Fight For All Of New Guinea

Melbourne War Correspondent Says Nipponese "Cannot Accept Our Growing Offensive

APR 12 1942

San Francisco, April 11 (AP)—Japan may be expected soon to press a finish fight for possession of all New Guinea, the Melbourne Sun's war correspondent at Port Moresby said today in a dispatch broadcast by the Sydney radio.

The radio report, picked up by the CBS listening station here, quoted the correspondent as saying he believed the Japanese army could muster fifteen divisions for a drive south across the islands from bases at Lae without weakening its Burmese offensive.

"Although there is nothing at present to indicate a substantial increase in Japanese strength near Australia, the Japanese cannot possibly accept our growing offensive," he continued.

"The crushing of American resistance in Bataan peninsula will let free some of the 200,000 men reportedly engaged there. A move against New Guinea and North Australia may well follow."

Allied Bombers Blast Koepang

[By the Associated Press]

Canberra, Australia, April 11—Australian bombers, continuing their assaults on Japanese bases in the islands north of this threatened continent, carried out another successful attack yesterday on the airdrome at Koepang, invaded capital of Dutch Timor, Prime Minister John Curtin announced today.

The raiders pressed home their assault from a low level, dropping high explosives on hangars and other buildings from a height of only 1,500 feet, a communique said.

Large Fires Left

Despite intense anti-aircraft fire which met the attack, all the planes were reported to have returned safely to their bases.

Returning pilots said large fires had been left burning at the airdrome.

APR 12 1942

The communique also said Japanese planes had again raided Port Moresby in southern New Guinea yesterday, but declared the attackers had been kept up to 20,000 feet and that they caused no casualties and little damage.

2 Planes Reported Downed

"It is reported, but unconfirmed," the bullettin added, "that one enemy bomber and one fighter were shot down."

(A Reuters dispatch from Sydney said later that destruction of the two planes had been confirmed.)

Army Minister Francis M. Forde meanwhile expressed confidence in the position of Allied forces in the southwest Pacific, but warned in a statement that Australia must continue to organize on the theory that she faces a full-scale invasion soon.

The fall of Bataan was described as another indication of the need for concentration of the full energy of the people against the enemy. Forde said he believed the true spirit of Australians was something comparable to "this offensive, aggressive spirit" of the men who fought under Gen. Douglas MacArthur in the Philippines.

Refugees Arriving

Prime Minister Curtin will open a national campaign in behalf of a new commonwealth security known as National Savings Bonds and to try to double the sale of war savings certificates, in a broadcast next Wednesday.

Since the outbreak of the war about 5,000 civilians withdrawn from battle zones have landed in Australia and are being cared for by the State governments, in cooperation with their own governments. Many still are arriving from Singapore and Java.

NURSES FROM BATAAN REACH AUSTRALIA

American Girls did not have Time to get Uniforms

Melbourne, April 11—(AP)—Some girls of the United States Army nursing corps—already veterans of the war in the Philippines—have arrived in Australia by way of Corregidor after doing an "around-the-clock job" for the wounded defenders of the Philippines.

The unit is under the command of First Lieutenant Floramund A. Fellmuth, of Chicago. All were reticent about their work in the Philippines. Miss Fellmuth said simply:

"We started to work early in the morning and just when we were feeling tired and ready for bed the raids started."

The greatest worry of the girls is suitable clothing. They didn't have time to get uniforms before leaving.

Australia Makes Our Troops Feel at Home; They Set Up Camps and Start Contests

AT UNITED NATIONS HEADQUARTERS, Australia, April 11 (AP)—Australians like a joke, and American soldiers, accustoming themselves to life on the continent down under in an amazingly short time, are quick to exchange banter with their Aussie friends.

For a few hours they act like tourists. Then they realize that Australia is not a strange land at all and become an integral part of the steadily growing military population.

Just as the soldiers themselves lose no time assimilating the Aussie environment, the authorities waste no time transplanting the soldiers into Australian encampments. When water transport is involved in these movements between bases, long passenger trains steam right onto the piers to simplify the unloading. Soldiers can be debarked from Australian trains, with their many exits, at great speed.

The other day there was an extensive troop movement to one encampment. The trains arrived, one on the heels of the other, from 8 A. M. until 5 P. M. The men, burdened with blue barracks bags, tin hats, rifles and other equipment, piled out at great speed all the while.

"What's that, a toy train," yelled one soldier when he sighted one of Australia's passenger coaches with its multiple doors opening flush with the station platforms. "You don't expect us to ride that trolley, do you?"

The arrival of the Americans at a newly established camp was a big day for the people at a near-by town. The populace turned out to cheer and wave, and the Americans waved and cheered from the train. The minute the train stopped, small boys crowded in from all directions asking for souvenirs—American coins, match covers, etc.

As soon as the men had set up camp they got a few hours leave, and descended upon the town, where they quickly bought out the candy, ice cream and soft drink stocks.

At one typical camp the Americans found little to displease them.

"Our tents are warmer and better than the huts in other places," said Private Harvey Cuchs of Cicero, Ill.

The men are much interested in football games with the Aussies, which are being arranged by Lieutenant Clarence Caster of Spokane, Wash., Private James McConnaughey of Mount Pleasant, Iowa; Sergeant Pat Brody and Private Wallace Calkins, both of Seattle.

Wrestling matches are proposed by Joe Lynam Redmond, Oregon 1940 Pacific junior heavyweight champion, and Louis Decouteau of Fort Missoula, Golden Gloves 135-pound champion.

Busily arranging theater entertainment are Private Richard Davis of Hollywood and Private Bob Wagner, known professionally as Ted Cummings, who worked in "How Green Was My Valley."

BATAAN'S FALL ADDS TO FEARS OF AUSTRALIA

People Warned 200,000 Japs May Be Freed For Invasion

Allied Flyers Renew Attacks On Foe's Base At Koepang

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Melbourne, April 11—The Allied air force, mindful tonight that the fall of Bataan possibly had freed 200,000 Japanese veterans who might be hurled against Australia, have struck once more at the enemy air base at Koepang, causing great destruction.

Hangars and other buildings and the airdrome runways were blasted from low level at the capital of overrun Dutch Timor, 350 miles off the northern port of Darwin. Great fires were set.

Forde Warns Of Danger

Francis M. Forde, Army Minister, pointed up the danger inherent in the loss of Bataan by warning Australians they must concentrate all their energy on an all-out war effort, and must organize on the theory that the Japanese will launch a full-scale invasion.

"It is this offensive and aggressive spirit so effectively advocated by General MacArthur and General Blamey that will enable us to halt any attempt at invasion and regain for our allies the temporarily lost islands of the Pacific," he said.

Enemy Action Subsides

The enemy was quiet today after a heavy Japanese bomber and a navy Zero fighter were destroyed yesterday in a raid on Port Moresby, New Guinea. Anti-aircraft fire kept the seven marauding planes at 20,000 feet, while United States and Australian pursuits rose to attack.

A Dutch warship straggled into Perth from the ruined naval base at Soerabaja, Java, and the commander said the port was so effectively scorched by explosions and sunken ships that the enemy could not use it.

Important Reinforcements To Invading Forces Revealed

[By the Associated Press]

Chungking, April 11—Severe fighting and fresh Japanese advances on the Chinese front in Burma were reported by the Chinese today, but they said 2,000 Japanese were killed or wounded and many prisoners taken in a three-day battle.

A communique said heavily reinforced Japanese renewed attacks westward across the Sittang river and infiltrated through advanced Chinese positions northeast of Yedashe, eighteen miles north of Toungoo. The attacks were made under cover of many tanks.

Fighting continued along the Swa river, which runs west of the Sittang at Yedashe.

New Attacks In East

Farther east, the Japanese launched new attacks on April 6 from the east shore of the Salween river along the Thailand border region toward Mawchi where they were held in check in fierce fighting.

A further British withdrawal on the Irrawaddy, or West Burma front, was also reported in a communique from New Delhi, which said no activity had been reported since Wednesday, when "light reconnaissance troops in the vicinity of Nyaungbintha" engaged three Japanese vehicles.

Nyaungbintha is eighteen miles north of Thayetmyo, fifty-eight miles above Prome. Thayetmyo was the last reported position of the British.

Japs Claim 16 Planes

TOKYO, April 11 (AP)—The Associated Press records the following Tokyo broadcast:

"A Domei dispatch from an unidentified Burma base says Japanese army planes attacking an air field in Northern Burma, near the Yunnan province frontier of China, destroyed sixteen grounded planes.

"The location of the field was given as about fifty miles southeast of Bhamo, which in turn is about 165 miles north-northeast of Mandalay.

Chungking Sets Up Guard Against Jap Gas Raids

By SPENCER MOOSA
Associated Press Correspondent

Chungking, China, April 11—The good fog, the blessed murk which for seven months has protected Free China's capital from bombs, will lift in a few weeks, and Chungking must be ready again for the ordeal by blast and fire.

They call it the "bombing season"—last year it opened May 3 and closed August 31. It was marked by a week-long siege of horror which began August 7 and in which the city was under almost constant alert, without light or telephone service, with the water supply disrupted and the food growing scarce. The Blitz was intended to make the free Chinese cry for peace and in this it failed completely.

This year the Japanese bombers are assembling at Hankow, the once great Yangtze port used since 1938 as the main springboard for air attack on Chungking.

This year Chungking is getting ready for anything. An anti-gas corps of 3,000 has been organized. It will go into action at the throb of great drums if gas bombs are dropped. Special anti-gas observation posts have been built, and already many of the city's dugouts have been equipped with anti-gas screens.

Lecturers have told the people what to do if there is gas. Simple mouth masks are being sold and warnings are being issued against walking barefoot, as most of the poorer Chinese do.

There are roughly 700,000 people here now but at least 200,000 of them are expected to leave before the bombing season starts.

Further Withdrawal In Fighting in Burma Indicated by British

APR 12 1942

Communique Reports Engagement With Japs 58 Miles Above Prome

By the Associated Press.

NEW DELHI, April 11.—A further British withdrawal on the Irrawaddy River valley front in Burma was indicated today by a British communique announcing that three Japanese vehicles were engaged Wednesday "by light reconnaissance troops in the vicinity of Nyaungbintha."

Nyaungbintha is 18 miles north of the Thayetmyo defenses and 58 miles above Prome, which was yielded before the pressure of numerically superior forces last week.

"On the Chinese front (the Eastern defense lines above Toungoo) there was Japanese artillery fire yesterday, but no definite infantry action," the communique said.

Second Triumph in 2 Days Is Credited to A. V. G.

By the Associated Press.

CHUNGKING, China, April 11.—Still supreme in their corner of the air after the Japanese radio repeatedly boasted they would be blasted from the sky, the hard-hitting "Flying Tigers" of the American Volunteer Group were credited today with their second triumph in as many days over Japan's air force.

The A. V. G., part of the vast system of men and guns being marshaled for the defense of India, reported shooting down 7 Japanese planes for certain and probably 4 more out of a force of 20 which attempted to attack an airdrome in Northern Burma Thursday.

All A. V. G. planes returned to their base without a scratch.

Only the day before the A. V. G. intercepted 20 raiders and shot down 10.

The Japanese got in a few licks Thursday morning, however. Attacking the Northern Burma airdrome, they strafed it and damaged two or three grounded planes. No casualties resulted, the bullets mostly hitting empty spaces in the field.

30.24-15909

The American volunteer flyers are fighting with new equipment and reinforcements which came after the Japanese succeeded in damaging their base in Central Burma a few weeks ago.

Their two victories this week were reported as the British commander in India, Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, lined up every man, ship and plane for the defense of the Ganges Basin of India, menaced by Japanese air and naval units in the Bay of Bengal and by the Japanese in Burma.

On the Burma front, the Japanese and Chinese were fighting north of Toungoo after a week's lull, the Chinese reported. The fighting still was in progress when the Chinese communique was issued.

Part of the amazing success of the A. V. G. apparently is due to the hard work and careful attention to duty of every man on the team back of the planes. A day in the life of the average A. V. G. man, as reported from group headquarters, goes like this:

He is up at 4:30 a.m., has a cup of coffee and begins work. At 9 a.m. he has breakfast from a food truck. He lunches in the A. V. G. mess room, where local produce supplements his diminishing supply of canned goods. His work ends at 5 p.m., but he stands ready for action if Japanese planes are reported coming over.

The average A. V. G. man is a 6-footer, slim, sports a mustache, has dark hair and is sunburned.

The A. V. G. man-behind-the-pilots belongs to one of five groups:

The first, engineering, includes crew chiefs, which mean airplane mechanics.

The second, armament, includes the men who keep the guns in shape.

The third, communications, includes radio men operating a chain of stations, telephone linesmen, clerks and codemen.

The fourth is headed "operations," meaning the executive branch.

The fifth, supply, includes transportation, the issue of gasoline obtained from the Chinese control board, spare parts, stationery and canned goods.

Heavily reinforced, the Japanese forces north of Toungoo infiltrated through advanced Chinese positions northeast of Yedashe under cover of many tanks, the communique said.

Fighting continued in the Swa River sector near Yedashe, the Japanese having crossed the Sittang.

Delayed reports from the northeastern, or Salween River, front said that the Japanese had been held in check there after attacks which began on April 6. Severe fighting was reported.

ROOSEVELT PAYS TRIBUTE TO CHINA

APR 12 1942

Says Nation Has Given High Price For Freedom It Believes In

Takes Part In Program To Raise $7,000,000 Relief Fund

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 11—President Roosevelt, participating in a program to raise a $7,000,000 relief fund for China, said tonight that "China has paid in blood, tears and treasure as high a price as a people can possibly pay for the freedom in which it believes."

In a letter to Paul G. Hoffman, chairman of the United China Relief, Mr. Roosevelt recalled that this Government had expressed on several occasions its sense of the importance of the "magnificent resistance of the Chinese people to our common foe." His letter was read on a program broadcast over the blue network and by short wave to the world.

Valiant Fight Cited

Since China took the field five years ago, Mr. Roosevelt wrote, "3,000,000 Chinese have given their lives that China might be free. Fifty million Chinese citizens driven out of their farms and villages and cities by the Japanese are now refugees in their own land."

The President said that "Americans who wish to give concrete expression to China's valiant fight are given, by your campaign, a splendid opportunity to do so."

A mesage from President Lin Sen of the Republic of China, read by Dr. Hu Shih, Chinese Ambassador, said that:

"We in China are proud to be united with America in a fighting partnership against a common foe. We are proud as a partner who is giving to the common cause all we have to give.

Grateful For Support

"We are grateful for the ever-increasing support from your Government to our Government because we know that you are helping China because China, too, is helping you.

"But beyond such Government to Government transactions we sincerely appreciate the desire of the American people to make an individual contribution to the help of China as an expression of their personal sympathy for the individual men, women and children of China who together constitute this sworn ally of yours."

Smash All Adversaries, Sumner Welles Says

APR 12 1942

Washington, April 11 (AP)—Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, today said the objective of the United Nations must be a united effort to smash all adversaries on every geographic, military, naval, diplomatic and economic front.

Mr. Welles expressed his views in response to press conference questions concerning reports that Gen. George C. Marshall, United States Army Chief of Staff, and Harry Hopkins, President Roosevelt's representative, were urging allied offensive action in discussions in London.

Cripps' Mission Fails As Hindus, Moslems Reject Proposal

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, India, April 11—Unable to agree on who should govern India and how her military destiny should be guided, the powerful Hindu and Moslem parties rejected today Britain's offer of dominion status in the empire on the grounds that in practice it would fall short of true independence.

Amid an outright atmosphere of gloom and disappointment Sir Stafford Cripps, who brought the war cabinet's offer to India, announced therefore that the proposal was withdrawn, and said he would leave for England tomorrow.

"The discussions," he said, "are over."

Warns Against Division

Later, in a farewell broadcast to the Indian people, Sir Stafford said:

"We may differ as to the methods by which freedom can best be reached, but upon one thing surely we must all be agreed—that it cannot be reached by the fresh conquest of India by a power such as Japan."

Sir Stafford said, "We ask India to help us as we seek to help them."

"Together," he declared, "we can do much—divided, far less. Hard and difficult times lie ahead, but, with the great and growing power of the United States, Russia and Great Britain, the end is certain as the slow wheels of justice grind out defeat to the aggressor nations."

Present Status Retained

Thus the present British administration presumably will continue throughout the war or until such a time as the big Indian factions reconsider.

The door for future negotiations remained barely ajar. The dominant All-India Congress Party announced it would be prepared to cooperate in "a truly national government" if the British, as seemed unlikely, should agree to let India completely direct her own defense.

Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, Congress Party president, told Sir Stafford in a letter that by postponing the troubled issue "the largest possible measure of unity might be achieved in the present crisis for India's defense."

Perhaps also intimating that another chapter in the negotiations might be written at a later date, Sir Stafford said without elaboration:

"I may come back to India. In what capacity that will be the Lord only knows."

Remains Popular

Despite the general disappointment at the failure to reach an agreement, Sir Stafford will leave India with undiminished popularity here.

Many Indians felt, whether rightly or wrongly, that he had been as generous as possible, but that his hands had been tied by the British war cabinet.

One disquieting feature of the fortnight of negotiations was the deterioration of the opinion in which the nationalist Indians hold the United States.

U. S. Press Resented

They resented what they understood to be the attitude of the American press toward the failure to reach an accord on independece. Many Indians said they regarded the American attitude as patronizing.

Resentment also was expressed in some Indian quarters over what they took to be a feeling in the United States that once Louis Johnson came to New Delhi all tangles of the negotiations automatically would unravel.

Johnson, President Roosevelt's persona' representative, took a considerable part in discussions with Indian leaders during their deliberations on Sir Stafford's proposals.

Remarks that "America wants to step into India economically" have been heard widely, along with increasing talk of a new American imperialism based on commercial supremacy.

Broadcasts To People

Sir Stafford in his farewell broadcast said: "I am sad that this great opportunity for rallying India for her defense and her freedom has been missed."

"You will have heard that the draft declaration which I brought to Indian on behalf of the war cabinet and which I explained to you the last time I spoke over the wireless has been rejected by your leaders.

APR 12 1942

Cites Great Difficulties

"No one could have been more fully conscious than I of the great difficulties which history has placed in the way of settlement of relations between the British and the Indian peoples and even more between the different communities in India.

"The war cabinet in sending me on this mission realized to the full that Indian opinion—though united in a desire for full self-Government—was widely disunited as to the methods by which it should be attained. It was with these wide differences of view that we had to deal and it would have been no use if we had closed our eyes to the hard realities of the situation.

Says Demands Met

"In the past, British governments have been accused of using vague terms to cloak lack of purpose; and when they stated that it must be left to the Indian communities to agree among themselves it has been said this was the only device by which Great Britain might indefinitely retain its control over India.

"But the Congress since the outbreak of the war has repeatedly demanded two essentials as a basis for its support of the Allied effort in the war—first, a declaration of Indian independence, and second, a constitutent assembly to frame a new and free constitution for India.

"Both of these demands find their place in the draft declaration. It was in the light of the demands and the criticism of Indian leaders that the War Cabinet drafted their declaration with the object of convincing the Indian peoples and world public opinion of the sincerity of their desire to offer freedom to India at the earliest practicable moment.

"To avoid complaints that had been made in the past, they put out a clear and precise plan which should avoid all possibility of Indian self-government being held up by the views of some large section or community. But they left it open for the Indian leaders to agree upon an alternative method if they wished."

At a press conference earlier, the British emmissary said that although Britain and India had failed in their negotiations there was a "large and very important area of agreement as to the future freedom of India."

(Informed quarters in London said the breakdown of the negotiations meant that the existing British Government in India would continue to administer the country and its war effort.)

Anglo-India Parley Collapses; Cripps Returning Home Today

Congress Party And Moslem League Both Reject London Proposals For War Cooperation

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

New Delhi, April 11—The mission of Sir Stafford Cripps came to naught in an atmosphere of gloom today with rejection by the all-India Congress party and the Moslem League of the British proposals for Indian dominion.

"With the enemy at the gates," Sir Stafford announced, his proposals had run afoul of a "spate of Criticism" and a "criticial and unconstructive attitude." he said he was withdrawing the offers and returning to London tomorrow.

Neither the Congress party in which the country's 240,000,000 Hindus are dominant, nor the Moslem League, which widely represents the 77,000,000 Moslems, the two powerful parties which stand at the poles, found the proposals acceptable.

It was on the issue of formation of an interim Government pending settlement of India's constitutional problems after the war that negotiations were wrecked. Involved were defense powers which such a Government would wield.

Congress party leaders insisted upon a national Government functioning with full powers as a Cabinet, and said the British plan bore too much resemblance to the present Executive Council of the Viceroy.

Cripps said a nominated Cabinet, as proposed by the Congress party, would be responsible to "no one but itself, could not be removed and would, in fact, constitute an absolute dictatorship" by the Hindu majority.

Maulana Abul Kalan Azad, president of the Congress party, in a letter to Cripps, explained that "we are agreeable to postponing the entire issue so that the largest possible measure of unity might be achieved in the present crisis for India's defense."

But Sir Stafford, possibly hinting at Hindu fear of accepting responsibility in this crisis, said the Congress party's refusal of a compromise proposal on direction of defense meant that Azad believed he could not rally the Indian people.

Cripps announced that "the discussions are over" just three weeks after his arrival. He said there was no likelihood of another attempt to settle the Indian problem in the near future.

"May Come Back"

Only slight hope was seen in his added remark: "I may come back to India. In what capacity that will be the Lord only knows."

[London unofficial quarters guessed that he might return as Viceroy, or as Minister of State.]

Turning to the threat to India, Cripps said Britain would do her utmost to defend the country, that "America is doing all she can," and "now India must devote herself wholeheartedly with special effort in every field of activity in defending her soil and protecting her women and children from those ghastly horrors that have befallen her Chinese friends and neighbors."

"We may differ as to methods by which freedom can best be reached, but upon one thing surely we must all be agreed that it cannot be reached by conquest of India by a power such as Japan," he added in a later, farewell broadcast.

Provisions Of Plan

The British proposals were for post-war dominion status with right of withdrawal from the British Empire, the right of Moslem states to abstain from the Indian union and even for a union of their own, and the right of representation for the Indian princes in the constitution-making body. Defense at present was to be directed by the British.

The congress party, in a 1,500-word statement made public only today, rejected the proposal on the grounds that recognition of the Indian states would form "enclaves where foreign authority still prevails" and where foreign armed forces could be maintained. Such a situation, it said, would be a "perpetual menace" to Indian freedom.

It also objected to the right of non-accession of the Moslem states as a blow at Indian unity and as an "apple of discord."

Defense Setup Opposed

Further, it charged, that retention by the British of the responsibility for defense reduced proposed Indian self-government to " a farce and nullity" in wartime when defense "covers almost every sphere of life and administration."

In conclusion, it declared that the present Government was "lacking in competence" to undertake defense and "it is only the people of India, through their popular representatives who may shoulder this burden worthily."

Only "the realization of present freedom could light the flame" of Indian defense, the statement said.

On the other hand, the Moslem League, while expressing gratification that pakistan, the right of Moslem autonomy, had been recognized, complained that the proposals did not go far enough and that Moslem majority or large minority in the provinces would be dominated by Hindu assemblies.

U. S. Press Criticized

As the negotiations thus came to their bitter conclusion, a disquieting feature was noted by observers in the deterioration of opinion which Nationalist leaders hold toward America.

These leaders resented the attitude of the American press, which they considered ill-informed and patronizing. They also resented what they thought was a widespread feeling in America that once Louis Johnson, President Roosevelt's special minister, came to New Delhi all tangles would automatically disappear.

Indian Congressmen were now talking of American imperialism as being more dangerous than British imperialism because American imperialism, they said, was not based on territorial acquisition but upon commercial supremacy and was "more up-to-date and streamlined."

Worse And Worse

Remarks such as "America wants to step into India economically." were heard everywhere.

However, ill-informed and ingenuous these Indian impressions might be, their effect was to worsen relations between America and India.

What the upshot of the situation would be was difficult to say.

Many observers predicted an immediate worsening of relations between the Hindus and Moslems. The Moslem League long has been suspicious of the predominantly Hindu Congress, and is now convinced that the Congress Party will never give Moslems a square deal. The Moslem League may therefore make every effort to intensify Islamic feeling and organize it on a positive anti-Hindu basis.

London Retains Some Hope

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 11—Responsible British sources sought today to minimize the effects of the break down of negotiations on the status of India but failed to dispel entirely the anxiety in some quarters over the announcement that no immediate new overtures were in prospect.

Hopes that a compromise might yet be reached to bolster native support to Britain's defense preparations were pinned on the unexplained statement by Sir Stafford Cripps that he might return to India, but "in what capacity that will be the Lord only knows."

Two Popular Guesses

There were two popular guesses in unofficial quarters: that Sir Stafford might be made Viceroy of India, or that he might be sent back as Minister of State.

The Evening News, the first London newspaper to editorialize on the failure of Sir Stafford Cripps' "gallant mission," said today that the All-India Congress, "which purports to speak for at least half of India's teeming millions, stubbornly shuts its eyes to the imminence of invasion." This means, the newspaper added, that "such help as we may get from India will be entirely individual and spasmodic."

"Our weakness in these vital strategic areas has been demonstrated by the tragic events of the past few weeks," the newspaper added.

Allies Hurrying India Defense

Japs Already at Door as Cripps Mission Ends in Failure

April 11

LONDON (AP)—The failure of the Cripps mission faces the United Nations with a jig-saw pattern unprecedented in military history, but the Allied high leadership on land and sea doggedly is improvising a defense against the Japanese, who already are menacing the shores of Bengal Bay and beating through Burma on the highway to the prize of the Empire.

In the three weeks of futile negotiations little or nothing was accomplished toward making an overall defense effort, though even in failure to settle the complicated India question the Indian and British leaders were agreed that Japanese aggression must be stopped—somehow.

One report from New Delhi said Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, of the all-India Congress party, was preparing a personal campaign to arouse India to give her best effort against the Japanese, and Indian leaders generally were expected to join the British administration in recruiting and urging the last ounce of effort on war production.

Million In Indian Army

A responsible London source expressed confidence in the Indian defense, declaring "if there is any invasion of Indian soil I believe the Indian Army will drive it out."

The Indian Army has something like a million men—perhaps more by now—and most are armed and fully equipped with materials manufactured in India or brought from the Middle East.

The problems of supply and equipment, with their ever-present "bottle-necks," were considered more urgent than the problem of Indian recruiting, for which London observers foresaw few difficulties, least of all political angles, since few Indians besides the leaders are interested in politics.

APR 12 1942

Hopes With Wavell

Beyond the now moribund political aspects, however, the British have hopes, as always, in Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell, commander for India, whom the Germans themselves have nominated as the only British general worthy of the title.

Wavell is no miracle man, however, and a dispatch from New Delhi indicated a new British withdrawal on the Irrawaddy river valley in Burma and told of fighting with light forces in the Nyaungbintha area, 18 miles north of Thayetmyo and 58 miles above Prome.

The British task generally is that of stopping the Japanese on the land approaches from Burma and of preventing safe passage across the Bay of Bengal, where the British have lost two heavy cruisers and a small aircraft carrier in the week now closing.

Small Force of Imperials

To face the veteran assault troops who have been getting unequalled experience across the width of the Southwest Pacific, Wavell has a comparatively small number of Imperial troops plus a slightly larger contingent of Indian soldiers — mainly Moslems and proven fighting men.

Added to these are the bomber-fighter squadrons of the United States operating in Southern India and the American Volunteer Group units which already have made a substantial contribution to the resistance in Burma.

Churchill To Cripps

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 11—Prime Minister Churchill sent this message today to Sir Stafford Cripps:

"You have done everything in human power, and your tenacity, perseverance and resourcefulness have proved how great was the British desire to reach a settlement.

"Even though your hopes have not been fulfilled you have rendered a very important service to the common cause and the foundations have been laid for the future progress of the peoples of India."

MILLION INDIANS IN ARMY

Enlisting at 50,000 a Month, British Commentator says

New York, April 11—(AP)—A British radio commentator said today that whatever the disagreements of Indians as to their political future they "are still united in their hatred of Fascist dictatorship" and are enlisting for war service at the rate of 50,000 a month.

"A million Indians," he said, "are under arms."

Production In India Goes On, Says Halifax

Not Disrupted By Political Troubles, British Ambassador Reminds Questioners

Houston, Texas, April 11 (AP)—Political troubles have not disrupted production in India, Lord Halifax reminded his interrogators at a press conference today.

The British Ambassador, guardedly discussing the Indian situation, said the Indian National Congress "does not speak for the whole of India."

"We have been able to get into the armed forces all the Indians we can equip—and they've been volunteers," he said.

Texts of Cripps's Press Statement and His Broadcast to Indian People

Cripps's Press Statement

NEW DELHI, India, April 11 (AP)—The text of a press statement by Sir Stafford Cripps on Indian negotiations:

APR 12 1942

I have now received replies from all the principal parties and communities to whom I submitted the draft of a declaration of His Majesty's Government.

Negotiations have been prolonged in the case of the [All-India] Congress only.

There have been many meetings and a number of formulae and suggestions, especially upon the question of a defense Minister.

After a very lengthy deliberation, the outcome of which seemed uncertain from day to day, I received the reply of the Congress in the form of a letter at 7 P. M. last night.

It made it clear that the working committee [of the Congress] was not prepared to accept the scheme or to enter a national government.

As a result of this and other answers I have had most regretfully to advise His Majesty's Government that there was not the necessary acceptance of their proposals such as to justify their making a declaration in the form of the draft.

"Draft Is Withdrawn"

The draft is, therefore, withdrawn and we revert to the position as it was before I came out here, though not quite perhaps to that position.

Discussions and negotiations have been carried on in the most frank and friendly spirit on all sides.

We have acknowledged the general sincerity of this spirit, and although we must for the moment agree to differ there is no rancor in our disagreement.

Sometimes in the heat and excitement of discussion and argument we are apt to overlook the area of agreement.

There is a large and very important area of agreement as to the future freedom of India. I do not propose to go into details of many arguments that have been made.

I have heard and spoken enough of these over the last three weeks and I will say a word about this over the radio tonight.

I shall be leaving New Delhi on my return journey on Sunday morning.

I want first to thank you all for your help and then I want to ask you to continue that help, not to me but to India.

The discussions are over. They will slip back into history and they will leave their impress, a good, clear and healthy impress, which will influence the future. But the present and future press upon us and must be faced.

"This Is Your Task"

India is threatened. All who love India as I love India and you love India must bring their energies, each in his own way, to her immediate help. That help cannot come through dissension and differences. It must come by a joining together of vital elements into a closely knit unity. This is your task where you can help, whatever your party or community.

We have tried our best to agree. We have failed. Never mind whose fault it is. Let me take all the blame if that will help in uniting India for her own defense.

Great Britain will do her utmost.

America is doing all she can, and now India must devote herself wholeheartedly, with special effort in every field of activity, in defending her soil and protecting her women and children from those ghastly horrors that have befallen her Chinese friends and neighbors.

You have my best thanks for what you have done to help me. You have my even greater thanks for what you will do to help India.

Cripps's Broadcast

The text of Sir Stafford Cripps's broadcast yesterday to the people of India, as recorded in New York by The British Press Service:

You will have heard that the draft declaration which I brought to India on behalf of the War Cabinet and which I explained to you the last time I spoke over the wireless has been rejected by your leaders.

I am sad that this great opportunity of rallying India for her defense and her freedom has been missed.

In the past, British governments have been accused of using vague terms to cloak lack of purpose; and when they stated that it must be left to the Indian communities to agree among themselves it has been said that this was the only device by which Great Britain might indefinitely retain its control over India.

But the Congress since the outbreak of the war has repeatedly demanded two essentials as a basis for its support of the Allied effort in the war—first, a declaration of Indian independence and, second, a constitutent assembly to frame a new and free constitution for India.

Both of these demands find their place in the draft declaration. It was in the light of the demands and the criticism of Indian leaders that the War Cabinet drafted their declaration with the object of convincing the Indian peoples and world public opinion of the sincerity of their desire to offer freedom to India at the earliest practicable moment.

APR 12 1942

To avoid complaints that had been made in the past, they put out a clear and precise plan which should avoid all possibility of Indian self-government being held up by the views of some large section or community. But they left it open for the Indian leaders to agree upon an alternative method if they wished.

Of course, every individual and organization would have liked to draft a declaration to express his or their point of view, forgetting that if it did it would have inevitably been rejected by the others.

The War Cabinet were thus in a position rather like an arbitrator who tries to arrange a fair compromise between conflicting points of view. They could not however without denying the very freedom which they were offering impose a form of government upon peoples which they did not themselves freely choose.

But in all this spate of criticism those vital parts of the document with which all agree have never been mentioned. Full and free self-government for India—that is its general feature.

This critical and unconstructive attitude, natural enough in the law courts and in the market place, is not the best way of arriving at a compromise, but compromise there must be if a strong and free India is to come into being.

Some day, somehow, great communities and parties in India will have to agree upon a method of framing their new Constitution.

I regret profoundly for the sake of India for whom I have deep and admiring friendship that the opportunity now offered has not been accepted.

But all this concerns the future. The immediate difficulties have been as regards the present.

First there was difficulty as to defense. Upon that the attitude of the British Government was very simple.

For many decades the defense of India has been in charge of His Majesty's Government.

This has led to an organization which places the control of the armed forces under a defense secretariat headed by the Commander in Chief, who is also the Defense Minister. The Army in India, containing British and Indian units, the navy and the air force, all come under his supreme command.

"Difficult Reorganization"

A demand has been made that the defense of India should be placed in Indian hands. No one suggests that the Commander in Chief as head of the armed forces should be under the Indian Government, but they say his functions as a defense member should be transferred to an Indian.

This may sound simple. It would mean long and difficult reorganization of the whole Defense Secretariat—an unscrambling of eggs scrambled many years ago—which would cause delay and confusion at the very moment when the enemy is at the gates and maximum speed and efficiency are essential in defense.

It is the duty of the British Government to defend India, and our duty to our American allies, who are giving such valuable help, makes such a course impossible.

To show our complete sincerity and desire to give to representative Indian members on the Executive Council the maximum power, we offered to create a new War Department which would take over the governmental relations of the Commander in Chief, general headquarters and naval and air headquarters, which would be in his charge as war member, leaving the rest of the Defense Department, with a number of other most important functions added, to the Indian defense member.

In the wider area of defense, which touches almost every department of the Raj, the administration would have been wholly under the control of representative Indians.

But none of these things were the real cause of the breakdown in negotiations.

In their final letter addressed to me, the Congress working committee stated that the temporary form of government envisaged during the war was not such as to enable them to join the government.

Notes Two Suggestions

They have two suggestions to remedy the situation: First, an immediate change of the constitution, a plan which every one else has admitted to be wholly impracticable while the war is proceeding; and, second, that there should be a full national government with a Cabinet of Indian leaders, untrammeled by any control by the Viceroy or the British Government.

Realize what this means. Government for an indefinite period by a set of persons nominated by Indian parties responsible to no Legislature or electorate, incapable of being changed, and a majority of whom would be in a position to dominate large minorities.

It is easy to understand that great minorities in India would never accept such a system. Nor could His Majesty's Government, who have given pledges to those minorities, consent to their being placed unprotected while the existing constitution lasts under a simple and possibly inimical majority rule.

It would be a breach of all the pledges that we have given. Such a solution may sound simple and attractive to those who have no knowledge of the deep, communal divisions in India, but it is in fact wholly impracticable and would never be accepted by very large sections of the Indian peoples.

The essential need of India today is for all leaders of all main parties and communities to come together in a single national government.

A scheme that attracts some and repels others, such as the Congress has suggested, is of little value. Nor does the precise form matter so greatly.

Inspiration and leadership are not to be found in form or conventions; they will be demonstrated by combined purpose and unity of action.

No constitution and no convention will work unless those who lead the people will come together with a common determination to make it work. Had the Congress leaders felt themselves able to join with other leaders who were willing, then indeed a great work ought to have been accomplished.

Takes Full Responsibility

One thing I must make clear. I alone in India carry the responsibility for what has been done.

Neither the Viceroy nor the Commander in Chief carries any responsibility for these negotiations. They have throughout done their utmost to help me and I express to them and many other willing helpers of all nationalities my sincerest thanks for that help.

We have tried by the offer that I brought to help India along her road to victory and freedom. But for the moment, past distrust has proved too strong to allow present agreement.

But in that failure to achieve immediate results there is no bitterness. Our effort has been genuine. No responsible Indian has questioned the sincerity of our main purpose—complete freedom for India.

We may differ as to the methods by which that freedom can best be reached both now and in the future. But upon one thing surely we must all be agreed—that it cannot be reached through fresh conquest of India by a power such as Japan that has shown itself brutal and intolerant to its Asiatic sister nations.

It is only necessary to visit Formosa or the occupied parts of China, as I have done, to know that through Japanese conquest misery and starvation will come.

The widely advertised propaganda of the Japanese, painting themselves as the liberators of China, has resulted in nothing but untold suffering and tragedy to hundreds of thousands of honest and peaceful Chinese men, women and children.

The same propaganda now being made to trick the Indian people into submission holds out for them no better prospect than the dire suffering which has been inflicted upon their Chinese neighbors.

APR 12 1942

"Ghastly Horrors"

The basic philosophy of the Japanese forces, as of their German counterparts, is that they, as a superior race, have the right to enslave all whom they can conquer. I have seen and heard of the exploits of the Nazis in Russia, in Poland, in Yugoslavia and in other Slav countries of Europe; and I know that none but the most diseased imagination could ever conjure up the ghastly and sadistic horrors which these barbarians have made a reality through every town and village in that vast area.

That human bestiality could sink so low is an overwhelming tragedy for the world, and it is a tragedy that we and you and all the Allied nations are determined to expunge from the pages of history in the only way that we can—by the decisive defeat of those responsible for this brutalization of humanity.

No peoples with the culture of the Indians, a culture as old, as deep and as real as that of their Chinese neighbors, could ever stand by and tolerate these insults to their moral standards and to their common humanity. Our philosophies, our religions and our traditions differ widely, but in whatever form we may each worship our own conception of supreme power and absolute goodness, we one and all desire to see those ethical and moral standards which are implicit in our religion become the touchstone of our behavior in all the wide and human contacts which make up our day-to-day life.

And in this epic struggle for decent moral standards in the world, we fight against the godless barbarism and bestiality of our enemies. But we do not fight alone. Russia, China, the United States of America and all the Allied nations with their suffering peoples, stand besides us—a great company of gallant men and women who will give their all for those things which they know to be right and just.

On the battlefield of Russia and China, in their cities and on their farms, millions of our fellow men and women have already given their lives that we might live. To that great and gallant army of the heroic dead we not only owe a debt of gratitude, but we acknowledge a duty and an obligation. To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield—to strike, to seek, to find that righteous victory which they died to win, and not to yield to that barbarous aggression against which they made their bodies a living wall of resisatnce.

It is true that millions have died in those countries, as others have died in the crowded streets of our English cities, in our ships upon the high seas, and fighting in our armies on the land and in the air. But as each has fallen others have crowded forward to take their vacant place, and countless millions are even now preparing to strengthen and reinforce the efforts to make victory sure.

APR 12 1942

"The Hour Has Struck"

The hour has struck when India herself is being driven inexorably by the aggression of Japan into the front line of defense in a war which now spreads its evil tentacles into nearly every country of the world.

We shall do our utmost despite all our heavy commitments elsewhere, and the United States will lend her great growing aid as well to assist the Indians in the defense of their country.

We ask them to help us as we seek to help them, since together we can do much, divided far less. Hard and difficult times surely lie ahead. The path of honor and of duty has never been an easy one. And today, in those who would follow it to its end, there must be found a greater courage and determination than ever before. But the end is certain, as the slow wheels of justice grind out defeat of the aggressor nations.

The vast resources of manufacture of the United States, of Great Britain, of Russia, matched to the unlimited manpower of the Allied nations can bring but one result—final victory.

And toward that victory India can and must play her part, a part that will give her the proud right to full and free representation in the councils of the nations when they meet to make the final peace, which, can, if we will it, lead the peoples of the world into a brighter and happier future of organized and cooperative freedom.

The common peoples of the world will have opportunities in world resettlement such as they have never had before and the Indian people and their leaders must make ready to play their full part in the building of world order.

This is the time when the youth of the world are called upon make every sacrifice, to the ultimate sacrifice of life itself. But through that selfless service to humanity they earn their right to take their full share in the shaping of the future. Though old heads may be wiser, old hearts cannot have the fire and courage of youth. It is that fire and courage which we must summon to the defense of India, and to the building of her freedom when victory is won.

Risks must be taken; innovations must be tried; and we must climb quickly out of the ruts of peacetime habits and customs. A new tempo is needed, new devotion, and a more total effort to finish quickly with the horrors of war.

I have seen that effort being made in the Soviet Union—the wholehearted devotion of a continent, more varied in racial origin than India itself. And the world has learned what a great and courageous people, inspired with the love of their country and their freedom, can achieve.

I have witnessed, too, the Chinese, ill-equipped, lacking many essential supplies, indomitably carrying on their defense, year after year, and wearing down the aggressor who has penetrated deep into their homeland.

The cities and towns of England have been deeply scarred, and her people have suffered as none ever before from the concentrated hate of enemy bombing. Their courage and their fortitude have thrilled the world.

Now is the time for India and her people to join their courage, their strength, and their endurance in the great, heroic and world-wide army of common people and to take her part in those smashing blows for victory against brutality and aggression which shall forever free the masses from the age-long fear and tragedy of poverty and of war.

Hindu Refusal of Cripps Plan

NEW DELHI, India, April 11 (AP).—The text of the All-India Congress party's rejection of the British proposals carried by Sir Stafford Cripps follows:

The working committee have given full and earnest consideration to the proposals made by the British War Cabinet with regard to India and the elucidation of them by Sir Stafford Cripps.

These proposals, which have been made at the very last hour because of the compulsion of events, have to be considered not only in relation to India's demand for independence, but more especially in the present grave war crisis, with a view to meeting effectively the perils and dangers that confront India and envelop the world.

APR 12 1942

The Congress has repeatedly stated ever since the commencement of the war in September, 1939, that the people of India would line themselves with the progressive forces of the world and assume full responsibility to face new problems and shoulder new burdens that had arisen, and it asked for the necessary conditions to enable them to do so to be created.

The essential condition was freedom of India, for only the realization of present freedom could light the flame which would illuminate millions of hearts and move them to action.

At the last meeting of the All-India Congress committee after commencement of war in the Pacific it was stated that: "Only a free and independent India can be in a position to undertake the defense of the country on a national basis and be able to help in furtherance of larger causes that are emerging from the war."

Demands Full Independence

The British War Cabinet's new proposals relate principally to the future upon cessation of hostilities. The committee, while recognizing that self-determination for the people of India is accepted in principle in that uncertain future, regret that this is fettered and circumscribed and that certain provisions have been introduced which gravely imperil the development of a free and united national government and establishment of a democratic state.

Even the constitution-making body is so constituted that the peoples' right of self-determination is vitiated by introduction of non-representative elements.

The people of India have as a whole clearly demanded full independence, and Congress has repeatedly declared that no other status except that of independence for the whole of India could be agreed to or could meet the essential requirements of the present situation.

The committee recognize that future independence may be implicit in the proposals, but the accompanying provisions and restrictions are such that real freedom may well become an illusion.

The complete ignoring of ninety millions of people in the Indian states and their treatment as commodities at the disposal of their rulers is a negation both of democracy and self-determination.

While the representation of an Indian state in the constitution-making body is fixed on a population basis, the people of the state have no choice in choosing those representatives, nor are they to be consulted at any stage while decisions vitally affecting them are being taken.

Such states may in many ways become barriers to the growth of Indian freedom. Enclaves where foreign authority still prevails and where the possibility of maintaining foreign armed forces, it has been stated, would be a likely contingency and a perpetual menace to the freedom of the people of the states as well as of the rest of India.

Acceptance beforehand of the novel principle of non-accession for a province is also a severe blow to the conception of Indian unity and an apple of discord likely to generate growing trouble in the provinces and which may well lead to further difficulties in the way of the Indian states merging themselves into an Indian union.

Congress has been wedded to Indian freedom and unity, and any break of that unity, especially in the modern world, when peoples' minds inevitably think in terms of ever larger federations, would be injurious to all concerned and exceedingly painful to contemplate.

Nevertheless, the committee cannot think in terms of compelling the people of any territorial unit to remain in an Indian union against their declared and established will.

Calls British Proposals Vague

While recognizing this principle, the committee feels that every effort should be made to create conditions which would help the different units in developing a common and co-operative national life.

Acceptance of this principle inevitably involves that no changes should be made which would result in fresh problems being created and compulsion being exercised on other substantial groups within that area. Each territorial unit should have fullest possible autonomy within union consistent with a strong national state.

The proposal now made on the part of the British War Cabinet encourages and will lead to attempts at separation at the very inception of union, and thus create friction just when the utmost co-operation and good will are most needed.

This proposal has been made presumably to meet communal demand, but it will have other consequences also and lead to politically reactionary and obscurantist groups among the different communities and create trouble and divert public attention from vital issues before the country.

Any proposal concerning the future of India must demand attention and scrutiny, but in today's grave crisis it is the present that counts and even proposals for the future in so far as they affect the present. The committee necessarily attached greatest importance to this aspect of the question, and on this ultimately depends what advice they should give to those who look to them for guidance.

APR 12 1942

For this the present British War Cabinet's proposals are vague and altogether incomplete, and there would appear to be no vital changes in the present structure contemplated.

It has been made clear that the defense of India will in any event remain under British control. At any time defense is a vital subject. During war time it is all important and covers almost every sphere of life and administration.

To take away defense from the sphere of responsibility at this stage is to reduce that responsibility to a farce and nullify and make it perfectly clear that India is not going to be free in any way and her government is not going to function as a free and independent government during pendency of the war.

The committee would repeat that an essential, fundamental prerequisite for the assumption of responsibility by the Indian people in the present is their realization as a fact that they are free and are in charge of maintaining and defending their freedom. What is most wanted is an enthusiastic response of the people, which cannot be evoked without the fullest trust in them and the devolution of responsibility on them in the matter of defense. It is only thus that even in this grave eleventh hour it may be possible to galvanize the people of India to rise to the height of the occasion.

It is manifest that the present government of India, as well as its provincial agencies, are lacking in competence and are incapable of shouldering the burden of India's defense.

It is only the people of India through their popular representatives who may shoulder this burden worthily. But that can only be done by present freedom and full responsibility being cast upon them.

The committee are therefore unable to accept the proposals put forward on behalf of the British War Cabinet.

Moslems' Reply to Cripps Plan

APR 12 1942

NEW DELHI, India, April 11 (AP).—The text of the Moslem League's reply to the British proposals brought by Sir Stafford Cripps follows:

While expressing gratification that the possibility of Pakistan is recognized by implication by providing for establishment of two or more independent unions in India, the committee regret that proposals of His Majesty's government embodying fundamentals are not open to any modification and that therefore no alternative proposals are invited.

In view of the rigidity of the attitude of His Majesty's government in regard to fundamentals not being open to modification, the committee have no alternative but to say that the proposals in their present form are unacceptable.

The right of non-accession to the union, as contemplated in the draft declaration, has been conceded presumably in response to the insistent demands by Moslems for the partition of India, but the methods of procedure laid down are such as to negative the professed object, for in the draft proposals the right of non-accession has been given to existing provinces which have been formed from time to time for administrative convenience and on no logical basis.

Moslems cannot be satisfied with such a declaration on a vital question affecting their future destiny and demand clear and precise pronouncement on the subject. Any attempt to solve in the future the problem of India by the process of evading real issues is to court disaster.

In the draft proposals no procedure has been laid down as to how the verdict of a province is to be obtained in favor of or against accession to one union, but, in a letter from Sir Stafford Cripps to the Moslem League president, it is stated that a province should reach a decision whether or not to stand out of the union by a vote in the legislative assembly on a resolution to stand in. If the majority for accession to the union is less than 60 per cent the minority will have the right to demand a plebescite of the adult male population.

In this connection it must be emphasized that in the provinces where Moslems are in a majority, as in Bengal and Punjab, they are in a minority in the legislative assemblies; in the assemblies in Sind and Northwest Frontier Provinces the total number, namely sixty and fifty, respectively, is so small and the weightage given to non-Moslems so heavy that it can easily be manipulated, and a decision under such conditions cannot be a true criterion for ascertaining the real opinion of Moslems in those provinces.

As regards a suggested plebiscite in provinces in which Moslems are in a majority, in event of the requisite majority not being available in the legislative assemblies, the procedure laid down is that reference shall be made to the whole adult population of the provinces and not to Moslems alone, which is to deny them the inherent right of self-determination.

In conclusion, the committee point out that the position of the League has been and is that unless the principle of Pakistan, the scheme embodied in its Lahore resolution of March, 1940, is unequivocally accepted and the right of Moslems to self-determination conceded by means of machinery which will reflect the true verdict of Moslem India, it is not possible for the Moslem League to accept any proposal or scheme regarding the future.

With regard to the interim arrangement, there is no definite proposal, except the bare statement that His Majesty's government desire and invite effective and immediate participation of the leaders of the principal sections of the Indian people in counsels of their country, commonwealth and the United Nations. The committee are therefore unable to express an opinion until the complete picture is available.

Another reason why the committee are unable to express an opinion on the interim arrangement for participation in counsels of the country is that Sir Stafford Cripps made it clear that the scheme goes through as a whole or is rejected as a whole, and that it will not be possible to retain only the part relating to immediate arrangements at the center and discard the rest of the draft scheme; and as the committee has come to the conclusion that the proposals for the future are unacceptable, it will serve no useful purpose to deal further with the question of immediate arrangements.

Colleen Says Yes To Yank in AEF, General Doesn't

BELFAST, April 11 (AP).—The girl said yes but the general didn't so Private Herbert W. Cooke, 2 of Cleveland, and Thelma Smith 18, Belfast waitress, didn't get married as planned.

Miss Smith said the final decision rested with Maj. Gen. Russell P. Hartle, who has not yet given his consent.

"But I'm not worrying," she said. "I'd rather wait until May or June anyway."

Britain Waits For Tax Fate

Budget Day Nears With All Wondering About Higher Levies

APR 12 1942

By WILLIAM L. HUMPHREYS

LONDON (AP)—Everyday Britons, whose government has spent $39,700,000,000 since September 3, 1939, on the eve of another war budget today felt that the Exchequer just couldn't squeeze a substantial tax increase out of their already frugal standard of living.

The present basic income tax rate leaves the working man 50 cents out of every dollar he earns.

In the highest income brackets surtaxes command $19.50 of every $20

This close approach to what a cheerfully-paying public feels is the "saturation point" is equalized over the breadth of the social classes and has resulted in a minimum of speculation over the budget Sir Kingsley Wood soon will announce to the House of Commons.

Financiers Worried

It is true that there is some apprehension in the "City"—London's financial district—that the Exchequer will lift income and surtax rates. But the little people are sure there can be no heroic plan to balance the budget.

That's just about impossible in this, the most expensive of all wars.

Britain's small wage earner knows that whatever additional burden he is called upon to shoulder can not be much. What cheers him most, in a misery-loves-company way, is that in any event all will stagger along under proportionate tax loads.

For Americans whose new income tax rates have brought home compellingly the high cost of modern war, the picture of the less fortunate United Kingdom taxpayer may be of some comfort.

Two Lessons

It may also suggest two stern lessons for the future if the war drags on.

Those lessons, said Geoffrey Crowther, editor of the Economist, are:

"One, don't underestimate the extent to which expenditures will rise;

"Two, don't underestimate the 30.24.15913

30.24-15913

people's willingness to pay."

"That is considerably different from the last war."

Where will the government get more revenue?

Granted that the new budget won't add unduly to direct taxes on income, some observers felt the Chancellor's request for additional sources of revenue might result in some form of compulsory savings, the amounts to be extracted at the source of income as income tax payments are now.

Money thus invested in the government would draw reasonable interest and be payable some time after the war ends. The payments wouldn't follow the armistice quickly, however, some say, because they believe that one cause of the British depression after the last war was the unchecked spending splurge in channels not economically healthful.

Also targets for new taxes—and here the little man might be hit again—might be the ever-popular tobacco, beer and spirits.

Reds Claim 3000 Nazis Slain

Stockholm, April 11 (AP)—The Moscow correspondent of the Swedish newspaper Svenska Dagbladet reported today that a large detachment from a German tank division commanded by General von Appel had suffered a heavy defeat in the Crimea sector.

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Kuibyshev, Russia, April 11—More than 3,000 Germans have been killed in fighting with Red army troops in the last few days on the Bryansk sector southwest of Moscow, the Soviet Information Bureau said in a communique broadcast today.

Bryansk is a German-held railway center on the Desna river, 220 miles from the capital.

The newspaper Red Star said Adolf Hitler's high command was losing thousands of its men in counter-attacks aimed at relinking defense bases and relieving encircled Nazi garrisons.

Local Successes Cited

Local Soviet successes were reported in scattered engagements, but official dispatches failed to mention any large-scale clashes between the main armies poised for action along the entire front.

Russian sources said their troops had scored a fresh victory in one sector of the southern front where a fortified stronghold was captured from the Germans.

APR 12 1942

Skiers Credited

German counter-attacks were reported broken up on the Kalinin front and Soviet skiers were said to have killed 274 Germans in a raid in the Karelia sector.

The Soviet Information Bureau's midnight communique, broadcast by the Moscow radio, said that "during April 10 there were no significant changes at the front."

Nazis Report 72 Tanks Destroyed in Crimea

BERLIN (From German Broadcasts), April 11 (AP).—The German high command announced today that the Russians had lost 72 tanks and that 29 others were put out of action in the recent Red Army attack on the Kerch Peninsula in the Crimea.

The German communique said there had been no important activity after the collapse of the attack of last Thursday "which resulted in heavy losses for the enemy."

On the Black Sea coast, the Germans said, Nazi planes bombed Soviet port installations and damaged two fairly large merchant ships by direct hits.

Several enemy units surrounded on the central sector were reported annihilated and the Germans said the Russians suffered great losses of men in successful Nazi thrusts.

Russian attacks supported by tanks on the northern sector were reported repulsed.

In fighting on the Lapland front of the far north, the Germans said their mounted troops and Finnish units took a well-fortified enemy strongpoint in a daring thrust, and destroyed 40 posts with their crews.

Off the Norwegian coast, the communique said, a Soviet submarine ran into a German mine field.

2 Million Nazis Crippled By Frostbite, Kalinin Says

By The Associated Press.

MOSCOW, April 11—President Mikhail I. Kalinin declared today in an article appearing in the government newspaper Izvestia that between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 Germans were "put out of action" on the front during the Winter because of frostbite.

His article went on to say that the Don Basin was gradually being freed and that "sooner than the Germans think" coal from there will be supplying Russian industry.

The Germans no longer have mastery of the air, he said in his summary, having been compelled to use planes to protect their armed forces rather than for attack.

The U.S.S.R. President estimated that the tank strength of both sides was about equal since Russia had reduced the German lead. The Soviet infantry and artillery he pronounced far superior to the German.

Thaw on Volga Begins; Russian Winter Is Over

APR 12 1942

By Eddie Gilmore

Kuibyshev, April 11 (AP).—The long Russian winter is over officially—because the ice in the Volga River here began breaking up last night with thundering cracks which we thought at first were antiaircraft guns.

A Russian friend and I were sitting in the hotel when it first came—crack, crack, boom.

"What's that?" I asked.

"Sounds like antiaircraft guns," he answered. "Let's go out and see."

Outside we looked for searchlights or shell bursts. There were none.

"What are the guns shooting at?" we asked an old man. "Have you heard a plane?"

"Oh, no," he replied. "It's 'lyod tronulsya' (the ice is on the move").

"Lyod tronulsya," gasped my friend. "Why then, winter is over."

Admiral Standley Leaves Kuibyshev for Moscow

Kuibyshev, April 11 (A. P.).—United States Ambassador Admiral William H. Standley left Kuibyshev today for Moscow to present his credentials to the Soviet Government and confer with Russian officials.

NAZI PLANE TOLL SOARS, REDS SAY

300 Shot Down In Three Days Of Fighting, Moscow Reports

Land Battles Also Raging On Front From Finland To Black Sea

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 11—Still intent on achieving victory in 1942, despite reports that Germany is accumulating huge forces for new assaults, the Russians smashed hard today at the Nazi air strength being mustered for Adolf Hitler's post-thaw drive.

Dispatches from Kuibyshev said Soviet airmen and ground defenses destroyed 300 German air force units in the last three days, 123 of them on the ground.

The heaviest toll was reported from the northwest front around Staraya Russa, where the Red army still is hacking at immobilized units of the German Sixteenth Army.

Planes From The West

Many of the planes destroyed were transferred only recently to the East from Yugoslavia, France and North Africa, captured pilots said.

On land, battle reports from both sides indicated stiff engagements from Finland to the Black Sea, but no conclusive advance was claimed by either.

The Russians did, however, report that 3,000 Germans had been killed in the Bryansk area of the central front in the last few d and Pravda, the Communist party newspaper, said the Germans had lost the approach to an important city in this general sector.

Action In The Crimea

Axis reports claimed the Germans on the Kerch peninsula of the Crimea had destroyed or put out of action ninety-nine Russian tanks during a recent Red army attack; that Germans and Rumanians had begun new and heavy assaults on the Russian Donets Basin lines and that on the Leningrad front the Russians had made hard new attacks with tanks, with the battle still thundering.

On the Lapland front in the Arctic, Nazi mounted troops and Finns were reported to have taken a well-fortified strong point, destroying forty Russian posts.

Nazi Diversion To Aid Soviet Called Aim

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 11—Reliable sources said today that America's Gen. George C. Marshall and Harry Hopkins, convinced that Russia was the decisive battlefield, were discussing with the British the most effective way to aid the Red armies against the Axis.

This aid, the sources added, is almost certain to include United States air force reinforcement of the RAF bombing of Germany.

The British and United States fleets are so busy convoying supplies for Russia's own land battles and the shipping situation is so acute that it probably will be some time before there will be transports for continental invasion—a fact which the United States chief of staff and Hopkins know as well as the British.

Air Attacks Indicated

But the growing establishments which Marshall is inspecting and the increasing pools of United States planes in Britain are taken as an indication that American as well as British air forces will be bombing Germany in a month or two to retard and divert the Nazi offensive against the Soviet Union.

Today one British newspaper, the Daily Sketch, said the Marshall-Hopkins conferences showed that "our plans have gone beyond the production stage" and it hinted the discussions covered continental invasion.

"The contemplated stroke may, for all we know, be of an unexpected character and at an unexpected place," the newspaper said. "There is plenty of room for striking at Nazi-occupied Europe."

Appraisal Of Stand

(The New York Times says the principal Marshall-Hopkins mission is to determine whether the British Government "is justified in the stand it has taken against invading Europe this summer."

(A Washington dispatch to the Times said Britain is reported to have contended that not enough ships are available now to transport and maintain a BEF across the English Channel or the North Sea under naval and air attacks, but proponents of immediate action hold that the Allied shipping situation may be no better next year.

To Continue Talks

(The London Government was reported to have estimated the Germans had about 600,000 troops for defense against such an invasion, and that landing armies should have from one half to two times as many men.)

General Marshall, United States Army Chief of Staff, and Hopkins, President Roosevelt's representative, arranged to continue their discussions with Prime Minister Churchill, service chiefs and various members of the British War Cabinet during the week end in the country.

There was no authoritative indication of the specific trend of the discussions beyond the broad outlines of strategy and supply.

Hopkins Sees Bevin

Observers concluded that manpower problems came into discussions Hopkins had Friday afternoon with Ernest Bevin, Minister of Labor and National Service. Hopkins also conferred yesterday with William A. Harriman, lease-lend expediter in England.

It was noted that since the American visitors arrived the question of supply in Pacific war theaters has become more critical because of the Japanese naval offensive and depletion of British seapower through the loss of two cruisers and an aircraft carrier recently.

U. S. Reported Inquiring Into British Reluctance

NEW YORK, April 11 (AP).—The New York Times says the principal mission of Gen. George C. Marshall and Harry Hopkins in London is to determine whether the British government "is justified in the stand it has taken against invading Europe this summer."

(The White House announced earlier in the week that the trip was "perfectly normal wartime mission.")

APR 12 1942

In a Washington dispatch, the Times reports the chief argument advanced by the British is that there are not enough ships available to transport and maintain an expeditionary force across the English Channel or the North Sea.

A British expeditionary force in France, the London government reportedly contended, would have to overcome at least 30 completely equipped German divisions totaling about 600,000 troops with all auxiliaries counted.

The Times says the British have informed Gen. Marshall and Mr. Hopkins that to guarantee success an expeditionary force should be from one and a half times to twice as large as the German defenders, and that eight tons of shipping per man would be required, with this shipping under incessant attack from the German air force and navy.

Because of the shipping situation, the Times reports, the British felt that the United States would be unable to send a large enough A. E. F. in the near future. British government and military leaders reportedly argued, the paper says, that it would be better to wait until Britain has accumulated all the equipment needed.

Proponents of invasion, the Times says, claim that there is nothing to indicate that the shipping position of the United Nations will be any better next year than in 1942, with sinking and replacement figures indicating the best to be hoped for is that the situation will be no worse.

If the British government were to agree to an invasion, the paper reports, it would ask certain guarantees from the United States and particularly for guarantees of more American naval aid.

U. S. Raids On Reich Are Forecast In London

London, April 11 (AP)—The United States Air Force will join the RAF in blasting Germany within a month, and the two Allies will do everything in their power to help Russia's epic effort to crush the common Nazi enemy, highly placed experts predicted tonight.

This, they said, would be the upshot of the visit here of the United States chief of staff, Gen. George C. Marshall, and Harry Hopkins, President Roosevelt's trusted supply man.

The British and Americans were pictured as expecting Germany's supreme effort this summer to be directed at the two supply lines over which increasing quantities of vital war materiel are moving to the decisive Russian battle front to equip the vast Soviet, long on manpowers but short on machines of war.

Guard In Two Directions

The German thrusts are expected toward the oil riches of the Caucasus and the Persian Gulf and against the northern route which ends at Murmansk and Archangel.

The growing United States military establishments which Marshall is inspecting and the increasing pool of United States planes in Britain were taken as indications that American pilots would be bombing Germany within a month to retard the Nazi's eastward offensive.

The United States, Britain and Russia all see a Japanese stab in the Russian back in Siberia as one of the main dangers this year. British military opinion is convinced that a Japanese attack will take place either just before or coincident with the opening of Hitler's main effort. The Russians say simply, "we are ready if it comes."

"It Won't Be Enough"

One highly placed Russian, discussing the possibility, asked what observers thought the Japanese could put into a Siberian attack.

"Fourteen to seventeen divisions," was the reply.

"It won't be enough," said the Russian.

There have been candid assertions in Russian circles that they will never suffer a Pearl Harbor at Vladivostok. And there are equally candid hints that if Japan attacks the Soviet, Red bombers will swiftly span the 680 miles to Tokyo and the great industrial cities with the one object of destroying the Japanese war foundries.

BIG KRUPP FACTORY IS R. A. F. TARGET

British Resume Bombing Raids in Ruhr.

APR 12 1942

London, April 11 (A. P.).—Some thousand tons of bombs were dropped on the Ruhr Valley, the Rhineland and other parts of western Germany in four nights of R. A. F. attack this week, the Air Ministry news service said tonight.

An average of well over a ton a minute was reported by the news service to have been dropped while the attacks were on.

"This," a bulletin added, "is heavy bombing."

The great Krupp armament works were the principal targets of the raids which were reported to have been as heavy as any of the two previous assaults on the Ruhr this week.

The British lost thirteen planes, but Air Ministry sources, apparently unperturbed, said that was the cost the R. A. F. expected to pay for a raid as big as that last night.

The German-occupied French port of Le Havre was also bombed.

A communique said there was little German air activity over Britain, though a lone Nazi raider dropped several bombs on the south coast which were said to have caused no damage.

Big R. A. F. Force Returns.

Folkestone, England, April 11 (A. P).—Flying so high as to be almost invisible, large numbers of R. A. F. planes flew in today from the direction of Boulogne, German-occupied France, where observers believed they had been in action.

German Report of Raid.

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), April 11 (A. P.).—Twelve of the R. A. F. bombers that ranged over western and northwestern Germany last night in what the High Command described as nuisance raids were reported officially today to have been shot down.

In addition, the High Command said, seven British planes were downed yesterday in aerial fights over the English Channel and off the Norwegian coast.

DNB, the news agency, said that in the night attacks on the Reich the R. A. F. dropped bombs on residential districts and there were civilian casualties.

[By the Associated Press]

London, April 11—New four-motored Stirling bombers, capable of carrying eight tons of bombs, were being added today to the British squadrons whose continuing offensive against industrial targets in Germany and German-occupied territory brought fresh destruction to the Ruhr last night.

"Some thousands of tons of bombs" were dropped on Germany during four nights of raids by British planes this week, the Air Ministry said. The average was "well over a ton a minute" for the duration of the raids.

Fleet Growing Fast

"This was heavy bombing," it was observed.

"The RAF bombing fleet is growing week by week," aviation sources said, affirming again that Britain's attacks from the air will continue with increasing vigor until the end of the war.

Thirteen British planes were shot down, official Air Ministry reports said, from among the hundreds of bombers which hit mainly last night at Krupp armament factories in the Ruhr. One of the main targets was reported to have been Essen, highly industrialized and much-bombed city in western Germany.

Weather None Too Good

The raid was described as "a good show" although stormy weather over the Continent hindered the bombing operations.

Other squadrons attacked the harbor and shipping at Le Havre, in German-occupied French territory, and mines were laid in coastal waters.

FILM OF ST. NAZAIRE SHOWS SUNKEN SHIP

London Hears Destroyer is few Feet from Gate of Base

London, April 11—(AP)—A Zurich despatch to Exchange Telegraph said today that neutral correspondents reported that German films of the March 28 battle of St. Nazaire showed part of a British destroyer half submerged only a few feet from the gate of the Nazi submarine base on France's Atlantic coast.

The British Government announced at the time that the 1,090-ton destroyer Campbelltown, formerly the U. S. S. Buchanan, "her bows specially stiffened and filled with five tons of high explosive," had been steered into the harbor locks as the main event of an early morning commando-naval-air force raid.

The Exchange Telegraph despatch said the Zurich correspondents related the films, which they saw by invitation of a representative of the German Admiralty, showed only daylight action and contained no views of the dockyard or drydock, but pictured about 150 British prisoners.

"Their appearance proved they had put up a tough battle," one of the correspondents was quoted as saying.

Whale Fools Flyers

Gijon, Spain, April 11 (AP)—A machine-gunned whale, apparently mistaken for a submarine by patrolling aviators, was washed up on a beach near here today. Sixty feet long from nose to tail, the whale's hide had been punctured by machine-gun slugs.

Nazis Make Two Big Malta Raids

April 11-

VALLETTA, Malta (AP)—The German airforce made two major attacks on Malta yesterday, with bombers coming in waves from different directions and dropping their bombs on air fields and the harbor.

The first attack was made about noon and a number of Messerschmitts dived on a boat loading in Gozo, causing some damage. The parish church also was damaged. A large number of bombers took part in the raid.

It is not known yet how many casualties resulted from the attacks, but the communique said there were a number of civilian casualties Friday. One bomber was brought down by anti-aircraft fire yesterday and another was damaged.

It was officially announced that 231 persons were killed and 532 injured as a result of air raids on Malta during March.

British Artillery Hammer Small Axis Force.

Cairo, Egypt, April 11 (A. P.)—British artillery shelled small columns from the Axis army of Field Marshal Erwin Rommel in the Libyan battlefront yesterday, a General Headquarters communique said today.

Italian Report.

Rome (From Italian Broadcasts) April 11 (A. P.).—Italian patrols supported by tanks repulsed attacks by British advanced motorized units south of Tmimi on the Libyan desert front, the High Command said today.

A British destroyer was declared hit "by super-heavy bombs," and two Spitfires were reported shot down in fresh attacks upon Malta.

"British planes carried out a night raid on Bengasi, the High Command said, "damaging one or two buildings."

British Tars Dressed Like 'Men From Mars' and Itch for Action

APR 12 1942

By LARRY ALLEN
Wide World Features

ABOARD FLAGSHIP WITH BRITISH EASTERN FLEET — The British Navy is itching for action against the Italian battlewagons, but since the scrap at Matapan Mussolini's sailors seem to prefer sea racing to sea fighting.

From what I have seen of the eagerness and speed of the gunners aboard the flagship when the call to action is sounded, it should be a memorable day for the Italians when and if they choose to fight.

During two long swings around the central Mediterranean there have been many crisp orders to "man 15-inch armament" and I have seen the gunners set new speed records for fully manning gun turrets. I have no doubt that when they get a chance to loose a broadside against the Italian fleet, shells will slide out of the barrels so fast they can't be counted. I have seen three battleships fire 10,000 projectiles within an hour, and that was not steady work.

During the sweep we ju[illegible] completed it was amusing to hear the commanding officer, Captain Barry, broadcast information to the ship's company that acted like a blood transfusion: "There is a chance, I should say a remote possibility, we shall meet enemy surface craft. But I don't want to raise your hopes too high."

British officers and sailors love action. They sing or hum American swing awaiting orders. When that comes it is, "Hold your hats, boys, here we go." The next thing I hear is a tremendous concussion of 15-inchers that does tricks with my stomach.

Every officer, gunner and sailor engaged in repelling an attack looks like a man from Mars. They wear loose, long, white gloves stretching to elbows, white or blue cloth helmets chemically treated. Many wear overalls over uniforms with steel helmets over anti-lash headgear, gas masks and life preservers slung over the shoulder.

EX-PREMIER HELD IN EGYPT

Seized after British Defense Plan is Found on Italian General

London, April 11—(AP)—Discovery of a British plan for defense of Egypt among the papers of an Italian general captured in Libya led to the arrest of former Egyptian Premier Ali Maher Pasha earlier this week, Reuters reported today from Cairo.

Ali Maher, the despatch said, was one of a limited number of persons who had access to the plan. He now is under "house arrest" somewhere in Cairo.

Bulgarian Cabinet Resigns; Move Linked To Nazi Demands

Action Follows Refusal By Majority To Approve Hitler's Program For Balkan Nation

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Bern, April 11—The Bulgarian Government resigned today following refusal of a majority to approve Hitler's program for the Balkan nation—believed by diplomatic quarters here to call for active participation in the war against Russia or Turkey or both.

Premier Bogdan Philov immediately formed a new Cabinet in Sofia with only two of his former ministers represented. This was taken to indicate that the other seven had opposed German proposals handed to King Boris in Berlin two weeks ago.

Reports have been current that Boris promised Hitler 200,000 troops for the Russian front.

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), April 11 (A. P.).—Premier Bogdan Philov has handed the resignation of the Bulgarian Government to King Boris, who has accepted it and charged Philov with reconstituting a new Cabinet, dispatches from Sofia reported today.

50 New Nazi Airports Reported In Bulgaria

Istanbul, April 11 (AP)—The Germans have completed fifty to sixty new military airports in Bulgaria—some of them only a few minutes flying time from Turkey—and the Nazis now are convinced the neighboring country is satisfactory for use as an advanced air base, a recently arrived skilled observer reported today.

This informant said he did not believe there was any immediate threat to Turkey, however, because of a German lack of planes, crewmen and fuel. He added that training of new Bulgarian pilots and advanced courses for others have been halted by a shortage of gasoline.

Hitler, he said, apparently has drawn heavily upon men and equipment in Bulgaria for the heavy assaults upon Malta and in preparation for this spring campaign in Russia.

Additional Unrest In Dominated Area

Luxemburg Is An Turmoil, Greeks Kill Governor

April 11-

NEW YORK (AP)—Fresh reports of violence and unrest came yesterday from European countries dominated by Germany.

The British radio reported four Poles were sentenced to death for attacks on German military transports.

Greek guerrillas, who recently wrecked a German troop train killing or injuring 1,000 soldiers, were said by the BBC to have taken Nazis troops as hostages. One group recently raided a port, stormed the residence of the governor, killed him and carried off his guards.

Luxemburg sources at London said that more and more residents of the tiny Duchy "are being sentenced for anti-German activity."

BBC reported also that the archbishop of Vilna, Lithuania, had been arrested by the Germans and that soon afterward the Catholic archbishop of K[illegible] the primate of Lithuania—was wounded severely and a priest who was with him was killed. The Germans reported that "an accident took place."

All the BBC reports were heard here by CBS.

Two Executed as Slayers Of Hostages in France

French Soldiers Pay for Death of 21 Civilians in '40 Retreat

VICHY, April 11 (AP).—Paris newspapers arriving here today published an announcement of the execution at Abbeville of two French soldiers convicted of slaying twenty-one civilian hostages during the retreat from Belgium in June, 1940.

Lieutenant Rene Caron, forty-five years old, and Sergeant Emile Mollet, thirty-seven, were charged with having shot and bayoneted their victims in the streets of Abbeville, now occupied by the Germans.

The hostages, the reports said, were part of a group of seventy-eight arrested by the Belgians for national security reasons at the outbreak of war and handed over to the French in the face of the German advance.

The two convicted soldiers were shot to death by a firing squad.

Frenchman Sent To Reich Post

Vichy, April 11 (AP)—Jacques Chevalier, former Under Secretary of State for Family and Health, was appointed administrative director today of the "Department of French Labor in Germany," France's first civilian representation to the Reich since the war.

He will supervise arrangements for the care and protection of French workers employed in German factories, estimated by German official sources to number approximately 100,000.

Sends Out Cryptic Riom Case Report

April 11-

NEW YORK (AP)—The Rome radio was heard by CBS yesterday to broadcast a purported Vichy dispatch saying that "a decree in connection with the suspension of the Riom trial will be published in the Vichy official journal on April 14," which "will refer to the necessity of an investigation into war responsibilities."

The Riom trial of former Premiers Daladier and Blum; Gen Maurice Gustave Gamelin, and Guy La Chambre and Pierre Jacomet two former officials in wartime French Cabinets, was based on their alleged responsibility for France's defeat rather than her entry into the war.

The trial now is in adjournment for the "Easter holidays."

Greek Guerillas said to have Taken Nazis as Hostages

New York, April 11—(AP)—Fresh reports of violence and unrest came today from European countries dominated by Germany.

The British radio reported four Poles were sentenced to death for attacks on German military transports at the border of Poland and East Prussia.

Greek guerillas, who recently wrecked a German troop train killing or injuring 1,000 soldiers, were said by the BBC to have taken Nazi troops as hostages. The patriots were continuing to fight in the mountains and one group recently raided a port, stormed the residence of the governor, killed him and carried off his guards.

Belgium in Exile Makes Overtures to Leopold

Vichy, April 11 (A. P.).—Belgian newspapers reaching Vichy today said that a secret emissary of the Belgian exile Government in London had reached Belgium in an effort to effect a reconciliation between the Government and King Leopold.

The dispatches described the emissary as a personage who had been for a long time in London. He was said to have circulated in the occupied country the argument of Hubert Pierlot, Premier in exile, for reconciliation.

NAZIS CLAIM 12 MORE SHIPS

Report Sinkings Off East Coast of America Since April 8

Berlin (from German broadcasts), April 11—(AP)—An announcement today said that, since a report of April 8, German U-boats had sunk 12 merchant ships, including four large tankers, off the east coast of America.

The high command said the ships totaled 94,000 tons.

An average toll of four ships a day was implied. Hitler's headquarters announced April 8 that German [illegible] had sunk 16 vessels totaling 104,000 tons in continued attacks on United States and British shipping, 13 off the American coast and the remainder off Africa.

Two More Vessels Torpedoed By U-Boats

APR 12 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Brunswick, Ga., April 11—Two more medium-sized merchant ships have fallen victim to Axis submarine torpedoes and Coast Guard ships have rescued fifty-four survivors, bringing them to this port. Twenty crewmen are missing and feared killed. One died in a lifeboat.

The two ships were torpedoed within an hour of each other and were approximately three miles apart in the Atlantic.

The first ship, captained by T. P. Davenport, of Port Arthur, Texas, was struck by a torpedo on the starboard side near the engine room. After the crew abandoned her, the submarine surfaced and shelled the vessel fifteen to twenty times.

17 Believed Trapped

Captain Davenport said he believed seventeen of his crew of thirty-seven were trapped in their quarters. Three lifeboats were launched and twenty men got in them. No attempt was made to shell the lifeboats, but one of the crewmen died of injuries he received when the torpedo hit the ship.

Davenport's ship was sunk about 2 A. M.

The captain of the other vessel, James S. Poche, of Baton Rouge, La., reported that one of his crew of thirty-eight was believed drowned and two more trapped after a torpedo struck the starboard side between the engine room and bunkers about 2:50 A. M.

The other thirty-five jumped into lifeboats. The captain said his ship was not shelled, nor were the lifeboats.

Sub Cruises Around

A crewman on Captain Poche's ship said that the submarine that sank them surfaced and cruised around between the lifeboats. He also said one man on the submarine's deck called "Come over here, we'll save you."

The submarine was reported by Captain Poche to be a large one. He said he believed there were several in the vicinity.

Calm acts of heroism were reported by several crewmen.

An injured man, William L. Howell, of Port Arthur, Texas, who later died in the lifeboat, was trapped in the quarters. Upon discovering this, Captain Davenport, Third Mate Malcolm MacPhee, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a boatswain, Henry Maahs, also of Brooklyn, left their lifeboats and returned to the sinking ship.

Waded In Water

They waded in water up to their hips in the engine room and removed Howell through the engine room skylight.

A number of men had to climb out through portholes in the ship after they had been trapped in their quarters.

Quartermaster James Stogaitis, of Philadelphia, who was on watch on Captain Davenport's ship when the torpedo struck, was praised for his sticking by the wheel calmly to the last minute, assisting the skipper and others to reach boats.

37 Lost In Sinking Of Small U. S. Freighter

Cape May, N. J., April 11 (AP)—Thirty-seven seamen were lost when a submarine torpedoed and sank a small American freighter last week off the Atlantic coast, sixteen survivors of the ship reported on their arrival at the Coast Guard station here.

Third Mate Philip Babcock, 26, of Blairstown, N. J., said the ship was attacked without warning shortly before dawn April 3 and went down within fifteen minutes.

The survivors, crowded into one lifeboat, drifted five and a quarter days before they were picked up by a navy patrol boat. All suffered from exposure, but none was injured seriously.

With Babcock and Second Mate Parke M. Warde, a veteran of forty years at sea, in charge, the crewmen sailed 200 miles toward land by dead reckoning, observation of the sun and stars.

Survivors Of Sinking Land In Dutch Guiana

Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, April 11 (AP)—Nineteen survivors of a torpedoed American tanker arrived here today and reported that five crewmen out of a total of thirty-nine were missing after their vessel was torpedoed and shelled by a German submarine.

Exile Or Internment Choice Offered 59 By Argentina

Executive Decree Charges 27 Citizens And 32 Aliens With Communistic Activities

[By the Associated Press]

Buenos Aires, April 11—The Federal Government tonight ordered twenty-seven Argentines and thirty-two aliens to leave the country or submit to internment for alleged Communist operations.

Twenty-two of the thirty-two of the thirty-two foreigners involved are already under arrest in Cordoba province.

The Executive decree ordering their expulsion said the Federal police requested that "action be taken against Communist activities which are being carried on through organizations affiliated with the (Communist) party under the pretext of aiding certain belligerent countries and within workers associations."

Bunge Denies He's A Communist

The most prominent among the Argentines ordered into exile is Dr. Augusto Bunge, former vice-president of the Chamber of Deputies, where he has served as a Socialist representative for twenty years.

Informed of the Government decree, Dr. Bunge emphatically denied that he was a Communist.

He is chairman of the Argentine "Committee for Solidarity and Assistance of Free Peoples," which has raised large funds to aid Russia and other United Nations fighting against the Axis, and is widely known as an advocate of Argentine cooperation with the United States.

Argentina and Chile are the only American nations still retaining relations with the Axis.

Pampero's Newsprint Low

The pro-Axis newspaper Pampero, whose newsprint source long has been the subject of speculation, disclosed today its stock was running low.

This organ, which published sixteen pages in the early days of the war, came out with only four pages and its editor promised its readers it would continue publication even if reduced to one page.

All Argentine newspapers are suffering a newsprint shortage but none has been forced to such a drastic reduction as Pampero. It is known that the Allied governments have been taking care to see that it received no Canadian or United States newsprint—the only sources of supply available now.

Peru's President Prado To Visit U. S. In May

Washington, April 11 (AP)—President Manuel Prado of Peru will visit the United States next month on invitation of President Roosevelt and as guest of this Government the State Department announced tonight.

The Peruvian chief executive will arrive in Miami on May 3. He will travel directly to Washington where he will be a guest at the White House.

The State Department also announced that President Prado would visit several other cities including New York, Boston and Detroit.

The visit of the Peruvian President, officials said, will mark the first time a South American chief executive has come to Washington on an official visit during his term of office. Several Central American chief executives have visited the United States in the past several years.

Italian Ambassador's Letter Found in Brazil Raid.

Sao Paulo, Brazil, April 11 (A. The contents of the letter were not disclosed but it formed the basis of the first official allegation of a connection between Axis diplomatic services and espionage in Brazil.

Sola is still at Rio de Janeiro, among 273 Italian and 355 German diplomats and consular agents awaiting transfer to Europe.

64 Germans Seized In FBI Raids On Bund

Arrests Largest in New York Area Since War Began, Percy Foxworth Reports

New York, April 11 (AP)—Percy Foxworth, head of the FBI here, said today that Federal agents struck at the Kyffhaeuser Bund in Brooklyn and Manhattan and seized sixty-four German aliens in the largest group arrest of enemy aliens in the metropolitan area since the United States entered the war.

The arrests, Foxworth said, were made yesterday. The aliens were taken to Ellis Island and internment for the duration of the war is expected.

The Kyffhaeuser Bund was composed of former German war veterans, Foxworth said, and while it had been announced that the Bund was dissolved in January, the members continued meeting surreptitiously in various sections of Yorkville, according to the FBI head of the local district.

Silver Shirt Leader Is Released In Bail

W. D. Pelley Charged With Promoting Success Of Enemies Of United States

Indianapolis, April 11 (AP)—William Dudley Pelley, leader of the Silver Shirts and publisher of anti-Semitic magazines, provided $15,000 cash bond today and was released from Marion county jail where he had been held since last Sunday on a charge of sedition.

Pelley was arrested last Saturday by FBI agents at Darien, Conn., and was brought here. He was charged under the 1917 Espionage Act with distributing false statements intended to harm the United States and "promote the success of our enemies."

Canada Admits N. Y. Papers

OTTAWA, April 11 (AP).—Two publications banned from Canada under the Defense of Canada Regulations now may be permitted to enter Canada, the National Revenue Department announced today — "The Ukrainian Daily News," newspaper in the Ukrainian language, and "Morgen Freiheit," newspaper in the Jewish language, both published daily at New York.

In the War Zone

Lack of Enough Allied Ships Renders Unlikely Any Early Invasion of Europe on West

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

APR 12 1942

Speculation increases like spring fever on both sides of the Atlantic about an Allied front in western Europe in support of the Russians. Something like that might happen, but the Axis is making such a project very difficult.

When we talk about invasion across water one of the first things we must think about is ships in great numbers. Britain and America have men enough for such a project; the British air power would seem to be sufficient to support the venture; presumably we should have enough land equipment in the not distant future, but we Allies are woefully weak in shipping, a lack which has been hampering operations the world over.

Our entrance into the war has increased difficulties in this respect immensely. Not only do we bear the growing depredations by the Nazis, Italians and Japanese, but the opening of the battle of the Pacific has multiplied Allied commitments and the length of sea communications. Since a convoyed vessel can make only three or four round trips to the Orient in a year, either from our west coast or from England, the strain both America and Britain are under is obvious.

Shipping Problem Is Big.

So thus far the Allies haven't had enough ready boats to stage an invasion, even if they had been prepared otherwise. It would require a huge fleet to get troops, equipment and continuing supplies across the English Channel. Also an armada would be necessary to blast open the way. The Anglo-American naval fleets have been too busy with long-distance convoys for any concerted action like invasion.

It would be a terrific risk for the United States and Britain to mass their fleets, or any considerable portion of them, for the purposes of invasion now. Should things go badly, they might lose enough warships to throw control of the seas to the Axis, to say nothing of giving the Japs the run of the ocean while we were busy with the invasion.

A full-dress invasion of western Europe probably would be the most difficult and dangerous operation that could be undertaken.

However, there is another area of inestimable strategic importance which must be manned by the Allies—that is Syria, Iraq and Iran. From this Middle Eastern base help could be fed to the Russians through the Caucasus. And should Adolf Hitler break down through the Caucasus, or by-pass Turkey in an effort to get into Syria, the Allied forces would be in position to block him.

20 Versus 14,000 Miles.

The Fuehrer's chief purpose in attacking Russia was to reach the fresh supplies of the Caucasus and Middle East. The Allied salvation lies in stopping him at this gateway to plenty. Thus the maintenance of a powerful Allied base there would seem to be more essential than the opening of a fresh front in western Europe.

Actually, of course, Britain supposedly has large forces in the Middle East already. The United States is co-operating in building up the Allied strength in this general zone. Both British and American ships can reach the Persian Gulf via the Cape of Good Hope over the long haul and, believe it or not, it would be far easier to move a fully equipped army from England to the Middle East over that 14,000-mile route than to try to put the same army ashore across the twenty miles of English Channel.

Broad Ration Of Goods Now Near at Hand

By the Associated Press

New York, April 11.—Rationing of many kinds of everyday goods moved closer this week.

The War Production Board announced freezing of all stocks of copper screening in retailers' hands.

Copper screening thus joins new automobiles, new and retreaded or recapped tires, typewriters and bicycles as items that cannot be sold except to specific buyers with essential civilian or war jobs.

Local rationing boards are handling distribution of automobiles and tires.

Government officials say these local boards shortly will be given instructions for rationing typewriters and bicycles.

Soon they will be handling the rationing of sugar.

It may be presumed copper screening will be sold to essential users through local boards, too, provided the Government does not take all existing stocks for military uses.

Boomerang Policy

Meanwhile the Nation's store and shopkeepers who laid in heavy supplies of counter goods began wondering about the wisdom of the "buying ahead" policies.

Anticipating higher prices, smaller available supplies and delivery difficulties as peacetime plants converted to war production, stores as long as two years ago began precautionary stocking.

Stocks of most kinds of goods in retailers' hands today are believed to be at or near the highest on record.

"Retailers, now scrambling to buy up everything possible against the day when many consumers' goods will become scarce, may find that protective inventories will become a liability," remarks Standard & Poor's, a statistical agency. "Rationing will make them wish that they had been more restrained in their efforts to load up their warehouses.

APR 12 1942

Capital Tied Up

"Consider the plight of the auto tire dealers, most of whom stocked up before the ban on tire sales," the agency adds. "When rationing was ordered they found themselves with capital tied up in inventories that would require years to move under the rationing plan adopted. The Government has been forced to bail them out.

"Automobile dealers are now in the same spot and would like nothing better than to be rid of their inventories of new automobiles. Washington is very reluctant to step over these cars and no immediate relief for the dealers is in sight."

Rationing May Even Be Good for You

APR 12 1942

By Carlke Beach

Wide World Writer

Every American presently will have a ration card.

This first ration card, which will entitle you to your allotment of sugar, probably will be issued in a week or so. Already a selective rationing system governs sales of tires and automobiles. To buy them, you must first convince a rationing board that you need them for essential civilian activities.

Thus in a mild way America enters wartime rationing. Other ration cards eventually will take their place in your pocketbook next to your sugar card; but it is unlikely that rationing here will be carried as far as it has been in Europe or Japan. One informed official guesses that no more than a dozen items ever will be rationed in the United States.

Economists differ widely in their opinions about rationing. Some regard it as an unpleasant necessity, to be employed as little as possible and only as a last resort. That seems to be the viewpoint of the head rationer, Leon Henderson, Director of the Civilian Supply Division of the War Production Board.

Other economists think that rationing is a good idea and there ought to be more of it. Given wartime shortages and price rises, rationing has a beneficent effect, and, they say, does some lasting good. People in Britain, for example, are getting used to eating more green vegetables and wholemeal bread, instead of loading up on a lot of meat and fancy, rich foods.

The primary purpose of rationing is to provide a fair distribution of essential commodities which are running short—or which people hoard in panic lest they later be denied a full supply. Hoarding creates an artificial shortage. If prices are controlled the poor can fare as well as the wealthy under a rationing system.

Decrease Consumption

The secondary purpose is to decrease consumption and thus to preserve a dwindling supply. But this doesn't always happen. Sometimes rationing increases the demand, as in the case of cheese in England. When a person has a ration card he places a high value on the item it entitles him to purchase. He is likely to buy it whether he wants it or not. People vary in their tastes. Thus rationing of a commodity is bound to allow some persons more than they normally buy, while others are allowed less than they want.

The problem is to spread a scarce supply evenly over all sections of the population. It is extremely damaging to the morale of the workingman to see some well-to-do person buying up all the supply of an essential commodity. Often in the past year certain items of food and clothing which were not rationed have disappeared from the market in Great Britain. Only in the past few months has rationing been extended there to practically all essential items which are scarce.

Germany had ration cards printed as early as 1934 and began to ration in 1939. While political pull enables a limited number of

30-24-15917

30-24-15917

Germans to evade the rationing system, on the whole, the Reich's store of food, clothes and fuel is equally divided among the people, and observers credit this with contributing to the Germans' morale.

In Italy, where the war is unpopular and rationing was imposed only after hoarding and profiteering had caused great suffering, morale is low.

Britain was slow to adopt rationing, largely because the ministry of information had pointed with horror to the extensive rationing in Germany, implying that it betokened near starvation and economic weakness. The result was a popular prejudice against the ration system.

The government felt it had to avoid rationing as long as possible.

The school of economists who want more rather than less rationing say that the public must be taught to be more rational about the whole matter. Instead of associating rationing with queues waiting outside of stores and with hungry families at home, these economists say, people ought to think of it as providing orderly distribution and adequate supply for all. Rationing prevents queues rather than causing them, they say. They regard rationing as one of the natural wartime controls. But none of these controls is sufficient in itself if demand is great and supply is low.

If there is rationing without price control, many items will be out of reach of the poor. In Great Britain now bacon is so expensive that only three out of five persons are able to afford to purchase the amount of bacon allowed them.

If there is price control without rationing, persons with the money to spend can buy up and hoard large quantities of scarce items.

Limiting the supply of raw materials to manufacturers and the supply of processed goods to wholesalers and retailers curtails consumption. But without rationing, the retailer can sell to favored customers, and leave the rest to do without.

Another method of limiting demand is cutting down the purchasing power of the public by imposing higher taxes and selling defense bonds. This takes money out of the pockets of the consumers and proportionately decreases their ability to buy goods, but it can never be carried to the point where it will substitute for all other controls.

Those who oppose extensive rationing call it a nuisance to individuals and a burden on the Government. It requires a large organization, they argue, to administer rationing—thousands of persons whose services are needed elsewhere.

The only items which should be rationed, they say, are those which are essential to the consumer and for which no adequate alternatives or substitutes can be found.

Certain items of food and clothing are the only items likely to be placed under the over-all rationing system. Selective rationing, the type used for autos and tires, probably will be adopted to channel a few other durable goods into essential civilian activities.

Many consumers' durable goods, like radios, washing machines and refrigerators, ultimately will disappear from the market as the manufacturers convert their plants to meet military needs. But it is unlikely that over-all rationing will be extended to any such durable goods, say officials in charge.

While price ceilings have been placed over nearly all of these durable goods, it is conceded that persons with ready cash will be able to buy, while persons with small income will have to stand by and see the supply disappear. There will be so few of these items available for general consumption after all defense needs have been filled, however, that equitable distribution of the small supply left would not warrant the expense and trouble of rationing. For the same reason, none of the governments of Europe have tried over-all rationing of durable goods.

Than Frisco Is to Tokyo

New 'Butterfly' Map Also Shows That All South America Is East of Ohio

By RENNIE TAYLOR

SAN FRANCISCO (Wide World)—Did you know that Chicago is closer to the northeastern tip of Japan than San Francisco is to Tokyo?

And that the distance from Tokyo to Los Angeles is just about the same as from extreme northeastern Japan to New York city?

This Nipponese outpost, Shimushu To, just south of Kamchatka peninsula, is about as close to Iceland as Tokyo is to San Diego.

Shimushu To is 4,955 airline miles from Chicago, and only 4,335 from Grand Forks, N. D. These are distances computed by the United States Navy Hydrographic Office. It is 5,250 miles from Tokyo to San Francisco, and 5,600 from Tokyo to Los Angeles.

The nearness of this part of Japan to the northern part of the United States seldom is noted because the relationship does not show on the ordinary map.

Take a piece of string and measure these straight line distances on a globe and you will see how the flat map fails to present the situation realistically.

What the Map Shows

You may note also that Miami, Fla., is nearer to Rio de Janeiro and Natal, Brazil, than any point in Mexico; that New York city is no farther from Rio, as figured by the Department of Commerce, than is Mexico City, the official distance in each case being given as 4,810 miles; that the Panama canal is some 2,500 miles farther from Tokyo than from London, and that all of South America lies east of Cleveland, O., and is 10 times as large as Greenland.

The Mercator map may show some of these things, but not all.

Because of its shortcomings as a picture of the whole face of the earth, it is once more under criticism.

Dr. N. L. Engelhardt, professor of education at Columbia University, told the American Association of School Administrators recently that the Mercator map "flattens both the world and education."

He suggested the use of Homolosine maps, which attempt to show on a flat surface, the continents in their true perspective and relationship even though they are not actually flat.

Cut Globe Into Segments

Military officials have asked B. J. S. Cahill, Alameda, Cal., architect and fellow of the Royal Geographic Society, for samples of a map of this kind which has developed over a period of 38 years.

Cahill's map divides the globe into eight segments, which look like the pieces of a hollow sphere halved at the equator and then cut longitudinally into four equal sections. These segments are made to appear flattened in a way which minimizes distortion and then are put together so that they resemble a huge butterfly.

Attempts to picture the round world on a flat surface have challenged mapmakers ever since Columbus. Mercator, a 16th century Flemish geographer whose real name was Kremer, sidestepped the problem of visualizing the earth's surface as a cylinder.

His procedure was equivalent to taking a rubber globe and stretching it outward from the poles until its top, bottom and sides were as big around as its equator, and then unrolling its cylindrical surface.

This meant that everything north and south of the equator was expanded. The more northerly or southerly the locations, the more they were stretched.

'Colossus of North'

But it was the land masses rather than the oceans which received the stretching. That made Greenland look larger than South America, although it is only about one-tenth as big, and North America far larger than it really is, which is said to be one reason why South Americans used to refer to us sarcastically as the colossus of the North.

But the Mercator job straightened out the meridians of the globe so that they formed true rectangles. This, in turn, made it easier for early navigators to plot their courses. All they had to do, says Cahill, was to draw a straight line from port to port and try to follow it with sextant and compass.

Their straight line was not the shortest route. Between New York and Liverpool, for instance, it is many miles longer than the minimum distance. Mariners caught onto this later when faster ships came into use, and adopted the great circle course—which is nothing but a straight line along the globe's surface from one point to another.

Try it with your string and see how it cuts the meridians at an angle.

Great circle routes are used even more in aviation than at sea, because planes can fly in beelines while ships must stick to water courses. On the improved maps great circle routes are simply straight lines between two points. Pan-American Airways uses the Cahill map and so does the Alameda city school system.

It is impossible, states Cahill, to represent all the properties of a sphere on a flat surface. He has worked out four different varients, all of which make up a single system.

The first of these four different maps is exact as to distances between all points on the globe; the second presents the angles of all land masses correctly; the third is exact in showing the areas of land bodies and the fourth is designed to show great circles with precision.

The Mercator map still is a good chart for sailing, Cahill adds, but it gives students and sometimes grownups a ridiculous idea of the earth's exterior.

A globe is the most nearly perfect representation of the earth's surface, but it, too, has its faults. You can't see all sides of it at once. Even when looking at one side you see only about a quarter of the hemisphere in true perspective. The rest of your view is affected by the globe's curvature.

Both the Mercator and Homolosine maps give full views of all the continents.

The improved map is designed to make them appear as nearly as possible as they would if you were far off in space and able to see all of the earth's exterior at once.

U. S. Forces In Panama Gird Against Axis Threat

By Chandler Diehl

Quarry Heights, Panama Canal Zone, April 11 (Wide World)—Every man of the United States forces on the isthmus at Panama is on active duty—manning anti-aircraft posts or making patrols—or on maneuvers as Lieut. Gen. Frank M. Andrews and his staff strengthen protection of the Panama Canal lifeline.

A trip of only 50 miles, into the interior of Panama, discloses activity everywhere along the way: infantrymen on maneuvers, armored units whirring along jungle roads, engineers on maneuvers and on vital road construction.

One sees signal corps companies installing additional telephonic communications; infantry and coast artillery posts on alert, trigger-fingers ready; planes landing and taking off from a desert dispersal field, and supplies going forward to advance outposts where detectors stretch their mechanical ears to pick up any buzz of alien propellors.

One sees all this—and more—in just 50 miles.

Seasoned Warriors

Panama appears alive with Uncle Sam's soldiers operating under Maj. Gen. William E. Shedd, deputy commander of the Panama Canal department. And the men are becoming seasoned, toughened warriors under the steady, hard work in a stern climate over rugged terrain.

The variety of terrain and climate is appreciable on even a 50-mile trip.

Soon after our party left a headquarters post, our jeep was purring along a road back-dropped with light jungle growth and heavy with military truck traffic.

Supplies were moving forward for men's dinners and for construction projects. Trucks were swinging off onto side roads that wind through marshy lowlands and up steep hillsides to outposts.

Antiaircraft positions and other outposts located behind such emplacements, we were assured, were free to concentrate all their energy on throwing a steel-jacketed curtain of defense over the vital canal. And the "jungle-mudders" under Brig. Gen. Homer Oldfield are just itching to try this death-dealing job on an Axis armada.

Battle Problems

Panama's mobile force under Brig. Gen. Robert H. Lewis, we understood, was working out a tactical problem set to Panama scale on the basis of actual battle plans for the jungle-lands of the Orient.

The soil was steaming a bit from an overnight rain and beyond town "Y" we found our route in the class of a quagmire. Here Army engineers had heavy construction equipment at work on an all-weather crossing, and our reconnaissance car bulled through on its own four-wheeled power and the driver's skill.

Then we reached roadway where the engineers had been before us and we sped along to a dispersal airfield just as two observation planes came gliding in after a bit of ocean-scanning.

Attack pilots at this field were doing the same—waiting within reach of their planes for any call. The Air Corps, under Maj. Gen. Davenport Johnson, too, was ready and hoping for a chance to show its fighting power.

See Marines Spearhead For Attack on Japan

U. S. 'Sea Soldiers' Expected to Take Island Bases on Way to Tokyo

By FREDERICK I. WELLER

WASHINGTON (Wide World)—United States marines are getting ready to uncork some mighty fierce surprises for diligent little Mr. Moto.

APR 12 1942

They gave him a sample at Wake island. Now, they prepare for the day Uncle Sam points toward Tokyo and says, "Get me some sea bases out there for what I'm about to do in a big way!"

No Jap can doubt that recent U. S. Navy attacks on the Gilbert and Marshall islands cast a shadow of coming events—American ships and soldiers headed for his homeland. Mr. Moto will know it's the business when U. S. marines start taking over island bases en route.

This is no blueprint of High Command strategy. It is no military secret. It is the task to which every marine confidently feels some day's reveille will summon him. It is his hope when taps signal the day's end of drill in strange, new maneuvers.

APR 12 1942

These innovations in military manual, and the "how, when and where" of an expeditionary force, are the real surprises and secrets of the Marine Corps.

Emulate 'Commandos'

Some folks say that marines—the world's most versatile and elaborately trained soldiers—are improving privately upon tactics just evolved by England's night-raiding "Commandos." Maybe so. They won't tell you. It would be odd if they were not, however, since for 167 years this oldest professional military unit in America has introduced or perfected nearly every new trade of the fighting man.

Traditionally, marines are "sea soldiers" attached to the Navy, but they fight with the land forces, too, and on occasion have been mounted—"the Horse-Marines." They are adept at every form of military activity.

Modern marines go ashore as a small, compact but fully equipped army. They have airplanes, tanks, artillery, anti-aircraft guns, anti-tank guns, howitzers, trench mortars, hand grenades, automatic rifles and machine guns. They are called the best bayonet fighters afloat.

To Hold Way-Station

John Craige, retired U. S. M. C. captain, says the "overwhelming probability" is that marines are going to be used in this war as the "land-fighting arm of a ship-air-shore team for overseas action."

According to his theory it is possible that naval and air forces will blast Jap way-stations to Tokyo, and the marines will seize and hold them for use by great convoys of combat troops and supplies moving to the attack.

And there is where the marines would pull their surprises, whatever they be. Certainly something extraordinary is in the works. The corps concedes that for months it has practiced secretly with every type of amphibian tank it could find. Only the marines know whether these sea-going land monsters will work.

They have what is believed to be a fairly effective amphibian ship-to-shore tractor, and the world's best motor barges for landing troops, tanks, guns and supplies under enemy fire. They are expert parachute soldiers. They have improved on every trick of aerial attack the Germans employed on Crete. They have stepped up landing speed and mobility.

Professional Soldiers

Asked if the marines learned anything from the Commandos, Lieut. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, commandant, stuffy says "the marines have been Commandos since the days of John Paul Jones!" This is subject to some debate, inasmuch as marines normally land, attack, seize and hold enemy posts until sailors and soldiers take over. Commandos simply attack, destroy and retreat.

However, both operate under supreme command of the "commandant"—hence the term, "Commando." The latter dress in black, darken their faces, fight silently, use every guerilla method and strike only at night.

The marine is a long-term professional soldier. War is his job. He works at it all the time. Marines have fought somewhere, sometime during 72 of the last 140 years. They have made 200 hostile landings on every continent save Australia.

Marine history started on November 10, 1775, when, in reply to George Washington's request, a handful of merchant seamen were recruited at the old Tun tavern on the Philadelphia waterfront to form a "Continental Marine Corps." They were to be "ship soldiers" in the tradition of the British Navy—all expert swordsmen, marksmen and cannoneers. All had to be "of dependable and religious nature combined with robustness of body."

John Paul Jones stationed them in the Bon Homme Richard's fighting tops—fore, main and mizzen—with orders to pick off British ship officers and gun captains.

Marine and His Rifle

Here, marines worked the first of their long list of surprises. "I have not begun to fight!" Jones replied when the vastly superior Serapis grappled the Richard and riddled it with cannon shot. His sword flashed a signal and marines let loose with their muskets and hand grenades.

Thus began the legend of the marine and his rifle. Since that day marines have made a fetish of rifle shooting. "Take away his rifle," says an old legend "and you have only half a marine left." His rifle is the marine's personal weapon from the day he enlists. He keeps it at his side always—not in any ordinary gunrack where anyone can use it—lavishes on it his affectionate attention and care, knows its shooting idiosyncracies. Marine Corps marksmen have won 15 of the last 26 National Rifle team matches.

"Squirrel hunters," they called them in the last war when at Belleau Wood they popped off Germans with a prowess that dumbfounded and turned back the enemy. "There," said General Pershing, "was the Gettysburg of the World War."

APR 12 1942

"Wood of the Marine Brigade," surprised French renamed the place, although marines were only one of 82 units to fight there. They waded waist-high in wheat against hidden German machine guns at Chateau Thierry—merely looking for a mark to shoot at.

"Retreat hell!" they told the French officers, "we just got here."

Change Woman's Role in War Problem Today Different Than in World War I

By RUTH COWAN

WASHINGTON (Wide World)—Women came out of World War I, which began for America 25 years ago this month, with bobbed hair. Will they come out of World War II, now four months old, wearing pants?

That remains to be seen.

But one thing is certain: that just as the years from 1914 to 1919 wrought great economic and social changes in the lives of American women, so will this second world conflict. Indications already can be seen.

The authority for this prediction is Mary Anderson, head of the women's bureau in the U. S. Department of Labor, who is doing now just what she did a quarter century ago—helping to fit women into the war effort.

Miss Anderson's blond hair is grayer now. She has had much more experience than when she was called to Washington to serve in the women-in-industry section of the Council of National Defense during the first World War.

Equal Pay for Both

Some of the problems today are different. In the other war, Miss Anderson related, men just couldn't see paying women the same wage as men for equal work. Now the tendency, especially in the new industries, such as airplane production, is for equal-sized pay envelopes.

But some of the old problems are about. The masculine industrialist is still slow to employ women. Laughing, Miss Anderson told how daily she gets letters from plant managers who write: "It looks like I'm going to have to hire women. What shall I do?"

Women in the minds of some men employers seem hardly people, Miss Anderson said. Foremen especially are opposed to women workers. Over and over a foreman balks at bossing women. "How can I cuss 'em out?" he demands to know.

The idea of having to install rest rooms for women employees seems a hurdle hard for some men employers to take. "They almost seem to hate to hang up a mirror," Miss Anderson smiled.

Management Problems

The American Management Association asked Miss Anderson to come give them some advice at their recent convention, and she told the potential employers of modern Eves that "supervision of women presents no different problems than supervision of men."

"But," she added, "if the foreman resents the introduction of women into the plant—be it conscious or unconscious on his part—or if the men themselves dislike the presence of women in the once monastic atmosphere, there is not likely to be that smoothness or efficiency that results in adequate production."

Miss Anderson said that in California, where an increasing number of women are being employed in aircraft production, a recent survey was conducted by the California Department of Employment to see how things were going in the co-ed factories.

"In all the plants surveyed men and women were employed on the same job at the same rate of pay, very often working side by side," she said. In some plants it was found that men employees ridiculed the idea of women workers and were condescending in manner at first.

APR 12 1942

Resentful of Women

But they tended to get over this. In one plant, the supervisors were found especially resentful at introduction of women. But within a short time the supervisors agreed that women "were at least as easy to supervise as were men."

One employer preferred to have the men and women work together in the belief that the women's higher rate of production would result in an increase in the men's rate of production, Miss Anderson recalled.

This survey showed also that the men workers felt women should be employed on the less skilled jobs. Other surveys by the women's bureau indicate the same masculine attitude of mind, and it is one that Miss Anderson strongly opposes on the basis of women's proven ability.

Prior to 1914 there were women workers in wearing apparel factories and in the food industry, Miss Anderson recalled. She, a Swedish immigrant, worked for 18 years stitching shoes in a factory in West Pullman, Ill.

In those days there were very few women in the metal trades. As this country became the munitions arsenal for the Allies, however, women began going into the ammunition plants—and men weren't too surprised when, after 1917, women were stepping into their shoes.

Got Vote After Armistice

They were a bit worried, though, that women might like to continue wearing those shoes. In many cases that is what happened. Women went into factories and into many of the professions—and stayed there. The year after the Armistice they got the vote.

Women came out of World War I well on their way to being citizens and people. Many lost their jobs to men who came home, but the working woman was no longer a novelty.

And what is ahead for women after this war?

Without a doubt, said Miss Anderson, women's economic and social status will be changed. It will change along with the changed condition that will follow the war.

In the last war, men were fearful that women would retain their jobs, and they would be out of luck when they came home, Miss Anderson said. They still have that feeling, accentuated by the depression. That makes them slow to give ground now.

Jobs More Complicated

This time more women will be going into a greater variety of occupations and professions, she continued. They will do more complicated machine jobs. The call is also for women engineers, chemists, scientists, especially those with a knowledge of radio.

When peace comes, some women will retain a toe-hold in the jobs and professions which men claimed as exclusively theirs, Miss Anderson believes. The door will be opened.

"The things I'm going to say are not nice to hear," Miss Anderson said slowly—

"In the first place we found that after the last war the boys who returned were too restless to take back their old places. Then, too, there will be a shift in war industries. Some will close down. Others will be curtailed.

APR 12 1942

"And does anyone know how many will come back?

"But those who do will find a different world. It will be an exhausted world—one in need of many things to rebuild it. That will make for a variety of work. There must be a great interchange of food and clothing."

After the last World War the automobile came in. Miss Anderson foresees radical developments in transportation in the coming post-war period. There will be remarkable developments in air transportation. The radio and science will open new fields.

Right now, women in war production are doing dangerous jobs, especially those handling munitions, Miss Anderson concluded. Women are doing their part.

She recalled that in the last World War period, 1914-19, the civilian war casualties in industry in the United States were nearly half this country's casualties on the battlefields.

The Argument Against Him

Labor M. P. Hits at 'A Legend;' Says British Consider Premier Paralyzed by Defense Psychology

APR 12 1942

By Aneurin Bevan

Labor M. P. for the BBW Vale Division of Monmouthshire

(Written for Wide World)

London, April 11.—I am told there is a legend in America. The legend is that the premiership of Winston Churchill and Britain's will to continue the war to final victory are so closely bound together that if one goes the other goes with it.

This is either an illusion of distance, a by-product of wartime censorship or the result of the vividness of American reporting. Probably it is the result of all three.

I suspect the legend is supported by an older one which has even less to justify it. This is the story—even Churchill now believes it—that his was the solitary voice raised in British politics for a stand to be made against the menace of fascism.

Like most legends, it is a fairy story with just enough fact to give it verisimilitude and a strong dash of self-interest to keep it growing. In recent broadcasts, Churchill was careful to make a reference to it, like a good shopkeeper who keeps his best exhibit in the front center of the window. However, it is bad business to floodlight a doubtful article. Blemishes in this particular one are already being pointed out, and I should not be surprised if it is withdrawn to a less conspicuous position.

30.24-15919

Grand With Back to Wall

There is no tendency in Britain to belittle Churchill's contribution during the critical days of 1940. He gave authentic and immortal expression to the dogged spirit of the British when they had their backs to the wall.

But let us be quite clear even about that. He did not create the spirit. He expressed it. If he had not done so, he would not have lasted a day.

In social affairs, people think that because water comes through a tap, it comes from it. So they think that their public spokesmen are sources of power and not only its expression.

The British people thought Churchill grand when he had his back to the wall. Now they are beginning to think he is leaning against it. And they can't see how the war can be won that way.

Churchill's oratory, which was the main source of his power, is now likely to weaken him. Rolling periods and heroic calls for what turns out to be unheroic action begin to pall and even look ridiculous, like a little man strutting about in a big man's clothes.

So Churchill, who was so short a time ago Britain's pride, is coming to be regarded by many as the chief source of her humiliation, and I have yet to hear of a statesman who survived that role.

Public Critical of His Cabinet

APR 12 1942

The chief criticism of Churchill falls under two heads: one is that as prime minister he is not trying to do his job, and second that as defense minister it would be better if he didn't try.

Take the first. For many months the country has been calling upon the prime minister to reconstruct his government on lines which disregard claims of party machines. He answered at first by saying he couldn't see anything wrong with his government or his policy and that he would not change either.

Outside himself and members of his government, nobody of any importance agreed with him. The press condemned him and Parliament kept up a daily criticism. People grumbled.

Altogether the situation is extremely unhelpful to the war spirit of any nation. In a fit of angry petulance, the prime minister challenged a vote of confidence, which he obtained with ridiculous unanimity.

All it proved was that the House of Commons had a greater sense of responsibility than the prime minister.

Within a few weeks Churchill had to reconstruct his government. His incapacity to realize the seriousness of his position was soon shown by the steps he thought it necessary to take. He tried to persuade Sir Stafford Cripps to take a minor position and then a few days later was compelled by the force of public opinion to take him into the war cabinet and make him leader of the House of Commons.

The only other step of importance was to dismiss Arthur Greenwood, deputy leader of the Labor Party, from the government entirely, a move which could only be justified if fundamental changes were intended. Greenwood is a much-liked person, and his removal in the circumstances has only irritated labor without impressing the country.

His Domestic Policy Disappointing to Labor

In the main lines of his domestic policy, Churchill differs in not the slightest regard from Chamberlain. He behaves like a stiff-necked Tory with the result that workers' support of the government is dangerously undermined.

He still retains it because men like Ernest Bevin remain in the government, but their reputation is beginning to suffer from the association, and while they may be able to carry official labor with them they might not long be able to pledge continued cooperation of the rank and file.

The best description of Churchill as defense minister is given by the military record to date. Much of it was inescapable by any man and there is no tendency to blame Churchill for all of it.

But he fails to inspire confidence in his assessment of the military situation because events quickly falsify his predictions as in the last campaign in North Africa. Also his frequent references to the possibility of invasion cause British people to believe he is paralyzed by a defense psychology against which he periodically reacts by an ill thought-out attack.

So it is not because the will to victory of the British people is weakening that Churchill is not so strong as he was.

It is because they, the British people, feel he is not fighting the war so roustly as he did. If he falls, America should bear this in mind and fear no weakness here.

The best thing I could say of Churchill is that he would prefer to have it that way.

Written for Wide World

APR 12 1942

London, April 11.—Why is it that the critics of government, when denouncing its ministers, its policies and its conduct of the war, always hastily add: "Of course, I'm not attacking Winston. I want him to remain as prime minister."

Incongruous, you may say. How can a prime minister be good and the government bad? I think the answer is simple. The prime minister has the immeasurable asset of having been right about Hitler.

During those years in the thirties when people said Hitler was bluffing, that the German people never again would be able to face the horrors of blockade, that war would mean an end of civilization, Churchill stood up almost alone in Commons, and from a corner seat below the gangway made those historic speeches telling an incredulous world of the growing evil in its midst.

It was like the tolling of a great warning bell on a sleepy summer afternoon. Gradually its deep insistence caused passers-by to pause, listen and read its message.

Then when the time of testing came he had the courage to tell the truth. Democracy is supposed to like soft words, but no free people ever responded more generously to the promise of blood, toil, tears and sweat.

Politicians had forgotten that people will slave and sacrifice for a great ideal and like it.

His Words Roused Fires of Patriotism

During the battle of Britain when the German bombers were droning over our countryside day after day, the prime minister's speeches roused the fires of patriotism to white flame.

I remember being in an R. A. F. mess in south England on the day France fell. Few of us cared to speak. For years we had been taught to believe the loss of channel ports was one of the most terrible disasters war could bring us. An older generation still talked of the awful days of March, 1918, when it seemed as if our armies would be separated from the French and the channel ports must fall.

Somebody switched on a radio. The prime minister was speaking. By the time he had finished each of us felt like we had drunk a bottle of champagne. People laughed. A new look had come into their eyes. We felt ready for the worst.

The prime minister has the instinct of a great military leader who shows himself to the troops in the front line where the battle is the hardest. Thus indomitable Clemenceau clambered through the mud of trenches to talk to the poilus in 1918, and thus Churchill walked through the rubble and debris of our cities on the mornings after great aerial bombardments.

You speak of the past, you may say, but what of the future? Can Churchill bring Britain to victory?

I believe so. The fact is that no living statesman at present in office knows as much about war as Churchill.

Critics say he is autocratic and headstrong and he will not listen to his advisers. But of course he has his faults. He is too big not to have big faults. But refusal to listen to advice is certainly not one of them.

APR 12 1942

The prime minister has listened to all of the wisest criticisms. He has appointed a leader of Commons. He has increased the number of members in the war cabinet who have no departmental duties. He has not appointed a minister of defense for the good reason that the prime minister must be master in his own house and a minister of defense would in many respects enjoy greater powers than the prime minister.

Once before in British history a similar occasion arose. Lloyd George asked for a minister of defense in Asquith's cabinet. Asquith refused. When Lloyd George succeeded him he quickly forgot all about the idea of a defense minister.

His vision lies in the fact he thinks of war in a global sense. In the front line the soldier sees only his sector of the front. One commander reports enemy tanks are breaking through and there is a shortage of antitank guns. Another asks what happened to fighter squadrons because dive bombers are mercilessly pounding his troops.

But at the base the commander-in-chief takes in the entire battle at a glance. Colored pins show him the positions of his tank divisions moving up to counter-attack, others show interceptor fighters his troops cannot for the moment see, gunning vital supply lines of the enemy.

It is the strength of Winston Churchill that he sees the battle as a whole and never allows public clamor to move him from the main strategy.

He Has No Potential Rival

And finally no one in Commons can seriously challenge him either as a personality or a master of parliamentary forms. Nobody carries such heavy guns.

His opponents often seem like light scouting craft trying to zigzag within range to launch torpedoes in some vital spot. Then great broadsides crash and rumble and attackers retire behind the smoke screen of protective verbiage.

Cripps certainly soared like a rocket into the political sky.

I feel the position of the prime minister is sound. His prestige certainly suffered with military disasters. If ever he fell, I believe Hitler would have won his greatest victory of the war. But Churchill has only yielded the forward political defenses. The main position still holds—a base for vigorous counter-attack. And I do not believe the great guns will long be silent.

NEW YORK, APRIL 11-(AP)-AN EYE-WITNESS DESCRIPTION OF THE FIRST AMERICAN OFFENSIVE ACTION IN THE WAR WAS GIVEN TODAY BY CAPTAIN JOSEPH J. CLARK OF THE U.S. NAVY WHO WAS EXECUTIVE OFFICER OF AN AIRCRAFT CARRIER WHICH ATTACKED THE GILBERT AND MARSHALL ISLANDS IN THE PACIFIC LAST JAN. 31.

CAPT. CLARK, OF CHELSEA OKLA., WAS INTERVIEWED IN THIRD NAVAL DISTRICT HEADQUARTERS. HE IS EN ROUTE TO WASHINGTON TO AWAIT ASSIGNMENT TO ANOTHER SHIP.

NAVAL DIVE BOMBERS, LEAVING THE CARRIER MORE THAN 100 MILES FROM THE ISLANDS, FLEW IN TO ATTACK A JAPANESE SEAPLANE TENDER, BARRACKS AND SMALL VESSELS IN HARBOR.

"THE BOMBERS DROPPED TWO BOMBS ON THE TENDER," CAPT. CLARK SAID. "ONE ON THE BARRACKS AND SET FIRES AND STRAFED FISHING VESSELS AND ALSO FIRED SMALL BUILDINGS ON SHORE AND ACCOUNTED FOR ANTI-AIRCRAFT BATTERIES."

AT MAKIN NINE DIVE BOMBERS FOUND A JAPANESE SEAPLANE TENDER OF THE KAOMI CLASS AND TWO FOUR-ENGINED FLYING BOATS ON THE WATER. THE TENDER WAS HIT AND ONE OF THE SEAPLANES SET ON FIRE.

"THERE WAS HEAVY SMOKE AND FIRE ON THE SEAPLANE TENDER AND BOMBS DROPPED NEAR THE VESSEL BUT WERE NOT SEEN TO LAND DIRECTLY. THE THE VESSEL WAS BADLY DAMAGED, BUT WE DO NOT KNOW THAT SHE WAS SUNK."

THE RAID COST SIX U.S. PLANES AND TWO OTHERS WERE LOST LATER DURING A BAD STORM.

TWO JAPANESE PATROL BOMBERS IN HARBOR WERE ALSO DESTROYED IN THE ATTACKS WHICH LASTED FIVE HOURS AND 50 MINUTES. A THIRD PATROL BOMBER WAS SHOT DOWN AS IT NEARED THE CARRIER BY PLANES TAKING OFF FROM THE SHIP.

CAPT. CLARK DESCRIBED JAPANESE PLANES AS "EXCELLENT" AND "VERY WELL BUILT."

Jap Bombs And Big Guns Pound Corregidor; Allied Flyers Wreck 28 Enemy Planes

PLANES RAID FORTRESS 12 TIMES IN ONE DAY; LITTLE DAMAGE SCORED

Enemy Artillery Batteries Based On Bataan Fire At Stronghold From Two Directions; Air Raids Kept At Great Height

APR 13 1942

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 12—The gunners of besieged Corregidor today battled recurring waves of Japanese bombers and enemy artillery batteries firing onto the island fortress from two sides.

Anti-aircraft fire from the fortress kept the enemy planes at such high altitude, a War Department communique said, that the damage inflicted by the bombers was "slight and only a few casualties were sustained by our troops."

The report from Corregidor said the Japanese came over the island twelve times in twenty-four hours.

Japs Fire From Close Range

"The attacks were concentrated on the center of the island," the communique said.

The United States fortifications at the mouth of Manila Bay were fired upon by Japanese artillery located both on Bataan peninsula and on the shore of Cavite province along the southern edge of Manila Bay.

With the Japanese radio reporting that heavy guns had been rolled into position on the southern tip of the Bataan peninsula, the foe, at the closest point, is only a little more than two miles from Corregidor—close range for artillery.

Occupation of Bataan gave the foe possession of the slopes of Mount Bataan, more than 4,200 feet high, and near-by Mount Mariveles, a peak of about 3,900 feet. Both are extinct volcanoes.

Big Guns Open Up On Fortress

Previous War Department reports indicated that the Japanese had been using, both in Bataan and in Cavite province, guns and howitzers of 155 and 340 millimeter caliber, approximately six and nine-inch bores.

These weapons have a range of ten miles or more, the 155-millimeter hurling a shell of nearly one hundred pounds and the other gun a missile several times as large.

Firing at almost point-blank range from Bataan, the newly emplaced Japanese batteries multiplied the peril to Corregidor. Fire from the south shore—about eight miles away—has not been particularly accurate, War Department reports have indicated.

There was no new word in the department's communique concerning the fighting in Cebu, in the southern Philippines, where the Japanese landed at several points yesterday.

Confusion Over Cruiser

The army communique, however, did say that "the enemy cruiser sunk a few days ago (by a United States motor torpedo boat) is reported to have been of the Waskuma class."

Naval records do not list a "Waskuma" class among Japanese cruisers.

In naval circles, it was suggested that possibly what was meant was the Yasukani, an 11,939-ton converted auxiliary.

Another possibility appeared to be that it was a ship of the Kuma class. Jane's fighting ships lists five cruisers of this class, the Kuma, the Oi, the Tama, the Kitakami and the Kiso.

Built In 1919-20

These vessels, built in 1919-20, are of 5,100 tons, 535 feet long and with a beam of 46 feet 9 inches. They are armed with seven 5.5-inch guns, two 3-inch guns and eight torpedo tubes. The normal complement is 439 officers and men.

The communique, No. 178, based on reports received until 3 P. M., said:

"1. Philippine theater:

"Japanese planes raided Corregidor twelve times during the past twenty-four hours. The attacks were concentrated on the center of the island.

"Our anti-aircraft fire kept the bombers at a high altitude. As a result, the damage inflicted by the enemy was slight and only a few casualties were sustained by our troops.

"Enemy batteries located in Bataan and in Cavite fired on our fortifications this morning.

"The enemy cruiser sunk a few days ago near Cebu is reported to have been of the Waskuma class.

"2. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Japs Claim Mariveles

Tokyo, April 12 (AP)—The Associated Press listening post here today recorded the following Domei dispatch as broadcast from Tokyo:

"Japanese heavy guns rolled up to positions on Bataan peninsula commanding a full view of Corregidor fortress and poured a withering fire on the besieged American stronghold in Manila Bay as Japanese bombers roared overhead and added to the fury with tons of destructive missiles.

Clouds Of Smoke Seen

"Huge columns of smoke poured from American positions, casting an ominous pall over Manila Bay as the Japanese pressed the intensive bombardment.

"American anti-aircraft batteries were declared to have been completely silenced by two mass air raids.

"Movement of artillery into position to direct a plunging fire down onto the rocky island was made possible by occupation of Mariveles, last American base on Bataan, at 9 P. M. Thursday, when Japanese vanguards stormed into the town and unfurled the rising sun flag.

Enemy "Pursued"

"Japanese forces smashed into Mariveles (on the shore opposite Corregidor) after hotly pursuing the retreating enemy troops along the Bataan military road. Japanese soldiers are busy disarming Filipino and American troops which have been surrendering in large numbers.

"Medium transports and scores of launches were seized in Mariveles harbor, where the Americans did not have time to put the torch to two wharves.

"Japanese marines who began landing on Cebu, far to the south in the Philippines, were reported mopping up the last nests of enemy resistance on that island.

"About 238 Japanese nationals interned in Cebu city were released following occupation of the city Friday, front-line dispatches said.

"These dispatches reported that the first Japanese landed at 6 A. M. on the eastern shore and simultaneously at Barili on the western shore and that they at once launched a drive against the enemy entrenched in the mountains of the central part of the island, reducing an undisclosed strategic point at 2 P. M. the same day.

"United States forces applied the scorched-earth policy to oil tanks, port facilities and military establishments before the Japanese landed."

Life On Corregidor Likened To Sitting On Big Bull's-Eye

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, April 12—An army officer just returned from Corregidor reported today that living on the Philippine fortress island was "like living on a bull's eye."

Lieut. Col. Warren J. Clear, an infantry officer who reached the Capital by way of Australia, said that since the loss of Bataan peninsula, Corregidor would be the target of everything the Japanese have.

APR 13 1942

"There are literally two places where bombs are not likely to fall," he said in an interview on a War Department sponsored "Army Hour" radio program.

Still A Tough Job

"But the Japanese attacking Corregidor still must combat American courage and American marksmanship and American ingenuity and American steadfastness," he added.

Clear said that two months ago—as early as February 5—the defenders of Bataan were reduced to eating their pack mules, and for weeks they had had no vegetables, eggs or citrus fruit.

"Occasinally they were fortunate enough to bag a wild pig or carabao, or water buffaloes, but they were few and far between," he related. "Every day our men grew more and more undernourished, more exhausted, from lack of food and sleep; but despite their exhaustion I never heard a complaint from them.

All Fire Returned

"Thanks to careful forethought and planning they had adequate ammunition until near the last. And there was not a single time when our Americans and Filipinos failed to return fire for fire and to battle savagely in counter-attacks.

"The heroism of these men out there is all the more glorious because they knew all the time that the persistent efforts of the War Department to bring them relief and supplies were doomed to failure.

APR 13 1942

"They knew they were making a last stand. They cheered each ship that arrived, but they knew that for every ship that did get there, at least two had been destroyed. And they fought on to the end. Our forces on Bataan collapsed because they were physically exhausted."

The Japanese, he related, knowing the defenders were short of man power, concentrated at night on preventing sleep or rest.

Newly-arrived selectees, Clear reported, "stood up right alongside the old timers" as fighting men.

The officer said he and a sergeant who shared the same fox-hole prayed audibly during one particularly heavy bombing attack. The sergeant, Clear related, observed afterward that "there are no atheists in fox-holes."

Functions Include Seizing Food And Supplies

Washington, April 12 (AP)—Japan has established a special administration in its Cabinet "to exploit occupied areas," the Office of Facts and Figures said today.

The new administration, OFF said, supervises such "coprosperity" activities as military control over "the enterprises of enemy nationals," the seizure and shipment to Japan of foodstuffs and raw materials of the conquered countries, the levying of luxury taxes in the Philippines, and the taking over of commercial establishments by Japanese firms.

OFF also said the Tokyo radio has announced revision of the curricula of Japan's schools to train the country's youth for leadership in the "new order" of greater Asia.

28 Jap Planes Destroyed or Hit

Yanks and Aussies Relentlessly Raid Nipponese Bases

By the Associated Press

APR 13 1942

Melbourne, April 12.—Huge United States bombers, protected by swift Australian fighters, smashed relentlessly over the weekend at Japanese bases on the outer islands and were credited tonight with destroying or seriously damaging at least 28 enemy planes and spreading flaming ruin among the invaders' ships and military establishments.

The raids were conducted over a 2400-mile arc extending from Koepang on Dutch Timor to Faisi in the Solomon Islands but the greatest destruction was spread at Lae on the northeastern coast of New Guinea, and at Rabaul on the northern coast of New Britain.

At least 12 of the Japanese planes were destroyed at the cost of only two Allied aircraft.

Rabaul Hit Twice

Rabaul—the main Japanese base for any invasion attempt—was raided both Friday and Saturday.

Eight Japanese bombers and a fighter were destroyed on the ground Friday and other planes were damaged. In the attacks Saturday, three moored flying boats were damaged by machine-gunfire and a P-type fighter was chased away wounded in a steep dive.

The attack on Rabaul was made by a formation which split into three units against targets at an airdrome 12 miles from Rabaul, one near the city itself, and the shipping harbor.

Bad weather and low clouds failed to hinder the raiders who came diving down through the fog, splattering bombs and machinegun slugs across the targets only a few thousand feet from the ground.

Buildings flamed so violently after bomb hits that the fires were seen 50 miles at sea. Ships were bombed in the harbor and enemy troops were strafed, but the results were not wholly visible.

Direct hits were scored on three grounded bombers at Lae, and four other aircraft probably were damaged by a near miss by a heavy bomb. Japanese Zero fighters which rose to attack were driven away after two were shot down and four others damaged. Japanese ships, gun emplacements and buildings were bombed and several antiaircraft batteries were believed silenced.

Faisi in the Solomon Islands, 1000 miles to the northeast of Australia was bombed Saturday morning, but the damage was not observed fully. Wharves and sheds were raided.

The attack on Koepang, northwest of the continent, was made Friday and resulted in several hits on buildings which were left burning.

In fending off a Friday attack on much-bombed Port Moresby in southeastern New Guinea, Allied defenses shot down a heavy enemy bomber and probably destroyed another fighter. Seven bombers and six fighters were kept 6 miles high, but Allied fighters rose to attack and chased them away toward Lae after a series of dogfights. Damage was negligible and there were no casualties, the Australian communique said.

Several Japanese planes already were in the air yesterday when the Allied planes reached Lae. One Australian fighter challenged three enemy planes in swift succession, shooting one down into the sea.

Young American pilots participated in a previous assault Thursday on Rabaul and said that "men and planes were strewn all over the field" by the raiders.

"We found heavy clouds over Rabaul and sliped down through them, roared over the airport at 500 feet and then let go and blasted those Japs," one of the fliers said.

Bomber Is Bombed

"We saw one bomber taking off and laid an egg which scored a direct, blowing it to atoms. The Japs were taken by complete surprise. When they saw us come in formation so low they must have thought we were going to land. They were so startled for a few minutes they didn't think of running. They just stood there and pointed at us. Then the bombs began to fall and they scattered in all directions.

"The antiaircraft fire was heavy, but nobody was hurt. As we left the area we saw huge fires blazing. We are all anxious to go again.

"Every bomb we drop pays back a bit for Pearl Harbor, but we have a lot more accounts to settle yet."

Kupang Is Attacked Again

MELBOURNE, Monday, April 13 (AP)—United Nations bombers capped a series of savage weekend assaults on Japanese bases north of Australia with another heavy attack yesterday on the airdrome at Kupang, on Timor Island, said a communiqué issued today.

The announcement said that the raid had been directed against hangars and barracks at the air base, but that full details were not yet available.

United States Flying Fortresses, protected by Australian fighters, attacked Lae on Saturday. Japanese fighters that rose to attack were driven away after two had been shot down and four others damaged.

Australian communiqués reported raids on Rabaul on Friday and Saturday. On Friday, it was said, eight Japanese bombers and a fighter were destroyed on the ground and other planes were damaged.

Chinese Defenders Hold Sittang River

NEW DELHI, April 12.—(AP) Stalwart Chinese defenders, supported along their front lines by American Volunteer Group pilots and the sympathetic aid of native Burmese, are standing their ground along the Sittang river in Burma, 30 miles north of Toungoo, a Chinese communique said today.

Although the Japanese attacked with concentrated artillery covering fire and aviation support on Thursday, they were being held motionless up to Saturday morning by heroic Chinese resistance, the communique said.

Natives Help Chinese

"Burmese natives expressed admiration for the gallant spirit of our forces by doing their utmost to help us, which contributed greatly to our morale," the Chinese command said. "On April 10 the A. V. G. came to the support of our forces which inspired our troops to fight with even greater gallantry."

But while these forces under United States Lieut. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell held their positions along the Swa river 180 miles south of Mandalay, Japanese advance guards pressed perilously closer to the vital oil fields on the western end of the line.

The British said "enemy reconnaissance elements appear to be advancing northward on a wide front south of Magwe but that the main Japanese forces had not yet been engaged.

20 Miles From Oil

Magwe is only 20 miles south of Yenanyuang, center of one of the three great Burmese oil pools. The others are at Singu and Yenangat, 50 miles farther north on the Irrawaddy river.

Japanese planes roared over the British positions almost unchallenged, bombing and strafing the defenders.

It was disclosed that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek had spent four days at the Burma fronts conferring with Gen. Stilwell and the British commander, Gen. Harold Alexander. He returned to Chungking Friday and Madame Chiang accompanied him from Lashio.

7 Japs Shot Down

Across the Pega Yoma mountains from the British, the Chinese had at least a measure of air protection afford by the gallant flying Tigers of the American Volunteer Group. In combat Friday, these United States fighters destroyed seven of nine planes attacking a Northern Burma port and ran their two day score to 18 victories over the 21 to 24 planes they met. The A. V. G. suffered no losses. The day before that they had shot down 10 out of 20 Japanese planes.

Chinese positions on the Swa remained unchanged for the third successive day, their headquarters said. Sporadic shelling and air attacks furnished virtually the only action. The Swa is 30 miles north of Toungoo.

Burma Town Bombed

The Chinese reported that 600 Japanese attacked Nammeyeik, 12 miles east of Mawchi, along the Salween front to the east of the Sittang Friday but there were no further details. The Japanese also bombed a Central Burma town killing "mostly women and children."

The main force of the Japanese drive appeared directed against the British held positions, and the advancing enemy moved closer to India's eastern frontier.

The oil fields, which the British are prepared to burn and blast, are of vast importance to the United Nations, now that the Japanese control the oil supplies of the Dutch East Indies. If the Burmese wells should fall to the Japanese, the supply problem for the armies of Burma and China would be magnified greatly.

The British forces were relatively small and outnumbered and their supply problem already was aggravated by the loss of Rangoon and the absence of adequate land routes into nearby India.

JAPANESE PLANES WIN MAJOR TESTS OVER BATTLESHIPS

APR 13 1942

5 British, 8 U. S. Warships Sunk by Bombers Since War Started.

NEW YORK, April 12 — (AP) The question of air bombs versus battleships—a question unsettled in the European war—has a definite answer in the Pacific so far—and it's air bombs.

Of seven important British warships announced as lost in the war with Japan all but two were the victims of Japanese bombers. Of ten United States warships announced as lost all but two were sunk by Japanese planes. Eight U. S. warships announced as damaged were damaged by bombs.

Capt. Joseph J. Clark of the U.S. Navy, executive officer on one of the plane carriers which raided the Marshall and Gilbert islands in the first American offensive action o. the war, said that in his opinion the Pacific war was primarily a war of planes and submarines.

The Japanese, he said, have coordinated ship, air and land force action. They have been able to strike with their combined air forces at chosen objectives by moving them quickly from concentration point to concentration point.

The answer, he said, is the air plane carrier. And when air supremacy is obtained it must be followed up with a shore offensive.

Captain Clark praised the Japanese planes which he said were "excellent." In some respects they are patterned on U. S. planes, especially in motors, in others they have been copied from the Germans but new and original Japanese ideas had been added to the planes too. He said he inspected planes which crashed during the Pearl Harbor attacks and found their construction admirable.

BIG JAP CARRIER HINTED OFF INDIA

COLOMBO, Ceylon, April 12 (A. P.).—The number of Japanese carrier-based planes used for attacks in this area is interpreted in naval circles here as an indication that in addition to smaller carriers the enemy has at least one of his new 28,000-ton carriers in the Indian Ocean.

The 28,000-tonners are supposed to carry 60 planes.

(Naval sources in London have said there were at least two enemy carriers operating in the Bay of Bengal.)

DESCRIBE HERMES SINKING

The sinking of Britain's 10,850-ton carrier Hermes within sight of Ceylon's shore last week was described today by two wounded sublieutenants who survived the attack.

They said the Japanese sinking of the battleship Prince of Wales and the battle cruiser Repulse off Malaya in December provided the pattern for the attack.

USE ONLY BOMBS

This time, however, no torpedoes were used—just bombs, dropped in the face of an intense anti-aircraft fire which was believed to have cost the enemy four of his planes.

"Their bombing was pretty deadly—good enough at any rate for the Hermes to sustain several hits," one of the sub-lieutenants said.

BLAZING FURIOUSLY

"We caught fire and started blazing furiously. Wave after wave of them came in. The only thing that we expected on the program and which did not materialize was that there were no torpedoes.

"Some of the Japanese planes came in low despite our anti-aircraft fire. They paid for their audacity.

"We reckon that at least four of the Japanese aircraft must never have reached their bases again."

JAP CARRIER HIT

NEW YORK, April 12.—(AP) A New York Times dispatch from a United Nation air base in the southwest Pacific said tonight a direct hit was scored on a Japanese aircraft carrier near Rabaul, New Britain, during weekend raids by United Nations airmen. It added there was no claim that the carrier was sunk but that "it obviously was a heavy bombing."

Won't Hinder British and U. S. War Effort, Nehru Pledges

FEB 13 1942

By the Associated Press

New Delhi, India, April 12.—While the British in India got set today for Japanese assault, a ranking leader of the Congress Party, in post-mortem discussion of the British plan for Indian independence, declared:

"We are not going to embarrass the British war effort in India or the efforts of our American friends who may come here."

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru did not elaborate his press conference reference to "our American friends" except to say that "we want that (British and American) action to whirl full speed ahead."

The United States now has fortress-type aircraft and crews based on Indian soil which already have been in destructive action against the Japanese in the Bay of Bengal and Burma.

Nehru had another meeting today with Louis Johnson, President Roosevelt's personal minister to India, after disclosing that Johnson had told him he would be glad if Nehru could visit the United States. Nehru said he had declined on the grounds of India's imminent peril from Japan.

In the field of actual preparations for Japanese attack, today's leading development was issuance of a communique at Madras, capital of the Madras presidency, advising evacuation of all among the half million population whose presence is not necessary in that seaport city.

The Madras presidency fronts on the Island of C[illegible]n and a Bay of Bengal area w[illegible]e Japanese naval and air forces already have delivered stiff blows to the British.

Nehru is supposed to have been one of a minority in the Congress Party's working committee which unavailingly favored acceptance of a British compromise offer which would have given India postwar dominion status and an interim government of Indians but would have left the British in direct military control.

Britain's special envoy and war cabinet member, Sir Stafford Cripps, who withdrew the British offer yesterday upon final refusal by the Congress Party (Hindu) and the Moslem League, representing the strongest minority of India, was en route home.

"Not Going to Surrender"

Nehru spoke today as though India would conduct defense efforts of her own.

"I hope that the All-India Congress commmittee at its meeting in a fortnight's time will consider the problem and tell us what to do about it," he said.

"We are not going to surrender to the invader, just as we have not given in to the British in the last 22 years."

Asked about a scorched earth policy for India (which Mohandas K. Gandhi has disapproved) if Japan attempts invasion, Nehru said, "I do not agree with Mr. Gandhi."

Doesn't Trust British Policy

"I do not doubt that if I were the national government I would burn and destroy everything that would help the enemy, not caring whose private property it was.

"But I am afraid the British government, as constituted today, if it follows the policy is going to follow it in a wrong, perverted way, thinking partly of hampering the Japanese but of hampering India a great deal.

"I am therefore not prepared to trust their scorched-earth policy."

Asked for his reaction to the possibility of an army coming into India under Subhas Chandra Bose, former Congress Party left leader who is now an exiled propagandist in Axis countries, Nehru said "any force that may come from the outside really comes as a dummy force under Japanese control."

But he admitted that such a device might help the invader by giving some Indians a "mistaken notion."

Saying that Indians might have to take up guerilla warfare, he disclosed that the Congress Party had started some time ago a program of organizing "regional, self-sufficient units which would carry on even though rail and motor transport failed."

'Have Not Lost Hope,' Says Cripps

[By the Associated Press]

London, Monday, April 13—"I have not lost hope that the people of India will one day come to an agreement," Sir Stafford Cripps declared last night in an interview at Karachi, India.

"There are always chances," said Cripps, who is on his way back to England from New Delhi after Indian leaders rejected the British Government's plan for India. "We will have to come to some arrangement some day."

APR 13 1942

"I have no idea when it will be. It depends on the Indians themselves—on the Indian parties and the Indian leaders."

Questioned regarding a statement in his broadcast Saturday that the Indian National Government as envisaged by the Nationalist Congress would be a sort of Cabinet dictatorship not responsible to anyone or any people, Cripps said:

"We offered everything we could. There was nothing more to offer. There is no good discussing past history."

Cripps Failure Political, Lord Halifax Declares

Corpus Christi, Texas, April 12 (AP)—Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States, said today the Cripps mission to India is to be regarded as a political failure and not as a military or strategic setback for Great Britain.

India is giving British armies in the east 1,250,000 volunteers, whereas before the war with Japan there were not more than 150,000 native Indians in the army, Halifax said.

"We have not attempted to enforce conscription in India," the Ambassador explained, "yet there has been a steady increase in the number of volunteers coming into our ranks to fight against Japanese invasion."

If Japs Should Attack

By CARL C. CRANMER

NEW YORK, April 12 (A. P.).

ANOTHER front, second in importance only to Hitler's Eastern Front in Russia, is likely to open up in India as a result of events of the past week.

The failure of the mission of Sir Stafford Cripps and the release for other battlefronts of the 200,000 Japanese troops who have been tied down to the conquest of Bataan, probably means that the Nipponese will make a major effort to overrun the vast sub-continent of India.

They may calculate that they can speedily seize most or all of the huge cone-shaped peninsula in time to threaten Russia from a new direction by the time Hitler is ready to begin his major 1942 drive in the summer.

Despite India's great resources and large manpower, the United Nations at this stage appear to be in for a desperate and up-hill struggle if the Japanese launch a real offensive across the Bay of Bengal.

Chief Allied reliance may be in sea and air power.

IF THE British are able to detach battleships from their Mediterranean and home fleets they might force the Japanese to send part of their main battlefleet into the Indian Ocean. In that event the United States Fleet would have a great opportunity to fall upon the remainder in the Pacific.

Britain, forced to concentrate against the Nazi battleship Tirpitz in the North Sea and against the Italians in the Mediterranean, may not be able to detach such a force, however. Moscow reports today said Germany is bringing great pressure upon the Italians to bring their battleships out into the eastern Mediterranean to give battle, and in addition intend to use the French fleet in the western Mediterranean.

Although India's air defenses are light at present, there are possibilities of fairly rapid reinforcement. Some United States four-motored bombers already are based in India, and more can be flown across Africa from America's accelerating assembly lines.

The British have used a string of air bases across Central Africa to fly squadrons of fighting planes also to the Middle East, and presumably they could be flown on to India in short hops. Shipping—the present bottleneck in the allied war effort—is needed only to get the planes to the west coast of Africa.

THE supply of fuel and parts to the airports hacked in the African jungle is difficult, however, and has to be carried in mainly by pack animal and in some cases by trucks.

Maintenance of a large air force in India probably would present fewer difficulties than in Australia, where fuel has to be imported. An Indian fuel supply is closer at hand in Iraq and Iran.

Presumably the bomb-supply industry in India could be stepped up in a short time.

These factors tend toward economy in all-important shipping.

The latest and most authoritative reports place India's armed strength at about 1,250,000 men. It is estimated that about 200,000 have been sent to the Middle East, Malaya and other fronts. Up to a few months ago British forces did not amount to more than three or four divisions scattered for security reasons throughout the breadth and length of the 1,808,000 square mile land.

APR 13 1942

Most of India's leaders express determination to fight bitterly against the Japanese danger, but at the same time they admit they have a battle on their hands to convince many of their 390,000,000 people that the Japanese are a peril to their aspirations. Axis propaganda agencies are working day and night to raise a vast Fifth Column in India.

MOREOVER, India's leaders indicate a desire for a divided war effort, one branch run by themselves and another by the British.

India's army is reported to be well supplied with rifles and small arms, but probably would prove short of artillery, tanks, anti-tank guns and anti-aircraft artillery, the vital protection needed to prevent wiping out of the air force.

India's war industry potential probably is a surprise to most Americans, however. She is listed by some authorities as the 12th industrial land of the world.
